But the moſt remarkable Inſtance was that of Francis Corral, a common Hackney Coachman, who was taken up about a Fortnight after Sir Edmund's Body was found, upon an officious Information of ſome Words he had drop'd concerning the Carrying of it to Primroſe-Hill. Whereupon, the next Day, he was carry'd to Wallingford-Houſe; and being ſworn and examin'd, the Lord Shaftsbury, with others, ask'd him If he carry'd Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey to Primroſe-Hill in his Coach, or knew who carry'd him? To which he anſwer'd, That he did not, and that he knew not who did. The Lord Shaftsbury ſaid, That if he wou'd ſwear the Truth, he ſhou'd have Five Hundred Pounds; and laid down ſome Money on the Table, promiſing, That he ſhou'd have a Room near the Court, if he was afraid of any Body that ſet him to work, and ſhou'd command a File of Muſqueteers to guard him, for fear that thoſe that employ'd him ſhou'd do him a Miſchief. He ask'd, Who ſhou'd thoſe be, my Lord? No Body ſet me at Work; nor do I know for what I am brought hither. The Earl reply'd, We are Peers of the Land; and if thou wilt not confeſs, there ſhall be a Barrel of Nails provided to put thee in, and roul thee down a Hill. The Coachman anſwer'd, What wou'd you have me ſay, my Lord? I know nothing of the Matter: Wou'd you have me to accuſe other People, to bring them into my Condition? Upon which his Lordſhip expreſly ſaid, Then thou ſhalt dye.——The Papiſts have hired him, and he will not confeſs: And thereupon a Mittimus was drawn, and the poor Man committed to Newgate, and laid in vaſt heavy Irons, and thruſt into the Dungeon; where, after he had continu'd about three or four Hours, he was taken out again; but ſo faint with the Cloſeneſs and Naſtineſs of the Place, that he ſwooned away, ſo that they gave him Brandy to keep him alive. About three in the Afternoon, the ſame Day, he was carry'd to a Houſe in Lincolns-Inn-Fields, where the Lord Shaftsbury ſaid to him, Now, You Rogue; here's one that will juſtify he ſaw you: And, ſpeaking to a Perſon that ſtood by, ſaid, Did not you ſee him whip his Horſes, and go down by Tottenham-Court? The Man replying, Yes, my Lord; his Lordſhip cry'd, Sirrah, What's the Reaſon you will not confeſs, but put us to all this Trouble? The other haſtily reply'd, What wou'd you have me confeſs? I know no more than your Lordſhip does, and it may be, not ſo much. Then ſaid the Lord Shaftsbury, If thou wilt not confeſs, Richardſon, take him away, and let him be ſtarv'd to Death; with which the poor Man wept. Ah Rogue! ſaid the Earl, There's never a Tear comes down. Upon which he, with Imprecations told his Lordſhip, That he knew no more than the Child that is unborn. That's a Popiſh Word, reply'd my Lord, he has conſulted with the Papiſts, and will not confeſs; ſo, Richardſon, take him away, and let him be ſtarv'd to Death. Accordingly he was carry'd to Newgate, and kept in great Irons in the Con-

demn'd Hole, from Thurſday Evening till Sunday Noon, without any Thing to eat or drink; which put the poor Creature into ſuch Deſpair, that he ſaid, If his Knife had not dropt out of his Hand, he had kill'd Himſelf.

On Monday Morning, the ſame Man was carry'd to the Houſe of Lords, and ſo to the ſecret Committee, where he ſaw the ſame Lords as before; and the Earl of Shaftsbury with a pleaſing Countenance ſaid, Come, thou look'ſt like an honeſt Fellow, tell us the Truth, and thou ſhalt have the ſame Reward that was promis'd thee at Wallingford-Houſe; and then thou ſhalt go preſently home to thy Wife and Children, and we will ſecure thee from any Harm: What doſt thou ſay to us all? Now ſpeak. Whereupon the poor Man fell down upon his Knees, and ſaid, I know nothing of it, and before I wrong any Man, I will dye immediately. The Lord Shaftsbury changing his Tone, ſaid, Thou art ſuch a peremptory Rogue, thou ſhalt go back to Newgate, and rot there a while. And thou ſhalt be brought to be try'd at the Seſſions, and then there will come enow againſt thee, and thou ſhalt be hang'd. Hadſt thou not better confeſs the Truth, and have that Money, than be brought before the Judges, and be condemn'd to be hang'd? It will be a dreadful Hearing for thee. Yes, my Lord, cry'd the other, I know it will be a dreadful Hearing: But, my Lord, it will be a more dreadful Hearing for me, at the Lord's Bar, if I ſhou'd wrongfully accuſe any Man; it will be a more dreadful Hearing, when it ſhall be ſaid, 'Take him away, Devil, for he hath falſly ac-'cus'd thoſe he knew no Hurt by?' Whereupon the Lord Shaftsbury ſaid, I ſee we can do no good with him; take him away, and let him lye there and rot. The poor Man pleaded that he had a Wife and Children; the Lord Shaftsbury anſwer'd, Let his Wife and Children ſtarve. In fine, the Coachman lay in the Condemn'd Hole with heavy Irons, ſix Weeks and three Days; and afterwards ſeven Weeks on the Common Side upon Boards, without Irons. At length, when another ſwore that Sir Edmund's Body was carry'd a Horſeback, upon good Security the Man was diſcharg'd; but his Legs were ſo gall'd and eaten up with the Irons, that he was not able to drive a Coach till eight Weeks after he had his Liberty. Such were the Arbitrary Proceedings of the great Pretenders againſt Arbitrary Power.

Miles Prance a new Diſcoverer of Sir E. Godfrey's Death, &c.

2. At laſt they accidentally found, or met with a Man who very much, if not fully, anſwered their Ends and Purpoſes, the forementiond Miles Prance, a Goldſmith in Princeſs-Street, and a Papiſt well known in Somerſet-Houſe, where he had ſometimes work'd for the Queen in her Chapel. This Man, who had ſhewn himſelf a Friend to the Plotters, had the ill Fortune to have a Lodger in his Houſe, one John Wren, that was fourteen Months Rent in Arrear; and preſſing him for the Money, he was obſerv'd to uſe threatning Words againſt his Landlord. And ſhortly after, the Loſs of a Tankard, which was never found again, caus'd a new Quarrel between them. Upon the 20th of December, Prance had his Rent paid him; but was taken up the next Morning by a Warrant from the Council, at the Inſtance and Complaint of this Wren and others, upon a Suſpicion of being privy to the Murther of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; and it was ſuggeſted in the Information, 'That Prance lay out 'of his Houſe ſome Nights while Sir Edmund was miſſing.' His Dealings with Grove, his Brother being a Prieſt; Pickering and Ireland having been at his Houſe; his hiring a Horſe to go out of the Town, &c. made the Matter appear ſo probable, that Wren and two others put in for the Five Hundred Pounds promis'd in the King's Proclamation. Prance was carry'd away in Cuſtody into a little Room with a Lobby by the Houſe

House of Commons; into which several went out of Curiosity, and among the rest the Discoverer Bedloe; who staring about him, enquired privately, Which was the Prisoner? and finding the Man, he immediately retir'd. After some Hours waiting, they carry'd Prance to an Eating-House call'd Heaven; and into a Room where Bedloe was purposely planted by Sir William Waller and others: When of a sudden he started up, and with a curs'd Oath cry'd out, This is one of the Rogues that I saw with a Dark Lanthorn about the Body of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; but he was then in a Perriwig. 1678/9. Car. 30 Ref. 19

He is charg'd by Bedloe,

Prance was carry'd from thence to the Committee of Lords; and while he was waiting to be call'd, Wren came to him, and said, Now is your Time to Confess, or you are Ruin'd; speaking of Godfrey's Murther. Coming before the Lords, Bedloe directly charg'd him with the Murther; and Wren, with being out of the House while the Body was missing; but being examin'd upon Oath, he positively deny'd all, and wish'd Damnation to himself, If he knew any thing of the Murther, or if he ever saw Bedloe; and objected against Wren as an incompetent Witness. He acknowledg'd indeed, 'That he had been a Papist, but was now a Protestant, and had taken the Oaths; That he had wrought in his Trade for 'Grove, Pickering, Fenwick and Ireland; That the Sunday after those 'Persons were taken up, he said in a Coffee-House, They were very honest Men, which some People took Offence at: That he kept out of 'the Way for fear of being question'd, but never lay out of his House 'but three Nights in two Years: That he did not go to the Queen's 'Chappel once a Month. He deny'd the Hiring of a Horse at first; but 'confess'd it afterwards, and that it was not to avoid the Oaths; but an 'Arrest staid him in Town: That he lay at a Neighbour's House on Monday when Sir Edmund was missing: That he never wore a Wig in his 'Life; That he neither knew Bedloe, Walsh, Prichard, nor Le Phaire, with some inferior Matters. In Sum, he with Execrations deny'd both the Plot and the Murther. After his Examination, which gave no Satisfaction, he was sent to Newgate, and there was committed to the Condemn'd-Hole, loaden with Heavy Irons; and for that Night was left to consider what further Answers to make, and whether he wou'd venture his Soul or his Body.

Examin'd by the Lords,

The next Morning early, being Sunday, there came a Person to him wholly unknown, who laid down a Paper upon a Form just by him, and so retired; and soon after another came with a Candle, who set it down and left him. By that Light he read the Paper, wherein he found the Substance of these following Minutes: 'So many Popish Lords mention'd 'by Name;—— Fifty Thousand Men to be rais'd;——Commissions given 'out, — Officers appointed; ——Ireland acquainted with the Design;— 'Bedloe's Evidence as to the Murder, was summ'd up, and abstracted in 'it.——And there were Suggestions in it, That he must undoubtedly be 'privy to the Plot, with Words to this Effect, You had better confess 'than be hang'd.' Prance presently imagined this to be a Contrivance of the Lord Shaftsbury, and design'd for Hints to what he was to swear: All which were the very Points of Bedloe's Depositions; and as Bedloe was to second Oates in the One; so Prance was to second Bedloe in the Other. Prance ponder'd for some Hours upon the Heads of his Paper, and the Circumstances of his Condition; and what with the Noisomness of the Place, the Cold of the Season, the Weight of his Chains, the Sense of his Misery, and the Dread of Death, he took the most immediate Care of the Safety of his Body, and begg'd of the Master of the Prison to carry him to the Earl of Shaftsbury's, under Pretence of Matters of great Moment to communicate to his Lordship. The Master, Captain Richard- son, gave the Earl an Account of it, and thereupon receiv'd a particular Order to bring him to Shaftsbury-House, to be further examin'd. He was carry'd thither between five and ſix the ſame Evening, and there continu'd till about Eleven that Night. As ſoon as he appear'd, he was call'd into a low Parlour where was the Earl and three more, and there ſtrictly examin'd upon the Points of the Paper, and threatned with certain Death if he did not confeſs. And further, if we may believe Prance himſelf, the Lord Shaftsbury told him, That there were Great Ones concern'd, and he muſt diſcover them too; for the Little Ones ſhou'd not ſerve his Turn; calling him Rogue and Raſcal ſeveral Times for croſſing Bedloe's Evidence, and ſaying There muſt be Great Perſons in it; reflecting upon the Queen and the Duke of York; bidding him not ſpare the King Himſelf: Saying likewiſe, That the Body was laid under the Altar, &c. However it was, Prance yielded to the Menaces, and ſo fram'd a Diſcovery in Part, with a Promiſe to ſpeak out more at large, if he might have his Pardon. Whereupon, there was a Paper drawn up, which being ſign'd by the Priſoner, he was return'd to the Place from whence he came.

Prance having proceeded ſo far, and Information given to the Houſe of Lords, how willing he was to make Diſcoveries, if he might be aſſur'd of the King's Pardon, their Lordſhips made Application to his Majeſty for a full and general Pardon; and on the ſame Day, December 23d, Ordered, 'That certain Lords ſhou'd acquaint Miles Prance in 'Newgate, that Afternoon, with his Majeſty's gracious Aſſurance, and 'that they ſhou'd then and there examine him thoroughly, in order to 'a true and perfect Diſcovery; and that Care ſhou'd be taken, That no 'other Perſon, Lord or Commoner, ſhou'd be preſent at the ſaid Exami-'nation, but the ſaid Lords and the Priſoner'. On the ſame Day, the Houſe of Commons order'd, 'That the Committee of Secrecy do repair to 'the Priſon, and take the Examination of Mr. Prance touching the Plot, 'and the Murder of Sir Edmond-bury Godfrey: And that they do impart 'to the Priſoners in Newgate, the Contents of his Majeſty's Proclamation 'in relation to the Diſcovery of the Plot, &c.' After he had been ply'd by theſe two Committees with all Strictneſs and Severity, their Encouragement, and the Aſſurance of Pardon, had ſo ripen'd him, that the next Day he was fit to be examin'd before the King and Council; before whom he was very particular about the Murther of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and directly accus'd five Perſons as actually preſent at the Murther, as Father Girald, and Father Kelly, two Iriſh Prieſts; Robert Green, Cuſhion-Man to the Queen's Chappel; Laurence Hill, Servant to Dr. Godden, Treaſurer of the Chappel; and Henry Berry, Porter of Somerſet-Houſe; beſides others more remotely concern'd, as Father Lewſon, Vernatti, &c. Being ask'd Why he gave ſo different a Relation to the Committee of Lords, from what he now ſo freely confeſs'd: He anſwer'd, He was in much Confuſion before the Committee, being not ſure of his Pardon; but now being ſure, and upon his Oath, he did ſpeak the whole Truth, according to his Knowledge. And being then further ask'd, Why he came not in upon the Proclamation, and Reward thereof; He ſaid, He was afraid to truſt to it. After ſeveral Queſtions, he was ſtill ſo particular as to the Circumſtances of Time, Place and Manner, that the King appointed the Duke of Monmouth and the Earl of Oſſory, with Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, to take Prance's Information at Somerſet-Houſe, from Place to Place were the things were acted; which they perform'd with great Diligence: In which Examination Prance was very punctual in naming and ſhowing ſome of the Rooms; but ſo uncertain and dubious in ſome Particulars, eſpecially about the chief Room, that that when the Duke of Monmouth privately ask'd the Earl of Offory what he thought on't, he anſwer'd, It was all a great Cheat. 1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

The Council ſat again in the Afternoon, and Prance was confronted with Green, Berry and Hill, who deny'd every Syllable of the Charge, and Prance ſtood as ſtoutly to every Point of the Accuſation. After which he was ſent back to Newgate, for four or five Days, with his Irons ſometimes off, and ſometimes on, according as he was in a diſcovering Temper; during which time, he was often viſited by Members of both Houſes, who ſometimes ſeverely threaten'd him, when his Evidence did not agree with Bedloe's; and particularly becauſe he wou'd not own the Perriwig which Bedloe had firſt mention'd. Upon Sunday the 29th of December, he was again examin'd before the King in Council; but before he was brought before the Board, he made it his Requeſt, that he might firſt wait upon the King himſelf. Upon which Captain Richardſon was order'd to carry Prance to Mr. Chiffinch's Lodgings, where his Majeſty came and took him into a Room by himſelf. After a ſhort time, the King open'd the Door, Prance being then upon his Knees, and bad Mr. Chiffinch and Captain Richardſon to take Notice of what Prance ſaid; who being call'd upon to ſpeak out plainly, he declar'd, That the Men he had Sworn againſt, were all Innocent; and that All he had Sworn againſt them was falſe; which he affirm'd with great Paſſion, and earneſt Aſſeveration. Upon which the King preſs'd him in theſe very Words, Upon your Salvation is it ſo! He reply'd, Upon my Salvation, the whole Accuſation is falſe. He was from thence carried to the Council, where falling down upon his Knees alſo, he declared to the ſame Effect. Upon which he was ask'd, What Inducement he had to his former Story? Why he ſwore againſt thoſe Perſons? Who put him upon it? He ſaid, No body prompted him; he only knew the Men he ſwore againſt; he never ſaw Bedloe before he was taken up; he knew nothing of the Plot, nor of the Murther; All he had Sworn was falſe; he was never guilty of any Man's Blood, and cou'd not reſt for the Story he had told: But Wren ow'd him Money, and threatned him becauſe he dunn'd him for it, and ſo hair'd him into it. This was a great Surprize to the Council, and ſome there were that call'd him a thouſand Villains and Apoſtates, and threaten'd to ſhew him the Wrack; and the Duke of Monmouth ſaid, Certainly they have let Prieſts and Jeſuits come to him, he cou'd never have gone off as he did elſe. The very next Day he was likewiſe brought before the King and Council, where he firmly and finally perſiſted in the ſame Story, and was remanded to Newgate; firſt declaring, 'That he had no other Hints to the Story 'he had told them, than what he took from the forementiond Paper of 'Inſtructions, that was laid by him in the Condemn'd Hole in New-'gate.

He denies all before them.

Prance, excepting juſt after his Return, ſtood firm and immoveable in his Denial, againſt all Terrors and Temptations for about 12 Days, from the 29th of December to the 11th of this preſent January. During which ſpace of time, his Uſage was barbarous, and more like the Romiſh Inquiſition, than the Methods of a Free Nation. For nine Days at leaſt his Caſe was deplorable; and what with the deadly Cold and Naſtineſs of the Place, the Diſtreſs of his Condition, the Agony of his Thoughts, under the Horror of bringing new Guilt upon his Conſcience, and the galling Weight of the Irons, he lay in ſuch Torments, both of Body and Mind, that he ſpent his Hours in Roaring and Groaning, frequently and pitifully crying out, Not Guilty, not Guilty! No Murther, no Murther! He us'd the ſame Outcries, or Clamours at leaſt to that Effect, ſo often, that the Impoſers had no way to cover the Scandal and the Inhumanity of this Treatment, but either by imputing the Anguiſh of a wounded Conſcience to the Ravings of a diſtemper'd Brain; or by converting the Marks of a true Repentance into the Story of a Counterfeit Madneſs. But when things were at the worſt, Prance was now and then, as the good Humour prevail'd, eas'd of his Irons, comforted with good Words and Promiſes, and no Artifice omitted for the bringing him to a proper Underſtanding. The Keepers were then under the ſole Direction of a certain ambulatory Committee, when and in what degree to ſqueeze, to pinch, to eaſe, to ſhackle, to comfort, or to torment their Priſoners; and moſt things were done according to the particular Orders of that Cabal. It wou'd be too tedious to recite all the Sufferings of this unfortunate Man, who being unable to hold out as Corral had done, and finding his Life in the ſame Danger with thoſe he had accuſed, he, at length ſubmitted to the Temptation, and upon a new Aſſurance of Pardon, he promis'd to ſtand by his former Evidence. Immediately upon this, on the 11th of January, his Irons were knocked off, and he was remov'd from hard Boards, and a diſmal cold Room, to a fine Lodging and a curious Bed, with variety of the beſt Meats and Drinks. Here, having Pen, Ink and Paper, and the Aſſiſtance of his Friend one Mr. Boyce, he finiſh'd his Story, and prepar'd for being a compleat Evidence againſt Green, Berry and Hill, who were ſhortly after to come upon their Tryals.

His barbarous Uſage in Newgate.

He returns to his firſt Evidence.

Prance and Bedloe had given in very different Accounts of the Murther; but now Prance's Story was more fix'd and regular, and was to ſtand good againſt all others; while Bedloe's was to be rather by way of Supply and Confirmation. Prance's Story, which took ſo much with the Belief of the Nation, was to this Effect: 'Girald, Kelly, Green, 'Berry, Hill and Prance, with the Approbation of ſome others, after 'ſeveral Conſultations, had reſolv'd to Murther Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, as being a bitter Perſecutor of the Catholicks, an active Diſcoverer of their Deſigns, and a particular Enemy to the Queen's Servants. 'Thus determin'd, on Saturday the 12th of October, Hill went to Sir 'Edmund-bury's Houſe in the Morning, and talk'd with him in private: 'Then taking his leave, he went to Girald and Green, and with them 'ſtaid hard by, waiting for the Gentleman's coming out, which he did 'about 10 or 11, all alone as uſually. They dog'd him to ſeveral Places, 'till about 6 or 7 in the Evening, when Green went to Prance's Houſe, 'and told him, They had ſet him near St. Clements; and that Prance 'muſt make all haſte to the Water-Gate at Somerſet-Houſe, where he 'ſhou'd find Kelly and Berry, which he did; and they three waited 'there till about nine a Clock. When of a ſudden Hill came running, 'and ſaid, He was coming, and they muſt pretend a Quarrel, and he wou'd fetch him in. While Kelly and Berry were in a ſeeming Scuffle, 'Hill at the Gate ſtop'd Sir Edmund-bury, and entreated him for God's ſake to come in, for two Men were a quarrelling, and he was afraid there wou'd be Bloodſhed. The Gentleman, being a Magiſtrate, did at 'laſt Conſent, and Hill entred the Gate firſt, to ſhew him the Perſons; 'and after them follow'd Girald and Green; while Prance watched the 'Water-Gate, and Berry was to ſecure the Paſſage by the Chappel. 'But firſt he and Kelly, the pretended Combatants, ſtood about the end 'of the Rail by the Queen's Stables; and as Sir Edmund went down towards them, Green ſuddenly threw a twiſted Handkerchief about his 'Neck, and immediately all four pull'd him down and ſtrangled him, ſo 'as he cou'd make no Noiſe; after which they threw him behind the 'Rail, and gave him ſome violent Punches on the Breaſt with their 'Knees, and Green with all his Force wrung his Neck almoſt round.

The Subſtance of his ſtrange Story.

Prance

'Prance and Berry being come to them, when he was quite dead, they all help'd to carry the Body into Dr. Godden's Lodgings, where Hill liv'd, and where they brought him up five or ſix Steps, into a little Room on the Right Hand, and there left him that Night, and Sunday all Day and Night. On Monday Night, Hill and ſome others remov'd him into a Room in the upper Court, where Prance was ſhewn the Body by the light of a Dark-Lanthorn, and where Bedloe ſwore he ſaw Prance. On Tueſday Night, they carried him to another Room in the long Entry, over-againſt Dr. Godden's Lodgings; and on Wedneſday Night, they remov'd it to the little Room where it was firſt laid. Having kept the Body above four Days and Nights, Girald and Kelly adviſ'd to carry it into the Fields, and leave him run through with his own Sword, that he might be ſuppos'd to have murthered himſelf; and therefore his Money, Rings, &c. were all to be left with him. This being agreed, they reſolv'd to carry him out that Night; and accordingly Hill procur'd a Sedan, or Chair, into which they put the Body about 12 a-Clock. Berry, the Porter, having invited the Centinels into his Houſe, open'd the Gate, and Prance and Girald carry'd out the Sedan. Thus, ſometimes they two, and ſometimes Kelly and Green, carried it up towards Soho-Fields, hard by the Grecians Church; and there Hill attending with a Horſe, they ſet the Body up before him, and left the Sedan in ſome unfiniſh'd Buildings in that Place; whereupon Girald ſaid, I wiſh we had a hundred ſuch Rogues as ſecure as this. Then Prance, being a Houſe-keeper, return'd home; and the other four went on, one leading the Horſe, Hill riding and holding the Body, and the other two walking by. They carried him to a Place call'd Primroſe-Hill, about two Miles out of Town, where they left him in a Ditch, with his own Sword run through his Body by Girald himſelf, in the exact Poſture of One that had murder'd himſelf.' This Story, which afterwards met with inſuperable Difficulties and Inconſiſtencies, at preſent had a wonderful Effect upon the Nation, was aſſerted with ſuch ſpecious Pretences and Circumſtances, and ſo plauſibly connected and united to the grand Plot, that it was dangerous for any Man to ſuſpect the Truth, or the Probability of it. 1678/9. 3. All this while the King was under no ſmall Perplexities about the Plot, the Murther, the Charge againſt the Lord Danby, &c. but he acted as one that believ'd all, and was frequently iſſuing out Proclamations againſt the Papiſts, who immediately after the Prorogation of the Parliament, flock'd to London and Weſtminſter in great Numbers, and began to talk with unuſual Boldneſs about the preſent Times. The firſt Proclamation was dated January 3, which declared, 'That whereas ſeveral 'Popiſh Recuſants, and Perſons reputed to be ſuch, had ſince the late 'Prorogation of the Parliament taken the Boldneſs to reſort to the ſaid 'Cities of London and Weſtminſter, his Majeſty was moſt highly offended 'with their Preſumption, and did Order, That a diligent and ſpeedy 'Search and Inquiry ſhou'd be made after them, and they ſhou'd be pro-'ceeded againſt with the utmoſt Severity.' On the 11th of January, his Majeſty was pleas'd to publiſh another Proclamation, 'Commanding the immediate Return of all his Majeſty's Subjects who were in Foreign Seminaries, offering Pardon to thoſe who ſhall obey, and forbidding all Relief 'or Maintenance to be ſent to them that ſtay, according to the Statute 'made 27th of Elizabeth.' About this time, Come in Herefordſhire was ſaid to be diſcover'd to be a Colledge of Jeſuits; and Mr. Stephen Dugdale, formerly Servant to the Lord Aſton in Staffordſhire, came in and made a conſiderable Diſcovery; whereupon, on the 15th of Januaary

Proclamations againſt the Papiſts.

ry there came out a third Proclamation, 'Againſt Francis Evers, alias 'Eurie, of Tixal in the County of Stafford, John Gaven, late of Wolverhampton, Vavaſor, alias Gifford, late of Boſcobel, Edward Leviſon, late of Wilnot, all Jeſuits, and Broadſtreet, late of Hore-Croſs, a Popiſh Prieſt, being all charg'd to be guilty of the Popiſh Plot; and a 'Promiſe of a Hundred Pounds to any that ſhou'd apprehend Evers, 'and Fifty Pounds for each of the reſt.' Of theſe Gaven was ſoon after taken into Cuſtody, but the reſt abſconded.

Notwithſtanding theſe Proceedings of the Court, the Juſtices of the Peace of Middleſex, ſeem'd apprehenſive of ſome Relaxations in Favour of the Papiſts, and therefore on the 17th of January, they preſented to his Majeſty in Council theſe ſix Queries. 1. 'Whether Foreigners (Popiſh Recuſants) that are, and have long been here ſetled Houſe-Keepers, 'and are Tradeſmen, viz. Chirurgeons, Taylors, Perriwig-makers, or 'ordinary Shop-keepers, following Imployments for their own Advantages, but not otherwiſe Merchants, but are certify'd to be Merchant-Strangers, ſhall be excus'd from taking the Oaths, or finding Sureties, 'or either of them? 2. Whether ſuch Foreigners, being certify'd by 'Ambaſſadors, or other Foreign Miniſters, to be their Servants at this 'time, ſhall be excus'd? 3. Whether Foreigners (Popiſh Recuſants) ſetled here Houſe-keepers, but neither are Tradeſmen, Travellers, or Foreign Miniſters Servants, ſhall be excus'd? 4. Whether Native Subjects 'of our Sovereign Lord, that are menial Servants of Foreign Miniſters, 'ſhall be excus'd? 5. Whether Married Women, being Popiſh Recuſants, but their Husbands Proteſtants, ſhall be excus'd? 6. Whether Popiſh Recuſants that have taken the Oaths, found Sureties, have 'appeared, and are convicted, ſhall find new Sureties, or be continu'd over?' Upon receiving of theſe Queries, his Majeſty referred the Matter to the Judges of the Land, who very ſhortly return'd him this Anſwer in Writing: 'May it pleaſe your Majeſty, We have met and 'conſider'd of the Queſtions propoſed to us, and do hereby humbly return our Opinions. 1. That Foreigners, being Popiſh Recuſants, and 'exerciſing ordinary Trades, but not Merchants, are not excus'd from 'taking the Oaths, or finding Sureties. 2. That Foreigners, tho' certify'd by Ambaſſadors to be their Servants, except they are their menial 'Servants, are not excus'd. 3. That Foreigners, tho' ſetled Houſe-Keepers, being no Travellers, or Foreign Miniſter's Servants, are not excus'd. 4. That the King's Native Subjects are not excus'd from taking 'the Oaths, by being menial Servants to Foreign Maſters. 5. We find 'no Law that excuſes a Feme-Covert, being a Papiſt, from taking the 'Oaths, tho' her Husband be a Proteſtant. 6. That a Popiſh Recuſant, 'having taken the Oaths, is not bound to find new Sureties; unleſs upon a new Tender of the Oaths, he ſhall refuſe to take them. All which, 'with great Humility, we ſubmit to your Majeſty's Judgment: W. Scroggs, F. North, W. Mountagu, W. Wylde, F. Littleton, W. Wyndham, R. Atkyns, V. Bertie, F. Bramſton, *T. Anſwer'd by the Judges.

The King approv'd of the Opinion, and thereupon made an Order of Council, which was ſent to the Cuſtos Rotulorum of each County, to be obſerv'd by all Magiſtrates whatſoever.

In the mean Time, during moſt of the Month of January, all Peoples Mouths were fill'd with various Reports concerning the next Meeting of the Parliament: It was often affirm'd, That the next Seſſion was to be further Prorogu'd till the 25th of February; and then again, That the Parliament wou'd certainly meet on the 4th of February, the Day mention'd at the Prorogation. But as a Period to all common Reports and Conjectures, on the 24th of this Month of January, his Majeſty iſſu'd out a ſurprizing Proclamation, in which he Declar'd, 'That he had taken 'into

'into his ſerious Conſideration the many Inconveniencies ariſing by the 'over-long Continuance of one and the ſame Parliament; wherefore he 'Publiſhes and Declares his Royal Will and Pleaſure to Diſſolve this 'preſent Parliament.— But to the Intent his Majeſty's Loyal Subjects 'may perceive the Confidence his Majeſty hath in their good Affections, 'and how Willing and Deſirous his Majeſty is to meet his People, and 'have their Advice by their Repreſentatives in Parliament, he will cauſe 'Writs, in due Form of Law, to be forthwith iſſu'd for the Calling of a 'New Parliament, which ſhall begin and be holden at Weſtminſter, on 'Thurſday the ſixth Day of March next; when his Majeſty doth expect 'ſuch Laws will be Enacted, and ſuch Order taken, by the Conſent and 'Advice of his Parliament, as will tend to the Securing the True Prote- 'ſtant Religion, and the Peaceable and Happy Government of this his 'Kingdom.

The SECOND PARLIAMENT DISSOLVED.

Thus ended the famous Long Parliament, the Second, or, as ſome call it, the Firſt of this Reign, which had been continu'd, by Eighteen Prorogations, and ſeveral Adjournments, for Seventeen Years, Eight Months, and Seventeen Days. For above two Thirds of which Time, the King had liv'd with ſo entire Agreement with it, inſomuch that both the Proteſtant and Popiſh Diſſenters had us'd their utmoſt Efforts for its Diſſolution; but by the Death of ſome, and Defection of others, and the violent Heats rais'd by the Plot, and other Matters, it became ſo much alter'd, that the King was weary'd out with what the Earl of Shaftsbury, when Lord Chancellor, had call'd His Wife, ſo as to give her this Bill of Divorce. The Houſe of Commons had been choſen out of as Great, Wiſe and conſiderable Men, as were in the Nation; and, conſidering the vaſt Exigencies when they met, they made as good and wiſe Laws and Eſtabliſhments. As they cannot be vindicated in all Particulars, ſo perhaps they cannot be altogether ſo, with relation to their Treatment of Diſſenters of both Kinds; but this ought to be ſtill remember'd, that all the Proceedings of that Nature aroſe from particular Provocations, which had reviv'd old Reſentments, and ſeem'd rather the Effects of Policy and Self-Preſervation, than of Religion and Devotion, tho' there was a great Mixture of both: And further, all theſe were really contrary to the Humour and Inclination of the King Himſelf. From whence we have leſs reaſon to believe thoſe Corruptions charg'd upon them by Enemies on both ſides, but rather to depend upon the Words of the knowing Duke of Leeds, which he wrote above Thirty Years after the Diſſolution of this Parliament. Speaking of the rough Treatment he met with from them upon the Account of his Letters, he ſays, And it is no leſs difficult to conceive, how that Parliament ſhould be thought a Penſionary Parliament, which was not only ſo ſparing in the Supplies which were Neceſſary, and did Appropriate every Penny to particular Uſes upon Account; and that I, who was call'd the Promoter and Pay-Maſter of thoſe Penſions, had not Power to preſerve my ſelf from being impeach'd of Treaſon by thoſe Penſioners, for what in Juſtice my worſt Enemies could not have made a Miſdemeanour. Theſe are ſuch Contradictions in their own Nature, that they need no Anſwer. Not but Bribery was practis'd the ſix laſt Years, but never ſufficient to gain a Majority; and this Cuſtom, as Sir William Temple obſerves, was introduc'd by the Lord-Treaſurer Clifford, near Twelve Years after the firſt Meeting; and ſtill there were many great Men that ſhew'd themſelves above all Temptations, as the Lord Caſtleton, Mr. Sacheverell, Mr. Garraway, Sir William Hickman, &c. who were faithful to their King, Country and Church, in ſpight of all Tryals whatſoever. As to the Cauſes of the Diſſolution of this famous Aſſembly, there have been innumerable Conjectures, therefore we ſhall only uſe the Obſervations upon that Parliament.

Words of the forementiond noble Author, who ſays, As I hope I have made it appear that I never needed a Pardon, nor to have abſented my ſelf from Tryal, but that I did both in Obedience to the King's Commands; ſo I verily believe, the King was ſo apprehenſive that the producing Mr. Mountagu's Letters would have ſo much heightned the ill Humour of that Parliament, that the Fear of producing them (which I muſt have done, rather than ſuffer a Bill of Attainder to paſs againſt me) was one of the Cauſes of Diſſolving that Parliament. We ſhall conclude with obſerving, that during that Time they were under the leaſt Temptations of Bribery, they were moſt Loyal and Complying with the King; but when they were under the Greateſt, they were moſt Oppoſing and Contradicting; and if the King Himſelf had always been as careful of his own Honour, as they themſelves were, they might in all Probability have continu'd the whole Reign, in Oppoſition to all Parties and Factions whatſoever.

The Nation buiſy in Elections.

I. 1. IN this following Period, the Nation was more agitated, and the King and Court under greater Difficulties, than at any Time ſince the Reſtoration. Upon the unexpected Diſſolution of a Parliament, which ſome ſaid, Nothing but God Almighty could put an End to, the whole Nation was in a ſudden Ferment, and all were violently ingag'd in the new Elections, upon the Writs iſſu'd out the 25th of January. Moſt of the Diſſenters were tranſported at the Diſſolution, and they and their Friends exerted themſelves in the Elections after an extraordinary manner; having a hopeful Proſpect of a new Struggle, either for a Superiority, or an equal Eſtabliſhment. They knew how to make all the Advantages of the Popiſh Plot, and generally falling into the Wiſhes and Endeavours of a zealous Proſecution of it, became thereby the more Popular; and they had now the Opportunity of making the World believe, that they were the chief Aſſertors of Engliſh Liberty, and the Reform'd Religion. And thoſe Members of each Houſe, who were thought to be in their Intereſt, had now the Advantage of being eſteem'd the greateſt Patriots, and the better Friends of the Proteſtant Religion; while many of thoſe who were more profeſſedly for the Eſtabliſh'd Church of England, were drawn into the Meaſures of the Court, and into the Perſonal Intereſt of the Duke of York, and thereby fell into the odious Character of being Popiſhly Affected, and the Promoters of Arbitrary Power. Having multiply'd theſe ſorts of Calumnies, they proceeded to the Multiplying of Free-Holds, a Practice ſaid to be unknown before this Time; and ſo all the Diſſenting Teachers, old Committee-Men, Sequeſtrators, and Parliament Soldiers, rally'd their Forces, and joyning with all thoſe Semi-Conformiſts, that had comply'd with the Church out of Neceſſity or Convenience, they made a very powerful powerful Body. But notwithſtanding all this Care, and theſe uncommon Advantages, the Diſſenting Party did not carry the Elections every where, nor almoſt any where without great Oppoſition. For, on the other ſide, the Gentry appear'd themſelves, and brought in their Tenants and Dependents; and many of the Yeomen Free-Holders were zealous for the Church and Government: And in Corporations, the Magiſtrates and Free-men had not forgot the old Methods of the Diſſenters, ſo that the two Parties were almoſt equal there. In the Counties in general, the Gentry had been certainly the ſtronger ſide, if Arts had not been employ'd againſt them: and in ſome Places they prevail'd againſt all thoſe that were us'd, but not ſo much as to make an equal Party in the Houſe. As to the City of London, they choſe all of one ſide, now call'd the Country Party, viz. Sir Robert Clayton, Knight, and Alderman; Sir Thomas Player, Knight, and Chamberlain of the City; William Love, Eſquire, late Alderman; and Thomas Pilkington Eſquire, a Turkey Merchant. 1678. Car. 31 Reſ. 19

All this while the King ſeem'd intirely to keep Pace with the Country, now fill'd with the Rumours of Plots, Conſpiracies and Murthers, and endeavour'd to oblige the People by all deſirable Proceedings againſt the Romiſh Party, for which he himſelf had moſt real Affection, and from which, perhaps, he had leaſt Apprehenſion: He did not only enforce the Order of Council before mention'd, but made particular Enquiry into the ſeveral Neglects of Proſecution in the Country; and finding a Remiſſneſs in ſeveral Places, and notwithſtanding the many Proclamations he had publiſh'd of late, that ſeveral did refuſe or neglect to put the ſame in Execution, his Majeſty, within ſeven Days after the Parliament was diſſolv'd, was pleas'd in Council to Order, 'That all his Majeſty's Juſtices 'of the Peace do with all Care and Diligence purſue his Majeſty's Com-'mands ſignify'd in ſuch his late Proclamations. And his Majeſty doth 'hereby further Direct the Lord Chancellor of England, upon due Com-'plaint made of the Neglect or Refuſal of any of his Majeſty's Juſtices 'of the Peace, in the Execution of the Premiſſes, forthwith to put them, 'and every of them out of Commiſſion for the Peace, as Perſons Diſ-'affected to his Majeſty's Government, and the true Proteſtant Religion; 'and to put in their Places Perſons who may be likely to act with more 'Vigour and Affection.' In Sum, all the King's Proceedings at this Time were like one who fear'd and hated both the Papiſts, and their Religion. The King uſes all popular Methods.

2. What added to the Ferment of the Times, and the Horror of the People, was the Conviction of the three reputed Murtherers of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, Green, Berry and Hill, who were try'd on the 10th of February, at the King's-Bench-Bar, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, with as much Expectation and Concourſe as the greateſt of the Plotters. Here Oates had but a ſmall Share, who ſwore only to the Fears and Apprehenſions of Sir Edmund-bury, a little before the Murther, as that he told him, That he went in Fear of his Life by the Popiſh Party; and when he adviſ'd him to take his Man always with him, he ſaid, No, he did not fear them, if they did but come fairly. This Evidence was confirm'd by one Mr. Robinſon, who teſtify'd he heard him ſay, That he believ'd he ſhould be the firſt Martyr. But Prance's Evidence was large and full; and he told the whole Story at length, as we have already recited it, and was ſo poſitive and particular, that it was ſufficient alone to convict the Priſoners. And yet he was put to two Difficulties in the Tryal, which at another Time could not have been ſo eaſily conquer'd. The Firſt was that obvious one of his Recanting and Denying all before the King and Council; but in this he was not a little help'd out The Tryal of Green, Berry, and Hill. Prance the main Witneſs by the Court, and it was alledg'd, That all that was nothing but an unusual Fear, and a Want of a full Assurance of his Pardon. The Second was upon his being ask'd by Mrs. Hill, upon his Oath, Whether he had not been tortured in Newgate, since several had heard him cry out in that Place? The poor Man, to support the Credit of his Evidence, was forc'd to disown all his barbarous Usage, and to say, That Captain Richardson had us'd him as civilly as any Man in England; and that all the Time he was there, he wanted for nothing: And all directly contrary to sufficient Proofs that were made to appear afterwards.

Bedloe's Evidence.

The next Witness was Bedloe, the first Discoverer, whose Evidence before the Lords was, 'That Le Phaire, Walsh, Pritchard, Keins, &c. 'had wheedled Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey into Somerset-House-Court, under the Pretence of taking some principal Plotters; and after a Turn 'or two, and the Pretence of sending for a Constable, they shov'd him 'into a Room, presented a Pistol to him, if he made any Noise, but wou'd 'do him no hurt, if he wou'd send for his Examinations; which he refu- 'sing to do, they stifled him between two Pillows, and after that, upon 'finding some Life in him, they strangled him with a long Crevat.' But now it was necessary to omit several Particulars in this Story, to make his and Prance's Evidence agree; and indeed the main Business between them two, was the same as between Oates and Him, to make a real Harmony without an appearing Confederacy. What he testify'd upon the Tryal, was generally more remote, yet at such a near Distance as might answer the Ends of his Swearing. He swore, 'That about a Fortnight 'before the Murther, Le Phaire, Pritchard, Keins, and some other Ro- 'mish Priests, all unknown to Prance and his Criminals, discours'd him 'about Killing a certain Gentleman, not nam'd; and then set him to in- 'sinuate himself into Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Acquaintance, which 'he did under several Pretences. That on the very Day of the Mur- 'ther Le Phaire told him There was a Gentleman to be put out of the 'Way that Night, and would have him to assist, and that there would 'be Four thousand Pounds Reward from the Lord Bellasis, &c. and 'therefore desir'd him to meet in the Cloysters at Somerset-House that E- 'vening, for thereabouts it was to be done; which he promis'd to do, but 'wilfully fail'd them, Because he wou'd not have his Hands in Blood. On 'the Monday after, Le Phaire meeting him, charg'd him with Breach of 'Promise, and appointed him to come to Somerset-House at Nine that 'Night, where he told the Witness, That he had done ill, that he did not 'help in the Business; but if he wou'd assist to carry him off, he should 'still have half the Reward; and told him he was actually murther'd. The 'Witness ask'd if he might see him; upon which Le Phaire led him 'through a dark Entry into a Room where were several People, and 'Prance amongst them, and only by the Light of a dark Lanthorn, he saw the 'Face of the murther'd Person, and knew him to be Sir Edmund-bury God- 'frey. The Witness advis'd to tye Weights about him, and throw him into 'the Thames; but they did not approve of that, but said, They would put 'it upon Himself, and carry him out in a Chair by the Help of Porter 'Berry, at Twelve that Night. The Witness promis'd, upon the Sacra- 'ment, which he had taken the Thursday before, to come again to help 'them; but being got from them, his Conscience would not permit him 'to go any further; tho' he had been promis'd Two thousand Pounds for 'his Labour, but he rather chose to discover the Villany to the King 'and Council,' and accept of a Quarter of the Sum in an honest Way.

Some Circumstantial Evidences.

By Way of Circumstance and Confirmation, the Constable that view'd the Body in the Ditch, gave an Account, 'That the Sword was stick- 'ing through him, but no Blood appear'd on the Ground, and he found

'Gold

'Gold and Silver in his Pockets.' And two Surgeons ſwore, 'That 'they verily believ'd, the Sword was run through him after he was dead 'and cold; but that he dy'd by reaſon of the Suffocation, and breaking 'of his Neck, and Bruiſes on the Breaſt.' Sir Robert Southwell depos'd, 'That Prance having related the Matter to the Council, and being ſent 'with the Duke of Monmouth and the Earl of Oſſory, to ſhew the Places 'he mention'd, did readily go to them all, and they appear'd to be all 'ſuch as he had deſcrib'd them; only as to the Room in the upper 'Court where the Body was laid one Night, having never been there 'but once, he ſaid he cou'd not poſitively aſſign it, but pointed to ſome 'Rooms, and ſaid, He was ſure it was thereabouts.' And this Dubiouſneſs the Court obſerv'd, gave more Credit to the reſt of his Teſtimonies, for a Man that will ſwear any Thing, will ſtick at Nothing. Theſe, and ſome other ſmaller Matters, were brought as Circumſtantial Proofs againſt the Priſoners. 1678/9. Car. 31 Reſ. 19

The Defence made by the Priſoners.

As to their Defence, they had ſeveral material Things to alledge, which were not ſo much regarded at this Time. Hill brought ſeveral Witneſſes to prove, 'That he was never out of his Lodgings, after Nine a-Clock 'at Night, during the whole Time of this Tranſaction;' but they were the leſs minded by reaſon of their being Papiſts, and of the ſame Religion with himſelf. Beſides he prov'd, 'that when he heard of Prance's being ta-'ken up for the Murther, he had full time to make his Eſcape, which he 'never endeavouring, was a great Preſumption of his Innocence.' Green prov'd by two Witneſſes, James Warrier and his Wife, 'that he was at 'their Houſe in the Strand, from between Seven and Eight, till after 'Ten, on that very Night and Time, that Sir Edmund was ſaid to be 'Murther'd in Somerſet-Houſe: And when Prance was taken up, he 'ſhew'd ſuch a Deteſtation of the Fact, that he ſaid, Rather than he 'ſhould eſcape, if he were guilty, he would be the Executioner himſelf. In Behalf of Berry the Porter, the Soldiers that were placed Sentinel at the Gate, teſtify'd, 'that no Sedan went out of the Gate that Night that 'the Body was ſaid to be carry'd off, tho' one did come in, (which be-'long'd to the Lady Wiche, as it afterwards appear'd,) and that they cou'd 'not be miſtaken in ſo plain a Matter.' And Berry's Maid declar'd, 'that 'her Maſter was in Bed by Twelve a-Clock that Night, and never ſtir'd 'out; which made it impoſſible for him to be upon the whole Expedi-'tion.' They all endeavour'd likewiſe to invalidate Prance's Evidence; but his fine Story carry'd the Point at laſt; and the Court particularly obſerv'd, That it was impoſſible that Mr. Prance, a Man of that mean Capacity, ſhould invent a Story with ſo many conſiſting Circumſtances, if there were not Truth in the Bottom of it: Which made others obſerve, That the Story was invented by ſome Body elſe of a greater Capacity. In Concluſion, the Jury brought them in all guilty of the Murther: Whereupon the Lord Chief-Juſtice ſaid, Gentlemen, you have found the ſame Verdict that I would have found, if I had been one with you; and if it were the laſt Word I were to ſpeak in this World, I ſhould have pronounc'd them Guilty. At which Words, the whole Aſſembly in Weſtminſter-Hall gave a great Shout of Applauſe.

They are found guilty.

The next Day Mr. Juſtice Wyld, as Second Judge in the Court, paſs'd Sentence upon them with a Speech, in which we may take notice of theſe Words: If I cou'd abſtract Folly from Wickedneſs, certainly it was one of the greateſt Pieces of Folly and Sottiſhneſs in the World: For what cou'd be your End in it? Did you think that all the Magiſtrates in England were lodg'd in Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey? that if he were taken out of the Way, there were not Men of Spirit and Courage, as faithful and diligent as he was?——After their Condemnation, great Pains were taken, and particularly by Mr. Smith the Ordinary of Newgate, to bring them to a Confeſſion of their Guilt, or Knowledge of the Murther; but they continually deny'd they had any Knowledge of it, and immoveably inſiſted upon their Innocence to the laſt Moment of their Lives; all which was then generally imputed to their Popiſh Principles; tho' Berry in effect own'd to the Ordinary, That he was a Proteſtant in his Heart, but had for ſome Time diſſembled his Religion for his private Advantage. Hill, to ſhew his Sincerity, confeſs'd to the Ordinary, That he had wrong'd one in a Twelve Penny Matter, which had ſo troubled his Conſcience, that he had made Reſtitution ſince his Condemnation, tho' he was in extream Want of preſent Neceſſaries: and therefore he thus argu'd with Him, If I have taken Shame upon my ſelf, in confeſſing my Crime in the Caſe of a Trifle; can you think I wou'd deny the Murther to maintain my Reputation? About the ſame Time he wrote this Letter to his Wife, which may deſerve to be remember'd: 'My dear Wife, I recommend 'you to that good God of Heaven, who I hope will be both a Husband 'to you, and a Father to my poor Child, if you ſerve and love him as 'you ought to do: And the Firſt Thing you are to do, is heartily to 'forgive him that is the Occaſion of my Death; and not to bear him any 'Malice, but leave the Revenge wholly to God, who knows beſt how 'to revenge the Innocent. This I earneſtly beg of you to do; and likewiſe to deſire all my Friends to pray to God Almighty, That if it be 'his Divine Will, this little Suffering may mitigate his Juſt Wrath 'againſt me for my heinous Sins.' In purſuance of their Sentence, Laurence Hill and Robert Green were executed at Tyburn, on the 21ſt of February: But Henry Berry, being now look'd upon as a Proteſtant, was repriev'd till the 28th, in Expectation of ſome Diſcovery; but he finally inſiſted, as the other two had done, That he was as Innocent as the Child new Born; which was then only look'd upon as a Canting and Equivocating Expreſſion, invented by the Papiſts to be us'd upon theſe and the like Occaſions.

Condemn'd.

And Executed.

And now the two grand Evidences, Oates and Bedloe, having gain'd the main Point, of making the Murther to be an eſſential Part of the Plot, and the chief Support of the Credit of it, they ſeem'd in the Height of their Glory, and no Man durſt preſume to doubt of their Veracity. Therefore on the ſame Week that the Three laſt Perſons were condemn'd, when Mens Beliefs were freſh and ſtrong, they thought fit to bring in their Bills of Charges, of what Moneys they had, for the Good of the Publick, expended and paid out of their own Pockets; Oates beginning his at a Time when he was in a ſtarving Condition, without Money or Credit; and Bedloe, when he had juſt before been fed out of the Alms-Basket at the Marſhalſea. The former amounted to ſix Hundred and ſeventy eight Pounds, twelve and ſix Pence: The Latter, being of a ſhorter ſtanding, amounted to no more than two Hundred and thirteen Pounds, without any odd Money. We do not find how well the Government paid them; but for the Truth of them, many Perſons have ſince thought that their Bills and their Narratives were equally credible.

Oates and Bedloe's Bills.

3. As the Time for the Meeting of the new Parliament drew near, ſo the King was daily preparing the Way to make it an uſeful and eaſy Seſſion; and omitted no popular Acts that might teſtify his Apprehenſions of Popery and the Plot, which had now ſo fill'd the Heads of the Nation. But the moſt popular Act at this Time was reſerv'd to the laſt, and that was the ſending away his Brother the Duke of York, that he might be no Cauſe of Diſputes in the Parliament, nor be imagin'd to influence any Counſels at Court. Accordingly, he directed the following Letter to his Royal Royal Highneſs, on the 28th of February: 'I have already given you my 'Reſolves at large, why I think it fit that you ſhou'd abſent your ſelf for 'ſome Time beyond the Seas: As I am truly ſorry for the Occaſion, ſo 'may you be ſure, I ſhall never deſire it longer than it will be abſolutely 'neceſſary for your Good, and my Service. In the mean Time I think it 'proper to give it you under my Hand, That I expect this Compliance 'from you, and deſire it may be as ſoon as conveniently you can. You 'may eaſily believe with what Trouble I write; there being nothing I am 'more ſenſible of than the conſtant Kindneſs you have ever had for me. 'I hope you are as Juſt to me, to be aſſured, That no Abſence nor 'any Thing elſe, can ever change me from being Truly and Kindly, 'Yours, C. R. 1678/9. Car. 31 Reſ. 19 The King's Letter to the Duke of York.

In purſuance of this Command, his Royal Highneſs, with the Dutcheſs and his Family, immediately made ready to take Shipping for Holland, which they did upon the 3d Day of March. The Day before, Sir William Temple being juſt arriv'd from Holland, he took an Occaſion to diſcourſe with that Miniſter, and told him with great Freedom the Steps that had been made towards the Reſolution of this Journey, which was much againſt his own Opinion: Therefore he bid Sir William remember what he now foretold him, That however this was thought likely to ſtop the violent Humour then rais'd by the Plot, yet he ſhou'd ſee it wou'd go next to my Lord Treaſurer's Ruin, tho' he did not expect it. But to obviate this Miſchief, and to prevent the Inconveniencies that might fall upon the King by a Parliamentary Impeachment, his Majeſty, upon the Firſt of March, had granted as full and as compleat a Pardon as cou'd be drawn up, for all Crimes and Miſdemeanors whatſoever, that cou'd before that Time be alledg'd againſt that prime Miniſter. That, and the Diſmiſſion from his Office, which preſently follow'd, was look'd upon as a ſure Protection againſt all Impeachments and Accuſations. The Duke goes beyond Sea.

On the 12th of March, the Duke of York and his Family arriv'd at Holland, and at his firſt Landing was receiv'd by his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, accompany'd with many Perſons of the Higheſt Quality, who conducted them to the Hague. Here the Prince drew out all his Guards before his Father-in-law, to the Number of three Thouſand, in a very good Equipage; and when the Duke paſs'd by them, the Prince put himſelf at the Head of his Guards du Corps, and ſaluted him with his Sword in his Hand; and as they fil'd off, the Prince march'd at the Head of them, and repeated the ſame Civility, tho' the Duke did what he cou'd to hinder them. The States-General, upon Notice of their Royal Highneſs's Arrival, deſired to have render'd them thoſe Publick Honours, which were due to their high Quality, but the Duke excus'd it, deſiring to be there Incognito. Of all which, there was a pompous Account publiſh'd at London by Authority. After a while, the Duke and his Family remov'd to Bruſſels, a Place in which he had formerly been well acquainted, where he ſtay'd moſt of the Summer, waiting for a proper Opportunity to return into England. His Reception in Holland. Goes to Bruſſels.

II. 1. The King having prepared the Way by all plauſible and probable Methods, to render Himſelf and his Buſineſs acceptable to his new Parliament, on Thurſday the 6th of March, that great Aſſembly met at Weſtminſter, watch'd and attended by the Eyes and Ears of the whole Kingdom. After all the preſent Members had taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, his Majeſty appear'd in great Splendor upon his Throne, and having ſent for the Houſe of Commons, he made this remarkable Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I meet 'you here with the moſt earneſt Deſire that Man can have, to unite the 'Minds The THIRD PARLIAMENT. The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'cution of ſeveral Men, both upon the Score of the Plot, and the Mur-
'ther of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; and it is apparent, that I have not 'been idle in Proſecuting the Diſcovery of Both, as much further as hath 'been poſſible in ſo ſhort a Time. I have disbanded as much of the Ar'my as I cou'd get Mony to do; and I am ready to disband the reſt
'ſo ſoon as you ſhall reimburſe me the Mony they have coſt me, and will 'enable me to pay off the Remainder: And above all, I have command'ed my Brother to abſent Himſelf from Me, becauſe I wou'd not leave
'malicious Men Room to ſay, I had not remov'd all Cauſes which cou'd
'be pretended to Influence Me towards Popiſh Counſels.

'Beſides that End of Union which I aim at (and which I cou'd wiſh
'cou'd be extended to Proteſtants Abroad, as well as at Home) I pro-
'poſe by this laſt great Step I have made, to diſcern Whether Proteſtant
'Religion, and the Peace of the Kingdom be as truly intended by Others,
'as they are really aim'd at by Me: For if they be, you will employ your 'Time upon the great Concerns of the Nation, and not be drawn to pro'mote private Animoſities, under the Pretences of the Publick: Your 'Proceedings will be calm and peaceable, in Order to thoſe good Ends I 'have recommended to you; and you will curb the Motions of any un'ruly Spirits, which wou'd endeavour to diſturb them. I hope there will 'be none ſuch among you, becauſe there can be no Man that muſt not
'ſee how fatal Differences amongſt our Selves are like to be at this Time,
'both at Home and Abroad. I ſhall not ceaſe my Endeavours, daily to 'find out what more I can, both of the Plot, and the Murther of Sir Ed- 'mund-bury Godfrey, and ſhall deſire the Aſſiſtance of both my Houſes in 'the Work. I have not been wanting in giving Orders for Putting all
'the preſent Laws in Execution againſt Papiſts; and I am ready to join 'in the Making ſuch further Laws as may be neceſſary for ſecuring the 'Kingdom againſt Popery.

'I muſt deſire your Aſſiſtance alſo in the Supplies, both for Disbanding
'the Army, as I have already told you, and for Paying that Part of the 'Fleet, which hath been provided for by Parliament but till the Fifth of 'June laſt; as alſo that Debt for Stores, which was occaſion'd by the 'Poll-Bill's falling ſhort of the Sum which that Act gave Credit for. I
'muſt neceſſarily recommend to you likewiſe the Diſcharging of thoſe
'Anticipations which are upon my Revenue, and which I have command'ed to be laid before you; and I hope I have juſt Cauſe to deſire ſuch
'an Increaſe of the Revenue it ſelf, as might make it equal to my neceſ-
'ſary Expences; but by reaſon of thoſe other Supplies, which are abſo-
'lutely neceſſary at this Time, I am contented to ſtruggle with that Diffi'culty a while longer; expecting for the preſent, only to have thoſe Ad'ditional Duties upon Cuſtoms and Exciſe to be prolonged to me; and 'that you will ſome other Way make up the Loſs I ſuſtain by the Prohi'bition of French Wines and Brandy, which turns only to my Prejudice,
'and to the great Advantage of the French. I muſt needs put you in 'Mind how neceſſary it will be to have a good Strength at Sea at Sum'mer, ſince our Neighbours are making Naval Preparations: and not-
'withſtanding the great Difficulties I labour under, I have taken ſuch
'Care as will prevent any Danger that can threaten us, if your Parts be 'perform'd in Time. And I do heartily recommend to you, That ſuch
'a Conſtant Eſtabliſhment might be made for the Navy, as might make
'the Kingdom not only ſafe, but formidable; which can never be, whilſt

'there

'there remains not enough beſides, to pay the neceſſary Charges of the 1678/9.
'Crown. Car. 31
'I will conclude as I begun, with my earneſt Deſires to have this a Ref. 19
'HEALING PARLIAMENT; and I do give you this Aſſurance,
'That I will with my Life defend both the Proteſtant Religion, and the 'Laws of this Kingdom; and I do expect from you to be defended from
'the Calumny, as well as the Danger of thoſe Worſt of Men, who en'deavour to render Me, and my Government, odious to my People. The 'reſt I leave to the Lord Chancellor.

Accordingly the Lord Chancellor Finch deliver'd a long and eloquent Speech, of which the greateſt Part muſt be here inſerted. After a handſome Introduction, he proceeded thus: 'The Conſiderations which are The Lord Chancellor Finch's Speech.
'now to be laid before you, are as urgent and as weighty as were ever
'yet offer'd to any Parliament, or indeed ever can be; ſo great, and ſo
'ſurprizing have been our Dangers at Home, ſo formidable are the Appea'rances of Danger from Abroad, that the moſt united Counſels, the moſt
'ſedate and calmeſt Temper, together with the moſt dutiful and zealous 'Affections that a Parliament can ſhew, are all become abſolutely and in'diſpenſably neceſſary for our Preſervation. At Home, we had need
'look about us; for his Majeſty's Royal Perſon hath been in Danger by
'a Conſpiracy againſt his Sacred Life, maliciouſly contriv'd, and induſtri-
'ouſly carry'd on, by thoſe Seminary Prieſts and Jeſuits, and their Ad'herents, who think themſelves under ſome Obligations of Conſcience to 'effect it; and having vow'd the Subverſion of the true Religion amongſt
'us, find no Way ſo likely to compaſs it, as to wound us in the Head,
'and to kill the Defender of the Faith. His Majeſty wanted not ſuffici-
'ent Evidence of his Zeal for our Religion, without this Teſtimony from 'his Enemies, who were about to ſacrifice him for it: But it hath ever 'been the Practice of thoſe Votaries, firſt to murder the Fame of Princes,
'and then their Perſons; firſt to ſlander them to their People, as if they
'favour'd Papiſts, and then to aſſaſſinate them for being too zealous
'Proteſtants. And thus, by all the Ways and Means which our Law
'calls Treaſon, and their Divinity calls Merit and Martyrdom, they are 'trying to ſet up the Dominion and the Supremacy of the Pope, as if the 'Dignity of his Triple Crown cou'd never be ſufficiently advanc'd, un-
'leſs theſe Three Kingdoms were added unto him, and all brought back
'again under that Yoke, which neither We, nor our Fore-Fathers, were 'able to bear.

'The Enquiry into this Conſpiracy hath been cloſely purſu'd; and the 'Lords of the Council have been careful to proſecute the Diſcovery ever
'ſince the Riſing of the laſt Parliament, and the King doth now recom'mend it to you to perfect. More Evidence hath been already found 'out, and more Malefactors diſcover'd, ſome in Hold, ſome fled; the 'Juſtices of the Peace have been quicken'd in the Execution of their Du'ty; the Negligent have been reprov'd and puniſh'd, the Diligent encou-
'rag'd and aſſiſted in doubtful Caſes, by the Opinions of the Judges;
'active and faithful Meſſengers have been ſent into all the Corners of the 'Kingdom, where there was any Hopes of Service to be done; the ve'ry Priſons have been ſearch'd, to ſee whether any had fled thither to 'hide themſelves there, and under Pretence of Debt to eſcape the Pur-
'ſuit: And if any have deſired Leave to go beyond Sea, they have firſt
'given Security not to go to Rome, nor ſend their Children to any Fo'reign Seminaries; and then they have been oblig'd to give in a Liſt of 'all their Menial Servants, and thoſe Servants too have been examin'd
'upon Oath: And Order is given that they be again examin'd at the 'Ports, and make Oath they are the ſame Perſons who were examin'd

1678. Car. 31 Ref. 19

'above: So that all poſſible Care hath been taken that no Malefactors 'might eſcape us in Diſguiſe. And tho' the Prieſts themſelves do not 'keep the Confeſſions of their Proſelytes more ſecret than theſe keep the 'Injunctions of their Prieſts, yet enough hath appear'd to bring ſome Ca-'pital Offenders to publick Juſtice, and to convict them of the Crime: 'Some of the Traytors have been executed; ſeveral Prieſts have been 'arreſted and impriſon'd; all are hiding themſelves, and lurking in ſecret 'Corners, like the Sons of Darkneſs. The Murderers of Sir Edmund-'bury Godfrey have been condemn'd, and ſuffer'd Death: Some Papiſts 'have baniſh'd themſelves out of the Kingdom; others are impriſon'd for 'not taking the Oaths: All are proſecuted towards Conviction; and the 'very Shame and Reproach which attends ſuch abominable Practices, 'hath cover'd ſo many Faces with new and ſtrange Confuſions, that it 'hath prov'd a powerful Argument for their Converſions: Nor is it to be 'wonder'd at, that they cou'd no longer believe all that to be Goſpel 'which their Prieſts taught them, when they ſaw the Way and Means 'of Introducing it was ſo far from being Evangelical. In a Word, ſo 'univerſal is that Deſpair to which the Papiſts are now reduc'd, that 'they have no other Hope left but this, That we may chance to overdo 'our own Buſineſs; and, by being too far tranſported with the Fears of 'Popery, neglect the Opportunities we now have of making ſober and 'laſting Proviſions againſt it. And 'tis not to be doubted but that it 'wou'd infinitely gratify the Papiſts in the Revenge they wiſh, for this 'Diſcovery, if they cou'd ſee us diſtracted with Jealouſies incurable, and 'diſtruſting the Government to ſuch a Degree, as ſhou'd weaken all that 'Reverence by which it ſtands: For then the Plot wou'd not be alto-'gether without Effect; but thoſe whom they cou'd not deſtroy by their 'Conſpiracy, they ſhou'd have the Satisfaction to ſee Ruining themſelves 'after the Diſcovery: So that, tho' we had eſcap'd that Deſolation which 'they intended to have brought upon us, nothing cou'd ſave us from that 'Deſtruction which we ſhall bring upon our ſelves. But their Expecta-'tions of this are as vain, as their other Deſigns were wicked: For his 'Majeſty hath already begun to let them ſee with what Severity he in-'tends to proceed againſt them. He hath paſs'd a Law to diſable all the 'Nobility and Gentry of that Faction ever to ſit in Parliament; and 'not content with that, he did offer to the laſt Parliament, and does 'again renew the ſame Offer to this Parliament, to paſs any further Laws 'againſt Popery which ſhall be deſired; ſo as the ſame extend not to the 'Diminution of his own Prerogative, nor alter the Deſcent of the Crown 'in the Right Line, nor defeat the Succeſſion. He hath refus'd the Pe-'tition of the Lords, who, during the Interval of Parliament, deſired to 'be brought to their Tryal, and, after ſo long an Impriſonment, might 'reaſonably enough have expected it. But his Majeſty thought it fitter to 'reſerve them to a more publick and conſpicuous Tryal in Parliament: 'For which Cauſe their Tryal ought now to be haſtned; for it is high 'Time there ſhou'd be ſome Period put to the Impriſonment of the Lords.

'But that which the King hath been pleas'd to mention to you this Morn-'ing, ſurpaſſes all the reſt, and is ſufficient of it ſelf alone to diſcharge all 'thoſe Fears of Popiſh Influences which many good Men had too far en-'tertain'd: For now you ſee his Majeſty of his own accord hath done 'that which wou'd have been very difficult for you to ask; and hath 'depriv'd himſelf of the Converſation of his Royal and only Brother, 'by commanding him to depart the Kingdom; to which Command his 'Royal Highneſs hath paid a humble and a moſt entire Submiſſion and 'Obedience. This Separation was attended with a more than ordinary 'Sorrow on both ſides. But he, that for your Sakes cou'd part with

'ſuch a Brother, and ſuch a Friend, you may be ſure, hath now no Favourite but his People. Since therefore his Majeſty hath ſhewn ſo much Readineſs to concur with, and in a manner to prevent, the Deſires of his Parliament, 'tis a miſerable Refuge our Enemies muſt truſt to, when they hope to ſee our Zeal out-run our Diſcretion, and that we our ſelves ſhall become the unhappy Occaſion of making our own Counſels abortive. Not only the Care of the State, but the Care we ought to have of the Church too, will preſerve us from all Errors of this kind: For as there neither is, nor hath been theſe fifteen hundred Years, a purer Church than ours; ſo 'tis for the ſake of this poor Church alone, that the State hath been ſo much diſturb'd. It is her Truth and Peace, her Decency and Order, which they labour to undermine, and purſue with ſo reſtleſs a Malice: And ſince they do ſo, it will be neceſſary for us to diſtinguiſh between Popiſh and other Recuſants, between them that wou'd deſtroy the whole Flock, and them that only wander from it. And among the many good Laws you ſhall think fit to provide, it may not be amiſs to think of ſome better Remedy for regulating the Preſs, from whence there daily ſteal forth Popiſh Catechiſms, Pſalters, and Books of Controverſy: And it may be another good Fruit of ſuch a Law, to hinder Schiſmatical and Seditious Libels too; for certainly it were much better for us to make ſuch Laws as will prevent Offences, rather than ſuch as ſerve only to puniſh the Offenders.' 1678. Car. 31 Reſ. 19

Then, inſiſting upon the Reaſonableneſs of a Supply, from the Dangers abroad, and Neceſſities at home, he proceeded thus:

'My Lords and Gentlemen, There are ſo many things to do, and ſo little time to do them in, that there ought not to be one Minute loſt. The Seaſon of the Year is not yet ſo far advanced, as to make it too late to ſet out a Fleet this Summer; for moſt of the Preparations are ready, if we go about it with that Diligence which is requiſite: And therefore it doth infinitely import us all to husband Time. The beſt way of doing this will be, to avoid all long and tedious Conſultations, which ſometimes do as much harm as ill Reſolutions: And, above all, to take heed to ſuch Queſtions and Debates as tend to raiſe Heat, or may create any kind of Diſturbance. Nor doth any thing in the World ſo much contribute to Diſpatch, as quiet and orderly Proceedings: For they who are in haſte, and attempt to do all their Buſineſs at once, moſt commonly hinder themſelves from bringing any thing to Perfection. You have now an Opportunity of doing great Things for the King and Kingdom; and it deſerves your utmoſt Care to make a right uſe of it: For 'tis not in the Power of a Parliament to recover a loſt Opportunity, or to reſtore themſelves again to the ſame Circumſtances, or the ſame Condition, which they once had a Power to have improv'd. Wou'd you ſecure Religion at Home, and ſtrengthen it Abroad, by uniting the Intereſts of all the Proteſtants in Europe? This is the Time. Wou'd you let the Chriſtian World ſee the King in a Condition able to protect thoſe who ſhall adhere to Him, or depend upon Him? This is the Time. Wou'd you extinguiſh all our Fears and Jealouſies? Wou'd you lay aſide all private Animoſities, and give them up to the Quiet and Repoſe of the Publick? This is the Time. Wou'd you lay the Foundations of a laſting Peace, and ſecure the Church and State againſt all the future Machinations of our Enemies? THIS IS THE TIME.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, The preſent Face of Things, and the State wherein we now are, is ſo well known and underſtood Abroad, that the whole World is in great Expectation of thoſe Reſolutions which ſhall be taken here: The Reſults of this Council ſeem to be de'cisive of the Fate of these Kingdoms for many Ages, and are like to 'determine us either to Happiness or Misery of a very long Duration. 'We use to say, and say truly, That the King, when seated in Parlia- 'ment, is then in the Fulness of his Majesty and Power, and shines forth 'with the brightest Lustre: Let no Exhalations from beneath darken or 'obscure it! Foreign Nations say, and say truly, That a King of Eng- 'land, in Conjunction with his Parliament, is as Great and Dreadful a 'Prince as any in Europe: Shew them the Sight they are afraid of! 'And since they have laid it down for a Maxim in their Politicks, That 'England can never be destroy'd but by it self; and that it is in vain to 'make any Attempts upon this Nation, until they be in some great Disor- 'der and Confusion among themselves; make the Ambitious despair betimes, 'and establish so perfect an Intelligence between all the Parts of this great 'Body, that there may be but one Heart, and one Soul among us. And 'let us all pray, That he, who hath once more miraculously deliver'd the 'King, the Church, and the State, wou'd be pleas'd still to continue his 'Divine Protection, and give us thankful and obedient Hearts. And 'when we have offer'd up those Hearts to God, let us in the next place 'offer them again to the King, and lay them down at the Foot-stool of 'his Throne, that so the King may see himself safe in your Counsels, 'rich in your Affections, victorious by your Arms, and rais'd to such a 'Height by your Loyalty and Courage, that you may have the Honour 'of making him the Greatest King, and he the Glory of making you the 'Happiest People.

In Conclusion, by the King's Commands, he order'd the House of Commons to proceed to the Choice of a Speaker, who was to be presented to the King the next Day; and being return'd to their House, Colonel Birch did nominate and recommend the Right Honourable Edward Seymour, Knight of the Shire for the County of Devon, Treasurer of the Navy, one of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, and Speaker of the last Parliament: 'Being a Person acceptable to the King, 'and one who for his great Integrity, Ability, and long Experience in the 'Employment, was the fittest Person for so great a Trust.' And Mr. Seymour being unanimously call'd upon to the Chair, was conducted thither by Sir Thomas Lee, Sir Thomas Whitmore, and divers other Members; and being there placed, he made a gratulatory Speech to the House for their great Kindness and Affection towards him, in their unanimous Choice of him: But still he desired the House that they wou'd proceed to a new Election, For the long Sittings of the late Parliament had so impaired his Health, that he doubted he shou'd not be well able to undergo the Service of the House, as wou'd be expected from him: But the House not admitting of any Excuse, confirm'd their Choice; upon which he desir'd leave, That he might intercede with his Majesty, that he wou'd be pleas'd to Discharge him of the Duty.

Mr. Edward Seymour chosen Speaker.

But it appears, that he need not have been so urgent; for the King and the Earl of Danby, taking this Choice to be an ill Presage, that this Parliament wou'd begin where the last ended, were resolv'd not to approve of it: And as soon as he appear'd to be presented, the Lord-Chancellor stood up, and said, That if his Majesty shou'd always accept a Person pitcht upon by the House of Commons, then it wou'd be no great Favour to be chosen a Speaker; and therefore his Majesty, being the best Judge of Persons and Things, thought fit to except against Mr. Seymour, as being fitly qualify'd for other Services and Imployments, without giving any Reason to the Persons chusing, or the Person chosen: And therefore he order'd them to fix upon some other Person by to Morrow Morning, to be presented to the King for his Approbation. The Commons, mons immediately return'd back to their own Houſe; where Sir John Ernly ſtood up and acquainted them, He had Order from his Majeſty to recommend Sir Thomas Meers to them to be their Speaker, as a Perſon well known in the Method and Practice of Parliaments, and a Perſon that he thought wou'd be very acceptable and ſerviceable to them. But the Houſe in a great Heat, cry'd out, No, No! and fell into a warm Debate. Mr. Sacheverell ſaid, It was never known that a Perſon ſhou'd be excepted againſt, and no Reaſon at all given, and therefore concluded, That it was done purpoſely to gratify ſome particular Perſons. Mr. Williams ſaid, For above a hundred Years, it had not been known that a Speaker preſented was ever excepted againſt; and the thing it ſelf of preſenting him to the King, as he humbly conceiv'd, was but a bare Compliment. Sir Thomas Clarges alledg'd, That there were Parliaments long before there were Speakers choſen, and afterwards for the Eaſe of the Houſe among themſelves, they pitch'd upon a Speaker.----All our Lives and Liberties are preſerv'd by this Houſe, therefore we are to preſerve the Liberties of it. Mr. Garraway objected, If Mr. Seymour be rejected, and no Reaſon given, pray who muſt chuſe a Speaker, the King or we? Is it plain not we?-----Sir Thomas Lee ſaid, We addreſs'd our ſelves to his Majeſty the laſt Parliament, as fearing his Perſon to be in Danger, but we receiv'd no Anſwer at all in a whole Week; we were immediately Prorogu'd unexpectedly, and a little after Diſſolv'd as unexpectedly: And I ſuppoſe the ſame Perſons that gave that Advice, gave this alſo. Others concluded, that all this was only for a Bone of Contention, fearing they ſhou'd agree, and ſo call'd to Adjourn, which was ſoon agreed to.

The Commons diſguſted.

Theſe Heats were ſo much the greater, becauſe they reaſonably ſuppos'd that it was all occaſion'd by the Earl of Danby, whoſe Power was not wholly at an End, and between whom and Mr. Seymour there was a particular Reſentment. However, the firſt thing reſolv'd on the next Day, being Saturday, was, 'That an humble Application be made to the King, 'to acquaint his Majeſty, That the Matter yeſterday deliver'd by the 'Lord-Chancellor, relating to the Speaker, is of ſo great Importance, 'that this Houſe cannot immediately come to a Reſolution therein: 'And therefore do humbly deſire his Majeſty, that he will graciouſly 'be pleas'd to grant ſome further Time for this Houſe to take the 'Matter into Conſideration.' And they order'd the Chancellor of the Dutchy, the Lord Cavendiſh, the Lord Ruſſel, and Sir Henry Capel immediately to attend his Majeſty with this Vote. Being return'd in a ſhort time, the Lord Ruſſel acquainted the Houſe, 'That they had at-'tended his Majeſty, who was ſitting in Council; and that his Majeſty, 'as ſoon as he was inform'd they were to wait upon him from the Houſe, 'immediately came out, and receiv'd them with great Chearfulneſs and 'Kindneſs: And having deliver'd their Meſſage, his Majeſty retired to 'the Council-Chamber, and coming out again, was pleas'd to return the 'following Anſwer by Word of Mouth, which they had reduc'd to 'Writing: Gentlemen, I have conſider'd of your Meſſage, and do conſent to a further Time, which I appoint to be on Tueſday next, unleſs you ſhall find ſome Expedient in the mean time; for as I would not have my Prerogative intrench'd upon, ſo I would not do any Thing againſt the Privileges of the Houſe.

They apply to the King.

His Anſwer.

Upon the ſaid Tueſday, they drew up this humble Repreſentation: 'We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons in this 'preſent Parliament aſſembled, do with all Obedience return your Ma-'jeſty moſt hearty Thanks for the favourable Reception and gracious 'Anſwer your Majeſty was pleas'd to return to our late Meſſage; wherein 'your

'your Majesty was pleas'd, not only to allow us longer Time to deliberate 'of what was deliver'd to us by the Lord Chancellor, relating to the 'Choice of a Speaker, but likewise to express so great a Care not to in- 'fringe our Privileges. And we desire your Majesty to believe, no 'Subjects ever had more tender Regard, than our selves, to the Right of 'your Majesty and your Royal Prerogative, which we shall always ac- 'knowledge to be vested in the Crown for the Benefit and Protection of 'your People. And therefore, for the clearing all Doubts that may arise 'in your Royal Mind, upon this Occasion now before us, we crave Leave 'humbly to represent to your Majesty, That it is the undoubted Right 'of the Commons to have the Free Election of one of their Members to 'be their Speaker, and to perform the Service of the House: And that 'the Speaker so Elected, and Presented according to Custom, hath by 'the constant Practice of all former Ages, been continu'd Speaker, and 'executed that Imployment, unless such Persons have been excus'd for 'some Corporal Disease, which has been alledg'd, either by themselves, 'or some others in their Behalf, in full Parliament. According to this 'Usage, Mr. Edward Seymour was unanimously chosen, upon the Con- 'sideration of his great Ability and Sufficiency for that Place, of which 'we had large Experience in the last Parliament, and was presented by 'us to your Majesty, as a Person we conceiv'd would be most acceptable 'to your Majesty's Royal Judgment. This being the true State of the 'Case, we do in all Humility lay it before your Majesty's View; hoping 'that your Majesty, upon due Consideration of former Precedents, will 'rest satisfy'd with our Proceedings, and will think fit not to deprive 'us of so necessary a Member, by employing him in any other Service; 'but to give us such a gracious Answer, as your Majesty and your Royal 'Predecessors have always done heretofore upon the like Occasions; that 'so we may, without more Loss of Time, proceed to the Dispatch of 'those Important Affairs for which we were call'd hither: Wherein we 'doubt not but we shall so behave our selves, as to give an ample Testi- 'mony to the whole World of our Duty and Affection to your Majesty's 'Service, and of our Care of the Peace and Prosperity of your King- 'doms.' To this Representation the King immediately gave this short Answer: Gentlemen, All this is but Loss of Time; and therefore I de- sire you to go back again, and do as I have directed you.

The King's Answer.

This giving no Satisfaction to the House, the next Day, March 12th, the Commons, after a warm Debate, drew up this following Address:

The Commons Address.

'Most Gracious Sovereign, Whereas by the Gracious Answer your Ma- 'jesty was pleas'd to give to our first Message in Council, whereby your 'Majesty was pleas'd to declare a Resolution not to infringe our just Rights 'and Privileges, we your Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal Commons 'were encourag'd to make an Humble Representation to your Majesty 'upon the Choice of our Speaker, which on Tuesday last was presented 'by some of our Members: We do, with great Trouble and infinite 'Sorrow, find by the Report made to us by those Members at their Re- 'turn, that your Majesty was pleas'd to give us an immediate Answer to 'the same, without taking any further Consideration, which we are per- 'swaded if your Majesty had done, what we then offer'd to your Maje- 'sty would so far have prevail'd upon your Royal Judgment, as to have 'given your Majesty Satisfaction in the Reasonableness of our Desire; 'and preserv'd us in your Majesty's favourable Opinion of our Proceed- 'ings. And since we do humbly conceive, that the Occasion of this Que- 'stion hath arisen from your Majesty's not being truly inform'd of the 'State of the Case; we humbly beseech your Majesty to take the said 'Representation into your further Consideration, and give us such a Gra- 'cious

'cious Anſwer, that we may be put in a Capacity to manifeſt our Rea- 167$\frac{8}{9}$.
'dineſs to enter into thoſe Conſultations which neceſſarily tend to the Car. 31
'Preſervation and Welfare of your Majeſty and your Kingdoms.' Upon Reſ. 19 reading of this Addreſs to the King, he immediately gave this quick and ſharp Return; Gentlemen, I will ſend you an Anſwer to Morrow. Accordingly, as he had often done before upon great Difficulties, he reſolv'd to put an End to the Diſpute, and on the next Morning, being Thurſday the 13th of March, he came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, he immediately Prorogu'd the Parliament till Saturday following, after the Commons had ſate without a Speaker, but Six Days. And thus the King found a Way to gain his Point, but with very little Advantage to his own Buſineſs and Affairs.

The King prorogues the Parliament.

2. On the appointed Day, March 15th, his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers in his Royal Robes, and the Houſe of Commons attending, his Majeſty was pleas'd to put both Houſes in mind of what he ſaid to them at the Opening of the Parliament: And then the Lord Chancellor, by the King's Command, directed the Commons to return to their Houſe, and to proceed to the Choice of a Speaker. And being return'd, the Lord Ruſſel put the Houſe in mind of the King's Commands, and immediately recommended William Gregory, Serjeant at Law, as a Perſon, for his great Learning and Integrity, fit for the Imployment: And Mr. Serjeant Gregory being unanimouſly call'd upon to the Chair, he in a ſhort Speech modeſtly excus'd himſelf, and deſired of the Houſe, that another might be nominated; but no Excuſe being admitted, he was formally conducted to the Chair by the two intimate Friends, the Lord Ruſſel and the Lord Cavendiſh, and there confirm'd in the Place. On the Monday following, he was preſented by the Commons to the King, in the Houſe of Lords, who without Heſitation approv'd of the Choice.

The Second Seſſion.

Serjeant Gregory Speaker.

At the Beginning, the Houſe was much employ'd with what was almoſt unknown in the laſt Parliament, the Buſineſs of controverted Elections, chiefly occaſion'd by riotous Methods, and the unuſual Zeal of Parties: Concerning which, there were above Threeſcore Petitions preſented, Six of them from Counties themſelves, which was a great Number in thoſe Days. As ſoon as thoſe were put into a way of Determination, they appear'd reſolved to purſue the latter Meaſures taken in the former Parliament; and therefore on Wedneſday the 19th of March, they Reſolv'd, 'That a Committee be appointed to inſpect the Journals of the laſt 'Seſſion of the laſt Parliament, and to prepare and draw up a State of 'the Matters then depending and undetermined, and the Progreſs that 'was made therein.' And on the next Day they Reſolv'd, That a Com- 'mittee of Secrecy be appointed to take Informations, and prepare Evi- 'dence, and draw up Articles againſt the Lords that are Impeach'd, and 'that are now in the Tower; and to take ſuch further Informations as 'ſhall be given, relating to the Plot and Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty 'and the Government, and the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.' And then to be yet more particular, they immediately after Reſolv'd, 'That a Meſſage be ſent to the Lords, to put them in mind of the Im- 'peachment of High-Treaſon, exhibited againſt Thomas Earl of Danby, 'in the Names of the Commons of England, and to deſire that he may 'be committed to ſafe Cuſtody:' Reſolving again, 'That it be referr'd 'to the Committee of Secrecy, to draw up further Articles againſt him.' However, the Letters produc'd againſt the Earl being written by the King's particular Command, and ſome private Papers being neceſſary for his Defence, which his Majeſty would not ſuffer to be made publick; he at laſt reſolv'd to adhere to the Benefit of his Pardon, and hoping his Abſence might allay the Storm, thought fit to withdraw. The Earl of Danby retires Oates and Bedloe's Informations.

And that nothing might be wanting to profecute the Plot, the Murder, and this Nobleman, all Countenance was given to the Plot-Diſcoverers; and on the 21ſt of March Dr. Tongue and Mr. Oates were call'd before the Commons, to give in their Informations concerning the Plot, &c. And the Latter gave in an Information, not only againſt Thomas Earl of Danby, but alſo againſt Sir John Robinſon, Colonel Edward Sackville, and Captain Henry Goreing, all Three Members of the Houſe of Commons; which rais'd a new Flame in that Place. On the ſame Day Bedloe likewiſe deliver'd in his Information; upon which the Houſe Reſolv'd, 'That 'an humble Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, That the Five Hundred 'Pounds Reward promis'd by his Proclamation, for the Diſcovery of the 'Murther of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, may be forthwith paid to Mr. Bed- 'loe, who this Houſe is ſatisfied to be the Firſt Diſcoverer thereof: and 'that his Majeſty would further be pleas'd to order that the Twenty 'Pounds Reward for the Diſcovery of every Prieſt, may be effectually 'paid to the Diſcoverers of them.' At the ſame time, in another Addreſs, they deſired his Majeſty, 'That the Care of Mr. Bedloe's Safety 'may be immediately recommended to his Grace the Duke of Monmouth;' which was carry'd up by the Lord Cavendiſh, Sir Henry Capell, Mr. Booth, Mr. Powle, Sir Robert Carr, Sir John Earnly, and Sir William Portman. The King gave a preſent Anſwer, 'That he would take immedi-

Beſides theſe, there appear'd one Mr. Edmund Everard, a Scotch Gentleman, who had been Four Years Priſoner in the Tower, who making ſome old Diſcoveries, was encourag'd, as Oates before him, to put the whole into a formal Narrative.

Upon the whole, they came to this unanimous Grand Reſolve, ſomething like that in the laſt Parliament, viz. 'That the Houſe doth

To this Vote they deſired the Concurrence of the Lords, as they likewiſe did and obtain'd that to a particular Addreſs to his Majeſty For appointing a Solemn Day of Humiliation; 'being deeply ſenſible of the ſad and calamitous Condition of 'your Majeſty's Kingdom, occaſion'd chiefly by the impious and malicious 'Conſpiracies of a Popiſh Party, who have not only Plotted and Intended the 'Deſtruction of your Majeſty's Royal Perſon, but the total Subverſion of the 'Government, and true Religion eſtabliſh'd among us.' Afterwards they expreſs themſelves thus: 'That we may by Faſting and Prayer, and with 'humble and penitent Hearts, ſeek Reconciliation with Almighty God, 'and implore him by his Power and Goodneſs, to infatuate and defeat 'the wicked Counſels and Imaginations of our Enemies, and continue his 'Mercies and the Light of his Goſpel to Us and our Poſterities*;* and par-'ticularly, to beſtow his abundant Bleſſings upon your Sacred Majeſty, 'and this preſent Parliament, &c. Accordingly, his Majeſty commanded a General and Publick Faſt, to be kept throughout the Kingdom on the 11th of April; beginning his Proclamation for it, as he generally did upon ſuch an Occaſion, with mentioning and alledging the Deſire of the Lords and Commons in Parliament aſſembled.

During

During this Height of Zeal, the Commons, on March 22d, order'd a Bill to be brought in, To ſecure the King and Kingdom againſt the Danger and Growth of Popery. And being commanded, at the ſame time, to attend his Majeſty in the Houſe of Peers, the King ſpoke to them in Favour of the Earl of Danby: But returning to their Houſe, they preſently Reſolv'd, 'That a Meſſage be immediately ſent to the Lords, to re- 'mind their Lordſhips of the laſt Meſſage ſent them from this Houſe, 'relating to Thomas Earl of Danby; and to demand that he might be 'forthwith ſequeſter'd from Parliament, and committed to ſafe Cuſtody.' Upon which extraordinary Requeſt, the Lords deſir'd a preſent Conference; but the Commons return'd Anſwer, That it was not agreeable to the Uſage and Proceedings of Parliament for either Houſe to ſend for a Conference, without expreſſing the ſubject Matter of it. Upon a ſecond Meſſage, wherein the Earl of Danby was mention'd, they met the Lords in the Painted-Chamber, where the Duke of Monmouth ſpoke as follows: 'I am commanded by the Lords to acquaint you, that their Lordſhips 'having taken into Conſideration Matters relating to the Earl of Danby, 'together with what his Majeſty was pleas'd to ſay upon that Subject; 'have Order'd, That a Bill be brought in, by which Thomas Earl of 'Danby may be made for ever incapable of coming to his Majeſty's Pre- 'ſence, and of all Offices and Employments, and of receiving any Gifts or 'Grants from the Crown, and of Sitting in the Houſe of Peers.

A Meſſage againſt the Earl of Danby.

A Conference about him.

In the mean time, the Commons hearing that the King had ſign'd a Pardon for the Earl, they appointed a Committee to repair to the ſeveral Offices, and particularly to the Lord Chancellor, to enquire into the manner of ſuing out that Pardon. Whereupon the Lord Chancellor inform'd the Committee, 'That the Pardon was paſs'd with the utmoſt Privacy, 'at the Deſire of the Earl, who gave this Reaſon for it, 'That he did 'not intend to make uſe of it, but to ſtand upon his Innocence, except falſe 'Witneſſes ſhould be produc'd againſt him; and then he would make uſe of 'it at the laſt Extremity. That he adviſ'd the Earl to let the Pardon 'paſs in the regular Courſe; but after conſulting with the King, his Ma- 'jeſty declared, he was reſolv'd to let it paſs with all Privacy: And 'ſuddenly after the King commanded the Lord Chancellor to bring the 'Seal to White-Hall, and being there, he laid it upon the Table; there- 'upon his Majeſty commanded the Seal to be taken out of the Bag, which 'his Lordſhip was oblig'd to ſubmit unto, it not being in his Power to 'hinder it; and the King wrote his Name upon the Top of the Parch- 'ment, and then directed to have it Seal'd; whereupon the Perſon that 'uſually carry'd the Purſe, affix'd the Seal to it. The Chancellor added, 'That at the very Time of affixing the Seal to the Parchment, he did not 'look upon himſelf to have the Cuſtody of the Seal.

An Account of his Pardon.

Upon reading this Report, the Houſe fell into a violent Heat and Debate; and of thoſe that ſpoke, we muſt not omit Mr. Powle's ſevere Speech, who naming the Earl of Danby, proceeded thus: The Perſon to whom we owe the Dangers and Fears of the French King againſt us: The Perſon to whom we owe the Threats and ſevere Anſwers to thoſe humble Addreſſes we made the laſt Seſſion of Parliament: The Perſon to whom we owe the Ruin of this Nation, and exhauſting the King's Revenue: The Perſon to whom we owe the Expence of Two Hundred Thouſand Pounds a Year, unaccounted for: The Perſon to whom we owe the Raiſing of a Standing Army, to be kept up by the Receipt of Six Millions of Livres Yearly, for Three Years, to enſlave Us and our Religion: The Perſon to whom we owe the late Bone that was thrown in on the Sitting of the laſt Parliament, to hinder the good Iſſue that might have come by their Proceedings; who is now laying down his Staff, and making up his Accompts in the Treaſury as he pleaſes, to enrich himſelf out of the Spoils of the People, and ſo depart. At the Concluſion of the Debate, Reſolved, Nemine contradicente, 'That a Meſſage be ſent to the Lords to demand Juſtice, in the Name of the Commons of England, againſt Thomas Earl of Danby; and that he may be immediately ſequeſter'd from Parliament, and committed to ſafe Cuſtody.' They likewiſe Reſolv'd, 'That an humble Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, repreſenting to his Majeſty the Irregularity and Illegality of the Pardon, mention'd by his Majeſty to be granted to the Earl of Danby, and the dangerous Conſequence of grantiug Pardons to any Perſons that lie under an Impeachment of the Commons of England.

The Earl of Shaftsbury's Speech to the Lords.

3. The Houſe of Lords was likewiſe agitated with Heats and Apprehenſions, which were particularly fomented by the great and reſtleſs Earl of Shaftsbury, who on the 25th of March deliver'd his Thoughts in a peculiar and artful Speech, much diſcours'd of at this Time. After a few Words, he proceeds thus: I never ſtudy either to make my Court well, or to be Popular; I always ſpeak what I am commanded by the Dictates of the Spirit within me. There are ſome Conſiderations Abroad that concern England ſo nearly, that without them you will come far ſhort of Safety and Quiet at Home. 'We have a little Siſter, and ſhe hath no Breaſts; what ſhall we do for our Siſter in the Day when ſhe ſhall be ſpoken for? If ſhe be a Wall, we will build on her a Palace of Silver; if ſhe be a Door, we will encloſe her with Boards of Cedar.' We have ſeveral little Siſters without Breaſts, the French Proteſtant Churches, the two Kingdoms of Ireland and Scotland: The Foreign Proteſtants are a Wall, the only Wall and Defence to England; upon it you may build Palaces of Silver, Glorious Palaces. The Protection of the Proteſtants abroad, is the greateſt Power and Security the Crown of England can attain to, and which can only help us to give Check to the growing Greatneſs of France. Scotland and Ireland are two Doors, either to let in Good or Miſchief upon us; they are much weakned by the Artifice of our cunning Enemies, and we ought to encloſe them with Boards of Cedar. Popery and Slavery, like two Siſters, go Hand in Hand; ſometimes one goes firſt, ſometimes the other; but whereſoever the one enters, the other is always following cloſe at Hand. In England, Popery was to have brought in Slavery; In Scotland, Slavery went before, and Popery was to follow. I do not think your Lordſhips or the Parliament have Juriſdiction there: It is a noble and ancient Kingdom; they have an illuſtrious Nobility, a gallant Gentry, a learned Clergy, an underſtanding worthy People; but yet we cannot think of England as we ought, without reflecting on their Condition. They are under the ſame Prince, and the Influence of the ſame Favourites and Counſels; when they are hardly dealt with, can we that are richer expect better Uſage? For 'tis certain, that in all abſolute Governments, the pooreſt Countries are always moſt favourably dealt with.— Yet Scotland hath outdone all the Eaſtern and Southern Countries, in having their Lives, Liberties and Eſtates ſubjected to the Arbitrary Will and Pleaſure of thoſe that Govern. After a large Enumeration of the Grievances in Scotland, he ſaid, I am afraid your Lordſhips will think I have ſaid too much, having no Concern there: But if a French Nobleman ſhould come to dwell in my Houſe and Family, I ſhould think it concern'd me to ask what he did in France: For if he were there a Felon, a Rogue, a Plunderer, I ſhould deſire him to live elſewhere; and I hope your Lordſhips will do the ſame Thing for the Nation, if you find the ſame Cauſe. — This Speech was ſuppos'd to have laid the Foundation for the enſuing Troubles in Scotland; and by the next Poſt Forty written Copies of it were were tranſmitted to the Earl's Correſpondents at Edinburgh, who being induc'd by theſe Artifices to believe they might be ſeconded in England, grew ſo inſolent, that Accounts were preſently ſent up to the Court of the great Danger of the Publick Peace from the Enemies of the Church and Monarchy; but theſe Reports were ſlighted as the Contrivance of the Duke of Lauderdale, who had been ſo ſhrewdly handled in the Speech. 1679. Car. 31 Reſ. 19

On the ſame Day the Lords ſent a Meſſage to acquaint the Houſe of Commons, 'That they had ſent to apprehend Thomas Earl of Danby, 'both to his Houſe here in Town, and to his Houſe at Wimbleton; and 'that the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black Rod had return'd their Lord-'ſhips Anſwer, That he could not be found.' Whereupon the Commons, reſolving not to be defeated, Order'd, 'That a Bill be brought in 'to Summon Thomas Earl of Danby to render himſelf to Juſtice by a cer-'tain Day to be therein limited; or in Default thereof, to Attaint him.' Then to render him more obnoxious, Bedloe came before the Houſe, and made a great Complaint of the harſh Uſage and Diſencouragements he had met with from the ſaid Earl, when Treaſurer; ſetting forth upon Oath, 'That going to him for ſome Money, by virtue of an Order from 'the Council, his Lordſhip took him into his Cloſet, and ask'd him, Whe-'ther the Duke of Buckingham, or Lord Shaftsbury, or any of the Mem-'bers of the Houſe of Commons, had deſir'd him to ſay any Thing againſt 'him, and to tell him who they were, and he would well reward him; 'and to know if he would deſiſt from giving Evidence againſt the—— 'and the Lords in the Tower, &c. To which Bedloe anſwer'd, That he 'had once been an ill Man, and deſired to be ſo no more. To which the 'Earl reply'd, You may have a great Sum of Money, and live in another 'Country, as Geneva, Sweden, or New England; and ſhould have what 'Money he would ask to maintain him there. But Bedloe refuſing all ſuch 'Temptations, his Lordſhip began to threaten him, ſaying. There was a 'Boat and a Catch ready to carry him far enough for telling of Tales: 'And after this, the Guards were as Spies upon him, and he very ill us'd, 'till by their Addreſs to the King the ſame was remedy'd, and better 'Care was taken.' And at the ſame time appear'd Oates in the Houſe, who declared, 'That being one Day in the Privy-Garden, the Earl of 'Danby, paſſing by, reflected upon him, and ſaid, There goes one of the 'Saviours of England, but I hope to ſee him hang'd within a Month.' And likewiſe at the ſame time Oates gave his Teſtimony againſt Colonel Sackville, a Member of the Houſe formerly mention'd, declaring that he ſaid, That they were Sons of Whores, who ſaid there was a Plot, and that he was a lying Rogue that ſaid it. Whereupon the Colonel was immediately ſent to the Tower, and order'd to be expell'd the Houſe, with a Petition to the King to be made incapable of bearing any Office. But in a ſhort time, upon his Submiſſion, he was diſcharg'd from his Impriſonment, but not reſtor'd to his Seat in the Houſe.

The Commons reſolve to attaint the Earl of Danby.

Bedloe's and Oates's Complaints againſt him.

Colonel Sackville expell'd.

And now every Man was in danger from the Commons, who either ſeem'd to doubt of the Plot or the Murder, or appear'd to be a Friend to the Earl of Danby. Upon this laſt Account, Dr. John Nalſon was taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, for Writing a Pamphlet in favour of the Earl; and the Printer was call'd to an Account for publiſhing two of Mr. Mountagu's Letters; and the Earl's Speech upon his firſt Impeachment. Sir Robert Southwell alſo was accus'd by one Mr. Chetwins, and put to ſome Trouble in the Houſe, upon a Suppoſition that he was negligent, or not enough Officious in the Matter of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey. Some others likewiſe were diſturb'd and threatned

Reſ. 19 Lord Viſcount Stafford, the Lord Arundel of Warder, the Lord Petre, and the Lord Bellaſis, now Priſoners in the Tower; againſt whom they drew up Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon, &c. upon the 3d Day of April. They begin thus: 'That for many Years now laſt paſt, 'there hath been contriv'd and carry'd on a Trayterous and Execrable 'Conſpiracy and Plot within this Kingdom of England, and other Places, 'to alter, change, and ſubvert the ancient Government and Laws of 'this Kingdom and Nation, and to ſuppreſs the true Religion therein e-'ſtabliſh'd, and to extirpate and deſtroy the Profeſſors thereof; which ſaid 'Plot and Conſpiracy was contriv'd and carry'd on in divers Places, and 'by ſeveral Ways and Means, and by a great Number of Perſons of ſe-'veral Qualities and Degrees, who acted therein, and intended to exe-'cute and accompliſh the aforeſaid wicked and trayterous Deſigns and 'Purpoſes.' The reſt ſeems a ſort of an Abſtract of Oates's Narrative, and Prance's Account of the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and drawn up in ſuch general Terms, that the Lords knew not how to give a particular Anſwer, but only made a general Denial to the whole. The Articles were carry'd up to the Houſe of Peers by the Lord Ruſſel, who was look'd upon as a zealous Proſecutor of thoſe Lords.

The five Popiſh Lords Impeached.

A Conference about the Earl of Danby.

4. But the Commons were principally imploy'd upon the Affair of the Earl of Danby; and on the 4th of April there was a Conference between the two Houſes, in the Painted-Chamber, concerning the Bill ſent up againſt that great Man; where the Earl of Angleſey, Lord Privy-Seal, deliver'd himſelf to this Effect, being the chief Manager for the Peers; 'That the Lords choſe to deliver back this Bill by Conference, rather 'than Meſſage, to preſerve a good Underſtanding, and prevent Debate 'and Controverſy between them. The Lords obſerve, that the greateſt 'Affairs of this Nation are at a Stand, at the Time of greateſt Danger 'and Difficulty, that this Kingdom ever labour'd under: That the King 'hath always in his Reign inclin'd to Mercy and Clemency to all his Sub-'jects: Therefore to a King ſo merciful and compaſſionate, the firſt In-'terruption of his Clemency they did deſire ſhould not proceed from the 'two Houſes, preſſing the King to an Act of the greateſt Severity; there-'fore they have paſs'd the Bill with ſome Amendments, which he deliver'd 'to them.' The Commons were no way ſatisfy'd with the Lords Proceedings, therefore drew up Reaſons againſt them, to be offer'd in another Conference, which were as following: 'The Addition of the Title 'does ſhew, that the Amendments made by your Lordſhips to the Bill 'do wholly alter the Nature of it, and from a Bill of Attainder, have converted it to a Bill of Baniſhment, which the Commons cannot conſent 'to for theſe Reaſons: 1. That Baniſhment is not the Legal Judgment 'in Caſes of High-Treaſon; and the Earl of Danby being Impeach'd by 'the Commons of High-Treaſon, and fled from Juſtice, hath hereby 'confeſs'd the Charge, and therefore ought to have the Judgment of 'High-Treaſon for the Puniſhment. 2. That Baniſhment being not 'the Puniſhment the Law inflicts upon thoſe Crimes, the Earl of Dan-'by might make uſe of this Remiſſion of his Sentence as an Argument, 'That either the Commons were diſtruſtful of their Proofs againſt him, 'or elſe that the Crimes are not in themſelves of ſo High a Nature as 'Treaſon. 3. That the Example of this wou'd be an Encouragement to 'all Perſons that ſhould hereafter be impeach'd by the Commons, to with-

'if not prevented by a Commitment upon their Impeachment; and there- Car. 31
'fore hope to obtain a more favourable Sentence in a Legiſlative Way, Ref. 19
'than your Lordſhips would be oblig'd to paſs upon them in your Ju- 'dicial Capacity.' Upon the Reading of this Paper, they immediately Reſolv'd, 'That an Addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, that he would 'iſſue out his Royal Proclamation for apprehending of Thomas Earl of 'Danby.

A Second Conference.

On the ſame Day, April 8th, they had a ſecond Conference with the Lords upon the ſame Caſe, where the Earl of Huntington manag'd for the Houſe of Peers, and what he deliver'd was to this Effect, 'The Lords 'have deſired this Conference with the Commons, not ſo much to ar-'gue and diſpute, as to mitigate and reconcile: They have already ob-'ſerv'd, That the Debates of this Bill have given too long, and too great an 'Obſtruction to publick Buſineſs; and therefore they deſire you to be-'lieve, that That is the Reaſon which hath chiefly prevail'd with their 'Lordſhips in a Matter of this Nature. And upon this Ground it is, 'that if a Way may be found to ſatisfy and ſecure the Publick Fears, 'by going leſs than the Bill you have propos'd, the Lords do not think 'it adviſeable to inſiſt upon the utmoſt and moſt rigorous Satisfaction to 'publick Juſtice, which might be demanded. To induce you to this 'Compliance, the Lords do acknowledge, that Baniſhment is ſo far from 'being the Legal Judgment in Caſe of High-Treaſon, that it is not the 'Legal Judgment in any Caſe whatſoever, ſince it can never be inflicted but 'by the Legiſlative Authority: But they ſee no reaſon why the Legiſla-'tive Authority ſhould always be bound to act to the utmoſt Extent of 'its Power; for there may be a Prudential Neceſſity ſometimes of mak-'ing Abatements, and it might be of fatal Conſequence, if it ſhould not 'be ſo. And the Lords, to remove all Jealouſies of the Precedents of 'this Kind, do Declare, that nothing which hath been done in the Earl 'of Danby's Caſe, ſhall ever be drawn into Example for the Time to 'come, and will ſo enter it upon their Journal. And thereupon their 'Lordſhips inſiſt upon their Amendments ſo far, as to exclude all Attain-'ders; and do promiſe themſelves, the Commons will in this Point com-'ply with their Lordſhips, who do again aſſure them, That their Reſolu-'tions are grounded only upon their Tenderneſs, and the Conſideration of 'the Publick.

A Third and free Conference.

This being not ſatisfactory, a Third and a Free Conference was held two Days after, in which the Lord Privy-Seal ſaid, 'That the Houſe of Com-'mons might ſee by the preſent quick Free Conference, which the Lords 'deſired, that their Lordſhips did ſhew their Willingneſs, by uſing all 'Means poſſible, to reconcile both Houſes, and to come to ſuch an Un-'derſtanding, as to paſs the Bill with all Expedition. He own'd the Co-'gency of the Commons Reaſons, and therefore the Lords were content 'to make the Bill abſolute, without giving the Lord of Danby any Day 'to appear, and the Penalties to continue. He obſerv'd, that by the paſ-'ſing of this Bill he would not only be ruin'd, together with his Fami-'ly, but likewiſe thoſe Acquiſitions which he got by the Marriage into 'a noble Family, would be loſt. And if the Houſe of Commons would 'have any other Penalties added to the Bill, their Lordſhips would leave 'it to them, provided they run not to the abſolute Deſtruction of the Lord 'Impeach'd. He took notice, that altho' Reaſon and Juſtice were of the 'Commons Side, yet in a Legiſlative Capacity, they were to conſider 'Circumſtances with Relation to the Good of the Publick.' Then by way of Incouragement to the Commons, he told them, 'That in this

1679. Car. 31 Ref. 19

'Affair they had gain'd two great Points; The First was, That Impeach-
'ments made by the Commons in one Parliament, continue from Session to
'Session, and Parliament to Parliament, notwithstanding Prorogations or
'Dissolutions: The other Point was, That in Cases of Impeachment, upon
'special Matter shewn, if the Modesty of the Party impeach'd directs him
'not to withdraw, the Lords admit that of Right they order him to with- 'draw, and that afterwards he must be committed.' But without special
'Matter alledg'd, he said, He did not know how many of their Lordships 'might be pick'd out of the House of a sudden.' The Earl of Shaftsbury, now in a Way of Preferment in Court, declar'd, 'they were as 'willing to be rid of the Earl of Danby, as the Commons; but he let 'them know, that the Expression which was sent with Reasons from
'the Lords the other Day, namely, That the Lords would not draw in-
'to Example the Proceedings of the Earl of Danby, but would vacate
'them, they intended that to extend only to the Points of not Withdraw-
'ing, and not Committing.' He likewise declared, 'that the Way now pro-
'pos'd would be a Means to have the Bill pass; for the Commons
'might have other Penalties if they would, as Confiscation of Estate, loss
'of Honours, &c. Therefore he desir'd the Commons to consider, that 'there were weighty Reasons, which were better understood than ex-
'press'd, that prov'd it necessary for the Good of the Publick, that this 'Bill should speedily pass.' The Commons reply'd, 'that they hop'd 'their Lordships did not think, they took it as if they had now gain'd any 'Point; for the Points which their Lordships mention'd as gain'd, were 'nothing but what was agreeable to the ancient Course and Methods of 'Parliament.' And thus they so immovably adhered to their own Bill of Attainder, that within two or three Days Time the Lords thought fit to give way to the Heat of the Season, and pass'd the Bill, in which, the 21st of April was appointed for the Earl's surrendering himself to Tryal.

The Attainder Bill passes against him.

The Earl finding himself reduc'd to this Extremity, rather than risque the Mischiefs that might happen to himself, or to the King if he should refuse to pass the Bill, on the 15th of April surrender'd himself to the Usher of the Black Rod. The next Day, being brought to the Bar of the House of Peers, the Lord Chancellor let him know, 'that he stood
'impeach'd by the House of Commons; and that upon his withdrawing 'himself, a Bill of Attainder had pass'd the two Houses; by which, how'ever, he had Time given him to come in, and make his Defence.'
The Earl handsomly excus'd his not appearing sooner, and declar'd his Innocency with several Protestations, and then was order'd to withdraw. Being call'd in, and brought to the Bar a second Time, the Lord Chancellor acquainted him, 'That their Lordships would allow him Time to 'give in his Answer to the Articles of his Impeachment, till the first Day of 'the Sitting of the House after Easter; that if any further Charge were 'put in against him, he should have further Time to answer; that he 'should have Council assign'd him, and Liberty to make use of Records,
'and that his Witnesses should be summon'd.' Upon which he withdrew, and by Order of the House he was immediately committed to the Tower; being attended by such a vast Concourse of People, that upon his Account a general Insurrection was fear'd in the City. Thus this great Man, who had taken such unreasonable Pains in the House of Commons to hunt down the famous Earl of Clarendon, now felt the same Hardships, and met with the like Fate as to his Honour, and a worse Prospect as to his Life.

The Earl surrenders himself.

He is sent to the Tower.

The King under great Difficulties.

III. 1. The Parliament had ſate but a ſhort Time, when the King found himſelf daily involv'd with new Troubles and Difficulties, ſuch as he had never ſtruggled with before, which oblig'd him to take new Meaſures, and make a total Alteration in his Court. Of which Alteration, and the Springs of it, Sir William Temple has given us the beſt Account; who tells us, that upon the Heats of the Commons, which increas'd into new Meaſures and Motions among them, as they were ſway'd by popular Humours upon the Plot, and many new Plots laid by the Ambitions of private Perſons, carry'd on under the Covert of the other; He never ſaw any Man more ſenſible of the miſerable Condition of his Affairs, than he found the King, upon many Diſcourſes with him. But nothing his Majeſty ſaid mov'd him more, than when upon the ſad Proſpect of them all, he told him, He had none left, with whom he could ſo much as ſpeak of them in Confidence, ſince my Lord Treaſurer was gone. And this gave him an Occaſion of entering into more Confidence with one who had always been the Treaſurer's Friend.

Sir William Temple's Endeavours to eaſe him.

In Order to extricate his Majeſty, Sir William firſt conſider'd, that the Deſign of the Treaſurer's Removal had been carry'd on by the Duke of Monmouth, in Conjunction with the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth and the Earl of Eſſex, who was then moſt intimate with the Duke of Monmouth, and by his Grace and the Earl of Sunderland newly brought into the Treaſury. He found the Lord Sunderland, at leaſt, in Compliance with this Combination; and that all were reſolv'd to bring the Earl of Shaftsbury again into the Court, who was in Confidence with the Duke of Monmouth and the Earl of Eſſex, and near related to the Lord Sunderland. He obſerv'd the tender Affection the King had to the Duke of Monmouth; and plainly ſaw the Uſe his Grace would make of it, in caſe he could introduce a Miniſtry at his own Devotion: And this being a Matter that might ſtrike at the very Succeſſion of the Crown, and not only injure the Duke of York, but through Him, his Children and the Prince of Orange, he firſt reſolv'd, if it were poſſible, to break the Power of that Miniſtry; tho' he found no Men he could fix in it, with any Satisfaction to the King, or Advantage to his Service. On the other Side, Sir William obſerv'd the Parliament to grow every Day more violent, upon the Support they receiv'd by the Humours rais'd by the Plot, and the Incentives given them by the Ambitions of Perſons playing that Game. He ſaw a Probability of Matters growing to ſuch a Height, that the King might be compell'd to part with them; and yet he ſaw not ſufficient Authority left in the Crown, either to do that without great Hazards, or to live without another Parliament, till the preſent Humours might cool. Both theſe Conſiderations meeting, gave Sir William the Thoughts of the King's Eſtabliſhing a New Council, of ſuch a Conſtitution as might either gain Credit enough with the Parliament, by taking ſome Lords and Commoners who had moſt Sway in both Houſes, and thereby eaſe both the King and People; or, if the Humours ſhould grow outragious and ungovernable, the King might yet, at the Head of ſuch a Council, with more Authority and leſs Hazard, either Prorogue or Diſſolve them, as his own Neceſſities or their Extravagancies ſhould require. Theſe he propos'd to mix with others of the King's more general Choice, for making up one Half of the Council; while the other Half, being deſign'd Fifteen in Number, were ever to be the preſent Chief Officers of his Crown and Houſhold; who being all in his Majeſty's known Truſt, as well as Choice, wou'd be ſure to keep the Council ſteadily to the Intereſt of King and Crown. Moreover, one chief Regard neceſſary to this Conſtitution, was that of the

the Perſonal Riches of the new Council; which in Revenues of Land or Offices, was found to amount to about Three hundred thouſand Pounds a Year; whereas thoſe of the Houſe of Commons were found not to exceed Four hundred thouſand a Year. And as Authority was obſerv'd much to follow Land; ſo, at the worſt, ſuch a Council, upon an Emergency, might out of their own Stock furniſh the King ſo far, as to relieve ſome great Neceſſity of the Crown.

After this great Scheme had been debated and digeſted about a Month between the King and Sir William Temple, and his Majeſty well ſatisfy'd with the whole; Sir William deſired him Not to take a Reſolution of that Importance, without the Advice of three or four Perſons, on whoſe Judgment and Affection to his Service, his Majeſty cou'd moſt rely. Hereupon the King order'd him to communicate the whole Deſign to the Lord Chancellor Finch, the Earl of Sunderland, and the Earl of Eſſex, but one after the other, and with the utmoſt Secrecy; and if they concurr'd with his Opinion, he ſhou'd appoint them to attend his Majeſty the next Morning, in as private a Way as they cou'd. They all receiv'd the Overture with equal Amazement and Satisfaction: The Lord Chancellor ſaid, It look'd like a Thing from Heaven fallen into his Majeſty's Breaſt: The Lord Eſſex believ'd, That it wou'd leave the Parliament and Nation in the ſame Diſpoſition to the King which he found at his Coming in; and the Lord Sunderland approv'd it as much as any.

It is propos'd to three Lords.

The next Day theſe four attended the King in private, and had a very long Audience; in which no Difficulties aroſe but Two that were wholly Perſonal. Sir William had propos'd the Lord Hallifax as one of the Lords; to whom the King, in the firſt Conſultations, had ſhewn more Averſion than to any of the reſt; but upon ſeveral Repreſentations of his Family, his Abilities, his Eſtate and Intereſt, as well as Talent to ridicule and unravel whatever he reſented, Sir William thought the King had acquieſc'd. But at this Meeting his Majeſty rais'd new Difficulties, and appear'd a great while inflexible; till at laſt, the three Lords joyning with Sir William, and the latter ſaying, They wou'd fall upon their Knees to gain a Point they all thought neceſſary for his Service, his Majeſty conſented. The other Difficulty was concerning the Earl of Shaftsbury, who had never been nam'd in the firſt Debates; and the King either had not thought of him before, or had not mention'd him to Sir William, as knowing what ill Opinion he had of that Lord. But after the Lord Hallifax had paſs'd, the King ſaid, There was Another, who, if he were left out, might do as much Miſchief as any, and nam'd the Lord Shaftsbury; to which the three Lords agreed, and over and above concluded, That he wou'd never be content with a Counſellor's Place among Thirty, and therefore it was propos'd to add One to the Number, by making a Preſident, and that He ſhou'd be the Man. Sir William diſputed this Point from the firſt Propoſal to the Concluſion; foretelling, He wou'd deſtroy all the Good they expected from the whole Conſtitution; and ſpoke with ſo much Earneſtneſs, that when he ſaw by the King's Agreeing it wou'd be concluded, he walk'd off, irreſolute whether he ſhou'd have left the Room or not; but turning again, he deſired his Majeſty to remember, That he had no Part in Lord Shaftsbury's Coming into the Council, or his Affairs; That his Majeſty and the other three Lords had reſolv'd it without Him, and that he was ſtill abſolutely againſt it. The King laugh'd, and turn'd Sir William's Paſſion into a Jeſt; and ſo proceeded to conclude the Form of the Conſtitution. Sir William had foretold this Fate to his Majeſty the Year before; when upon his coming from Holland, the King had fallen into all the violent Expreſſions imaginable againſt

The whole agreed on.

that Earl. He then told his Majeſty, That with his good leave, he won'd hold any Wager, he ſhou'd ſee that Lord again in his Buſineſs: And when the King ask'd him, what made him think ſo? he anſwer'd, Becauſe he knew he was reſtleſs while he was out, and wou'd try every Door to get in; had Wit and Induſtry to find out the Ways; and when Mony wou'd work, had as much as any Body to beſtow, and Skill enough to know where to place it. 1679. 2. All things being compleated, on the 20th Day of April, the King having order'd an extraordinary meeting of his Privy-Council, order'd the Lord Chancellor to read the following Declaration: The King's Declaration upon it.

'My Lords, His Majeſty hath call'd you together at this Time to communicate a 'Reſolution he hath taken, in a Matter of great Importance to his Crown 'and Government; and which he hopes will prove of the greateſt Sa- 'tisfaction and Advantage to his Kingdoms, in all Affairs hereafter, both 'at Home and Abroad; and therefore he doubts not of your Approba- 'tion, however you may ſeem concern'd in it. In the firſt Place, his 'Majeſty gives you all Thanks for your Service to him here; and for 'all the good Advices you have given him; which might have been 'more frequent, if the great Number of this Council had not made it 'unfit for the Secrecy and Diſpatch that are neceſſary to many great 'Affairs. This forc'd him to uſe a ſmaller Number of you in a Foreign 'Committee; and ſometimes the Advices of ſome few among them, up- 'on ſuch Occaſions, for many Years paſt. He is ſorry for the ill Succeſs 'he found in this Courſe, and ſenſible of the ill Poſture of Affairs from 'That and ſome unhappy Accidents, which have rais'd great Jealouſies 'and Diſſatisfaction among his good Subjects; and thereby left the Crown 'and Government in a Condition too weak for thoſe Dangers we have 'Reaſon to fear, both at Home and Abroad. Theſe his Majeſty hopes 'may be yet prevented, by a courſe of wiſe and ſteady Counſels for the 'future; and theſe Kingdoms grow again to make ſuch a Figure as they 'formerly have done in the World; and as they may always do, if our 'Union and Conduct were equal to our Force. To this End, he hath 'reſolv'd to lay aſide the Uſe he may have hitherto made of any Single Miniſtry, or Private Advice, or Foreign Committees, for the general 'Direction of his Affairs; and to conſtitute ſuch a Privy-Council, as may 'not only by its Number be fit for the Conſultation and Digeſtion of all 'Buſineſs, both Domeſtick and Foreign; but alſo by the Choice of them, 'out of the ſeveral Parts this State is compos'd of, may be the beſt in- 'form'd in the true Conſtitutions of it, and thereby the moſt able to 'counſel Him in all the Affairs and Intereſts of this Crown and Nation. 'And by the conſtant Advice of ſuch a Council, his Majeſty is reſolv'd 'hereafter to Govern his Kingdoms; together with the frequent Uſe of 'his Great Council of Parliament, which he takes to be the ancient Con- 'ſtitution of this State and Government.

'Now for the greater Dignity of this Council, his Majeſty reſolves 'their conſtant Number ſhall be limited to Thirty: And for their grea- 'ter Authority, there ſhall be Fifteen of his chief Officers, who ſhall be 'Privy-Counſellors by their Places; and for the other Fifteen, he will 'chuſe Ten out of the ſeveral Ranks of the Nobility, and Five Commo- 'ners of the Realm, whoſe known Abilities, Intereſt and Eſteem in the 'Nation, ſhall render them without all Suſpicion of either Miſtaking or 'Betraying the true Intereſt of the Kingdom, and conſequently of advi- 'ſing him ill. In the firſt Place therefore, and to take care of the Church, 'his Majeſty will have the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Biſhop of Lon- 'don for the Time being: And to inform him well in what concerns the 'Laws, the Lord Chancellor and one of the Lord Chief Juſtices. For 'the Navy and Stores, the Admiral and Maſter of the Ordnance: For 'the Treaſury, the Treaſurer, or Firſt Commiſſioner, and Chancellor of 'the Exchequer. The reſt of the Fifteen ſhall be the Lord Privy Seal, 'the Maſter of the Horſe, the Lord Steward and Lord Chamberlain of 'the Houſhold, the Groom of the Stole, and the two Secretaries of 'State; which ſhall be all the Offices of his Kingdom, to which the Dig-'nity of a Privy-Counſellor ſhall be annex'd. The others his Majeſty has 'reſolv'd on, and hopes he has not choſen ill. His Majeſty intends be-'ſides, to have ſuch Princes of his Blood as he ſhall at any Time call to 'this Board, being here in Court; a Preſident of the Council, whene-'ver he ſhall find it neceſſary; and the Secretary of Scotland, when any 'ſuch ſhall be here. But theſe being uncertain, he reckons not of the 'Conſtant Number of Thirty, which ſhall never be exceeded.

The New COUNCIL.

To make way for this new Council, the King was pleas'd to diſſolve the old One, with repeated Thanks for their former Services; and the next Morning to nominate and appoint theſe following Members; His Highneſs Prince Rupert; William, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Heneage Lord Finch, Lord Chancellor of England; Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, Lord Preſident of the Council; Arthur Earl of Angleſey, Lord Privy-Seal; Chriſtopher Duke of Albemarle; James Duke of Monmouth, Maſter of the Horſe; Henry Duke of Newcaſtle; John Duke of Lauderdale, Secretary of State for Scotland; James Duke of Ormond, Lord Steward of the Houſhold; Charles Lord Marquis of Wincheſter; Henry Lord Marquis of Worceſter; Henry Earl of Arlington, Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold; James Earl of Salisbury; John Earl of Bridgewater; Robert Earl of Sunderland, one of his Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State; Arthur Earl of Eſſex, firſt Lord Commiſſioner of the Treaſury; John Earl of Bath, Groom of the Stole; Thomas Lord Viſcount Falconberg; George Lord Viſcount Halliſax; Henry Lord Biſhop of London; John Lord Roberts; Denzil Lord Hollis; William Lord Ruſſel; William Lord Cavendiſh; Henry Coventry Eſquire, one of his Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State; Sir Francis North, Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas; Sir Henry Capel, Knight of the Bath, firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty; Sir John Ernley, Knight, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir Thomas Chicheley, Knight, Maſter of the Ordnance; Sir William Temple, Baronet; Edward Seymour, Eſquire; and Henry Powle, Eſquire. Theſe, or moſt of them being ſworn, his Majeſty was pleas'd to declare, That he wou'd have all his Affairs here debated freely, of what kind ſoever they were; and therefore with abſolute Secrecy.

The Kng had now Reaſon to hope well upon this Eſtabliſhment of a Council ſo generally grateful to the two Houſes, and the Bulk of the People; and therefore his Majeſty the very ſame Morning came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, made this Speech to both Houſes:

The King's Speech to the Parliament upon this Occaſion.

My Lords and Gentlemen, I thought it neceſſary to acquaint you what I have done this Day; which is, that I have eſtabliſh'd a new Privy-Council, the conſtant Number of which ſhall never exceed Thirty. I have made choice of ſuch Perſons as are worthy and able to adviſe me; and am reſolv'd in all my weighty and important Affairs, next to the Advice of my Great Council in Parliament, which I ſhall often conſult with, to be advis'd by this Privy-Council. I cou'd not make ſo great a Change without Acquainting both Houſes of Parliament: And I deſire you all to apply your ſelves heartily, as I ſhall do, to thoſe Things which are neceſ- ſary for the Good and Safety of the Kingdom, and that no Time may be loſt in it. 1679. Car. 31 Reſ. 19

This Alteration and Eſtabliſhment was receiv'd with general Joy and Applauſe throughout the Kingdom; with Bells and Bonfires in the City, and the ſame even in Ireland. In Holland, the Stocks of the Eaſt-India Company immediately roſe upon the News; and the States deſign'd one of their moſt conſiderable Men, Van Lewen, to come Miniſter into England upon this Occaſion. France alone was unſatisfied with it, and their Ambaſſador Barillon ſaid, It was making STATES, and not COUNCILS; but it was eaſy to gueſs at his Reaſons, and ſo they were not much regarded. The Houſe of Commons receiv'd it with moſt Coldneſs, where the contrary was moſt reaſonably expected: And the pretending Knowers among them, who were not of this Council, now pretended to know nothing of it; to expect new Revolutions; to doubt it might be a Court-Juggle; to refer it to Time to diſcover the Truth of it; and, in the mean while, to ſuſpend their Judgments. This, ſays Sir William Temple, was the firſt Effect of the Lord Shaftsbury's good Meaning to the King and his Affairs, into which he was enter'd; but not with that perſonal and tranſcendent Credit he aim'd at with his Majeſty, and in which he rightly judg'd thoſe who had been Authors of this new Council, had the greateſt Share. This made him fall in more abſolutely with the People's Favourite the Duke of Monmouth, and uſe all Endeavours to raiſe ſuch Heats and Diſcontents in the Houſes, upon the Fears of Popery, and the Propoſitions to prevent it, that the King ſoon found himſelf upon as uneaſy Terms with this Seſſion of Parliament, as ever he had been ſince his Reſtoration; the Humours being rais'd by the Earl's Inſinuations among his Patriots, 'That the Duke of Monmouth had ſo much Credit 'with the King, that his Majeſty deſir'd nothing but a good Occaſion of 'conſenting to all the Parliament ſhou'd inſiſt on; which wou'd be 'granted him, if they kept up their Heat and Obſtinacy in ſo popular 'a Point, as that againſt Popery: And if that were once gain'd, the 'Duke of Monmouth and he ſhou'd be able to ſteer all the reſt, to the 'Satisfaction of thoſe who call'd themſelves the Good or the Honeſt Party.' Such a Miſchief, ſays the ſame Author, cou'd never have grown, if the Lord Shaftsbury had not work'd himſelf up into Credit, both in Parliament and City, by the Appearance of having it with the King, and in Council, where he was Preſident; and by the Infuſions given of his having, or growing yet into greater, by a more ſecret Spring; which was the Prevalency of the Duke of Monmouth, and the King's increaſing Kindneſs for him, as appear'd ſince the Abſence of the Duke of York. Therefore he cou'd not believe but all this wou'd have been avoided, if, upon this new Conſtitution, the Lord Shaftsbury had been laid aſide, as a Perſon mark'd out by his Majeſty, and never to enter more into his Affairs or Confidence; which, ſays he, the whole Courſe of his Life, from his very firſt Entrance upon the Publick Stage, if examin'd never ſo ſtrictly, wou'd have given good Ground for.

How received.

The E. of Shaftsbury's ambitious Deſigns.

Upon the firſt Conſtitution of this Council, the Lord Sunderland and Sir William Temple enter'd into a near and diſtinct Confidence from any others in the Courſe of the King's Affairs; and ſhortly after they took in the Earl of Eſſex, with ſome Unwillingneſs in Sir William, and ſo became a Triumvirate, to undertake the firſt Digeſtion of Affairs, and to prepare them either for the Parliament or the Council. But Sir William finding Matters grow very uneaſy among the Commons by the Practices of the Lord Shaftsbury, with the Duke of Monmouth's Cover at leaſt, and that the Lord Halifax appear'd unſatisfied by obſerving where the King's

A Quadrumvirate in the Council.

Confidence lay; he propos'd to the Lords Sunderland and Eſſex, to receive him into all their Conſultations; which he thought wou'd give him more Credit with the King, and them more Eaſe in the Courſe of their Proceedings. They receiv'd the Propoſal with little Satisfaction, and the Lord Sunderland particularly told Sir William, He ſhou'd not find the Lord Hallifax the Perſon he took him for; but one that cou'd draw with no body, and ſtill climbing up to the Top himſelf; but upon Sir William's urging the Matter, they conſented, and ſo all four join'd together in their Meetings and Conſultations, by which means they had the greateſt Sway, and in effect preſided in the Council. This they continu'd, for a conſiderable, time with ſo much Union, and Endeavours for the general Good of the Service of the King and Nation, that Sir William cou'd not but ſay to them, at the End of one of their Meetings, That we four were either the four honeſteſt Men in England, or the greateſt Knaves; for we made one another at leaſt believe, that we were the honeſteſt Men in the World. But this Conjunction, by Time or Accident, was broken, or rather alter'd before the Riſing of the Parliament.

Their Proceedings.

The principal Matters that lay before the King at that time, were, Firſt, the Satisfaction of his People, by falling into ſome Meaſures with the Parliament, that might enable him to look abroad in ſuch a Figure as became the Crown of England, and was neceſſary for preventing the common Fears of a new Invaſion of France upon Flanders or Holland; which look'd very deſperate, without ſome brave and reſolute Protection from England. The Second was, a Reſolution to be taken in Anſwer to the Inſtances made by Monſieur Van Lewen from the States-General, about a new Guaranty to be given upon the late General Peace by his Majeſty; particularly to Spain, in the Buſineſs of Flanders. The Third was, the giving ſome Eaſe to Scotland, where the Humours began to ſwell about this time; and which the Quadrumvirate thought cou'd be no way done ſo eaſily, as by the Removal of the Duke of Lauderdale; a Man too much hated both here and there, to be fit for the Temper his Majeſty ſeem'd reſolv'd to uſe at this time. But for this laſt, they cou'd not upon any Terms obtain it of the King, by all the joint and ſeparate Arguments us'd by all four; the King's Defence being, as Sir William Temple obſerv'd, a very true one, That none of them knew Scotland ſo well as himſelf. As for the Second, they eaſily agreed upon the Meaſures that ſeem'd neceſſary for the Satisfaction of the States-General, and the Safety of Flanders; being all four of the Committee for Foreign Affairs.

The Difficulties they met with.

But the moſt difficult and important Matter was the Firſt, which they found more perplex'd than they cou'd imagine. For both Houſes of Parliament ſeem'd now to have no Eyes, but for the Dangers of Popery upon the Duke's Succeſſion to the Crown; which Humour, as before hinted, was blown up by all the Arts and Intrigues of the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Shaftsbury. The King appear'd willing to give them all poſſible Security againſt thoſe Fears, without changing the Laws in Point of Succeſſion: And, on the other ſide, the Houſe of Commons were buſy in finding out Expedients to ſecure this Point, but cou'd agree in none; being ſtill diverted from fixing on any, by the Lord Shaftsbury's Practices. The Council fell upon the ſame Subject with great Earneſtneſs; and after much Debate, agreed upon many Heads to be laid before the Parliament, which were to be hinted at by the King in a Speech to both Houſes. One of theſe Expedients was, to have a Bill brought in for the Aſſociation of all his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects: Another was, a Bill for the Baniſhment of all conſiderable Papiſts out of England:

A third, for ſecuring frequent Parliaments; and it was likewiſe propos'd, That the Prince of Orange ſhou'd be join'd in the Adminiſtration with the Duke of York, upon the latter's coming to the Crown. Theſe Expedients were agreed to by all the Council, except the Earl of Shaftsbury and Sir William Temple, who were againſt them upon very different Grounds. Sir William's were two; 'Firſt, becauſe he believ'd, that nothing that 'came firſt from the King upon theſe Points, wou'd be accepted by the 'Commons; who, if they wou'd be ſatisfied at all, he thought ſhou'd 'firſt agree upon what, and leave it to the King to take or refuſe. The 'Second was, that as he did not ſee any certain Eaſe their Expedients 'wou'd give to the King, tho' agreed to by the two Houſes; ſo it was 'evident to all, That they wou'd leave the Crown, after him, in Shackles; 'which being put on upon the Duke's Occaſion, and in his Time, wou'd 'not be eaſily knock'd off by any Succeſſor. The Earl of Shaftſbury's Ground was plain, and ſo expreſſed by him upon all Occaſions; which was, That there cou'd be no Security againſt the Duke, if once in Poſſeſſion of the Crown: And this being well infus'd by his and the Duke of Monmouth's Friends into the Houſe of Commons, occaſion'd their ſullen rejecting all the Expedients offer'd them by the King, and laid the Foundation for the Proceedings of the next Houſe of Commons, and the great Diſorders that follow'd. 1679. Car. 31 Reſ. 19

3. To return to the more immediate Tranſactions of Parliament, the Commons, who were daily employ'd in troubleſom Buſineſs, about the time of this new Conſtitution, were not a little heated with the Caſe of Nathaniel Reading, Eſquire, a Lincolnſhire Gentleman, and a Counſel at Law, then diſtinguiſh'd for his Adventures in the Iſle of Azolme. This Lawyer, of a ſmooth Tongue and ready Wit, was accus'd before the Houſe of Commons of endeavouring to mollifie and ſweeten, and in ſome Degree to corrupt the inflexible Honeſty of Mr. Bedloe; who tho' he had receiv'd from him above Fifty Pounds, and larger Sums in Promiſes, not to ſtifle the whole Plot, but only to make him Eaſy toward ſome particular Perſons, his Conſcience wou'd not permit him to conceal ſo foul a Practice. This made a great Noiſe, and was look'd upon as a Matter of dangerous Conſequence, in the Houſe of Commons; who thereupon petition'd the King to iſſue out a Special Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer for the immediate Tryal of the ſaid Nathaniel Reading. Accordingly, on the 24th, he was Try'd at the King's-Bench Bar before the Lord-Chief Juſtice North (in the Abſence of Scroggs) and moſt of the other Judges, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, nam'd in the Commiſſion. The Facts were prov'd upon him by the Oaths of Bedloe himſelf, one Wiggins his Man, and one Mr. Speke; which two laſt Bedloe had hid privately in his Chamber to overhear their Diſcourſe. Mr. Reading in his Defence, did in effect own the Correſpondence with Mr. Bedloe, but with ſeveral fine Words alledg'd, 'That Mr. Bedloe firſt 'propos'd the Matter to him; and that all that he did, was not in the 'leaſt to ſhorten, leſſen, or ſtifle any thing of the Truth, which Mr. Bed- 'loe had to ſay, but only to prevent him from the great Guilt of Perjury 'and Innocent Blood, &c.' But being found Guilty, the Lord-Chief Juſtice, after a grave Speech, 'reflecting upon the Heinouſneſs of the 'Crime, and the Quality of the Perſon, as being of the Long Robe, 'whoſe Knowledge ſhou'd keep them from ſo fooliſh, and their Honour 'from ſo wicked an Attempt, pronounc'd the Judgment of the Court, viz. That he be fin'd a Thouſand Pounds, impriſon'd for one Year, and ſtand one Hour in the Pillory, in the Palace-Yard in Weſtminſter, &c. The Tryal and Puniſhment of Mr. Reading.

A new Diſcovery about Fires.

&c. which was done accordingly, for a Terror to all Perſons who ſhou'd pretend to manage or influence the King's Evidence.

This Sentence was no ſooner paſs'd, but the Houſe was heated and allarm'd with a new Account of the Papiſts Deſigns of firing the City: and a Servant Maid, call'd Elizabeth Oxley, was found to have ſet Fire to her Maſter Bird's Houſe in Fetter-lane, which by the help of the Watch was ſoon extinguiſh'd. She declar'd upon her Examination, that ſhe was employ'd to do it by one Stubbs a Papiſt, who promis'd her five Pounds. Hereupon Stubbs was ſeiz'd, who acknowledg'd he had perſwaded her to it; but further declared, that Father Gifford, his Confeſſor, had put him upon the Buſineſs, and told him, It was no Sin to fire all the Houſes of Hereticks; and that Gifford had promis'd him a hundred Pounds for the ſame; and told him he was to have the Money from the Church. He likewiſe ſaid, that he us'd to meet the ſaid Gifford with Flower and Clinton, two Iriſh Men, in St. James's Fields, in the Dusk of the Evening, to conſult theſe Matters. Moreover, theſe two, Stubbs and Oxley, declar'd to the Houſe ſeveral other Things concerning an Inſurrection at home by Papiſts, and an Invaſion of 60000 Men ſpeedily to be made by the French, &c. Upon which free Confeſſions, the Houſe of Commons petition'd the King for a Pardon for theſe two, and a Proclamation againſt Gifford and the two Iriſhmen, both which were readily granted. This Story ſeem'd to have laid a Foundation for Bedloe's ſtrange Narrative about Fires, with which he ſhortly after allarm'd and frighted the weaker part of London and Weſtminſter. However it was, as ſoon as it was reported in the Houſe, Saturday the 26th of April, the Commons ſhew'd a more than ordinary Reſentment; and, beſides their Addreſs for the Execution of Pickering, and other Condemn'd Prieſts, they Reſolved, Nemine Contradicente, 'That this Houſe will ſit 'to Morrow [Sunday] to conſider the beſt Ways and Means to ſecure 'and preſerve the King's Perſon, and alſo the Proteſtant Religion, a-'gainſt the Attempts of the Papiſts, both in the Reign of his Majeſty 'and his Succeſſor.' Accordingly, the next Morning, they firſt ordered a Bill to be brought in to Baniſh all Papiſts or Reputed Papiſts within London and Weſtminſter 20 Miles from the ſame for ſix Months; and then they came to their Grand Reſolve, which was alſo Nemine Contradicente, 'That the Duke of York being a Papiſt, and the Hopes of his coming 'ſuch to the Crown, has given the greateſt Countenance and Encou-'ragement to the preſent Conſpiracies and Deſigns of the Papiſts a-'gainſt the King and the Proteſtant Religion. And they deſir'd the Concurrence of the Lords to this Vote, and order'd the Lord Ruſſel to carry up the ſame.

The Reſentment of the Houſe of Commons.

The E. of Danby pleads the King's Pardon.

In the mean time, the Earl of Danby, finding the Fury of the Commons, appear'd at the Bar of the Houſe of Peers, and there pleaded and produc'd the King's moſt gracious Pardon for all Crimes and Offences whatſoever, committed before the 28th Day of February laſt. At which the Commons were not a little diſoblig'd; and upon April 28th, the Committee of Secrecy, which were appointed to examine and peruſe the Nature of the Earl's Plea, made this Report; 'I. We find no Precedent 'that ever any Pardon was granted to any Perſon Impeach'd by the 'Commons of High-Treaſon, or other High Crimes depending in the 'Impeachment. 2. As to the manner of paſſing the Earl of Danby's 'Pardon, it hath been formerly reported to the Houſe, and the Com-'mittee refer themſelves to that Report. 3. That by what means it was 'obtain'd, the Time allow'd the Committee hath been ſo ſhort, that we 'cannot as yet diſcover the Adviſers or Promoters thereof, any further 'than what is mention'd in the ſaid Report relating to the Lord-Chancel- 1679.

'lor.' Whereupon the Houſe Reſolv'd, 'That a Meſſage be ſent to the 'Lords, to deſire their Lordſhips to demand of the Earl of Danby, Whether Car. 31
'he will rely upon, and abide by the Plea of his Pardon. Accordingly, Rel. 19
the next Day, the Earl was again brought to the Bar of the Lords Houſe, Debates upo. it.
where kneeling, and then ſtanding up, the Lord-Chancellor acquainted him, 'That the Commons had return'd to their Lordſhips the Plea de-
'liver'd by him at the Bar of their Houſe on the 25th Inſtant, with a
'Deſire that their Lordſhips ſhou'd ask him, Whether he will rely
'upon, and abide by his ſaid Plea.' The Earl praying time to anſwer, their Lordſhips allow'd him four Days, till Saturday next, and then he was ſent back to the Tower. On the ſame Day, the King return'd this Anſwer to the Commons Addreſs for the Execution of Pickering and other Prieſts; Gentlemen, I have always been tender in Matters of Blood, which my Subjects have no Reaſon to take Exception at: But this is a Matter of great Weight, I ſhall therefore conſider of it, and return you an Anſwer.

4. Several Things being prepar'd by the new Privy-Council, in order to eaſe the Minds of the People, now variouſly agitated, on Wedneſday the 30th of April, his Majeſty came in his Royal Robes to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, he made this ſhort Speech to both Houſes; My Lords and Gentlemen, The Seaſon of the Year advancing The King's Second Speech to both Houſes.
ſo faſt, I thought it neceſſary to put you in mind of three Particulars:
1. The Proſecution of the Plot: 2. The Diſbanding of the Army: 3. The Providing a Fleet for our Common Security. And to ſhew you, that whilſt you are doing your Parts, my Thoughts have not been miſemploy'd; but that it is my conſtant Care to do every Thing that may preſerve your Religion, and ſecure it for the future in all Events, I have commanded my Lord Chancellor to mention ſeveral Particulars; which, I hope, will be an Evidence, that in all Things that concern the Publick Security, I ſhall not follow your Zeal, but Lead it.

Accordingly the Lord Chancellor made this following Speech, which ought to be inſerted without any Abridgment: 'My Lords, and you the The Lord Chancellor's ſecond Speech.
'Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons, That Royal 'Care which his Majeſty hath taken for the General Quiet and Satisfacti'on of all his Subjects, is now more evident by theſe new and freſh In-'ſtances of it, which I have in Command to open to you. His Majeſty
'hath conſider'd with Himſelf, that 'tis not enough that your Religion
'and Liberty is ſecure during his Own Reign, but he thinks he owes it
'to his People to do all that in him lies, that theſe Bleſſings may be
'tranſmitted to your Poſterity, and ſo well ſecured to Them, that no
'Succeſſion in After-Ages may be able to work the leaſt Alteration. And 'therefore his Majeſty, who hath often ſaid in this Place, That he is ready
'to conſent to any Laws of this Kind, ſo that the ſame extend not to 'alter the Deſcent of the Crown in the Right Line, nor to defeat the 'Succeſſion, hath now commanded this to be further Explain'd.

'And to the End it may never be in the Power of any Papiſt, if the 'Crown deſcend upon him, to make any Change either in Church or 'State; I am commanded to tell you, That his Majeſty is willing that
'Proviſion may be made, Firſt to diſtinguiſh a Papiſt from a Proteſtant
'Succeſſor; then ſo to limit and circumſcribe the Authority of a Popiſh
'Succeſſor, in theſe Caſes following, that he may be diſabled to do any 'Harm: Firſt, in Reference to the Church; his Majeſty is content that 1.
'Care be taken, that all Eccleſiaſtical and Spiritual Benefices and Pro-

'motions

1679. Car. 31 Ref. 19 2. 3. 4. ‘ motions in Gift of the Crown, may be Conferr'd in ſuch a Manner, ‘ that we may be ſure the Incumbents ſhall always be of the moſt Pious ‘ and Learned Proteſtants: And that no Popiſh Succeſſor, while he con- ‘ tinues ſo, may have any Power to controll ſuch Preſentments. In Re- ‘ ference to the State, and Civil Part of the Government; as it is alrea- ‘ dy Provided, That no Papiſt can ſit in either Houſe of Parliament; ſo ‘ the King is pleas'd that it be Provided too, that there may never want ‘ a Parliament, when the King ſhall happen to dye, but that the Parlia- ‘ ment then in Being may continue Indiſſolvable for a Competent Time; ‘ or if there be no Parliament in Being, then the laſt Parliament which ‘ was in Being before that Time, may Reaſſemble, and Sit a Competent ‘ Time, without any New Summons, or Elections. And as no Papiſt can ‘ by Law hold any Place of Truſt, ſo the King is content that it may be ‘ further Provided, That no Lords, or others of the Privy-Council, no ‘ Judges of the Common Law, or in Chancery, ſhall at any Time, during ‘ the Reign of a Popiſh Succeſſor, be Put in, or Diſplac'd, but by the ‘ Authority of Parliament: And that Care be taken, that none but ſin- ‘ cere Proteſtants may be Juſtices of the Peace. In Reference to the ‘ Military Part, the King is willing that no Lord Lieutenant, or Depu- ‘ ty-Lieutenant, nor no Officer in the Navy, during the Reign of any ‘ Popiſh Succeſſor, be Put out, or Remov'd, but either by Authority of ‘ Parliament, or of ſuch Perſons as the Parliament ſhall intruſt with ſuch ‘ Authority.

‘ It is hard to invent another Reſtraint to be put upon a Popiſh Suc- ‘ ceſſor, conſidering how much the Revenue of the Succeſſor will depend ‘ upon Conſent of Parliament, and how impoſſible it is to raiſe Mony ‘ without ſuch Conſent. But yet, if any Thing elſe can occur to the ‘ Wiſdom of the Parliament, which may further ſecure Religion and Li- ‘ berty againſt a Popiſh Succeſſor, without defeating the Right of Suc- ‘ ceſſion it ſelf, his Majeſty will moſt readily conſent to it. Thus watch- ‘ ful is the King for all your Safety; and if He cou'd think of any Thing ‘ elſe, that you do either want or wiſh to make you happy, he wou'd ‘ make it his Buſineſs to effect it for you. God Almighty long conti- ‘ nue this Bleſſed Union between the King, and his Parliament, and ‘ People.

It may be thought a wonderful Infatuation that theſe Expedients and Conceſſions ſhou'd be no better receiv'd: The Reaſons have been already hinted at from Sir William Temple, and may not be irrationally attributed to the Spirit of Faction or Deluſion, or an unaccountable Mixture of both. But Providence, which can take Advantage of Mens Miſtakes as well as Crimes, ſeem'd to have deſign'd greater Things, without either Ruining the Monarchy, or the Privileges of the Nation. The Commons were ſo heated with the continu'd Infuſions, and repeated Stories, about Popiſh and Arbitrary Deſigns, that they knew not how to proceed with the Calmneſs and Clearneſs of Debate neceſſary to ſo venerable an Aſſembly. On the next Day after theſe Speeches, they revived a Committee formerly appointed to conſider what Part of the Mony given for Disbanding of the Army, is yet undiſpos'd of, and remaining in the Exchequer; being ſtill apprehenſive of the Corruptions of the Earl of Danby. But to ſhew a perſonal Concern for their Sovereign, at the ſame Time they fell upon the further Conſideration of Securing and Preſerving the King, and the Proteſtant Religion, againſt the Attempts of the Papiſts, both in the Reign of his Majeſty and his Succeſſors. They alſo read at the ſame Time, a Bill for better Prevention of Illegal Exaction of Mony from the Subject; and Order'd, That Leave be given to bring in a Bill, ‘ That when ‘ any

'any Member of this Houſe is preferr'd to any Office or Place of Profit, 'a new Writ ſhall immediately iſſue out for Electing a Member to ſerve 'in his ſtead.'

Still the Earl of Danby was one of their chief Grievances, and his Pardon a very great Vexation; therefore on the 5th of May, they Reſolv'd, 'That it was the Opinion of this Houſe, That the Pardon pleaded by 'the Earl of Danby was Illegal and Void, and ought not to be allow'd in 'bar of the Impeachment of the Commons of England.' And Mr. Speaker, with the whole Houſe, went up to the Lords Bar, and demanded Judgment, in theſe Words; My Lords, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, are come up to demand Judgment, in their own Names, and the Names of all the Commons of England, againſt Thomas Earl of Danby, who ſtands Impeach'd by them before your Lordſhips of High-Treaſon, and divers High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; to which he has pleaded a Pardon; which Pardon the Commons conceive to be Illegal and Void; and therefore they do demand Judgment of your Lordſhips accordingly. Shortly after they fell upon another great Man, more juſtly obnoxious, the Duke of Lauderdale, againſt whom they drew up this following Addreſs; 'We your Majeſty's moſt loyal and dutiful Subjects, the 'Commons in Parliament aſſembled, finding your Majeſty's Kingdoms in-'volv'd in imminent Dangers and great Difficulties, by the evil Deſigns, 'and pernicious Counſels of ſome who have been, and are in high Place, 'and Truſt and Authority about your Royal Perſon; who contrary to 'the Duty of their Places, by their arbitrary and deſtructive Counſels, 'tending to the Subverſion of the Rights, Liberties and Properties of 'your Subjects, and the Alteration of the Proteſtant Religion Eſtabliſh'd, 'have endeavour'd to alienate the Hearts of your Loyal Subjects from 'your Majeſty and your Government. Amongſt whom we have juſt 'Reaſon to accuſe John Duke of Lauderdale, for a chief Promoter of 'ſuch Counſels; and more particularly for Contriving and Endeavour-'ing to raiſe Jealouſies and Miſunderſtandings between your Majeſty's 'Kingdoms of England and Scotland; whereby Hoſtilities might have 'enſu'd, and may ariſe between both Nations, if not prevented. Where-'fore, we your Majeſty's Loyal Subjects cou'd not but be ſenſibly affect-'ed with Trouble to find ſuch a Perſon (notwithſtanding the repeated 'Addreſſes of the laſt Parliament) continu'd in your Counſels at this Time, 'when the Affairs of your Kingdom require none to be put into ſuch 'Employments, but ſuch as are of known Abilities, Intereſt and Eſteem, 'in the Nation, without all Suſpicion of either Miſtaking or Betraying 'the true Intereſt of the Kingdom, and conſequently of Adviſing your 'Majeſty ill. We do therefore moſt humbly beſeech your moſt ſacred 'Majeſty, for the taking away the great Jealouſies, Diſſatisfactions and 'Fears amongſt your good Subjects, that your Majeſty will graciouſly be 'pleas'd to remove the Duke of Lauderdale from your Majeſty's Coun-'cils in your Kingdoms of England and Scotland, and from all Offices, 'Employments and Places of Truſt, and from your Majeſty's Preſence, 'for ever. This Addreſs was carry'd in a full Body, but the King only 'made this cold Reply, That he wou'd conſider of it, and return an An-'ſwer.

They demand Judgment againſt the E. of Danby.

Their Addreſs againſt the D. of Lauderdale.

In the mean time his Majeſty ſent a Meſſage to the Commons by the Lord Ruſſel, one of his new Privy-Council, who acquainted the Houſe, 'That his Majeſty commanded him to let the Houſe know, that his Ma-'jeſty is willing to comply with the Requeſt made to him by the Houſe, 'concerning Pickering, and that the Law ſhall paſs upon him according-'ly. As to the condemn'd Prieſts, the Houſe of Peers have ſent for 'them,

'them, in order, as his Majeſty conceives, to ſome Examinations. And 'further to acquaint you, That he repeateth his Inſtances to you, to think 'of putting the Fleet in ſuch a Poſture, as may quiet Mens Fears, and 'at leaſt ſecure us from any ſudden Attempt; which his Majeſty doubts 'not but you will do: And tho' the Streights and Difficulties he lyeth 'under are very great, he doth not intend, during this Seſſion, to preſs 'for any other Supply; being willing rather to ſuffer the Burdens that 'are upon him ſome time longer, than to interrupt you, whilſt you are 'employ'd about the Diſcovery of the Plot, the Tryal of the Lords, and 'the Bill for Securing of our Religion.

A Mony Bill paſs'd.

In one Matter of Moment the King and both Houſes agreed, the Neceſſity of a Tax: And therefore, on the 9th of May, the Money-Bill being prepar'd, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, paſs'd an Act For Granting a Supply to his Majeſty of Two Hundred and ſix Thouſand four Hundred ſixty two Pounds, ſeventeen Shillings and Three-pence, for Paying off and Disbanding the Forces rais'd ſince the nine and twentieth of September, One thouſand ſix hundred ſeventy ſeven. In which Act there was a particular Clauſe to continue to Futurity, enacting, That Soldiers ſhall not be quarter'd in any Perſons Houſe againſt their Conſent: This was the laſt, and one of the leaſt Mony-Bills, in this Reign; about the Preparing of which, ſomething, for the Reader's Curioſity, is here tranſcrib'd verbatim from the Journals of the Houſe of Commons: Die Jovis 8 Maii; 'The Houſe 'then took into Conſideration the Amendments made by the Lords to the 'Bill for Granting a Supply to his Majeſty of 206462 l. 17 s. 3 d. for Paying off and Disbanding the Forces rais'd ſince the 29*th of* September, '1677. And the Firſt, Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Amendments, 'being twice read, were upon the Queſtion ſeverally agreed. The Sixth 'and Seventh Amendment (for leaving out John Lord Roſs, Son and Heir 'apparent to the Earl of Rutland) being read a ſecond Time, and the 'Lord Roſs having been call'd up to the Houſe of Peers, ſince the Bill 'was ſent up to the Houſe of Lords; Reſolved, That the Houſe doth 'agree with the Lords in the ſaid Amendments. The reſt of the Amendments, to the hundred and ſecond Skin, ſixth Line, being twice read, 'were upon the Queſtion, ſeverally agreed. The Amendment in the 'hundred and ſecond Skin, ſixth Line, being read a ſecond Time, and 'the Queſtion being put for Agreeing with the Lords in that Amendment, it paſs'd in the Negative. The reſt of the Amendments, to the 'End of the Bill, being twice read, were upon the Queſtion ſeverally 'agreed. The two Clauſes to be added at the End of the Bill, being 'twice read, and the Queſtion being ſeverally put, to agree with the 'Lords in the ſaid Clauſes, it paſs'd in the Negative. Order'd, That a 'Committee be appointed to draw up Reaſons, to be deliver'd at a Con-'ference to be had with the Lords, why the Houſe have diſagreed with 'their Lordſhips in SEVERAL of their Amendments to the Bill for 'Paying off and Disbanding the Army.' The Reader is left to make his own Obſervations upon this Tranſcript.

How prepared.

5. The Commons were not only intent upon the Proſecution of the Earl of Danby, but were ſeveral Times inclinable to impeach his Friend Sir William Temple, as an Inſtrument of making the general Peace, and a Man of Arbitrary Principles; and Mr. Mountagu, who had been ſo bitter againſt the Earl, went a great Way from Man to Man in the Houſe, to know whether if ſuch an Accuſation were brought in againſt Sir William, they would be againſt him. Several went into it out of Reſentment to the Earl of Danby, and other private Reaſons; but it did not take effect. But they were inceſſant in their Proceedings againſt the Earl, whoſe laſt Plea made them very uneaſy and tumultuous. About the Time of the paſſing the Money-Bill, this unpleaſing Meſſage was ſent by two Judges from the Lords: ‘ Mr. Speaker, We are commanded by the Lords to ‘ acquaint this Houſe with an Order Yeſterday made concerning the ‘ Earl of Danby, viz. Whereas the Earl of Danby hath adhered to the ‘ Plea of his Pardon, and pray'd to be heard by his Council, to make ‘ good the Validity of his Pardon: And whereas the Commons have by ‘ their Speaker, in proper Perſon, demanded Judgment againſt the ſaid ‘ Earl, as conceiving his Pardon to be Illegal and void; “ It is ordered “ by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament Aſſembled, that “ Saturday the tenth Inſtant, be appointed for Hearing the Earl of Danby “ to make good his Plea.” And are further to acquaint you, that the ‘ Lords Spiritual and Temporal have Yeſterday Reſolv'd, “ That the five “ Lords in the Tower, William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, “ William Lord Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardor, and John Lord “ Bellaſis, ſhall be brought to their Tryals, upon Wedneſday the Four- “ teenth of this Month.” The Part concerning the Earl of Danby ſo heated the Houſe, that they Reſolved, ‘ That no Commoner whatſoever ‘ ſhall preſume to maintain the Validity of the Pardon pleaded by the Earl of ‘ Danby, without the Conſent of the Houſe firſt had, and that the Per- ‘ ſons ſo doing ſhall be accounted Betrayers of the Liberties of the Com- ‘ mons of England.’ Which Vote they order'd to be poſted up at Weſt-minſter-Hall-Gate, and at the ſeveral Gates of the Serjeant's-Inns, and the Inns of Court.

A Meſſage from the Lords.

The Commons Reſolve.

This heightned the Differences that were already begun, about the Manner and Method of Proceeding upon the Impeachments depending: The Lords had addreſs'd to the King for a Lord High-Steward to preſide in the Tryals; but the Commons thought it unneceſſary, or too great an Obſtruction to Buſineſs; therefore they propos'd, ‘ that a Committee of ‘ both Houſes might be Nominated, to conſider of the moſt proper Ways ‘ and Methods of Proceeding upon Impeachments.’ The Lords refus'd to agree, and in a Conference aſſign'd this Reaſon, ‘ That they did not find ‘ it conformable to the Rules and Orders of Proceedings of this Court, ‘ which is, and ever muſt be tender in Matters relating to their Judica- ‘ ture.’ Upon which the Commons, May 9th, Voted, That the Anſwer ‘ deliver'd by the Lords at the laſt Conference, tends to the Interruption ‘ of the good Correſpondency between the two Houſes.’ And deſiring a Conference with the Lords the next Day, they in Concluſion deliver'd this Reſolution, That Things ſtanding thus, they cannot proceed in the Tryals of the Lords, before the Methods of Proceedings be adjuſted between the two Houſes. Upon which their Lordſhips, upon Conſideration, did conſent to have a Committee of both Houſes, to conſider of Propoſitions and Circumſtances relating to the Tryal of the Lords in the Tower. But in another Conference, the ſame Day, the Lord Privy-Seal acquainted them, ‘ That the Lords had receiv'd a Petition from the Earl of Dan- ‘ by, who was order'd to attend their Lordſhips this Day, which their ‘ Lordſhips read; whereby the Earl of Danby ſet forth, That he met ‘ with Informations ſeverally from his Council, that he durſt not appear ‘ to argue the Validity of his Pardon, by reaſon of the Vote of the Houſe ‘ of Commons; and that their Lordſhips deſired to know, Whether there ‘ was any ſuch Vote as was alledg'd in the Petition?

With ſome Difficulty the Lords agree.

This only increas'd the Ferment in the lower Houſe; and this indeed prov'd a hot Day; in which, to teſtify their Fears and Apprehenſions, and to make way for the intended Tryals, they resolv'd upon an Address to the King, 'taking Notice of the Multitude of Jesuits, Popish Priests, 'and other Popish Recusants, who constantly resorted to the Cities of 'London and Westminster, and obstinately continu'd there, in Contempt 'of his Majesty's Laws and Royal Proclamations; wherefore they humbly beseech his Majesty, that the Militia of London, Westminster, Southwark, the Tower-Hamlets, and the Counties of Middlesex and Surrey, 'may immediately be rais'd, and put in a Posture of Defence.' Then, to obviate these great Difficulties and Dangers, they resolv'd to sit the next Day, tho' a Sunday, as they had done a Fortnight before, on which Day they brought their former grand Resolve to Maturity, and order'd a Bill to be brought in, To disable the Duke of York to inherit the Imperial Crown of this Realm; and referr'd it to the Drawing up of Mr. Bennet, Mr. Trenchard, Sir Nicholas Carew, Sir Robert Peyton, Sir Thomas Player, Mr. Vaughan, Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Boscawen, Mr. Williams, Mr. Hamden, Colonel Birch, Mr. Sacheverel, and Mr. Swinfen. And immediately after they Resolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, 'That in 'Defence of the King's Person, and the Protestant Religion, this House 'doth Declare, that they will stand by his Majesty with their Lives and 'Fortunes; and that if his Majesty should come by any violent Death, '(which God forbid) they will revenge it to the utmost on the Papists.' This was soon after put into the Form of an Address; which being presented to his Majesty, he return'd this Answer, Gentlemen, I thank you for your Zeal for the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, and of my Person; and I assure you, I shall do what in me lyes, to secure the Protestant Religion; and am willing to do all such Things, as may tend to the Good and Benefit of my Subjects.

1679. Car. 31 Ref. 19

The Heat and Resolves of the Commons.

In the mean Time, to put forward more substantial Business, on Wednesday the 14th of May, the King sent this following Message to the House of Commons, by Mr. Powle, one of his new Privy-Council. 'C.R. 'Though his Majesty hath already, at the first Meeting in Parliament, and 'since by a Word or two, mention'd the Necessity of having a Fleet at 'Sea this Summer; yet the Season for preparing it being far advanc'd, 'and our Neighbours before us in their Preparations, he cannot hold himself discharg'd towards his People, if he do not now with more Earnestness again recommend the same to your present Care and Consideration; and the rather, from the daily Expectation of the Return of the 'Fleet from the Streights, to which a great Arrear is due; and hereby 'he must acquit himself of the evil Consequences, which the want of a 'Fleet in such a Juncture may produce: And he hath not done this without considering, that the entering upon the Work presently, can be no 'hinderance to the other Great Affairs upon your Hands; but rather a 'Security, in the Dispatch thereof. This Message, tho' reasonable and proper, and proceeding from an unexceptionable Council, was no further regarded, than after a Debate, it was Resolv'd, 'That the further Consi'deration of the said Message be adjourn'd till Monday next come Seven-'Night.

The King's Message to them.

6. Both Houses having agreed to a joynt Committee for setling the Way and Method of trying the Impeach'd Lords, after some Meetings, a Report was made to the House of Commons by Sir John Trevor, to this Effect: 'That the Commons had made two Propositions to the Com-'mittee of Lords; First they desired to see the Commission of the Lord 'High-Steward, and those to former Lords: Secondly, they desired to 'know what Resolutions had been taken about the Lords Spiritual be-'ing

'ing a Matter of great Weight and Conſideration, the Committee of the 'Commons had commanded him to Report it to the Houſe, in order to 'receive their Directions for their further Proceedings.

Two Days after, Sir John Trevor made another Report from the Committee of both Houſes, 'That the Lords had communicated to the Committee
'certain Proceedings of the Houſe of Lords, in theſe Words; Reſolved by

Upon hearing the Report, the Houſe of Commons, after a warm Debate, Reſolv'd, 'That it be given as an Inſtruction to the ſaid Com'mittee to inſiſt, That the Lords Spiritual ought not to have any
'Vote in any Proceedings againſt the Lords in the Tower; and when

The Substance of the EXCLUSION-BILL.

7. On the 15th of May, the Commons perfected their Grand Bill to disable the Duke of York from Inheriting the Imperial Crown of England; now obtaining the Name of the Exclusion-Bill; and was read the first Time, without any great Opposition. It set forth, after the Particulars of the Execrable Conspiracy, 'That the Emissaries, Priests and A-'gents for the Pope, had traiterously seduc'd James Duke of York, Pre-'sumptive Heir to these Crowns, to the Communion of the Church of 'Rome; and had induc'd him to enter into several Negotiations with the 'Pope, his Cardinals and Nuncio's, for promoting the Romish Church and 'Interest; and by his Means and Procurement had advanc'd the Power 'and Greatness of the French King, to the manifest Hazard of these 'Kingdoms. That by Descent of these Crowns upon a Papist, and by 'Foreign Alliances and Assistance, they might be able to succeed in their 'wicked and villanous Designs.' Then after another Preamble, they enacted to this Effect, 1. 'That the said James Duke of York, Albany and 'Ulster, should be incapable of Inheriting the Crowns of England, Scot-'land and Ireland, with their Dependencies; and of enjoying any of the 'Titles, Rights, Prerogatives and Revenues belonging to the said Crowns. '2. That in Case his Majesty shou'd happen to die, or resign his Domi-'nions, they shou'd devolve to the Person next in Succession, in the same 'Manner as if the Duke were dead. 3. That all Acts of Sovereignty 'and Royalty that Prince might then happen to perform, were not only 'declared void, but to be High-Treason, and punishable as such. 4. That 'if any one, at any Time whatsoever, shou'd endeavour to bring the 'said Duke into any of the foremention'd Dominions, or correspond 'with him in Order to make him Inherit, he shou'd be guilty of High-'Treason. 5. That if the Duke himself ever return'd into any of these 'Dominions, considering the Mischiefs that must ensue, he shou'd be 'look'd upon as guilty of the same Offence; and all Persons were autho-'riz'd and required to seize upon and imprison him, and in Case of Re-'sistance made by Him or his Adherents, to subdue them by Force of 'Arms.' This Bill of Banishment, as well as Exclusion, was five Days after read a Second Time in the House: Upon which the Question being put, whether the Bill should be Committed, the House divided, and the Yeas order'd to go forth, which were two Hundred and Seven, and the Noes, who staid, were but a Hundred and twenty Eight, the Majority Seventy nine; and so the Bill was committed to a Committee of the whole House. But the Parliament being soon after Prorogu'd, it never proceeded further.

The rest of the Time was chiefly employ'd in searching and finding out Grievances, and Offenders; and particularly Sir Anthony Deane, Officer of the King's Yard at Portsmouth, and Mr. Samuel Pepys, Secretary of the Admiralty, were accus'd before the House of Piratical Practices in the Year 1673, and of making some criminal Discoveries to the French in 1675, all tending to the carrying on of the late Plot; for which they were both sent to the Tower, and order'd to be prosecuted by the Attorney-General. They likewise took great Pains to enquire after the Pensioners in the last Parliament, which were found to be neither so numerous nor considerable as was expected. By the help of Sir Stephen Fox, they got a Roll of Eighteen that had receiv'd annual Pensions from the King, viz. Sir Charles Wheeler, 400 Pounds; Sir Jonathan Trelawny, 500; Robert Roberts, 500; Sir James Smith, 500; Sir Philip Howard, 500; Sir Courtney Poole, 1000; Sir Richard Wiseman, 500; Colonel King, 200; Thomas Price, 400; Mr. Westphaling, 200; Humphrey Cornwall, wall, 200; Sir John Barnaby, 300; Sir Lionel Walden, 300; Daniel Collingwood, 300; Sir Job Charlton, 1000; Mr. Knolls, 200; Robert Philips, 300; and Randolph Egerton, 500 Pounds: In all 7800 Pounds a Year. Beſides theſe, the Names of Six others were read, who had receiv'd certain Sums at one Time, as Sir George Reeves, 500 Pounds; Sir John Duncomb, 2000; Sir Thomas Woodcock, 200; Henry Clark, 400; Sir John Talbot, 500; and Sir Philip Mountain, 300 Pounds at a Time: In all 3900 Pounds. Over and above, Sir John Robinſon was brought in for 1500 Pounds; Mr. Rogers, for 200; and Colonel Whiteley, for 300 Pounds upon Account. Sir Joſeph Tredenham, Mr. Piercy Goring, Sir Robert Holt, Mr. Glaſcock, and Sir John Johnſton, were brought in for uncertain Sums. How far theſe Gentlemen were culpable or criminal in this Matter, is hard to determine: However, the Houſe of Commons now look'd upon them as ſuch, and order'd a Bill to be brought in 'That no Members receive any Penſions or Places of Profit, during 'this Seſſion of Parliament.' As to the Impeached Lords, the Commons ſtill inſiſted upon their former Vote, That the Lords Spiritual ought not to have any Vote in the Proceedings againſt the Lords in the Tower; and till that Matter was ſettled, they cou'd not proceed. On the other Side the Lords, not allowing them to be proper Judges, to the laſt adhered to their firſt Reſolutions; ſo that in that Poſture of Affairs, the Impeach'd Lords were never to be try'd at all. 1679. 8. But before we come to the Concluſion of the Seſſion, ſome Notice is to be taken of the Proceedings of the new inſtituted Council; in which the Quadrumvirate, the Lords Hallifax, Eſſex and Sunderland, and Sir William Temple, joyntly proceeded with great Freeneſs and Unanimity: But this Conjunction held not long in the ſame Condition: For after the Expedients and Conceſſions offer'd in the Lord Chancellor's Speech had been rejected, the Earl of Shaftsbury finding himſelf neither in Confidence with the King, nor Credit in the Council, turn'd all his Practices and Hopes to the Houſe of Commons, and inflam'd them to that Degree, as made the Three Lords to grow uneaſy, and to caſt about which Way they might lay the Storm. At length the Lord Sunderland told Sir William Temple, that the other two Lords were of Opinion, That it was neceſſary to take in the Duke of Monmouth and the Earl of Shaftsbury, into the firſt Digeſtion of Affairs, conſidering the Influence they had upon the Houſe of Commons; and for that End, to agree with them in the Baniſhment of the Duke of York, either for a certain Time, or during the King's Life; and deſired to know Whether he wou'd fall into it with them, and joyn in bringing it about with the King. Sir William plainly told the Lord Sunderland He wou'd not: 'For firſt, he wou'd never have any Thing to do with the Duke 'of Monmouth and the Lord Shaftsbury; and next, he wou'd never en- 'ter into Matters of Difference between the King and his Brother; 'having upon ſeveral Occaſions told them both, That he wou'd ever do 'all he cou'd towards the Union of the whole Royal Family; but ne- 'ver wou'd have any Thing to do with the Diviſions of it; and no 'Man ſhou'd ever reproach him with Breaking his Word, and much 'leſs the King and the Duke.' Upon this peremptory Anſwer, the three Lords fell into Meetings and Conſultations with the Duke of Monmouth and the Earl of Shaftsbury, which Sir William knew nothing of; but tho' they did not keep up the firſt Confidence with the Latter, their former Kindneſs to one another ſtill continu'd. Proceedings in the Council.

But their Union laſted not long neither: For within a Fortnight, they began to find the Duke of Monmouth and Earl of Shaftsbury unreaſonable, and like to prevail upon the Houſe of Commons, to endeavour the reducing the King to a Neceſſity of yielding all Points to them; and conſequently they Two wou'd be left abſolutely at the Head of Affairs: So that the three Lords began to make their Complaints of it to Sir William Temple, and to fall upon the Thoughts of Proroguing the Parliament, as the only Remedy left for the preſent Diſtemper. Sir William agreed with them in this Propoſal; and the more readily, becauſe he foreſaw it wou'd totally break off all the Commerce between the three Lords, and the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Shaftsbury: And ſo they agreed to propoſe it to the King, and that it ſhou'd be debated in Council, where they concluded it wou'd not fail of Succeſs. In this Reſolution they parted, and appointed to meet two Days after, for fixing it with his Majeſty in Council, which was on the 27th of May. Sir William ſtaid his two Days in the Country; and upon his Arrival early in the Morning, he was told by the Earl of Eſſex, That the King had found out there were Remonſtrances ready prepared in the Houſe of Commons, to inflame the City and Nation upon the Points of Plot and Popery; and that their three Lordſhips, Hallifax, Sunderland and Himſelf, having thereupon Conſulted with his Majeſty, he reſolv'd the Parliament ſhou'd be Prorogu'd that Morning, upon the King's Coming to the Houſe; and that it cou'd not be allow'd Time or Vent by a Debate in full Council. Sir William was ſorry that it cou'd not have that Sanction, according to uſual Forms: But it paſs'd otherwiſe, and with very great Surprize and Reſentment of both Houſes, and ſuch Rage of the Earl of Shaftsbury, that thereupon he cry'd out in the Houſe, He wou'd have the Heads of thoſe who were the Adviſers of this Prorogation.

They agree to prorogue the Parliament.

At the ſame Time the King, in his Royal Robes, paſs'd theſe Bills, 1. An Act for the Securing the Liberty of the Subject, and for Prevention of Impriſonments beyond the Seas. 2. An Act for Re-ingroſſing the Records of Fines, burnt in the late Fire in the Temple. 3. A private Act, concerning Charles Dale of Rutlandſhire Eſquire. Of theſe, the Firſt is juſtly accounted one of the beſt Acts for Securing of the Liberty of the Subject, that ever paſs'd ſince Magna Charta: This is the famous Habeas Corpus Act, which ſo ſignally diſtinguiſhes Engliſh Men from the Subjects of all the Governments in Europe, whether they be Monarchies, or Common-Wealths: And conſidering the King's Conceſſions in this Act, and in every Thing elſe, but one Point, it will not be hard to determine who were moſt culpable this Seſſion, nor whether he had Reaſon to part with this his Parliament; which, tho' only Prorogu'd, never met after; having ſate in all two Months and three Weeks. The Day mention'd in the Prorogation, was the 14th of Auguſt.

The End of the Third Parliament.

IV. 1. During the warm Proceedings of this laſt Parliament, the Fire of Rebellion was kindling in the Bowels of Scotland; where the depreſſed Party receiv'd great Incouragement from the Earl of Shaftsbury's Speech to the Lords, the Parliaments Addreſs againſt the Duke of Lauderdale, and particularly, as it's ſaid, from the deſign'd Remonſtrances of the Houſe of Commons; ſo that if the Parliament had not ſuddenly broke up, the Malecontents might have appear'd much more formidable. Being once animated, they began at their Conventicles openly to diſplay the Banners of Jeſus Chriſt, as they call'd their Colours; and and their Preachers told them, That was the Time of their Deliverance, when God wou'd take vengeance of their Enemies; only they muſt repent and be Strong, and of great Courage, and fight the Battles of the Lord Manfully. They threatned ſuch as they thought were active againſt them, and they talk'd of great Revolutions in England; and dropt Liſts of thoſe Men they deſign'd ſhou'd fall by Heroical Hands; in the Head of which ſtood the Name of the Perjur'd Apoſtate Prelate Sharp, as they term'd the Primate of Scotland, the Arch-biſhop of St. Andrews. Several Years before, the Murder of this eminent Prelate was attempted by one Mitchel, a Conventicle Preacher, who as his Coach ſtop'd in the Streets in Edinburgh, diſcharg'd a Piſtol at him loaden with three Bullets, which were intercepted by the Arm of the Biſhop of Orkney, who was then getting into his Grace's Coach. The Aſſaſſin made his Eſcape, but was taken and executed ſome Years after, when he glory'd in and juſtify'd the Fact to the laſt. But tho' he fail'd, others of the ſame Spirit reſolv'd to finiſh what he attempted; which Heaven permitted them to accompliſh in the following Manner. 1679. Car. 31 Reſ. 20

His Grace having been aſſiſting at the Privy-Council at Edinburgh, went over into Fife the 2d of May, this Year, and lodg'd that Night at a Village between Burnt-Iſland and St. Andrews. About Midnight two Men, well mounted and arm'd, enquir'd in the Village, if the Arch-biſhop was there; and hearing that he was, they immediately rode away. The next Morning the Arch-biſhop took Coach, with only his Daughter with him, and three Servants on Horſeback to attend him, one of whom he had ſent with a Compliment to a Perſon of Honour near the Road; and ſafely purſu'd his Journey, till he came within two Miles of St. Andrews; where, a little before Noon, he perceiv'd he was purſu'd by about twelve Horſe-Men with Piſtols, and drawn Swords hanging at their Arms; upon which the Coachman drove as faſt as ſix good Horſes cou'd gallop. They purſu'd and fir'd at the Coach, till at length one of them nam'd Balfour, who was beſt mounted, overtook the Coach, and having wounded the Poſtilion, ſhot one of the fore Horſes, and having hamſtring'd the other, ſtop'd the Coach. The reſt of the Murderers came up, and one of them fir'd a Piſtol ſo near, as to ſinge his Grace's Gown; then calling him Dog, Apoſtate, Betrayer of the Godly, Perſecutor of Chriſt's Church, they bid him come out of the Coach, and receive the Reward of his Wickedneſs againſt the Kirk of Scotland. Upon this his Daughter came out, and upon her Knees moſt movingly beg'd her Father's Life; but they threw her down, trampled on her, and wounded her. Upon which piteous Sight, the Father came out, and calmly told them, He did not know he had ever injur'd them: if he had, he was ready to make Reparation; beſeeching them to ſpare his Life, and he wou'd never trouble them for that Violence; but pray'd them to conſider, before they brought the Guilt of innocent Blood upon themſelves. The Reverence of his Perſon, and his compos'd Carriage ſurpriz'd the Villains; and one of them cry'd Spare his Grey Hairs; but others reply'd He muſt die, and the traiterous Villain, Judas, Enemy to God's People, muſt now receive the Reward of his Apoſtacy. He then beg'd Time to pray, telling them He wou'd pray for Them; but they ſcornfully told him They cared not for his Prayers, they were ſure God wou'd not hear ſo baſe a Dog as he was. Then earneſtly looking on one of the Aſſaſſins, he kneel'd to him, and ſaid, Sir, you're a Gentleman, I beg my laſt Favour of you, that ſince you are reſolv'd I muſt die, you will have pity upon my poor Child here, and ſpare her Life, and for this, Sir, give me your Hand; and reaching it out to him, the inhuman Wretch almoſt cut it it off with his broad Sword, and with another Blow gave him a deep Wound over the Eye, which brought him to the Ground: But getting again upon his Knees, he ſaid, Gentlemen it is enough, you have done your Work; and lifting up his Hands, as well as he cou'd, he cry'd out, Lord Jeſus have Mercy upon my Soul, and receive my Spirit; they ſtill wounding him, till laying his Head upon his Arm, he ſaid, God forgive you, and I forgive you all: with which Words he expired, having receiv'd many Wounds, and his Brains ſtirr'd in his Scull by the Ends of their Swords; leaving a Strange Inſtance of Fanatick Rage and Barbarity.

This horrid Fact was committed the 3d of May, ſome time after the Reception of the Earl of Shaftsbury's Speech in Scotland: Within a few Days after this Fact, arriv'd the Addreſs of the Commons of England againſt the Duke of Lauderdale, which found all things ripe for an Inſurrection. For the Murther of ſo illuſtrious a Perſon as the Primate of that Kingdom, and a Privy-Counſellor, in ſo publick a manner, was not to be ſmother'd; ſo that the Dread of Puniſhment, and the Hopes of Aſſiſtance from England, concurr'd to puſh them forwards to an open Rebellion, for which they might poſſibly expect the like Encouragement, as in that againſt the late King. Accordingly, on the 29th of May, before they cou'd hear of the Prorogation of the Parliament, about 80 of them came to Ragland, where they proclaim'd the Covenant, burnt ſeveral Acts of Parliament made ſince the Reſtoration, and affix'd a Rebellious Declaration on the Market-Croſs, and attempted the like at Glaſgow, but were prevented by ſome of the King's Forces there. On Sunday the 1ſt of June, they rendezvous'd upon Loudon-Hill, being encreas'd to near 1500 Men, well-arm'd, in good Order; the Foot being commanded by one Weir, and the Horſe by Balfour and Huckſton, two of the Murtherers of the Archbiſhop, and by Robert Hamilton and one Patron. Captain Graham of Claverhouſe, afterwards Lord Dundee, march'd againſt them with a Troopof Horſe, and a Company of Dragoons; but after a ſharp Engagement, being overpower'd in Number, was oblig'd to retire. Fluſh'd with this Succeſs, on the next Day the Rebels made two Attacks on the City of Glaſgow, in both which they were repuls'd with conſiderable Loſs; but afterwards their Strength encreaſing, they poſſeſs'd themſelves of it, and iſſu'd out their Proclamation, imperiouſly commanding the Magiſtrates to turn out all the Archbiſhops, Biſhops and Curates, their Bairns and Servants, and all Families and Perſons concern'd in the King's Army, within 48 Hours, under the higheſt Pains. They alſo publiſh'd another Declaration, to demand Redreſs of their ſeveral Grievances, and to invite their Brethren to join them; and committed great Outrages there, and in the adjacent Country. In the mean time the Council of Scotland were not idle, but rais'd an Army, which they quarter'd ſo as to prevent the Approach of the Covenanters to Edinburgh, and ſent Accounts to the King of all that paſs'd, expecting his Majeſty's further Orders.

The Conventiclers appear in Rebellion.

Diviſions in the Engliſh Council.

The King and his Miniſters were not a little puzzled with this Affair, and there was a manifeſt Diviſion in the Council it ſelf. For ſince the laſt Prorogation, the Earl of Shaftsbury had been buſy in preparing Fuel for the next Seſſion, not without continual Appearance of ill Humour at Council, which often broke out into ſpiteful Repartees between him and the Lord Hallifax, the ableſt Perſon to cope with him. And on the other ſide, the Duke of Monmouth had broken all Meaſures with the Earl of Eſſex, with whom he had been long intimate to the laſt Degree: So as this grew to be a Perſonal Quarrel between theſe four; and tho' tho' commonly ſmother'd when they met, yet ſeldom without the Appearance of ſome Smoak. Therefore, when they receiv'd the News of the Scotch Rebellion, it was remarkable to obſerve the Counter-Paces that were made. The King was for ſuppreſſing it immediately, by Forces from England, to be diſpatcht and join'd with thoſe in Scotland, and the Duke of Monmouth to go and command them all. The Lord Shaftſbury ſhew'd plainly at Council, and in other Places, that he was unwilling that the Inſurrection ſhou'd be wholly, or too ſoon ſuppreſs'd, or otherwiſe than by his Friends in Scotland, who might be brought into the Direction of Affairs there, with the Removal of the Duke of Lauderdale: Yet on the other ſide, he was willing to ſee the Duke of Monmouth grow great by ſuch a Command of the Engliſh and Scotch Forces; and agreed with his Grace, to put the King upon another Project at the ſame time, which was, in the Abſence of ſo many Forces, to raiſe a Troop of 200 Gentlemen for the Security of the King's Perſon, and the Duke of Monmouth to be Captain; and which was to be compos'd chiefly of broken Officers, whoſe Fidelity was beſt known to the Duke. On the other ſide, the Earl of Eſſex, tho' he agreed with the King in ſuppreſſing the Inſurrection, yet he deſir'd it might be only done by the Scotch, to prevent the increaſing Greatneſs of the Duke of Monmouth, if he met with Succeſs. And tho' he wou'd not oppoſe the King in his Deſign of ſending his Grace upon this Expedition; yet he openly did in the other of raiſing the Two hundred Gentlemen, and defeated it by raiſing invincible Difficulties in the Treaſury, where he was at the Head.

The Duke of Monmouth ordered for Scotland.

After all, it was agreed by the four Leaders, Eſſex, Sunderland, Halifax and Temple, that the Duke ſhou'd go into Scotland, with ſuch Forces only as were now rais'd, and cou'd be conveniently ſpared. The Duke ſhew'd great Expedition and Bravery; and joining with ſeveral Scotch Forces, without Loſs of time, on the 22d Day of June, at Bothwell-Bridge, he fought the Rebels with great Fury, and tho' 17000 in Number, entirely routed them, killing about 800 on the Spot, and taking near 1200 Priſoners, by which the Inſurrection was cruſh'd, and that Country reduc'd to Peace and Order. Some few of the Priſoners were hang'd, eſpecially thoſe concern'd in the Archbiſhop's Murder, and moſt of the reſt were tranſported. The Duke of Monmouth ſoon return'd in Triumph; and was receiv'd with great Applauſes at the Court, and with ſingular Appearance of Kindneſs and Affection from the King: Tho' the Suppreſſion of this Rebellion was not very ſatisfactory to many of his ſecret Admirers.

He routs the Rebels.

2. In the mean time the Buſineſs and Credit of the Plot was ſucceſsfully carry'd on in the grand Tryal of five noted Jeſuits, viz. Thomas Whitebread, Provincial, or Chief of the Jeſuits in England; William Harcourt, reputed Rector of London; John Fenwick, Procurator of the Jeſuits in England; John Gawen, and Anthony Turner, all Prieſts and Jeſuits; Men of Gravity, Learning and Education; who, on the 13th of June, were brought to the Old Baily, and Try'd by the Lord-Chief Juſtice Scroggs, and the reſt of the Judges of England. The Proofs againſt them were long, and conſiſted of divers Particulars. Oates's Evidence was, 'I. That the great Conſult of the 24th of April 1678, was by Or- Oates,
'der of Whitebread the Priſoner, as Provincial; and that he, Fenwick,
'Harcourt and Turner, did all in his Preſence ſign the Reſolve for the 'King's Death. 2. That Whitebread, after his Return to St. Omers,
'did ſay, He hop'd to ſee the black Fool's Head at Whitehall laid faſt
'enough; and if his Brother ſhou'd appear to follow his Footſteps, his

'Paſsport ſhou'd be made too. 3. That in July, Aſhby, a Prieſt, brought over Inſtructions from Whitebread to offer Sir George Wakeman Ten thouſand Pounds to Poiſon the King; and alſo a Commiſſion to Sir John Gage to be an Officer in the Army they deſign'd to raiſe, which the Witneſs deliver'd to Sir John. 4. As for Gawen, tho' he cou'd not poſitively ſay he ſaw him at the Conſult, yet he ſaw his Hand ſubſcrib'd to the Reſolve: And that in July 78, he gave them in London an Account how proſperous their Affairs were in Staffordſhire and Shropſhire; that the Lord Stafford was very diligent, and that there was Two or three thouſand Pounds ready there, to carry on the Deſign; all which he afterwards heard him declare in Father Ireland's Chamber.

Dugdale,

The next Witneſs was Mr. Stephen Dugdale, a new Evidence lately appearing, formerly a Servant to the Lord Aſton, from whom he is ſaid to have embezzled Three hundred Pounds. He ſwore, '1. Againſt Whitebread, that he ſaw a Letter under his Hand to Father Ewers, a Jeſuit, and Confeſſor to the Witneſs; in which he order'd him to be ſure to chuſe Men that were Hardy and Truſty, no matter whether they were Gentlemen: And he ſwore what they were to do; that the Words under his Hand were in expreſs Terms——For killing the King. 2. Againſt Gawen he ſwore, that he entertain'd the Witneſs to be of the Conſpiracy to Murther the King, as one of thoſe reſolute Fellows deſcrib'd by Whitebread; and for that End they had ſeveral Conſultations in the Country; as at Boſcobel, and at Texal in Sept. 1678. And he heard them talk in one of theſe Conſults, that it was the Opinion of the Monks at Paris, who were to aſſiſt in the Conſpiracy, That as ſoon as the Deed was done, they ſhou'd lay it on the Presbyterians, and ſo provoke the other Proteſtants to cut their Throats. That he had intercepted and read above a hundred Letters to the ſame purpoſe, to be deliver'd by private Marks known to Father Ewers. 3. That the Witneſs himſelf was ſo zealous in the Cauſe, that he had given them Four hundred Pounds for carrying on the Deſign, which Gawen had made him believe was not only lawful, but meritorious; and that he was to be ſent up to London by Harcourt, there to be inſtructed about killing the King. 4. That the ſame Harcourt did write word to Father Ewers of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's being diſpatcht that very Night it was done; ſo that they knew of it in Staffordſhire ſeveral Days before it was commonly known in London. And to confirm this Teſtimony, he produc'd Mr. Chetwin, a Gentleman, who ſwore, he did hear it reported as from Mr. Dugdale; and that he was not in Town when the Murderers of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey were Try'd, or elſe he wou'd then have witneſſed the ſame. 5. Againſt Turner he ſwore, That he ſaw him with others at Ewers's Chamber, where they conſulted together to carry on this Deſign of bringing in Popery by killing the King.'

Prance,

In this Tryal, Prance had a ſmall ſhare in Swearing, and teſtify'd, 'That Harcourt, one Day paying him for an Image of the Virgin Mary, told him there was a Deſign of Killing the King: And that Fenwick told him in Ireland's Chamber, that there ſhould be fifty Thouſand Men in Arms in a readineſs to ſettle their Religion, and that they ſhou'd be commanded by the Lords Bellaſis, Powis, and Arundel of Warder.'

And Bedloe.

But Bedloe was to give the concluding Evidence, who firſt gave an Account, why he did not before come againſt Whitebread and Fenwick, when they were upon their Tryal, becauſe he was finding out the corrupt Practices of Mr. Reading; and then he poſitively ſwore, '1. 'That he had ſeen Whitebread and Fenwick at ſeveral Conſults about the

'the Plot; and that he had heard Whitebread at Harcourt's Chamber 1679.
'tell Coleman the Manner of the ſending the four Ruffians to Windſor to 'kill the King. 2. That he ſaw Harcourt take out of a Cabinet about Car. 31
'fourſcore or a hundred Pounds to give it to a Meſſenger, to be car- Reſ. 20
'ry'd to the ſaid Ruffians, with a Guinea to drink Mr. Coleman's Health.
'3. That Whitebread told him, That Pickering was to have a great 'Number of Maſſes, and Grove Fifteen hundred Pounds for Killing the 'King. 4. That Harcourt employ'd him ſeveral Times to carry their
'Conſults beyond the Seas; and that, in Harcourt's Preſence, he receiv'd
'Coleman's Thanks for his Fidelity, and that Harcourt recommended him
'to the Lord Arundel, who promis'd him great Favour when the Times
'were turn'd: Alſo that he ſaw Harcourt give Wakeman a Bill to re'ceive 2000 Pounds, in part of a greater Sum; and heard Sir George ſay,
'Fifteen thouſand Pounds was but a ſmall Reward, for the ſetling Re- 'ligion, and preſerving three Kingdoms from Ruin.' Beſides theſe Evidences, there was a Letter found among Harcourt's Papers, from one Petre a Jeſuit; which names a Meeting deſign'd on the 24th of April, 1678; which was brought to fortify Oates's Evidence of the grand Conſult; but this was explain'd to ſignify a Triennial Meeting about the Choice of a Procurator to be ſent to Rome; but not to the full Satisfaction of the Court.

The Priſoners Defence.

The Defence made by the Priſoners was various and long: Beſides their frequent Aſſeverations and Proteſtations of their Innocence, and their Ignorance of any Deſigns againſt the King; they much argu'd againſt the Witneſſes, inſiſting, 'That to the making of a Credible Wit-
'neſs, there muſt be Integrity of Life, Truth of Teſtimony, and Probabi-
'lity of Matter; but the Witneſſes againſt them, Oates, Bedloe, Prance and Dugdale, were Men of deſperate Fortunes, and flagitious Perſons,
'and that Falſe-Swearing was their Livelihood. And particularly they 'alledg'd the great Improbability of truſting Oates with Secrets of the 'higheſt Importance, when he was turn'd away from St. Omers for his 'Miſdemeanors and Immoralities, which were ſo great, that he was de-
'ny'd the Sacrament. They charg'd him with Contradictions with re'lation to his former Evidences; and alledg'd, If the Evidence on their
'ſide ſhould be rejected becauſe they were Roman Catholicks, all Com- 'merce with ſeveral Countries would be deſtroy'd. Thereupon they pro-
'duc'd about ſixteen Witneſſes to prove, that Oates had been all April,
'May, and till the latter End of June, 1678, at St. Omers; and that they
'ſaw him every Day, convers'd and din'd with him, and that he was ne'ver out of the College, except two Days, and one Night he was at 'Watton, and two or three Days he was in the Infirmary, &c. and con-
'ſequently he could not be at the Conſult of the 24th of April. And 'further they prov'd, That Sir John Warner and Sir Thomas Preſton,
'whom Oates had ſworn to come over with him to the Conſult, were
'all that Time beyond the Seas, one at Watton, the other at Liege.'
And moreover, to ſhew that Oates was not a Man to be credited, 'they
'produc'd Eleven Witneſſes to prove that Father Ireland, who was ex'ecuted, was not at London, and made it appear directly contrary to what 'he had ſworn upon his Tryal.' In Anſwer to theſe Accuſations, Oates alledg'd, 'That his coming to London to the Conſult was very private;
'yet he produc'd ſix or ſeven Witneſſes to teſtify they ſaw him there a'bout that Time, but in a ſort of a Diſguiſe.' But none ſpoke very home but Mr. Smith, a School-Maſter of Iſlington, who afterwards in a Narra- tive retracted all that he had ſaid, and confeſs'd his Guilt. As to Ireland's being in London, Oates produc'd one, and but one Witneſs, who did affirm to have ſeen him there at that Time. The Priſoners alledg'd alſo ſeveral particular Things as to their own diſtinct Caſes; and Gawen offer'd himſelf to undergo the Ordeal, or Fiery-Tryal, over red hot Plow-Shares, as a Teſt of his Innocence, but this was not allow'd him by the Court.

Theſe, and other Things pleaded by the Priſoners, might probably have met with a more favourable Hearing, if, beſides the violent Bent of the Times, the Court and the Aſſembly had not been ſurpriz'd and irritated by the new Matter produc'd by Dugdale concerning Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. So that when the Lord Chief Juſtice ſumm'd up the Evidence, he took particular Notice of the Proof made, that Harcourt was privy to that Murder, which he had never heard before this Day, and in which he declar'd, he could never be better ſatisfy'd: And thereupon ſpeaking to the Priſoners, he ſaid, This will ſtick, I aſſure you, Sirs, upon all your Party. —— While this Gentleman's Blood lies upon you, it muſt be yet further told you, That in what you did do, you have given us a Specimen of what you would do. We have a Teſtimony, that for promoting your Cauſe, you would not ſtick at the Proteſtants Blood. You began with Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, but who knows where you would have made an End! It was this Man you kill'd in his Perſon, but in Effigie the whole Nation. It was in one Man's Blood your Hands were embrew'd, but your Souls were dipt in the Blood of us all. This was a Handſel only of what was to follow; and ſo long as we are convinc'd you kill'd Him, we cannot but believe, you would alſo kill the King. We cannot but believe, you would make us All away, that ſtand in the Way of your Religion; A Religion, which according to what it is, you would bring in upon us by a Converſion of us with Blood, and by a Baptiſm with Fire. God keep the Land from One, and the City from the Other! The Jury, after a ſhort Conſideration, return'd, and brought all the five Priſoners in guilty of High-Treaſon; but Sentence was reſpited till the next Day.

The Chief Juſtice's Speech.

Found Guilty.

On which Day came on the Tryal of Richard Langhorn Eſquire, a Counſellor at Law of the Temple, a Romiſh Gentleman well skill'd in conveyancing, and much employ'd by that Party. Being brought to the ſame Place with the five Jeſuits, and before the ſame Perſons, with a new Jury; Oates appear'd and ſwore, ‘ 1. That the Priſoner held Correſpondence with Le Cheſe and others, and that the Witneſs carry'd ſeveral Letters to Perſons beyond the Seas; in one of which he ſaw under his own Hand, Words to this Purpoſe, That now they had a fair Opportunity to begin, or give the Blow; with other Expreſſions plain enough concerning the Plot. 2. That he had Order from the Provincial Whitebread to give Mr. Langhorn an Account of the Reſolve of the Grand Conſult, April 24th, 1678; and upon acquainting him with it, the Gentleman lift up his Hands and Eyes, and pray'd, That God wou'd give it good Succeſs. 3. That he ſaw in his Chamber certain Commiſſions, which they call'd Patents; and that he permitted the Witneſs to peruſe ſeveral of them: One was to the Lord Arundel of Warder, to be Lord Chancellor, another to the Lord Powis, to be Treaſurer, and one to the Priſoner, to be Advocate of the Army; all ſign'd Johannes Paulus d'Oliva, by vertue of a Brief from the Pope. 4. That being employ'd as Sollicitor for ſeveral of the Fathers of the Society, the Priſoner prevail'd with the Benedictine Monks, to raiſe Six thouſand Pounds for carrying on the Cauſe; and ſaid in his Hearing, That he would do his utmoſt for procuring the Mony. 5. That he was diſguſted that G. Wakeman was not content with Ten thouſand Pounds to poyſon the King, and call'd him a Narrow-ſpirited, narrow-ſoul'd Phyſician; who,

'an Eccleſiaſtical Buſineſs, and not dangerous as they thought; was left 'behind.' In the next Place, Bedloe ſwore, firſt, 'that going with Cole- And Bedloe.
'man to the Priſoner's Chamber, the former gave him his Letters to Le
'Cheſe, the Pope's Nuncio and others, open, to read, and Regiſter in a 'Book by him kept for that Purpoſe; and that ſome of the Expreſſions
'in theſe Letters, were, That all Things were now in Readineſs, and
'they only wanted Mony; that the Catholicks were now in Safety; that 'Places and Offices had been diſpos'd to them, and that all Garriſons either
'were, or ſuddenly would be in their Hands; and now they had a fair
'Opportunity, having a King ſo eaſie to believe what was dictated to 'him by a Party. 2. That he brought other Letters from Harcourt to
'Langhorn to be regiſter'd; of which Letters, one was from the Rector
'of the Iriſh College at Salamanca, which ſpecify'd, That the Lord Bel-
'laſis and the reſt concern'd ſhould be in readineſs, for that they had ſent
'ſome Iriſh caſhier'd Soldiers, with many other Lay Brothers, under the 'Notion of Pilgrims for St. Jago, who were to take Shipping at the
'Groyn, and to land at Milford-Haven, and there to joyn with the Lord
'Powis.

Mr. Langhorn, in his Defence, beſides the ſolemn Proteſtations of his Innocence, alledg'd, 'that Oates and Bedloe the Witneſſes againſt him were 'Parties in the Crime, and deſir'd to know whether they had their Par-'dons.' Upon underſtanding that Bedloe had Three, and Oates had Two, all under the Broad-Seal; he inſiſted, 'That they were ſtill Approvers in 'the Eye of the Law, and therefore not to be heard; and deſir'd to know 'whether they expected any Rewards for their Diſcoveries.' Oates reply'd upon Oath, that he had been rewarded by Expending Six or ſeven hundred Pounds out of his own Pocket, without knowing whether he ever ſhould ſee it again. Langhorn then alledg'd, he had heard that Bedloe had receiv'd five hundred Pounds; but he was anſwer'd, that That was for the Diſcovery of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Murder, and not for the Plot. And Bedloe ſwore, that he was ſo far from having any Benefit by that Diſcovery, that he was ſeven hundred Pounds out of Pocket. When the Priſoner inſiſted upon the Improbability of their Aſſertions, by reaſon of their great Neceſſities and Poverty when they firſt made their Diſcoveries, he was told that ſuch Enquiries were foreign to the Matter in Hand. And ſo he proceeded to prove Oates to be perjured with reſpect to the Conſult in April 24th, and to the Buſineſs of Father Ireland, by the ſame Witneſſes that had been us'd by the five Jeſuits the Day before. And becauſe Oates had formerly ſworn, that he lay at Grove's Houſe about the Time of the Conſult, he brought Mrs. Grove to teſtify, that he never was there about that Time; which was confirm'd by her Maid; and both affirm'd, that the Houſe was then taken up, and that there was no Room to lodge him in. He ſaid he had more Things to alledge, but was diſcourag'd, becauſe ſome of his Witneſſes were beaten and abus'd for appearing for him, and one Woman durſt not ſo much as ſpeak, for fear of the Inſolence of the Rabble. Langhorn's Defence, and Condemnation.

In Concluſion, the Jury brought him in Guilty, and he receiv'd Sentence, together with the five Jeſuits; at the Pronouncing of which by the Recorder, there was a very great Acclamation in the Place. On the 20th of this Month June, the five Jeſuits were carry'd to Tyburn, at which Place of Execution they all made ſolemn Speeches. Whitebread in The Executi-on of the five Jeſuits, and Langhorn.

in his Speech has theſe Words; I am to make my Appearance before the Face of Almighty God, and with all imaginable Certainty and Evidence to receive a final Judgment, for all the Thoughts, Words and Actions of my whole Life: So that I am not now upon Terms to ſpeak other than the Truth; and therefore in his moſt holy Preſence, and as I hope for Mercy from his Divine Majeſty, I do declare to you here preſent, and to the whole World, that I go out of the World as Innocent and as free from any Guilt of theſe Things laid to my Charge, as I came into the World from my Mother's Womb: And that I do renounce from my Heart all manner of Pardons, Abſolutions, Diſpenſations for Swearing, as Occaſions or Intereſts may ſeem to require, which ſome have been pleas'd to lay to our Charge, as Matter of our Practice and Doctrine; but is a Thing ſo Unjuſtifiable and Unlawful, that I believe, and ever did, that no Power on Earth can authorize Me, or any Body ſo to do. —— I do moreover declare, that this is the true and plain Senſe of my Soul, in the Sight of him who knows the Secrets of my Heart, and as I hope to ſee his bleſſed Face, without any Equivocation, or Mental Reſervation. The reſt ſpoke much to the ſame Effect; and Harcourt, upon a Queſtion put to him by the Sheriff, particularly deny'd, that he wrote that Letter concerning the Diſpatch of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, which had been ſworn againſt him. Mr. Langhorn, either in Conſideration of his Affairs with others, which might be convenient to adjuſt, or rather in hopes of bringing out a free Confeſſion, was repriev'd for a Month, and then executed the 14th of July; perſiſting likewiſe in the moſt ſolemn, poſitive and ſtrong Expreſſions of his Innocence, which he had written down in a Paper, and deliver'd to the Sheriff. But all that He, or the others could ſay, would gain no Credit at this Time; it being a general Belief, that they thought it lawful to utter the greateſt Falſhoods and Lies, in favour of their Religion and Cauſe.

Proceedings in the Council.

3. Theſe ſharp Proceedings were no ways grateful to the King, nor to a conſiderable Part of the new Council, who were buſily employ'd in making way for a calmer and better-temper'd Seſſion of Parliament, after the ſhort Prorogation that had been made. Yet as to the Plot, the Lord Hallifax expreſly declar'd to his three Aſſociates, that That muſt be handled as if it were true, whether it were ſo or not, eſpecially in thoſe Points that were ſo generally believ'd by City or Country, as well as both Houſes. As the Term of the Prorogation drew near expiring, all agreed that a Seſſion could not conveniently begin before October; and a Day was appointed for conſidering that Matter in full Council. It was obſerv'd, that the Duke of Monmouth was now greater than ever; and that the Lord Shaftsbury expected the ſame, upon the next Meeting of the Parliament, and at the Coſt of thoſe whom he took to be the Authors of the laſt Prorogation: The Lords Eſſex and Hallifax, now out of all Meaſures with the Duke of Monmouth, look'd upon themſelves as moſt in Danger, and aim'd at by the Lord Shaftsbury's Threats. This occaſion'd a Conſultation among the three Lords, and Sir William Temple, whether, conſidering the Diſtemper of the preſent Parliament, the beſt Courſe were not to Diſſolve it, and have another call'd in October? Which being unanimouſly carry'd in the Affirmative, and the King being fully of the ſame Mind; it was Reſolv'd, that his Majeſty ſhould at next Council propoſe the Queſtion, Whether there ſhould be a further Prorogation, or a Diſſolution, with a new Parliament; and that in the mean Time, the Lord Chancellor and the other Chief Officers ſhould be acquainted with the King's Mind, either by himſelf or the three Lords, Sir William Tem-

Temple being to go into the Country. By their Computation, they all Four concluded, there could not be above ſix in the whole Council that could be againſt the Diſſolution; which they thought would be a great Support to the King's Reſolution, againſt all the Exclamations they expected from the Earl of Shaftsbury and his Party; and at leaſt againſt the Conſequences uſually deduc'd from the Forms of Calling and Diſmiſſing Parliaments, viz. The Advice of the Privy-Council. 1679. Car. 31 Ref. 20

But when the Council Day came, which was the 10th of July, the King and the three Lords having neglected to prepare the Lord Chancellor and other Chief Officers, Sir William Temple, at the King's propoſing the Queſtion, obſerv'd a general Surprize at the Board; which made him ſuſpect his Majeſty had ſpoke of it to few or none but the Chancellor, before he came in. It ſoon appear'd he had not ſo much as done that neither: For after a long Pauſe, he was the firſt that roſe up, and ſpoke long and violently againſt the Diſſolution; was follow'd by the Lord Shaftsbury in the fulleſt manner, and moſt tragical Terms; and by the Lord Angleſey, who urg'd all the fatal Conſequences that could be; being ſtill follow'd by the Lord Arlington, Marqueſs of Worceſter, and every Man there, except the three Lords, who ſpoke for the Diſſolution; but neither with half the Length or Force of Argument they intended to have done. They left, it ſeems, that Part to Sir William Temple, who was ſufficiently inſtructed in the Caſe; but reſenting the Negligence of his Friends, who might ſo eaſily have effected what was agreed on, and ſeeing that Reaſons would ſignify nothing, after ſuch a plain Majority, he contented himſelf with ſaying, That he thought it was every Man's Opinion, that a happy Agreement between his Majeſty and Parliament was neceſſary to his Affairs, both at Home and Abroad: That all the Difference, in a Continuance of this, or Aſſembling of another Parliament, would depend only upon the Probability of agreeing better and eaſier with one than the other: That his Majeſty had ſpoken ſo much of his Deſpairing about any Agreement with this preſent Parliament, and the Hopes he had of doing it with another, that for his part he thought That ought to decide it; becauſe he believ'd his Majeſty could better judge of that Point than any Body elſe. Upon this, the King order'd the Chancellor to draw up a Proclamation for Diſſolving the preſent Parliament, and calling another to aſſemble on the 17th of October following: Whereupon the Council broke up with the greateſt Rage in the World, of the Lord Shaftſbury, Lord Ruſſel, and two or three more, and the general Diſſatisfaction of the whole Board. In which the King declares the Parliament Diſſolv'd.

Still the King had ſome Hopes that his Subjects, upon reflecting on the late Miſcarriages, and the Nation's Danger of being involv'd in an inteſtine War, at a Time when the victorious Arms of France hung like a Cloud over their Heads, would proceed with more Caution, in the next Election, and ſend him up Men of cooler Tempers. But his Majeſty ſoon found himſelf miſtaken; and the common People, who generally follow as they are led, were perſwaded to believe the Parliament was Prorogu'd and Diſſolv'd, only to prevent the Tryal of the Popiſh Lords; tho' only the Commons had obſtructed it, and refus'd to appear againſt them, when they were brought to the Lords Bar. The Leaders of the Country, or Shaftsbury's Party, encreas'd the Noiſe of Popery, French Penſioners, and Arbitrary Government; and beſides theſe general Charges, took ſpecial Advantage of two Things that occurr'd in the laſt Parliament: The firſt was the Excluſion Bill, which was made a kind of a Teſt, and all thoſe Gentlemen who voted againſt it, were mark'd as Favourers of Popery, if not downright Papiſts. The next was a Diſcovery, New Elections.

very, formerly mention'd, made by Sir Stephen Fox, of the Penſioners in the long Parliament, which being by Order of the Houſe made on a ſudden by Memory only, and no Record of it enter'd, they took the Advantage of naming who they miſlik'd in their Black Liſts of Court Penſioners: All thoſe who had any Publick Employments were excepted againſt, and thoſe recommended who either had never been truſted, or had been turn'd out of their Places; who were all applauded as Men not to be bought, Enemies to the Court and Miniſters, and true Friends to the Proteſtant Religion and their Country: And all this was done, as they alledg'd, for the Advancement of his Majeſty's Service, and the encreaſing the Love of his People towards him. But the King, being of another Opinion, would not permit them to come together, ſo ſoon as was intended.

The Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, &c.

4. In the midſt of theſe Heats, they brought on the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, Phyſician to the Queen, together with William Marſhal, and James Corker, two Benedictine Monks, and William Rumley, a Lay Brother of that Order; who, on the 18th Day of July, were all arraign'd for High-Treaſon at the Old-Bayly, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, and other Judges. In the opening of the Tryal, to prove the Plot in general, there appear'd Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Prance, and one Mr. Jenniſon, a new Evidence and Diſcoverer, of whom, the principal Buſineſs of the laſt was to prove, that Father Ireland was at London in the Month of June, 78, contrary to what he had proteſted at his Execution. Againſt Sir George Wakeman in particular, Dr. Oates, as he was then call'd, ſwore, 'Oates. 1. That the Priſoner in the Month of July, 78, 'ſending a Letter to Aſhby the Jeſuit, of Inſtructions, how he ſhould 'order himſelf before he went to, and at the Bath, whither he was go-'ing, did afterwards in the ſame Letter write, That the Queen would 'aſſiſt him to poyſon the King: And knew it to be his Hand, becauſe 'ſome two Days after he ſaw Sir George at Aſhby's Lodging ſit in a 'writing Poſture, and then lay by his Pen, and roſe up; and going a-'way, left behind him a written Paper, wet with the Ink, purporting 'a Bill to an Apothecary; and the Hand of this Paper ſo left by Sir George, 'was the ſame with that of the fore-mention'd Letter to Aſhby. 2. That 'at the ſame Time, Mr. Aſhby did give Sir George ſome Inſtructions 'concerning the Patent or Commiſſion he had receiv'd of being Phyſician 'to the Army; and that the Witneſs did ſee the ſaid Commiſſion in Sir 'George's Hands. 3. That a few Days after, Father Harcourt and four 'other Jeſuits went to attend the Queen at Somerſet-Houſe; and while 'they were in a Chamber, and the Witneſs waiting without, he heard 'a Woman's Voice, ſaying, She would not endure thoſe Violations of 'her Bed any longer, and that ſhe would aſſiſt Sir George Wakeman in 'poyſoning the King; and that he was afterwards admitted in, where he 'ſaw no other Woman there but the Queen; and after that he heard 'the ſame Perſon ask Harcourt, If he had receiv'd the laſt Thouſand 'Pounds.' 4. That in the ſame Month, Ten thouſand Pounds was pro-'poſ'd to Sir George to poyſon the King, by Aſhby, at his Lodgings in 'Wild-Houſe, in the Preſence of Harcourt, Ireland, and the Witneſs; 'but at that Time he refus'd it, ſaying, It was too little for ſo great a 'Work. 5. He heard that Five thouſand more was offer'd afterwards and 'accepted; and poſitively ſwore, He himſelf had ſeen in the Jeſuits En-'try Book, an Entry thereof, in theſe or the like Words: Memorand. 'Such a Day of Auguſt, fifteen thouſand Pounds was propoſ'd to Sir 'George Wakeman, which he accepted; which was Harcourt's Hand;

'and under it was a Receipt to this Effect, Receiv'd five Thouſand 1679.

'Which laſt Words were the ſame Hand and Character with that Let'ter to Aſhby, and the Bill to the Apothecary, which the Witneſs had
'ſeen before.

The next Witneſs was Captain Bedloe, who ſwore, 'That about the And Bedloe.
'Beginning of Auguſt, 78, being at Father Harcourt's Chamber, Sir
'George Wakeman came in diſcontented, and ask'd Why he was drill'd
'on in a Concern of that Importance, and ſlighted? and ſaid, He knew
'not whether he ſhou'd go on or no: But Harcourt ask'd him What he
'wou'd have? they were ready for him; and then fetcht a Bill and gave 'him, which he ſaid he receiv'd that Day by the Queen's Order; and 'that it was on ſuch a Goldſmith for two Thouſand Pounds. Upon 'which Sir George ſaid, 'Tis well ſomebody gives me Encouragement; I
'have more Encouragement from my good Lady and Miſtreſs, than from 'any of You. Nay, reply'd Harcourt to him, For Encouragement, that
'you ſhall not want, for the reſt ſhall be paid in due Time: But, Sir
'George, continu'd he, this muſt be well follow'd, becauſe ſo much de- 'pends upon it: For if we ſhou'd miſs to kill him at Windſor, or you
'miſs in your Way, we will do it at Newmarket.' ——Which Words were twice repeated by Bedloe; upon which Sir George ſaid privately to his Fellow Priſoners, There is my Buſineſs done.

Sir George in his Defence alledg'd, 1. As to Oates's Evidence concern- The Priſoner's Defence.
ing the Letter to Aſhby, he brought an Apothecary that produc'd a Piece of a Letter of Directions to Aſhby, ſent from Sir George, and ſaid he had read it all, and that there was no Mention of the King or Queen. And when Oates pretended that that was not the Letter he ſaw, the Priſoner argu'd how improbable it was he ſhou'd write two Letters about the ſame Thing. 2. His next Exception to Oates's Teſtimony was, That before the Houſe of Lords he ſhou'd ſay, That he thought the foremention'd Letter to be Wakeman's Writing, only becauſe it was ſubſcrib'd George Wakeman; but Oates gave another Account of thoſe Words, to the beſt of his Remembrance. 3. That Oates did not charge Sir George ſo fully before the King and Council, but rather deny'd that he knew any thing againſt him, but what he had ſeen in other Peoples Letters: And to this purpoſe Sir Philip Lloyd teſtify'd, 'That Oates did then ſay, He 'had ſeen a Letter from Whitebread to Fenwick, that Sir George was to 'poyſon the King, &c. And that Sir George did then carry himſelf, as 'if he were not concern'd at the Accuſation, and that Oates being call'd
'in again, and ask'd whether he knew any more againſt him, he lift up
'his Hands, and ſaid, No, God forbid that I ſhou'd ſay any thing againſt
'Sir George Wakeman, for I know nothing more againſt him.' Oates's Reply to this Difficulty, was, That he was then ſo weak and weary with watching, and hurrying up and down, that he was not in a Condition to make Anſwers. As to Bedloe's Evidence, Sir George inſiſted how improbable it was to make him privy to ſo great a Secret, who was a meer Stranger, and further, he ſolemnly ſwore, He never ſaw Bedloe before in his Life.

As to the other Priſoners, Corker, Marſhal and Rumley, in ſhort Oates ſwore that they were all privy to the Deſign of Killing the King, and conſenting to the Conſult of the Benedictines, Aug. 15. 1678. for raiſing ſix Thouſand Pounds for carrying on that Deſign. Bedloe confirm'd the Matter as to the two firſt, but cou'd ſay nothing againſt Rumley. In the Courſe of this Evidence, Oates's Credit met with an unexpected

Blow: Whereas he had ſworn that Corker was Preſident of the Benedictines, and as ſuch his Hand was neceſſary in a particular Caſe; there appear'd three ſeveral Women, who teſtify'd that Mr. Stapleton was Preſident of the Benedictines, and had been ſo for ſeveral Years, and that Corker had never officiated in that Place. Some reflecting things were likewiſe alledg'd againſt both Oates and Bedloe, whoſe Credit now appear'd to be upon the Declenſion. However, it is plain, the Jury ſuſpected them, and notwithſtanding their poſitive Swearing, they brought in all the Priſoners not guilty: So Sir George Wakeman and Rumley were diſcharg'd out of Newgate; but Corker and Marſhal, being Prieſts, and liable to another Indictment upon that Account, were continu'd in Cuſtody.

They are acquitted.

This Tryal and Acquittal prov'd a conſiderable Shock to the whole Fabrick of the Plot, and it might have been more ruinous to it, had it not been ſo well ſupported by the next Parliament. In the mean time, it occaſion'd various Diſcourſes, and the Writing of ſeveral Pamphlets on both Sides, and was no ſmall Diſcouragement to thoſe call'd The King's Evidences. But the Credit of it was in ſome meaſure kept up by a new Narrative publiſh'd by Mr. Jenniſon, a Witneſs in this laſt Tryal, in which he not only teſtify'd that Father Ireland was in London in the Month of June, 78, contrary to the Jeſuits Aſſertions, and his own Dying Words; but undertook to name the four Ruffians that were to kill the King at Windſor, ſo often mention'd without Names; who were Mr. Levallyn, Mr. Thomas Brahall, Mr. Karney, three Iriſh Men, and Mr. Wilſon an Engliſh Papiſt, all of Gray's Inn, or harbouring thereabouts. Mr. Jenniſon made particular Excuſes why he appear'd no ſooner, and ſtill reſerv'd ſome farther Particulars to be diſcover'd as Occaſion ſhou'd offer. The King, tho' he believ'd nothing of the Matter, however iſſu'd out his Proclamation, commanding the forenam'd Perſons to render themſelves, and propos'd a Hundred Pounds Reward to any that ſhou'd take all or one of theſe dangerous Men. As to the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, he met with ſo many Reflections, that upon the firſt Day of Michaelmas Term, he took occaſion to make a notable Speech in the King's Bench Court, concerning the very ſcandalous Libels that had been publiſh'd againſt him ſince Sir George Wakeman's Tryal and Acquittal; in which Speech he purg'd himſelf at large of any Degree of Corruption, and with great Courage declar'd, That he was neither afraid nor aſham'd to own what he had done; That the Impeachment of the Courſe of Publick Juſtice by vulgar Noiſe and Clamour, did not at all terrify him to a Compliance with the Rabble, againſt his Conſcience and Underſtanding; nor to try any Cauſe, otherwiſe than according to the Evidence, and the Probability, and the Credibility it carry'd with it. Mr. Juſtice Jones, and Mr. Juſtice Dolben ſpoke alſo to the ſame purpoſe, and appear'd as Compurgators of the Honeſty and Integrity of the Chief Juſtice.

Jenniſon's Narrative.

A ſudden Change at Court.

5. But before this, in the latter End of Auguſt, there happen'd a conſiderable Change: The King being at Windſor, ſuddenly fell ſick, and with three ſuch Fits of an Ague and Fever, as gave great Apprehenſion, and occaſion'd a general Conſternation; the People looking upon any thing that ſhou'd happen ill to the King, at this time, as the End of the World. The three Lords were then attending at Windſor, and Sir William Temple their Aſſociate in the Country. Upon the King's firſt Illneſs, the Lords Eſſex and Halifax thought the Danger very great, and their own ſo too; and that if any thing happen'd to the King's Life, the Duke of Monmouth, now in his Meridian, wou'd be at the Head of the Nation, on, in Oppoſition to the Royal Brother, and in Conjunction with the Earl of Shaftsbury, who had threatned to have their Heads upon the Prorogation of the laſt Parliament. This Fright ſo affected theſe two great Men, that tho' they had been violent Oppoſers of his Royal Highneſs, they, as ſoon as they cou'd, propos'd to the King the ſending immediately for Him from Bruſſels; all which was done with the greateſt Secrecy and Speed imaginable, ſo that the Duke arriv'd at Windſor upon the 2d of September. But finding the King out of Danger, it was agreed to paſs for a Journey wholly of his own, and that it ſhou'd be receiv'd by his Majeſty and the three Lords with all Signs of Surprize. However this Advice and Management ſo inrag'd the Duke of Monmouth, as well as the Earl of Shaftsbury, that theſe Lords ſaw no ſafe Way but to ruin them both, and throw them quite out of the King's Affairs; and ſo joyning themſelves wholly with the Intereſt of the Duke of York, they never ceas'd till they effected all that his Royal Highneſs deſired for his Security againſt his two great Enemies. And ſo the Duke of Monmouth, juſt in the Height of his Glory, was remov'd from his Place of Captain General, and for a while ſent into Holland, to the great Surprize of the Nation: And ſhortly after, the Earl of Shaftsbury was turn'd out from being Preſident of the Council. 1679. Upon the King's full Recovery, which caus'd a general Joy, the Lord Mayor of London, with the Court of Aldermen, and a Train of thirty Coaches, and about a Hundred Horſe-Men, went on Monday the 15th of September to Windſor to congratulate his Majeſty's happy Recovery; which Compliment was as kindly receiv'd, as it was handſomly perform'd. On the Wedneſday following, the King, attended by his Royal Highneſs and the whole Court, return'd to White-Hall; and that Night, by the Lord Mayor's expreſs Order, there were Bone-Fires throughout the whole City for his Majeſty's Return, as well to his former Health, as his Place of Reſidency. On the latter End of the Month, the King and Queen went to New-Market, where they were eſpecially congratulated by Dr. Echard, the Vice-Chancellor, with the chief of the Body of the Univerſity of Cambridge. As to the Duke of York, he once more went over to Bruſſels, but without Deſigns of any long Continuance. For his Royal Highneſs obtain'd leave of the King that he might retire to Scotland, where his Figure might be greater than abroad, and his Return, upon any Exigency, might be more quick and eaſy. This Compromiſe between the King and the Duke, had this Notice given of it by Authority; 'New-Market, Octob. 7. His Royal Highneſs having repreſented to 'his Majeſty, that he conceives it, for many Reſpects, more proper for 'him to be in his Majeſty's Dominions, rather than thoſe of another 'Prince, and made it his humble Requeſt to his Majeſty, to have his 'Leave to go into Scotland, his Majeſty hath granted it; and, it's pre'ſum'd, his Royal Highneſs will in a ſhort Time repair thither.' In Order to this, on Sunday Night, the 12th of October, the Duke, the Dutcheſs, and Family, ſuddenly arriv'd at St. James's, to the Surprize of ſome, and Joy of others. Not long after, both their Royal Highneſſes, attended by many of the Nobility, and other Perſons of Quality, follow'd with a numerous Train of Coaches, began their Journey towards Scotland, which laſted above a Month, with ſhort and pompous Stages. At Edinburgh, Decemb. 4. they were receiv'd and complimented by the Privy-Council, with full Reſpect and Honour: The Lord Chancellor made a Speech in the Name of all the Council; to which his Royal Highneſs anſwer'd in very affectionate Terms, 'expreſſing his great Satisfaction at the Civilities he had receiv'd in that Kingdom; and declaring his Readineſs to pro-

The Council diſunited.

6. In the mean time the new Council began to be more and more diſunited, and gradually to fall in ſunder: Sir William Temple was highly diſoblig'd at Two of the Three Lords, Eſſex and Halliſax, for Concealing their ſending for the Duke of York, and ſtill treating of him as if they were Strangers to it; which ended all private Commerce between Them and Him. On the other Side, they thought themſelves not ſufficiently ſound in the King's or the Duke's Confidence, and that they did other Mens Work; therefore they appear'd ready to give up their Parts in the Publick Affairs. Others, not well pleas'd with what was done at and after the Duke's Arrival, ſeem'd inclinable to the ſame Retreat. In this State of Affairs, October came on, in which the new Parliament was to meet; at which time the two Dukes of York and Monmouth, were both abroad. The Lord Shaftsbury endeavour'd to inflame the Noiſe of the late Conduct and Counſels againſt the Sitting of the Parliament, and to ſet on foot Petitions in caſe they did not Sit: The Miniſters were not able to ſtand the Opening of the Parliament; and therefore a ſhort Prorogation was expected ſome Days before that appointed for the Meeting. On the 15th of this Month, the Council being ſate, the King, after a little Pauſe told them, That upon many Conſiderations, which he cou'd not at preſent acquaint them with, he found it neceſſary to make a longer Prorogation of the Parliament than he intended: That he had conſider'd all the Conſequences, ſo far as to be abſolutely Reſolv'd, and not to hear any thing that ſhou'd be ſaid againſt it: That he wou'd have the Meeting put off till that time Twelve Month. However he order'd the Prorogation to extend no farther than the 26th of January next.

The new Parliament further Prorogu'd.

All the Council were ſtartled at this ſurprizing Reſolution, and the Way of Propoſing it, except thoſe few that were in the Secret; and they thought fit to be ſilent, and leave the Thing wholly upon his Majeſty: Several others ſtood up, and wou'd have argu'd the Reaſons and Conſequences of it; but the King wou'd not hear them, and ſo all Debate ended. After which, Sir William Temple ſtood up, and with great Freedom told his Majeſty, That as to the Reſolution he had taken, he wou'd ſay Nothing, becauſe he was reſolv'd to hear no Reaſoning upon it; therefore he wou'd only preſume to offer him his humble Advice as to the Courſe of his Future Proceedings; which was, That his Majeſty in his Affairs wou'd pleaſe to make uſe of ſome Council or other, and allow Freedom to their Debates and Advices; after hearing which, his Majeſty might yet reſolve as he pleas'd. That if he did not think the Perſons or Number of this preſent Council ſuited with his Affairs, it was in his Power to Diſſolve them, and conſtitute another of any Number he pleas'd, and to alter them again when he wou'd: But to make Counſellors that ſhou'd not Counſel, he doubted whether it was in his Majeſty's Power or not, becauſe it imply'd a Contradiction. And ſo far as he had obſerv'd, either of former Ages or the preſent, he queſtion'd whether it was a thing ever practis'd in England by his Majeſty's Predeceſſors, or were ſo now by any of the preſent Princes in Chriſtendom: Therefore he humbly advis'd him to conſtitute ſome ſuch Council, as he wou'd think fit to make uſe of, in the Digeſtion of his great and publick Affairs. His Majeſty ſeem'd not diſpleas'd at what he ſaid, but concluded the Matter as he had before determin'd it.

Sir W. Temple's Speech.

This increas'd the Breach in the new Council; and in no long time, the Lord Ruſſel, the Lord Cavendiſh, Sir Henry Capel, and Mr. Powle, pretending pretending to deſpair of being able to ſerve the King any longer, in a Conduct of Affairs ſo diſagreeable to the general Humour of the People, went together to the King, and deſired his Majeſty to excuſe their Attendance any more upon him at Council; to which the King, with his uſual Frankneſs, anſwer'd, With all my Heart. The Lords Salisbury, Eſſex and Hallifax, ſeem'd to have taken the ſame Reſolution, tho' not ſo much in Form. However the Lord Eſſex quitted his Place in the Treaſury, and the Lord Hallifax did in Effect retire; tho' he had own'd to Sir William Temple That his Humour muſt always have Buſineſs to employ it, or wou'd elſe be uneaſie. Upon the Earl of Eſſex's leaving the Treaſury, Mr. Laurence Hyde, and Mr. Sydney Godolphin, were brought into the Council, and the Firſt in courſe took the Lord Eſſex's Place. Theſe two, joyning in Confidence with the Lord Sunderland, while Eſſex and Hallifax were abſent, and Sir William Temple in the Country, they three were eſteem'd to be alone in the Secret and Management of the King's Affairs, and look'd upon as the Miniſtry. Upon the Removal of the Earl of Shaftsbury, the King made the Lord Roberts, ſoon after Earl of Radnor, Preſident of the Council. In the Room of the Duke of Monmouth, the Duke of Albemarle was made Captain of the Life-Guards of Horſe, and the Earl of Mulgrave Governor of Hull, and Lord-Lieutenant of the Eaſt-Riding of Yorkſhire. Sir Stephen Fox was made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, and Daniel Finch, eldeſt Son of the Lord Chancellor, now in the room of Sir Henry Capel, firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, was brought into the Council.

Several Removals at Court.

7. One Thing that help'd forwards theſe Alterations and almoſt Diſtractions in Court, was a new Amuſement of the Nation, a ſtrange Diſcovery of a Plot, to throw and retaliate the Popiſh Plot upon the Preſbyterian Party, which obtain'd the Name of the Meal-Tub Plot. The principal Agent in it was one Thomas Dangerfield, alias Willoughby, alias Day, alias, &c. a Perſon famous for the former Extravagancies and ſubtle Practices of his Life, for which he had met with ſeveral ignominious Puniſhments; one naturally of a bold enterprizing Temper, a deſperate Fortune, a brisk genteel Carriage, a voluble Tongue, and Maſter of a notable debauch'd Wit, as well as matchleſs Confidence; in ſum, he appear'd to be as great a Cheat as Bedloe, tho' he had not the Fortune to draw as much Blood. The chief Account of this Matter is from his own Narrative; which informs us, that profeſſing the Romiſh Religion, and being a Priſoner in Newgate, he was apply'd to by Mrs. Cellier, Wife of a French Merchant, a Mid-Wife by Employment, and an Intimate with the Lady Powis, who after ſome petty Tryal of his Parts, procured his Liberty, and paid his Fees. But being immediately after clap'd up for Debt, they remov'd him into the King's Bench; where, being allow'd a weekly Subſiſtance, he was employ'd to trepan one Stroud, in order to undermine Mr. Bedloe, but not with equal Succeſs. Having compounded his Debts, amounting to near ſeven Hundred Pounds, Mrs. Cellier furniſh'd him with Mony to diſcharge them; and brought him into the Acquaintance of the Lady Powis, who promis'd to make him a Fortune, took Lodgings for him in Drury-Lane, employ'd him to get Prieſts out of Priſon, and ſent him on Errands to the Lord Caſtlemain, and other conſiderable Papiſts. He took Notes at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, and that of Sir George Wakeman, and carry'd them to the Lords in the Tower, who encourag'd him to write Pamphlets; and thenceforth he was allow'd three Pounds a Week, beſides Diet. The Lord Caſtlemain particularly employ'd him to get Knox and Lane, two ordinary Men, out of the Gate-Houſe, House, who were to swear against Oates, designing to indict him first of Perjury, and then of Sodomy. By the Lords Orders, he was to go to the principal Coffee-Houses and disperse Pamphlets; and he receiv'd from Nevil, a reputed Priest, divers Papers and Letters to transcribe; among which were forty Lists of Names, each containing above Eight Hundred. These were privately to be left by their Agents throughout England in the Houses of Nonconformists and other Protestants; and then Search being made on other Pretences, when these dangerous Papers were found, the Persons mention'd wou'd be seiz'd for Treason.

His Exploits.

After these, and other Exploits, he tells us, That about the Beginning of August, lodging at Mrs. Cellier's House, he was sent for to the Tower, where the Lord Arundel, in the Presence of the Lord Powis, ask'd him, If for a good Reward he wou'd venture to kill the King, mentioning two Thousand Pounds: But Dangerfield blushing at such a Motion, Powis put it off, and propos'd five Hundred Pounds, If he wou'd kill the Earl of Shaftsbury; which he promis'd to undertake: Whereupon they told him of one Rigaut, a Virginia Merchant, that wou'd advise with him about it, and secure him the Mony. And the next Day, waiting on the Lord Castlemain, he appear'd much inrag'd, saying, Why were you so unwilling to do what you were taken out of Prison for? Whereupon he made haste away; but Mrs. Cellier excus'd his Lordship's Passion at that Time. Soon after he went to meet Sir Robert Peyton at Gadbury's House, the Astrologer, where Gadbury appear'd very angry, because he refus'd to kill the King; adding, That he had calculated his Nativity, and found him a fit Person for that Enterprize, and that he might come off with Safety. Then the Countess of Powis dictated to him Remarks of four Clubs in the Town, and Names of several Persons, which Paper was afterwards found in the Meal-Tub; and by means of the Lord Peterborough, he was introduc'd to the Duke of York, and acquainted him with this Presbyterian Plot. Soon after the Duke gave him twenty Guineas with his own Hand, and brought him to the King; and having receiv'd Instructions from the Lady Powis, as to charging the Lord Grey, the Duke of Monmouth, the Duke of Buckingham, and others, he did all so well, that he thought his Majesty then believ'd him, being pleas'd to order him forty Pounds. About the same Time, in pursuance of the Lords Instructions, he went twice to murther the Earl of Shaftsbury, arm'd with a Dagger given him by Mrs. Cellier, pretending Business from Her and the Lady Powis; but was both Times prevented by Peoples coming, and his own guilty Fears; for which the Countess call'd him Coward, and Mrs. Cellier said, She wou'd go, and let the World know, that some of her Sex were more brave than the Men: But still cou'd not meet with a fair Opportunity. His last Exploit was his carrying some dangerous Papers to the Lodgings of Colonel Roderick Mansel in Westminster, which he privately pin'd behind his Beds-head; which he did under the Pretence of seeing Rooms that were to be Lett. Upon which he inform'd two Officers of the Custom-House to come there to search for Prohibited Goods to the Value of two Thousand Pounds; which they did upon the 22d of October, in the Colonel's Absence, attended by Him and one Bedford. The Officers finding nothing, he directed them to remove the Bed, and at last going himself behind it, discover'd the Papers; and precipitately cry'd out Here is Treason! The Officers carry'd the Papers with them, which were order'd to be return'd; but the Colonel in the mean time having notice, that such a Man had been concern'd in the Matter, he found Dangerfield out at Mrs. Cellier's House, and caus'd him to be brought before the King and Council, where after a full Hearing, the Contrivance was detected, and the Gentleman ſent to Newgate on the 27th of October. 1679.

Two Days after, Sir William Waller, a moſt active Magiſtrate, ſearching Cellier's Houſe, accidentally found the Paper Book ty'd with Ribbons, hid in a Meal-Tub, containing the Model of this new Plot; the Matter whereof was dictated by the Lady Powis, and prov'd by her Maid to be laid there by her Order, from whence it obtain'd the forementioned Name of The Meal-Tub Plot. It contain'd Remarks or chief Heads of Things, and Perſons to be charg'd; as particularly, the Lords Shaftsbury, Eſſex, Hallifax, Radnor, Wharton, the Duke of Buckingham, and others, to be of Counſel in this Conſpiracy; the Duke of Monmouth, General; the Earl of Macclesfield, the Lord Brandon Gerrard, and Lord Grey, Lieutenant-Generals; Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Colonel Blood, and Sir William Waller, Major-Generals; Colonel Manſel, Quarter-Maſter General, &c. To which were added Liſts of particular Perſons, uſually meeting in four Principal Clubs about the Town, too tedious to be mention'd here. Dangerfield now finding himſelf miſtaken, on the laſt of October made Application to the Lord Mayor, Sir Robert Clayton; before whom, and other Perſons of Quality, he made a large Confeſſion upon Oath, which was preſently tranſmitted to the King and Council. Upon this, and a further Examination of the ſeveral Perſons concern'd, the Earl of Caſtlemain was committed to the Tower, from whence he had been bail'd before, as having been charg'd only by Oates; Mrs. Cellier and Mr. Rigault to Newgate, and Aſtrologer Gadbury to the Gate-Houſe. And on the 4th of November, the Lady Powis being further examin'd, and divers Circumſtances prov'd againſt her, by others beſides Dangerfield, ſhe was by Order of the Board committed to the Tower for High-Treaſon in Conſpiring the Death of the King. Knox and Lane were likewiſe ſecured, for forming a Conſpiracy againſt the Reputation of Dr. Oates. This new Plot was a great Occaſion of the Diſguſts of the Lords Eſſex and Hallifax, before hinted at; who finding themſelves mention'd in it, and yet left out of the ſecret Examinations about it, it ſo offended their high Spirits, that they made great Complaints, and declared that they wou'd retire from the World, and have nothing to do with Publick Affairs.

The Heads of this Plot.

This dark Intrigue came ſeaſonably in for the Support of the Credit of the grand Plot; and tho' the Nation began to be weary'd and ſatiated with the Rumours of Helliſh Deſigns and Conſpiracies, yet this ſerv'd very much to keep up the old Heat and Fervour, which was now eaſily preſerv'd by every little Accident and Occaſion. Particularly, the 17th of November, commonly call'd Queen Elizabeth's Day, when the Effigies of the Pope was uſually burnt by the People, was now celebrated with more than ordinary Pomp and Solemnity, and met with a more ſenſible Effect upon the People. The Proceſſion conſiſted of One perſonating the Dead Body of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, carry'd on a Horſe, with a Bell-Man to mind the People of his barbarous Murther; Prieſts in Copes with a large Silver Croſs, Carmelites and Gray Friars, and ſix Jeſuits; and after them Waiters, ſeveral Biſhops, ſome in Lawn-Sleeves, others adorn'd with Copes and Miters, and then ſix Cardinals, and after them the Pope on a fine Pageant, with Boys and Incenſe-Pots, &c. and behind him the Repreſentative of the Devil. In this Manner they march'd about five at Night from Biſhop's-Gate, through the whole City to near Temple-Bar, attended with prodigious Multitudes of People; at which appointed Station, they committed the Effigies to the Flames of a very extraordinary Bone-Fire, which concluded the chargeable Show and Specta-

Spectacle. About Ten Days after the People were affected with a Sight of another Nature, which was the ſudden Arrival of the Duke of Monmouth from beyond the Seas; and tho' he enter'd the City about Midnight, upon the Watch ſpreading the News of it, the Bells immediately rung, and Bone-Fires were made through the City and Suburbs after a very diſtinguiſhing Manner.

Monmouth's Return.

And now it may be Time to conclude the old Year, as uſually, with the Deaths of ſome conſiderable Perſons; of which we ſhall begin with two Divines, both of the Presbyterian Stamp, but of a different Character, Mr. Matthew Pool, and Dr. Robert Wild. The Former had his Birth in York, his Education in Emanuel Colledge in Cambridge, and his chief Reſidence in London, where he was Miniſter of St. Michael's Quern; but being ejected for his Nonconformity, he afterwards retired, and dy'd at Amſterdam. He was very much noted for his Learning, his ſtrict Piety, and his moſt uſeful Charity; but moſt juſtly celebrated for the Writing of thoſe admirable and elaborate Books, entituled Synopſis Criticorum Bibliorum, &c. for which, and other Works, he left behind him in Holland the Character of Clariſſimus Criticus, & Caſuiſta. The other Divine, Dr. Wild, was educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and became Rector of Ayno in Northamptonſhire, where he became celebrated for his facetious Wit, and his Poems which he wrote in behalf of the Presbyterians, as John Cleaveland did againſt them; being a Man of a peculiar Genius and Fancy, and the Occaſion of ſeveral other witty Writings, particularly that call'd Moon-Shine, by Mr. John Echard. Being likewiſe ejected by the Bartholomew Act in 1662, he liv'd privately, and dy'd at Oundle in the ſame County. The two next were eminent Phyſicians, viz. Dr. John Smith, and Dr. Jaſper Needham: The firſt was educated in Braſenoſe Colledge in Oxford, from whence he remov'd and ſettled in London, where he became one of the Colledge of Phyſicians, and ſignaliz'd Himſelf both in his Skill in Phyſick, and in other Pieces of Learning; ſo that he was juſtly ſtil'd The Learned Phyſician. The other, Dr. Needham, had his Education in Peter-Houſe Colledge in the other Univerſity, whence he removed to Oxford, where he made great Uſe of the famous Library there; he likewiſe ſettled at London, and became one of the Colledge of Phyſicians, and for ſeveral Years he made himſelf eminent for Practice till the Time of his Death.

The Deaths of Mr. Pool,

Dr. Wild,

Dr. Smith,

Dr. Needham,

After theſe we ſhall mention two Men of great, but very different Genius's, the Earl of Orrery, and Mr. Thomas Hobbes. The former was an Iriſh Noble-Man, by Name Roger Boyle, Brother to Richard Earl of Burlington, and Robert the famous Philoſopher and Vertuoſo; a Perſon, who living much in the Court, ſhew'd himſelf a very great States-Man, a Soldier and a Poet; and he prov'd himſelf ſo much the laſt, that it was obſerv'd that his Lordſhip's Reputation, joyn'd with the Earl of Roſcomon's, was more than ſufficient to juſtify their Country's Character in Point of Wit. In the four Tragedies that he publiſh'd, not only the true Engliſh Courage is delineated to the Life; but likewiſe the very Infidels and Barbarians are taught by his Pen, not only Humanity, but the higheſt Morality and Virtue. The other, Mr. Hobbes, a Clergy-Man's Son, was born at Malmsbury in Wilts, from whence he obtain'd the Name of Malmsburienſis, and educated in Magdalen Hall in Oxford, where he took his Degree of Batchelor of Arts; from whence he was taken into the Earl of Devonſhire's Family before he was twenty Years of Age; and ſoon after travelling with his Son into France and Italy, he not only improv'd himſelf by learning the modern Languages, but alſo very very much as to Men and Manners: After Variety of Travels abroad; where he became known to the moſt learned Men, and Returns into England, in the 63d Year of his Age he ſettled in the Houſe of his Patron the Earl of Devonſhire, where he liv'd many Years, in Eaſe and Plenty, rather as a Friend and Confident, than a Tutor or Inſtructor. He was one of a very extenſive Genius, improv'd by great Labour and Sedulity, and had the Reputation both Abroad and at Home of a great Philoſopher and Mathematician; and the preſent King, having learn'd Mathematicks of him, at his Reſtoration allow'd him a Penſion of a hundred Pounds a Year out of the Exchequer, tho' he was a Contemner of all Money and Riches. The Lord Clarendon ſays of him, 'It had 'always been a Lamentation among his Friends, that he ſpent too much 'Time in Thinking, and too little in Exerciſing thoſe Thoughts in the 'Company of other Men of the ſame, or of as good Faculties; for 'want whereof his Natural Conſtitution, with Age, contracted ſuch a 'Moroſity, that doubting and contradicting Men were never grateful 'to him.' As to his peculiar Notions in Religion and Policy, with which he infected ſo many ingenious Gentlemen, they are too difficult to be excus'd, and too dangerous to be palliated; of the Conſequences of which, either his Guilt or his Cowardiſe often made him very apprehenſive; ſo that his natural Fears, by which his whole Life ſeem'd to have been govern'd, increas'd with his Years, till he unwillingly left the World, and the noble Family, in the ninety firſt of his Age.

V. 1. All this Winter, by the Aſſiſtance of ſome Leaders, Mens Minds were agitated by Pamphlets and Petitions; but none made more Noiſe, or had greater Effects, than that call'd An Appeal from the Country to the City; of which we are to take ſome little Notice. The Author deſires the chief Citizens to go up to the Top of the Monument, and fancy to themſelves theſe following Objects: 'Firſt, Imagine you 'ſee the whole Town in Flames, occaſion'd a ſecond Time by the ſame 'Popiſh Malice which ſet it on Fire before. At the ſame Inſtant fancy, 'that amongſt the diſtracted Croud, you behold Troops of Papiſts ra-'viſhing your Wives and Daughters, daſhing your little Childrens Brains 'out againſt the Walls, Plundering your Houſes, and cutting your own 'Throats, by the Name of Heretick Dogs. Then repreſent to your 'Selves the Tower playing off its Cannon, and battering down the Hou-'ſes about your Ears. Alſo caſting your Eye towards Smithfield, ima-'gine you ſee your Father or your Mother, or ſome of your neareſt 'Relations, ty'd to a Stake in the midſt of Flames; when with Hands and 'Eyes lifted up to Heaven, they ſcream and cry out to that God, for 'whoſe Cauſe they die; which was a frequent Spectacle the laſt Time 'Popery reign'd among us. Fancy you behold thoſe beautiful Churches, 'erected for the true Worſhip of God, abus'd and turn'd into Idolatrous Temples, to the Diſhonour of Chriſt, and Scandal of Religion; 'the Miniſters of God's Holy Word torn in pieces before your Eyes, 'and their beſt Friends not daring to ſpeak in their Behalf. The only 'Objects will be Women running with the Hair about their Ears, Men 'cover'd with Blood, and Children ſprawling under Horſes Feet, and 'only the Walls of Houſes left ſtanding. When thoſe that ſurvive this 'fatal Day, may ſigh and cry, Here once ſtood my Houſe, there my Friends, and here my Kinſmen: But alas that Time is paſt. The only 'Noiſe will then be, O my Wife! O my Husband! O my deareſt Children! In fine, what the Devil himſelf wou'd do, were he here upon 'Earth, will in his Abſence infallibly be acted by his Agents the Papiſts:

'Thoſe who had ſo much Ingratitude and Baſeneſs to attempt the Life 'of a Prince, ſo Indulgent to them, will hardly be leſs cruel to any of 'his Proteſtant Subjects.' After much arguing and exclaiming, for the Prevention of theſe Miſchiefs, he ſays at laſt, 'for which purpoſe no 'Perſon is fitter than his Grace the Duke of Monmouth, as well for 'Quality, Courage and Conduct, as for that his Life and Fortune de-'pends upon the ſame Bottom with Yours. He will ſtand by you, 'therefore ought you to ſtand by Him. And remember the old Rule 'is, He who hath the worſt Title, ever makes the beſt King.

Petitioning. While theſe and the like Pamphlets were ſhewing to the People, great Endeavours were us'd to procure a Multitude of Hands to Petitions which were framing in London, Weſtminſter and ſeveral Counties, to be preſented to the King for the Sitting of the Parliament on the 26th of January, according to the laſt Prorogation; which Manner of Petitioning being accounted unwarrantable and tumultuous, his Majeſty was pleas'd in Council, to order the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen 'To take 'Care in their ſeveral Stations of his Majeſty's Honour, and of the Peace 'and Safety of the City; and not to ſuffer ſuch Perſons that ſhou'd 'ſign ſuch Petitions, or go about to procure Hands to them, to go un-'puniſh'd; but that they ſhou'd proceed againſt them, or cauſe them to 'be brought before the Council-Board to be puniſh'd, according to a Re-'ſolution of all the Judges of England, Secundo Jacobi.' Two Days after his Majeſty was further pleas'd to iſſue out his Royal Proclamation, Containing, 'That whereas he hath been inform'd that divers evil diſpo-'ſed Perſons endeavour in ſeveral Parts of this Kingdom to frame Peti-'tions to his Majeſty for ſpecious Ends and Purpoſes relating to the Pub-'lick, and thereupon to collect and procure to the ſame the Hands and 'Subſcriptions of Multitudes of his Majeſty's Subjects; which Proceed-'ings being contrary to the common and known Laws of this Land, and 'tending to promote Diſcontents among the People, and to raiſe Sedi-'tion and Rebellion, his Majeſty doth therefore ſtrictly charge and com-'mand all and every of his loving Subjects of what Rank or Degree ſo-'ever, that they preſume not to agitate or promote any ſuch Subſcripti-'ons, nor in any ways join in any Petition of that manner to be pre-'ferr'd to his Majeſty, upon Peril of the utmoſt Rigour of the Law that 'may be inflicted for the ſame.' At the ſame Inſtant, his Majeſty iſ-ſu'd out another Proclamation, Declaring his Reſolution to Prorogue the Parliament from the 26th Day of January to the 11th of November.

Diſcourag'd by the King.

Notwithſtanding the Scope of theſe two Proclamations, the Buſineſs of Petitioning was zealouſly carried on; and many were prepared, and ſome preſented not long after. Particularly on the 13th of January, Sir Gilbert Gerard, accompanied with ſeveral eminent Citizens, preſented the following Petition from Thouſands of his Majeſty's Subjects in London, Weſtminſter, and Parts adjacent, ſhewing, 'That whereas there 'has been, and ſtill is, a moſt helliſh and damnable Plot, branched forth 'into the moſt horrid Villanies againſt your Majeſty's moſt Sacred Perſon, 'for which ſeveral of the principal Conſpirators ſtand now impeached by 'Parliament: Therefore in ſuch a time, when your Majeſty's Royal Per-'ſon, &c. are thus in moſt imminent Danger; your Majeſty's moſt duti-'ful and obedient Subjects, in the deepeſt Senſe of our Duty and Alle-'giance to your Majeſty, do moſt humbly and earneſtly pray, that the 'Parliament, which is Prorogu'd until the 26th Day of January, may 'then ſit to try the Offenders, and to redreſs all our Grievances, no o-'therwiſe to be redreſs'd.' To which his Majeſty anſwer'd, That he look'd upon himſelf to be the Head of the Government, and the only Judge of what was fit to be done in ſuch Caſes; and that he wou'd do what he thought moſt for the Good of himſelf and his People. Then turning to Sir Gilbert, he ſaid, That he did not expect to find one of his Name, and particularly him, in ſuch a thing, and that he was ſorry for it. Whereupon Sir Gilbert wou'd have ſaid ſomething to the King, but his Majeſty turn'd away, and wou'd not hear him. 1679/80. Other Petitions.

A few Days after, the famous Thomas Thynn Eſquire, accompany'd by Sir Walter St. John, and Sir Edward Hungerford, preſented the Wiltſhire Petition to the ſame Effect, in the Name of that County. His Majeſty was pleas'd to ask them, Whether they had their Directions from the Grand Jury? Mr. Thynn anſwer'd, No: The King preſently reply'd, Why ſay you then that you come from the County? You come from a Company of looſe diſaffected People; adding, What do you take me to be? And what do you take your ſelves to be? I admire that Gentlemen of your Eſtates ſhou'd animate People to Mutiny and Rebellion. You wou'd not take it well, I ſhou'd meddle with your Affairs; and I deſire you wou'd not meddle with mine, eſpecially with a Matter that is ſo Eſſential a part of my Prerogative. Another Petition of the like nature, being preſented to him the Day following by Sir Robert Barrington, Colonel Mildmay, Mr. Honywood, &c. in the Names of themſelves, and others the Inhabitants of the County of Eſſex; the King's Anſwer was, That he was extremely ſurpriz'd to ſee them meddle with Matters that ſo immediately concern'd the Crown and him, and that againſt the Senſe of the beſt and chiefeſt Men of the County; that he believ'd that ſome of thoſe that had ſign'd the Petition might mean well, but that they were abus'd by thoſe that did not. To which he was pleas'd to add, That he was not willing to call to mind things paſs'd; yet, that he cou'd not but remember the Act of Oblivion, tho' not as ſome did; that thoſe who had ſtood in need of that Act, wou'd do well not to take ſuch Courſes, as might need another; and that he very well remember'd FORTY; and ſo turn'd away. And for the Berkſhire Gentlemen, and their Petition, which was preſented the ſame Day from their Quarter-Seſſions, the King in a more drolling manner ſaid, That they wou'd agree that Matter over a Cup of Ale, when they met at Windſor; tho' he wonder'd that his Neighbours wou'd meddle with his Buſineſs. And that the Nation, as well as thoſe Gentlemen, might not be ignorant of the Court Reſentments, theſe Anſwers were publickly inſerted in the Gazettes.

The King meets, and further Prorogues the Parliament.

2. However, the King reſolv'd to give a Meeting to his Parliament, upon the 26th of January, when coming to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, he in a ſhort Speech let both Houſes know, 'That when he declared in Council his Intention of putting off the Par-'liament to a time ſo remote as November, it was not without mature 'Conſideration; that he cou'd not be perſwaded from any thing that 'had happen'd ſince (in reference to Affairs within the Kingdom) to al-'ter or repent of that Reſolution; That notwithſtanding, conſidering 'the preſent Danger which threatned ſome of our Neighbours and Al-'lies, he thought fit to appoint a Day for their Meeting again in April: 'Yet the Diſtractions and Jealouſies at home were of ſuch a Nature, 'and ſo heightned and improv'd by the Malice and Induſtry of ill Men, 'that he was unalterably of Opinion, That a longer Interval of Parlia-'ment wou'd be abſolutely neceſſary for compoſing and quieting of Men's 'Minds; in order to which, he was afraid the moſt proper Remedies 'wou'd prove ineffectual, without the Aſſiſtance of ſome further time:

1678/90. Car. 32 Ref. 20

'he reſolv'd therefore, that on the ſaid Meeting in April there ſhou'd 'be a further Prorogation, unleſs the Condition of our Allies Abroad 'did then require our immediate Aſſiſtance.' Hereupon the Lord-Chancellor, by his Majeſty's Command, Prorogu'd the Parliament to the 15th Day of April next.

The Duke of York ſent for.

Having ventur'd ſo far, two Days after, his Majeſty thought fit to declare in Council, 'That he had ſent for his Royal Highneſs, not having 'found ſuch Effect from his Abſence, as ſhou'd incline him to keep him 'longer from him; That ſome Queſtions had been ſtarted of late of ſuch 'a Nature, and of ſo great Concern to the Duke, as made it reaſonable to 'have him preſent at the next Seſſion of Parliament: And tho' his Ma-'jeſty wou'd take care to preſerve his Right, yet it might be for his Sa-'tisfaction to be here himſelf; and that his Majeſty was ſo well aſſur'd of 'the Duke's Compliance, that his Return ſhou'd have no ill Influence 'upon the Publick.

His Speech at his leaving Scotland.

According to this Invitation, on the 31ſt of January the Duke of York acquainted the Lords of the Privy-Council at Edinburgh, 'That 'he had receiv'd a Letter from the King, calling him very ſpeedily to 'Court; That tho' he did very chearfully obey his Majeſty's Commands, 'and went with much Joy to attend him, yet he cou'd not part with 'their Lordſhips ſo ſoon without a great deal of Reluctancy and Trou-'ble, having both at his Reception, and during the ſhort time of his 'Abode there, met with all poſſible Demonſtration of Civility and Kind-'neſs, both from the Nobility, Gentry, and from the Repreſentatives of 'the ſeveral Bodies of the Nation; particularly from the Council, of which 'he had ſo juſt a Reſentment, that he cou'd not in all his Life forget them, 'and ſhou'd not fail upon all Occaſions to meet their great Kindneſs and 'Affection ſhewn him, with all the Service he was capable to do them; 'That he wou'd acquaint his Majeſty, That he had in Scotland a brave 'and loyal Nobility and Gentry, a regular Privy-Council, and the Judi-'catures fill'd with able Perſons well affected to his Majeſty's Service 'and Intereſt; and that he had obſerv'd the Diſaffected Party were no-'thing ſo conſiderable as their Friends in England ſtudied induſtriouſly to 'repreſent them to be.' He then recommended to the Council the ſettling of the Differences between ſeveral Gentlemen of the Highlands, whom he always obſerv'd to be firm to his Majeſty's Intereſt. The Lord-Chancellor, in the Name of the Council, 'acknowledg'd the great Hap-'pineſs they had in his Preſence, Conduct and Advice, and declared 'how much devoted they all were to the Service of his Majeſty and his 'Royal Highneſs; and that they cou'd not expreſs their great Grief they 'had to part ſo ſoon with him, to whoſe Counſel and Preſence they 'ow'd ſo many Advantages.

The Chancellor's Reply.

Soon after this, the Duke, Dutcheſs, and all their Retinue, began their Voyage by Sea for London, where they arriv'd at the Privy-Stairs on the 24th of February, after a pompous manner, and with all the Signs of true Joy and hearty Welcome. At the ſame time there arriv'd a Letter from the Privy-Council of Scotland, ſubſcribed by above twenty of the chief Nobility, fill'd with Expreſſions of Loyalty and Commendations of his Royal Highneſs: 'Particularly they tell his Majeſty, no Breach of 'Peace, no Libel, no Paſquil, have been ever diſcover'd during his A-'bode here; ſo that this too ſhort time has been the moſt peaceable and 'ſerene part of our Life, and the happieſt Days we ever ſaw, except 'your Majeſty's miraculous Reſtitution.' In Concluſion they tell him, 'For which Happineſs we can make your Majeſty no other Return, ſave 'to aſſure you, that with our Hearts, our Lives, and our Fortunes, we 'will maintain your Sacred Majeſty and your Royal Succeſſors, in the 'ordinary Degrees of Succeſſion, according to the unalterable Right of 'Blood, which you and they derive only from God Almighty; and 'wiſh that his Royal Highneſs may meet every where that Satisfaction 'and Tranquillity that he has occaſion'd, and that Kindneſs and Affection 'which his Merit has rais'd in Edinburgh.' Two Days after his Arrival, his Royal Highneſs was attended by the Lord Mayor, Court of Aldermen, Recorder and Common Council of the City of London; at which time the Recorder having in all their Names congratulated his ſafe Arrival, they all kiſs'd the Hands both of the Duke and Dutcheſs. Soon after the King and his Royal Highneſs were entertain'd by Sir Robert Clayton, the Lord Mayor, at a magnificent Supper; at which Night the Citizens by their Bonfires, Illuminations, &c. expreſs'd a more than ordinary Joy, to the ſenſible Satisfaction of the two Royal Brothers. The next Day, being March 10, the King and his Brother ſet forwards for New-market, where they were both met by Two hundred of the Univerſity of Cambridge, and the Duke in a particular manner congratulated on his Return from Scotland.

In the mean time the contrary Party were very buſy and induſtrious; and before the King took his Journey, Oates and Bedloe, by way of Complaint to the King and Council, offer'd Articles of High Miſdemeanors againſt the Lord-Chief-Juſtice Scroggs: They had formerly declar'd, 'That they were unwilling to give any Evidence againſt any Papiſts, or 'concerning the late Popiſh Plot, in any Court where the ſaid Chief-Ju-'ſtice ſhou'd ſit as Judge;' and now they deſir'd he might be brought to condign Puniſhment. But that Judge's Anſwer to their Articles being openly heard and debated before his Majeſty in Council, his Lordſhip was vindicated in all Particulars by the King and the Council, and their Articles diſmiſs'd, and his Lordſhip left to take his Courſe at Law, as he ſhou'd think fit. And ſo the Matter reſted, till it cou'd be brought into the Parliament.

Complaints againſt the Lord Chief Juſtice.

However, Proſecutions were not yet laid aſide; and about the beginning of Hilary Term, Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, a Yorkſhire Gentleman of Eighty five Years of Age, was arraign'd at the King's-Bench Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall, upon an Information of High-Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government. The Jury were all Yorkſhire Gentlemen, and the Foreman Sir Thomas Hodſon. The chief Evidence againſt him was one Balron, who had formerly been Baily of his Coal-Pits, and one Mowbray, who had alſo belong'd to his Family: But their Teſtimonies, it ſeems, not being of that Weight or Credibility with the Jury as ſome expected, they brought in their Verdict not Guilty; whereupon the Priſoner was immediately diſcharg'd. Other inferior Tryals, and of a different Nature, happen'd in the ſame Term, and at the ſame Bench; as particularly Thomas Whitfield, John Smallbones and William Laud, being try'd for a Riot, in Tearing a Petition carried about to get Subſcriptions to it concerning the Sitting of the Parliament, were found not Guilty of the Riot; but only Whitfield Guilty of Tearing the Petition; but the Puniſhment due to that Crime, was not at that time declar'd by the Court. About the ſame time ſeveral Bookſellers, of the Country Party, were Indicted for Publiſhing ſeditious and ſcandalous Libels, as Francis Smith, and Langley Curtis, beſides Henry Care the Author; but above all, the Sentence againſt Benjamin Harris, the Publiſher of the Weekly Domeſtick Intelligence, is moſt obſervable, who having been found guilty of Vending the Pamphlet formerly mention'd, call'd An Appeal from the Country to the City, had Judgment on the laſt Day of the Term, 'To ſtand on the Pillory before 'the

'the old Exchange; to ſuffer Impriſonment for one Year, to find Sure-'ties for three Years good Behaviour, and to be fin'd five Hundred 'Pounds; and moreover the ſaid Appeal to be burnt by the Common-'Hang-Man.' And the better to prevent theſe Exorbitancies, not long after, all the Judges in England, having been demanded their Opinions, made their Report in Council, and declared for Law, 'That his Majeſty 'may prohibit the Printing and Publiſhing of all News-Books and Pamphlets 'of News whatſoever, not Licenc'd by his Majeſty's Authority, as mani-'feſtly tending to the Breach of the Peace, and Diſturbance of the King-'dom.' And accordingly the King iſſu'd out a Proclamation to ſuppreſs all News-Books and Pamphlets of that Nature.

Abhorrences.

3. And now it was that thoſe very Counties, which had been lately ſo active and zealous in promoting Petitions for the ſitting of the Parliament, ſeem'd to be aſham'd, and to fall into the contrary Practice of Abhorring. The City of Weſtminſter led the Way, whoſe Grand-Jury by their Publick and formal Act, at their Seſſions after Eaſter, diſown'd and abhorr'd the ſaid Action of promoting Petitions, and charg'd it on certain Factious Perſons unknown to them: This, and more to the ſame Purpoſe, they deſir'd their Steward, Mr. Withers of the Middle-Temple, to repreſent in their Names to his Majeſty; which he did with good Succeſs, and was Knighted for his Loyalty, by the Name of Sir Francis Withers. After this, there follow'd the like Addreſſes from the Counties of Surrey, Eſſex, Middleſex, Somerſet, Salop, Norfolk, &c. which laſt mention'd County of Norfolk, had this further Acknowledgment in their Addreſs, viz. Their Humble Thanks to his Majeſty for recalling his Royal Highneſs from Flanders. Great Heats and Animoſities were created by theſe Petitioners and Abhorrers, both in the City and Country, and they occaſion'd many Feuds and Quarrels in private Converſations; and about the ſame Time, and from this Cauſe, aroſe the pernicious Terms, and Diſtinctions of WHIG and TORY, both Exotick Names, which the Parties invidiouſly beſtow'd upon each other: All that adher'd to the Intereſt of the Crown and Lineal Succeſſion, were by the contrary Party branded with the Title given to the Iriſh Robbers; and they in Return, gave the others the Name of Whigg, or Sour-Milk, formerly appropriated to the Scotch Presbyterians, and rigid Covenanters: Two unhappy Denominations, too well remember'd at this Time.

The Riſe of WHIGG and TORY.

An Enquiry into the D. of Monmouth's Legitimacy.

The latter Party, being actuated by a great and ſubtle Head, about this Time propagated a dangerous and amuſing Rumour about the Town, concerning a Black Box, reported to be found in the Cuſtody, or at leaſt the Knowledge of Sir Gilbert Gerard, containing a Writing importing a Marriage, or a Contract of a Marriage between the King and the Duke of Monmouth's Mother. This Report being made when the ſaid Duke was the Darling of the People, the King was pleas'd to call an extraordinary Council on the 26th of April, in which he declared the ſaid Report to be altogether falſe, and that he thought himſelf oblig'd in Honour and Conſcience to have the Matter throughly examin'd and ſearch'd into. And for the fuller Satisfaction, Sir Gilbert Gerard was ſummon'd to appear; and being examin'd in Council, before the two Royal Brothers, and all the Judges of the Land, he anſwer'd upon Oath, That he never had any ſuch Writing, as was reported, committed to his Charge, nor did he ever ſee or know of ſuch Writing: To all which he ſubſcrib'd his Name. His Majeſty then declar'd, he was reſolv'd to uſe all poſſible Means to find out the Author of this Report; and accordingly a Committee of Council was order'd to ſit a conſiderable Time to examine into the

the Bottom of this Affair. After the ſtricteſt Enquiries made after Spreaders of this dangerous Report, his Majeſty publiſh'd a particular Declaration, on the 3d of June, in Confirmation of one made January 6th, and of another made March 3d, which was enter'd in the Council Books, and ſign'd by ſixteen Privy-Counſellors, viz. That for the avoiding any Diſputes that might happen in Time to come, concerning the Succeſſion of the Crown, he did declare in the Preſence of Almighty God, that he never gave, nor made any Contract of Marriage, nor was marry'd to Mrs. Walters alias Barlow, the Duke of Monmouth's Mother, nor any other Woman whatſoever, but to his preſent Wife Queen Catharine then living. Which Declaration was on the 15th of June Regiſter'd on Record in the High Court of Chancery, and all the great Lords of the Privy-Council, who were preſent when his Majeſty declar'd and ſign'd the ſame, atteſted the Action upon their corporal Oaths in open Court. The Lord Chancellor declaring at the ſame Time, that this Declaration is not Inrol'd here to receive any Augmentation of Repute or Force from this Court; for it cannot receive more than it hath already; but only to be preſerv'd here as in a Repoſitory or Regiſtry: And he doubts not but it will alſo find a more noble Regiſtry than this, that is, the Hearts of all the Loyal Subjects of the Nation. 1680. Car. 32 Reſ. 21

4. In Eaſter and Trinity Terms this Year, there happen'd ſeveral Proſecutions and Tryals, of which ſome Notice ought to be here taken. About the middle of Eaſter-Term, upon the Evidence of Dangerfield, a Bill of Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt the Counteſs of Powis was deliver'd to the Grand-Jury of Middleſex; who not being ſatisfy'd with the Validity of the Evidence, after a long Examination, brought in the Bill, Ignoramus. About a Week after, Richard Tasborough Eſquire, a Roman Catholick, of Flixton in Suffolk, was try'd at the King's-Bench Bar upon an Indictment of High-Treaſon in conſpiring the Death of the King; but upon a long Hearing, to no great Purpoſe, the Jury, without going from the Bar, brought him in Not Guilty, upon which he was diſcharg'd. Two Days after, the Lord Stafford, one of the five in the Tower, was brought to the ſame Bar, by Habeas Corpus, where complaining of his long Impriſonment, he mov'd for Bail; but being Impeach'd by Parliament, the Judges told him, he was not within the Benefit of the late Habeas Corpus Act, and ſo could not relieve him. But the Day following, Sir Henry Tichburn, the elder Roper, and John Caryl Eſquire, were bail'd at the ſame Bar, tho' accus'd of High-Treaſon; and the Reaſon given was, becauſe only Mr. Oates, one Witneſs, appear'd againſt them, wherefore they were inlarg'd upon Bail. On the laſt Day of the Term, the Counteſs of Powis, Sir Robert Peyton, and one Beddingfield, were abſolutely diſcharg'd of all Attendance. Several Proſecutions.

On the firſt Day of Trinity Term, Mrs. Elizabeth Cellier, formerly mention'd, was try'd for High-Treaſon at the King's-Bench Bar; the Indictment running in the uſual Form as againſt the reſt of the Plotters: But the Chief, and almoſt only Evidence againſt her, Thomas Dangerfield, being prov'd by Records then produc'd ſo great and infamous a Criminal, his Teſtimony was refus'd to be admitted by the Court, and chiefly in regard he ſtood outlaw'd of Felony, and Felony not being expreſs'd in his Pardon, ſhe was therefore found Not Guilty; and Dangerfield himſelf committed to Cuſtody, till he could find Bail to reverſe the Outlawry, to anſwer the Felony, and for his good Behaviour. But within a few Days after, the ſaid Dangerfield produc'd a Newgate Pardon, wherein all Felonies were pardon'd; and his Name being found therein, he was diſcharg'd. Proceedings againſt Mrs. Cellier.

As

1680. Car. 32 Reſ. 20

As to Mrs. Cellier, ſhe ſhortly after publiſh'd a Narrative of her Tryal and Sufferings, under the Name of Malice Defeated, in which were found ſome ſevere Reflections upon Perſons, which were look'd upon as affronting to the Government: For which ſhe was try'd a ſecond Time, and found guilty of Publiſhing a Libel, and ſentenc'd to ſtand three Times in the Pillory, to pay a thouſand Pounds Fine, and to ſuffer Impriſonment till all was perform'd. Others that were to be try'd about the Plot, in regard the Attorney-General had not ſufficient Evidence againſt them, were ſome bail'd, and ſome abſolutely diſcharg'd, by vertue of the Act of late Habeas Corpus. Of the former ſort were the Lord Aſton, Sir James Symonds, Edward Peters, and Needham, with ſeveral others who were reputed Prieſts. Mr. Howard, Mr. Hevening-ham, both the Ropers, Sir John Gaye, and young Langhorn, were abſolutely diſcharg'd from their long Impriſonments, ſome having lain there three and twenty Months; and the Reaſon of their Diſcharge was, becauſe Mr. Attorney-General declared, that he had but one Witneſs againſt them. Sir Anthony Dean, and Mr. Pepys, were alſo at the ſame Time finally diſcharg'd from further Attendance.

The Tryal of the Earl of Caſtlemain.

The Tryal that made moſt Noiſe, was that of the Earl of Caſtlemain, Husband to the famous Dutcheſs of Cleveland, who was arraign'd for High-Treaſon at the King's-Bench Bar, on the 23d of June, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, and a Jury of very conſiderable Gentlemen. The two Witneſſes againſt him were Oates and Dangerfield. The former ſwore to ſome treaſonable Correſpondencies carry'd on by Letters, &c. beyond the Seas, by his Lordſhip; and further, that he was acquainted with the great April Conſult, ſo often mention'd, and thereupon ſaid, That now he would be reveng'd for the Injuries done him. The ſame Evidence had formerly ſworn before the King and Council, and the two Houſes of Parliament, that he had ſeen a Divorce ſu'd out at Rome, by his Lordſhip, between Him and his Dutcheſs; but being now ſtrictly examin'd upon it, he began to faulter in that, and ſome other Particulars, in which he was much pinch'd by the Earl; ſo that he manifeſtly loſt Ground in this Tryal. As to Dangerfield, tho' he had been made a Legal Witneſs by his late Pardon, yet his Actions had been ſuch, that it could not make him a Creditable Witneſs; ſo the Jury, without examining ſo much into Oates's Reputation, ſoon brought the Earl in Not Guilty, which was follow'd with great Shouts and Acclamations, to the Diſappointment and Mortification of many at that Time.

He is acquitted.

Oates's great Second and Aſſiſtant Bedloe, was now abſent, and within leſs than two Months after dy'd at Briſtol. Four Days before his Death, in his laſt Sickneſs, he was viſited by the Lord-Chief-Juſtice North, then in his Circuit, before whom he ſign'd the following Depoſitions: 'The 'Examinant ſaith, That the Duke of York hath been ſo far engag'd in 'the Plot, as he hath ſeen by Letters in Cardinal Barbarini's Secreta-'ry's Study, that no Part that hath been prov'd againſt any Man already, 'that hath ſuffer'd, but that to the full thoſe Letters have made him 'guilty of it; all but what tended to the King's Death. And at Rome I 'ask'd Father Anderton, and Father Lodge, two Jeſuits, What would 'the Duke do with his Brother when he was King? And they anſwer'd 'me, They would find a Means for that; they would give him no Trouble 'about it. Then I told them, I believ'd the Duke lov'd his Brother ſo 'well, he would ſuffer no Violence to be done to him. They ſaid, No: 'If the Duke could be brought to that, as he had been religiouſly to eve-'ry Thing elſe, they might do their Work; their other Buſineſs was rea-'dy, and they might do it preſently. But they knew they could not bring

'him to that Point; but they would take care for that themſelves. They 'had not begun with him to leave him in ſuch Scruples as that. But they 'would ſet him into his Throne; and there he ſhould reign blindfold three 'or four Days; for they had ſetled ſome they ſhould pitch the Action upon, 'ſhould clear their Party. And then he ſhould fly upon them with the 'Sword of Revenge. And this Examinant doth further add, That the 'Queen is not, to this Examinant's Knowledge, nor by any Thing that 'he could ever find out, any Way concern'd in the Murder of the King; 'but barely by her Letters conſenting and promiſing to contribute what 'Money ſhe could to the Introducing the Catholick Religion. Nay, 'it was a great while, and it made her weep before ſhe could be brought 'to that.' Beſides this Depoſition, he declar'd to the Lord Chief Juſtice upon the Faith of a dying Man, That whatſoever he had teſtify'd concerning the Plot, was True: And that he had wrong'd no Man by his Teſtimony, but had teſtify'd rather under than over what was Truth; And further, That he had other Things to diſcover, which were of great Importance to the King, and the Country, with other Matters of the like Nature. In Concluſion, his Lordſhip was deſired to repreſent to his Majeſty his Condition, and that his Sickneſs was very Chargeable, and move his Majeſty on his Behalf for ſome Supply of Money for his Subſiſtance; which he promis'd to do. But he dy'd ſoon after, on the 20th Day of Auguſt. We know not how to ſpeak ſoftly of the dying Words of one hardned by many Years Villanies; but muſt expreſly declare, that as to his publick Oaths, he did not only ſwear to the moſt ſhocking Improbabilities, but ſometimes chang'd, and othertimes contradicted his own Evidence. However, great Uſe was made of his laſt Words in the next Parliament, which came in very ſeaſonably for the Support of the Credit of the Plot, which was now in a declining Condition.

Diſturbances in London about Sheriffs.

5. During the Heat of theſe Times, the City of London felt the Effect, and was agitated with more than uſual Violence, in the Election of two Sheriffs. The Choice upon Midſummer Day fell upon Mr. Slingsby Bethel and Mr. Henry Corniſh, the former one of the Committee of Safety in the late Times, and both accounted Phanaticks by one Party, and Patriots by another; but ſince appearing uncapable to bear Office in any Corporation by a Statute in the 13th of this King, a new Election was appointed to be at Guild-Hall on Wedneſday the 14th of July. Before which Time, changing their Minds, theſe two qualify'd themſelves by Receiving the Sacrament, Abjuring the Covenant, &c. as appointed by the ſaid Act, and ſtood for a new Choice; againſt whom appear'd two other Competitors, Mr. Box and Mr. Nicholſon; and with ſuch a Strength, that they came to a Poll, a thing uncommon till this Time. During which, a Riotous Aſſault was committed on the Perſon of Sir Simon Lewis, one of the preſent Sheriffs, by Osborn a Draper, and others of Bethel's Party; which being repreſented to the King the ſame Night, by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs in Perſon, he order'd a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer to be iſſu'd out for the Tryal of the ſaid Riot. They continu'd Polling with great Noiſe 'till Monday following, and from thence by Adjournment to Thurſday; while the King in the mean Time was nobly entertain'd at Supper at Sheriff Lewis's Houſe, on Tueſday the 20th of July, and went the next Day to Windſor.

Bethel and Corniſh Elected.

On the 29th of July, and not before, the Votes were declared at a Common-Hall then aſſembled at the Guild-Hall, to ſtand thus, Bethel, 2276; Corniſh, 2483; Box, 1428; Nicholſon, 1230. Whereupon the two firſt were declared choſen, with great and mighty Acclamations. At the ſame time an Addreſs was preſented to the Lord Mayor by Thomas Papillon Eſquire, in the Name of the Commons of the City, 'thereby diſowning all tumultuous and diſorderly Proceedings in their laſt Aſſembly, other than what might be the Effect of Emulation for his Majeſty's Service, and the Preſervation of their own juſt Rights; deſiring his Lordſhip to repreſent the ſame to the King, and that he wou'd in their Names humbly beſeech his Majeſty that the Parliament might ſpeedily aſſemble.' To which the Lord Mayor anſwer'd in a ſhort Speech, 'That he had not miſrepreſented any Thing touching their laſt Aſſembly to his Majeſty: That their Addreſs touching the Parliament might have been ſpared, in Regard the King had been pleas'd to declare to him, and aſſure him, That the Parliament ſhou'd ſit in October next; however he wou'd not be wanting with all Humility to lay the whole Matter before Him.' And within a few Days after, it was made known by a Publick Proclamation, That the Parliament ſhou'd Sit and do Buſineſs on the 21ſt Day of October; to the great Satisfaction of the prevailing Part of the City, who had choſen the very ſame Members they had in the laſt Parliament.

Proceedings in Council.

6. But before we come to the Meeting of this much expected Parliament, we are to take notice of the Proceedings this Summer of the Court and Miniſtry, and other Leading Men of the Times. After ſome Alterations in the Council, formerly mention'd, the firſt Digeſtion of Affairs was in a great meaſure manag'd by the Lord Sunderland, Mr. Hyde, and Mr. Godolphin, with whom Sir William Temple joyn'd occaſionally. The latter was offer'd the Place of Secretary Coventry, which, upon a Conſideration, he deſir'd to lay down; but upon his Refuſal it was given to Sir Leoline Jenkins, lately Ambaſſador at Nimiguen, and now Judge of the Admiralty. Sir William's Attendance was chiefly upon the Account of the Iriſh Affairs, which in the Beginning of the Year happen'd to be the Subject of much Debate in the Council; The Lord Lieutenant the Duke of Ormond, and Council there, having tranſmitted ſeveral Acts over to England, both of Grace and Supplies, in Order to a Parliament to be held in Ireland. This brought the Earl of Eſſex again into Play, after ſo much Diſcontent, and ſo little Attendance for ſeveral Months at Conncil. He had formerly ſaid to Sir William Temple's Brother, That he had more Credit with the King than all the reſt of his Miniſters, or any Man in England; and now he had the Opportunity to try the Extent of it. His Buſineſs was to undermine the Duke of Ormond, and get his Poſt; for his Eye and Heart had ever been bent upon his Return to the Government of Ireland; which made him ſteer all by that Compaſs, and purſue Court or Popular Humour, as he thought either moſt likely to obtain that End. Whenever the Iriſh Acts came into Council, he was ſure to be there; firſt raiſing many Difficulties in the particular Acts, and arraigning not only the Prudence, but Common Senſe of the Lord Lieutenant and Council there: Then Arguing againſt the Aſſembling a Parliament in that Kingdom; and at laſt Introducing Sir James Sheen to make Propoſals of Encreaſing the King's Revenue there near Eighty Thouſand Pounds a Year, upon a new Farm to himſelf and the Company he offer'd to be joyn'd with him. The Secret was, that if this fair Bait was ſwallow'd, Sir James was upon the Concluſion to declare, that he and his Company were ready to perform all the Conditions agreed on; but cou'd not do ſo great a Thing, unleſs my Lord Eſſex might be ſent over Lieutenant of Ireland. This plauſible Scheme, as it was ever ſupported by the Earl, ſo it was continually oppos'd by Sir William Temple, who found out

The Earl of Eſſex's Ambition.

out the Cheat of the whole Thing; and that this Farm, as it was drawn up, was not of the Revenue, but of the Crown of Ireland: And becauſe the Scheme was ſet on foot by the Earl of Eſſex, as a great Maſter-piece of that Cunning, which his Friends us'd to ſay was his Talent; a Talent, for which of all others Sir William had ever the greateſt Averſion. Tho' this was approv'd of by Mr. Hyde, and ſeveral of the Council, as very advantageous to the King, yet Sir William Temple and Sir Leoline Jenkins, by their Aſſiduity and Intereſt, laid the Matter ſo bare, and drew it to ſuch a Length, that the Earl with great Uneaſineſs ſeem'd to give over the Deſign at Court, and to reckon upon laying a ſurer Foundation for that Purpoſe, from the Credit he intended to gain in the approaching Parliament. 1680. Car. 32 Reſ. 21

In order to prevent or allay all Diſtempers, and to prepare for an eaſy Seſſion of Parliament the next Winter, the Miniſters were reſolv'd upon all Meaſures that might effect it during the Summer; and, as one of the Chief, were reſolv'd to ſend Ambaſſadors and Envoys to Spain, Denmark, and other of the Confederate Nations, and enter with them into the ſtricteſt Meaſures for the Common Defence againſt the Power of France. Upon which Account Sir William Temple was nominated for Ambaſſador into Spain, but the King cou'd not well part with him before the Meeting of the Parliament. For as it approach'd, there daily appear'd new Symptoms of Diſcontent and Diſturbance. The Duke of Monmouth, as before mention'd, returning from Holland without Leave, never came to Court, but made ſeveral Progreſſes Weſtward and Northward, viſiting ſuch of the Nobility and Gentry as he knew were true to his Intereſt, and was receiv'd in many Places with unuſual Pomp and Ceremony; by which means he increas'd the Affection of the People, and in effect made himſelf the Head of thoſe who were diſcontented either with the Return of the Duke of York, or the Intermiſſion of the Parliament. In Acting this Part, he was guided by the penetrating Head of the Earl of Shaftsbury, who reſolv'd to blow up the Fire as high as he cou'd this Summer; ſo as to make the Neceſſity greater of the Parliament's Sitting at the Time appointed. And becauſe Boldneſs ſo well reſembles Strength, to encourage his Party with an Opinion of Both, he engag'd above a Dozen Lords and Gentlemen of Note, to go with him publickly to Weſtminſter-Hall, and at the King's-Bench Bar to preſent the Duke of York as a Popiſh Recuſant, which they did by a Bill in Form. Thoſe that atteſted or ſign'd it were the Earl of Huntington, the Earl of Shaftsbury, the Lord Gray of Wark, the Lord Brandon Gerard, the Lord Ruſſel, the Lord Cavendiſh, Sir Gilbert Gerard, Sir Edward Hungerford, Sir Scroop How, Sir William Cooper, Sir Thomas Wharton, John Trenchard Eſquire, Thomas Thynne Eſquire, and William Foreſter Eſquire. Tho', by reaſon of the ſudden Diſmiſſion of the Grand Jury, the Matter had no Conſequence in the Forms of the Court; yet it had a general one upon the Minds of the People, and a ſtrong one upon the Paſſions of all thoſe that were ſo publickly engag'd in this bold Step againſt the Duke of York; which was indeed breaking all Meaſures with him, and entering into the deſperate Reſolution of either Ruining his Royal Highneſs, or Overthrowing Themſelves.

The D. of Monmouth's Deſigns.

The D. of York preſented in Weſtminſter-Hall.

Upon this ſurprizing Action, the Earl of Eſſex, who had ſo eagerly purſu'd his Return to the Government of Ireland, began again to fall into Commerce with the Earl of Shaftsbury; who ſaid to him in theſe ſhameleſs Words, My Lord, if you will come in to Us, never trouble your Self, we'll make you Lieutenant of Ireland. The Way to this Return was to oppoſe the Duke of York's Stay in England, eſpecially during the Seſſion of Parliament. The Lord Halliſax, tho' he fell not in with the Lord Shaftsbury, yet was glad to make fair Weather againſt the Parliament met, by his Oppoſitions to the Duke. The Lord Sunderland was ſtruck with the Boldneſs of the Preſentment in Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Conſequence of Men being irretrievably engag'd in an Attempt wherein they were like to be ſeconded by the Humour of the Nation upon the Allarms of Popery; which made him conclude, the King wou'd not be able to ſupport his Brother any longer, but muſt be forc'd to deſert him at laſt; and he believ'd his Majeſty himſelf was of the ſame Opinion. Mr. Godolphin fell naturally into the ſame Thoughts with the Lord Sunderland: So that upon the Debate in Council, concerning the Duke's Stay, or Return into Scotland before the Parliament met, theſe Four joyn'd intirely in the Reaſons and Advices for his going away. And tho' the reſt of the Council were generally of the contrary Opinion, yet the King fell in with theſe Four, and concluded the Thing, both againſt the Duke's Will and his Friends. And ſo the Duke, having received new Aſſurances of his Brother's Steadineſs, departed for Scotland the very Day before the Meeting of the Parliament, leaving his Adverſaries in Appearance Maſters of the Field.

He retires to Scotland.

The FOURTH PARLIAMENT.

VI. 1. And now at laſt came the long expected Day, the 21ſt of October, being the ſame Day two Years of the Meeting of the laſt Seſſion of the long Parliament, which broke with the King, and therefore by ſome thought an Ominous Day. The King had provided againſt this Day with as much Precaution as reaſonably could be expected; and being now prepared, his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers in his Royal Robes, with the uſual Solemnity, and ſending for the Houſe of Commons, he made this remarkable Speech to both Houſes; Rot. Parl. Wright. Collections. Temple.

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, The ſeveral Prorogations I have made, have been very advantagious to our Neighbours, and very uſeful to Me; for I have employ'd that Time in Making and Perfecting an Alliance with the Crown of Spain, ſuitable to that which I had before with the States of the United Provinces, and they alſo had with Spain, conſiſting of mutual Obligations of Succour and Defence. I have all the Reaſon in the World to believe, that what was ſo much deſired by former Parliaments, muſt needs be very grateful to you now: For tho' ſome, perhaps, may wiſh theſe Meaſures had been taken ſooner; yet no Man can with Reaſon think that it is now too late; for they who deſire to make theſe Alliances, and they who deſire to break them, ſhew themſelves to be of another Opinion. And as theſe are the beſt Meaſures that could be taken for the Safety of England, and the Repoſe of Chriſtendom; ſo they cannot fail to attain their End, and to ſpread and improve themſelves further, if our Diviſions at Home, do not render our Friendſhip leſs conſiderable Abroad.

'To prevent thoſe as much as may be, I think fit to renew to you all the Aſſurances which can be deſired, That nothing ſhall be wanting on my Part to give you the fulleſt Satisfaction your Hearts can wiſh, for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion, which I am fully reſolv'd to Maintain againſt all the Conſpiracies of our Enemies, and to concur with you in any New Remedies, which ſhall be propos'd, that may conſiſt with the Preſerving the Succeſſion of the Crown in its Due and Legal Courſe of Deſcent. And in Order to this, I do recommend it to you, to purſue the further Examination of the Plot, with a ſtrict and an impartial Enquiry. I do not think my Self Safe, nor you neither, till that Matter be gone through with; and therefore it will be neceſſa-

'ry

'ry that the Lords in the Tower be brought to their ſpeedy Tryal, that 1680.
'Juſtice may be done.

'I need not tell you what Danger the City of Tangier is in, nor of Car. 32
'what Importance it is to Us to preſerve it. I have, with a mighty Reſ. 21
'Charge and Expence, ſent a very conſiderable Relief thither; but con-
'ſtantly to maintain ſo great a Force as that War will require, and to 'make ſuch new Works and Fortifications, without which the Place
'will not be long Tenable, amounts to ſo vaſt a Sum, that without your 'Support, it will be impoſſible for Me to undergo it: Therefore I lay
'the Matter plainly before you, and do deſire your Advice and Aſſi'ſtance.

'But that which I value above all the Treaſure in the World, and 'which I am ſure will give me greater Strength and Reputation both at 'Home and Abroad, than any Treaſure can do, is, A perfect Union a- 'mong our Selves. Nothing but this can reſtore the Kingdom to that 'Strength and Vigour which it ſeems to have loſt, and raiſe us again to 'that Conſideration which England hath uſually had. All Europe have 'their Eyes upon this Aſſembly, and think their own Happineſs or Mi-
'ſery, as well as ours, will depend upon it. If we ſhould be ſo unhappy
'as to fall into ſuch a Miſunderſtanding among our Selves, as would ren'der our Friendſhip unſafe to truſt to, it will not be to be wonder'd at,
'if our Neighbours ſhould begin to take new Reſolutions, and perhaps
'ſuch as may be Fatal to Us.

'Let us therefore take care that we do not gratify our Enemies, and 'diſcourage our Friends, by any unſeaſonable Diſputes. If any ſuch do
'happen, the World will ſee it was no Fault of mine; for I have done
'all that was poſſible for me to do, to keep you in Peace while I live,
'and to leave you ſo when I dye. But from ſo great Prudence and ſo
'good Affection as Yours, I can fear nothing of this Kind; but do rely 'upon you All, that you will uſe your beſt Endeavours to bring this Par'liament to a good and happy Concluſion.

After this Speech, the Lord Chancellor, without making any Himſelf, by his Majeſty's Command, directed the Commons to return to their Houſe, and to proceed to the Choice of a Speaker: Which they accordingly did, and unanimouſly Elected William Williams Eſquire, of Gray's-Inn, Councellor at Law, and Recorder of Cheſter; who, the next Day, was preſented to his Majeſty ſeated on his Throne in the Houſe of Lords, and readily approv'd by him. One of the firſt Things the Commons did, was to purge their own Houſe of certain obnoxious Members; as Sir Robert Cann, a Burgeſs for Briſtol, having ſaid, There was no Plot but a Presbyterian Plot; and Sir Francis Withins, Head Steward of Weſtminſter, and one of the Burgeſſes for the ſame, for having been an Abhorrer of the late Petitions for the Parliament's Sitting. The firſt of theſe was expell'd the Houſe, and committed to the Tower, the other was only expell'd; but both were order'd to receive their Cenſure on their Knees. And ſeveral other Members were declared Guilty of the laſt mention'd Offence. While they were making theſe Inquiſitions, they were not ſatisfy'd in puniſhing their own Members, but took Notice of others that were without their Walls; and among the reſt, Sir George Jeffreys became the Object of their Diſpleaſure; who being Recorder of London, the King's Serjeant at Law, and Chief-Juſtice of Cheſter, was for the foremention'd Crime, Voted A Betrayer of the Rights of the Subject, and an Addreſs order'd to be made to his Majeſty to remove him from all Publick Offices. At the ſame Time they order'd a very ſtrict Enquiry to be made after all ſuch Perſons as had been any Ways

Car. 32 Ref. 21

From the Beginning of the Seſſion, their Minds were fill'd and heated with the Fears and Apprehenſions of Popery, Plots and Conſpiracies. And now all Sorts of Plot-Diſcoverers apply'd themſelves with their Narratives and Relations, and never fail'd of proportionable Encouragement. Dangerfield began with giving in his Information into the Houſe; and was ſoon after follow'd by Jenniſon, and Dugdale, and one Turberville a new Evidence, who had all ſomething Material or Surprizing to lay before the Aſſembly. Bedloe's laſt Depoſition and Words before the Lord-Chief-Juſtice North, was order'd to be Printed; and as theſe were look'd upon as a great Strengthner of the Credit of the Plot, ſo his Death was accounted at this Time a great Misfortune; and his Widow was encourag'd to Petition the Houſe of Commons for a Maintenance, in Conſideration of her Husband's great Services to the Publick. Great Notice was likewiſe taken of Dr. Tongue, the firſt Mover in this great Affair, who was now by the Commons recommended to his Majeſty for the firſt good Eccleſiaſtical Preferment that fell in his Gift; but the Doctor was diſappointed of the Benefit, by leaving the World not long after, in the Month of December this Year. Beſides theſe Evidences at Home, there came a Company of others from Ireland, as Hetherington, Murphey, the two Fitz-Geralds, &c. who gave in their Informations of a Dangerous Plot in that Kingdom: Upon which Account, Dr. Oliver Plunket, the Titular Primate of Ireland, was now brought over to be try'd for High-Treaſon.

Plot-Diſcoverers incourag'd.

Tongue's Death.

As the Houſe of Commons proceeded with a reſiſtleſs Force againſt the Plot and Popery, ſo the King, rather than ſtem the Torrent, ſeem'd to fall in with them in a like Zeal againſt both; and therefore on the 30th of October, he iſſu'd out a Proclamation, For the Incouragement of the further Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot, in which he Declar'd 'His Princely Care for ſecuring the true Proteſtant Religion, and for ſatisfying 'the Minds of all his Loving Subjects therein; and that therefore he 'thought fit, for the more effectual Diſcovery and Suppreſſion of the 'moſt Horrid and Execrable Popiſh Plot, and the Incouragement of all 'Perſons who have any Knowledge thereof, to make Diſcovery of the 'ſame, to ſet forth his Royal Proclamation, hereby Promiſing and Aſſuring his free and gracious Pardon to all and every Perſon and Perſons, 'who within two Months next enſuing the Date of thoſe Preſents, 'ſhould come and give further Information and Evidence concerning 'the ſaid Popiſh Plot.

The King joyns in it.

2. But the greateſt Heats and Apprehenſions of the Houſe of Commons aroſe from his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, which were gradually carry'd to that Height, that nothing leſs than a total Exciſion could give Satisfaction. The firſt Debate began, October 26th, five Days after the Meeting of the Parliament, and was open'd by William Lord Ruſſel, who ſaid, 'That ſeeing by God's Providence and his Majeſty's Favour, 'they were aſſembled, to conſult and adviſe about the great Affairs of 'the Kingdom, it would be moſt conducive to begin with what was of 'moſt Conſequence both to the King and Country: It was his Opinion, 'That the Life of the King, the Safety of the Nation, and the Proteſtant 'Religion, were in great Danger from Popery; and that either that Parliament muſt ſuppreſs the Growth and Power thereof, or elſe Popery 'would ſoon deſtroy not only Parliaments, but all that was near and dear 'to them; therefore he humbly mov'd they might in the firſt Place 'take into Conſideration how to ſuppreſs Popery, and prevent a Popiſh Suc-

'Succeſſor.' Way being made, Sir Henry Capel, Brother to the Earl of Eſſex, ſeconded the Motion, and in a long Speech related, 'How 'the Popiſh Party made it their utmoſt Endeavours, by their Diabolical 'Counſels, to weaken the Proteſtant Intereſt, in order to a general De- 'ſtruction of it, by engaging us in a War againſt Holland, as alſo divid- 'ing our Fleet under Prince Rupert and General Monk, with a Deſign 'to deſtroy them, as well as our Navy at Chatham: How, when the Ci- 'ty of London was burnt in 1666, that thoſe who were taken in carry- 'ing on that wicked Act, were generally diſcharg'd without Tryal: How 'they caus'd the Violation of the Triple League, and ſacrific'd the King's 'Honour to the French, not only by making Alliance with them, but 'by ſeizing the Dutch Smyrna Fleet, and then proclaiming War againſt 'them, while the French only prov'd Spectators of the two Nations 'Ruin: How the Papiſts in Ireland were diſpens'd with to wear Arms, 'to the great Danger, as well as Prejudice of the Proteſtants there: 'That the Government of Scotland was quite alter'd, the Uſe of Parlia- 'ments in a Manner aboliſh'd, and the Government of that Kingdom 'lodg'd in a Commiſſioner and a Council, beſides an Army of twenty Thou- 'ſand Men ſetled: That all Endeavours were us'd to divide the Prote- 'ſtant Intereſt, and to incourage the Popiſh, who were emboldned to act 'any Thing, contrary both to Law and Reaſon, by Help of the Duke 'of York, in Hopes of having him for King. Thus they were encou- 'rag'd by the French Ambaſſador too, who by his Frequency at Court 'ſeem'd to be rather one of the Family and the King's Houſhold, than 'a Foreign Ambaſſador; and by his free Recourſe to his Majeſty, rather 'a prime Miniſter of State of this Kingdom, than a Counſellor to 'another Prince; and the Truth of all had been confirm'd by Coleman's 'Letters. Then he inferr'd, ſince all theſe Irregularities and Enormities 'proceeded from the Popiſh Party, ſupported by the Duke of York, 'it was high Time to think of ſome effectual Expedient to prevent Po- 'pery and a Popiſh Succeſſor. But ſince the Difficulties and Hazards 'he run were ſo great, and his King and Country had call'd him to this 'Service, he ſaid, I am reſolv'd, that as my Father loſt his Life for King 'Charles the Firſt, ſo I will not be afraid to venture mine for King 'Charles the Second.

Several other Members ſpoke to the ſame Effect, with a further Enumeration of Miſmanagements of the Affairs of the Kingdom, occaſion'd by the Papiſts and their Agents. But we do not find that any Member vindicated the Duke, or ſpoke in his Behalf, till the Houſe came to theſe two following Reſolves, upon the Second of November; 'Reſolved, 'That the Duke of York's being a Papiſt, and the Hopes of his coming 'ſuch to the Crown, hath given the greateſt Countenance and Incourage- 'ment to the preſent Deſigns and Conſpiracies againſt the King and 'Proteſtant Religion. Reſolved, That in Defence of the King's Per- 'ſon and Government, and Proteſtant Religion, this Houſe doth De- 'clare, That they will ſtand by his Majeſty with their Lives and For- 'tunes, and that if his Majeſty ſhou'd come to any violent Death, which 'God forbid, they will revenge it to the utmoſt on the Papiſts.' Upon which Colonel Titus and the Lord Ruſſel did ſeverally move that a Committee be appointed to bring in a Bill to diſable the Duke of York from Inheriting the Imperial Crown of this Realm: And Mr. Harbord zealouſly argu'd 'the Neceſſity of it, from the great Influence 'the Duke and his Party had upon the King, that Peace, War, Foreign 'Alliances, Meeting, Diſſolutions and Prorogations of Parliaments, Try- 'als at Weſtminſter-Hall, Reſolutions in Council, and other Things of 'Import-

Further Debates.

1680. Car. 32 Ref. 21

'Importance, had been influenc'd by a Popiſh Party: That ſome who 'had the Examination of the Plot, in which the King's Life and the Safety 'of the Nation was ſo much concern'd, had been kept off to Admira- 'tion, and the Witneſſes diſcourag'd even to Deſpair; all proceeding 'from no leſs Perſon than the Duke, for whoſe Perſon he had no ill Will, 'but rather a great Veneration, as deſcended from the Royal Family; 'but, he thought, it ought not to ſtand in Competition with his Duty 'to the King and Country, which cou'd never be ſafe, ſo long as By-In- 'tereſt was ſo predominant; therefore he was for the Bill.

On the other Side Mr. William Garraway ſtood up, and ſaid, 'That 'he was conſcious of the Danger of Popery, yet he hop'd the Prudence 'of the Houſe might find out ſome Expedients to ſecure the Nation, 'without the Bill of Excluſion; arguing, That the King had at the Open- 'ing of the Seſſion Declared, That he wou'd conſent to any Thing that 'ſhou'd be offer'd for the Proteſtant Religion, provided it conſiſted with 'the Preſerving the Succeſſion in the due Legal Courſe of Deſcent; and 'to proceed in the Bill propos'd, wou'd be a Means to diſoblige the King, 'and interrupt all other Affairs, which might at that Time be very un- 'fortunate to the Nation, and our Neighbours too. For his Part, he 'was more afraid of an Army without a General, than of a General 'without an Army; therefore he thought it moſt adviſeable, inſtead of 'this Bill to bring in another for Baniſhing all Papiſts out of the Na- 'tion, and other Bills for having frequent Parliaments, and to ſecure good 'Judges and Juſtices. He humbly mov'd that they wou'd try thoſe 'Ways, and not proceed with ſuch Severity againſt the Duke, ſeeing it 'was not conſiſtent with Juſtice to paſs ſuch a ſevere Sentence upon the 'Duke, who had not yet been heard, or found guilty.' To theſe Ob- jections Sir Henry Capel and Colonel Titus ſpoke ſucceſſively; and the former inſiſted 'That all other Bills, without the Excluſion, wou'd prove 'ineffectual, ſince they muſt be left in the unhappy Condition, of Con- 'teſting with the Influence of a Popiſh Succeſſor during the King's Life, 'and with the Power of a Popiſh King hereafter: And whereas it was 'ſaid, Take away the Army, and you need not fear the General, he an- 'ſwer'd, That the General that had the Power of a King, wou'd never 'want an Army.' The Colonel argu'd, 'That to proceed contrary to 'the King's Reſolution, of not Conſenting to the Succeſſion from its 'Legal Courſe of Deſcent, was not inconſiſtent with their Duties, nor 'void of Precedent. For it had oftentimes hapned, That Parliaments 'before now had offer'd ſuch Advice to the Kings of this Nation, as 'had not been grateful to them at firſt, and yet after mature Deliberati- 'on had been well reſented, and found abſolutely neceſſary: As when 'his Majeſty had been perſwaded to grant a Toleration in 1672, and to 'tell the Parliament in his Speech made to them, That he wou'd ſtand 'by it, and make it good; yet that Houſe of Commons finding it of dan- 'gerous Conſequence, and humbly offering ſuch their Advice to his 'Majeſty, he was pleas'd, notwithſtanding the ſaid Speech, to cancel 'the ſaid Declaration.' Other Things were alledg'd to prove the Inſe- curity under a Popiſh Prince; but nothing ſeem'd to have made a greater Impreſſion upon the Houſe, than a Belief that the King, by Importunity or Neceſſity, wou'd comply at laſt.

But that nothing might be wanting, a Perſon of Quality ſtood up, and reflected upon the Duke and the Earl of Clarendon for making up the Match for the King, as foreſeeing the Queen wou'd have no Children; and particularly on the Duke for the Loſs of the Earl of Sandwich, for clearing of Perſons taken in the Fire of London, the Death of Sir Ed- mund-

mund-bury Godfrey, &c. Whereupon he was ſomewhat interrupted by Mr. Hyde, who ſtood up to Vindicate the Honour of the Duke, and the Reputation of his Father; and as to the Bill, his Opinion was, 'That 'the bringing of it in wou'd be a great Hindrance to the Buſineſs of 'the Nation, without attaining its End: He declar'd, He was concern'd 'for the Juſtice of the Nation; for tho' the Duke deſerv'd great Morti-'fications, for giving ſuch Suſpicion of his Religion, and might reaſona-'bly expect not to come to the Crown, on ſuch Terms as formerly; yet 'he thought it very hard to offer at ſo great a Condemnation, without 'hearing the Perſon concern'd, or having had any preceding Proceſs: 'For his Part, he made it a great Queſtion, Whether it wou'd be Bind-'ing to him, or a great many other Loyal Perſons of this Nation; and 'if not, it might hereafter occaſion a Civil War. He farther ſaid, I 'I cou'd not apprehend our Caſe ſo deſperate, but that we might ſecure 'our ſelves ſome other Way, without Overturning Foundations; ſtill, 'he cou'd not fear a General without an Army; and mov'd for Expe-'dients.' Sir Leoline Jenkins ſeconded Mr. Hyde, and ſhew'd, 'That 'Expedients were more eligible than Extremity, and that he look'd on the 'Bill to be the greateſt Extremity imaginable, and the Paſſing of the 'Bill to be againſt both Law and Conſcience, and that nothing leſs than 'an Army cou'd be neceſſary to ſupport it: Therefore he humbly con-'ceiv'd, That the Tryal of Expedients might be made; for it was Time 'enough to proceed to Extremity, when all the Ways and Means were 'found inſufficient.

1680. Car. 32 Reſ 21

In anſwer to theſe two Perſons, Mr. Thomas Bennet ſaid, 'That no 'Bill cou'd be againſt Law, nor this againſt Conſcience, unleſs it cou'd 'be made out, That we ought in Conſcience to bring in Popery. As 'to Expedients, he ſhou'd be glad to hear any Arguments to make them 'good; but he was affraid that when they came to be examin'd at the 'Bottom, they wou'd be found very inſufficient, and that they might 'as well think to catch a Lyon with a Mouſe-Trap, as to be ſecure 'againſt Popery, without the Excluſion Bill. That thoſe they were to 'deal with, cou'd not be bound by any Law or Contract whatſoever, 'much leſs cou'd their Words or Promiſes be depended upon: Did 'they ever keep any League or Contract that was made with Prote-'ſtants, longer than was neceſſary, in Order to cut their Throats? And 'if Laws cannot bind inferior Perſons, much leſs will they Princes of the 'Catholick Religion.' He afterwards ſaid, 'He was of Opinion, That 'ſuch an Engine might be contriv'd as ſhou'd give ſuch a Whirle 'to the Popiſh Intereſt, as that it ſhou'd never riſe up againſt us again; 'he knew of no Difficulty but the ſame which happen'd to Archimedes, 'where to fix it; and as long as there was a good King, he was not alto-'gether at a Loſs for that neither. As to the Fears of a Civil War, he 'ſaid he never fear'd a War in Favour of Idolatry, eſpecially when we 'had gotten a Law on our Side to defend our Religion.' This Gentle-man was ſeconded by Sir Thomas Player, one of the City Members, who ſaid, 'He had read in Scripture of one Man dying for a Nation, 'but never of Three Nations dying for One Man; which was like to 'be our Caſe.' He further told them, 'That he had been lately in Com-'pany with a great many Perſons, where he had heard the Duke ſo cry'd 'up, and the King ſo ſlighted, that he dreaded they had Thoughts of act-'ing over here, what was lately done in Portugal;' therefore he vehe-mently preſs'd to have the Bill go forwards.

On the contrary, Mr. Edward Seymour, after an Introduction, in which he complain'd That he had been Shot at by Wind-Guns, ſpoke

thus; 'Sir, I muſt confeſs I am very much againſt the bringing in this 'Bill, for I think it a very unfortunate Thing, that whereas his Majeſty 'hath prohibited but One Thing only, that we ſhou'd ſo ſoon fall upon it. 'I do not ſee there is any Cauſe we ſhou'd fear Popery ſo much, as to 'make us run into ſuch an Extream. —Have we not had great Experi-'ence of the Duke's Love for his Nation; hath he not always ſquared his 'Actions by the exacteſt Rules of Juſtice and Moderation? Is there not 'a Poſſibility of being of the Church, and not of the Court of Rome? 'Hath he not bred up his Children in the Proteſtant Religion, and ſhew'd 'a great Reſpect for all Perſons of that Profeſſion? Wou'd it not be a 'dangerous Thing for Him (I mean in Point of Intereſt) to offer at any 'ſuch Alteration of the Religion eſtabliſh'd by Law? Can any Man ima-'gine that it can be attempted without great Hazard of utterly deſtroy-'ing both Himſelf and his Family? And can ſo undiſcreet an Attempt 'be expected from a Prince ſo abounding in Prudence and Wiſdom? But 'tho' we ſhou'd reſolve to have no Moderation in our Proceedings a-'gainſt Papiſts, yet I hope we ſhall have ſome for our ſelves. It cannot 'be imagin'd that ſuch a Law will bind all here in England, any in Scot-'land; and it is diſputed whether it will be binding in Ireland; ſo that 'in Probability, it will not only divide us amongſt our ſelves, but the 'Three Kingdoms one from the other, and occaſion a miſerable Civil 'War. For it cannot be imagin'd, that the Duke will ſubmit to it. And 'to diſinherit him for his Religion, is not only to act according to the 'Popiſh Principles, but to give Cauſe for a War with all the Catholick 'Princes in Europe; and that muſt occaſion a Standing Army, from 'whom there will be more Danger of Popery and Arbitrary Government, 'than from a Popiſh Succeſſor, or a Popiſh King.' To ſecond which Point Sir R. Graham made a long Diſcourſe, ſhewing the Dangers and Miſeries of a Civil War, by a full Account of thoſe between the Houſes of York and Lancaſter; and that this Bill wou'd break the Union between the three Kingdoms, and totally cut off Scotland: Therefore if the Bill muſt be brought in, he deſir'd that the Succeſſor ſhou'd be nam'd, which he was ſure wou'd require a great deal of Conſideration.

In anſwer to theſe, and other Oppoſers, Sir William Jones ſaid, 'Sir, 'I am of Opinion that Expedients in Politicks, are like Mountebank-'Tricks in Phyſick; as the one does ſeldom Good to Bodies Natural, ſo 'nor the other in Bodies Politick. Government is a weighty Thing, and 'cannot be protected and ſupported but by ſuch Pillars as have neither 'Flaws nor Cracks, and plac'd on a ſure Foundation. I am affraid that 'all Expedients will be found to have far different Qualifications. I can-'not ſee how the Excluding any Perſon who hath a Right to the Suc-'ceſſion, depending upon Contingencies, ſhou'd occaſion a Civil War; 'but rather do think, that there is a great deal more Danger, not only 'of a Civil War, but of our Religion and Liberty too, if we ſhou'd not, 'and ſo have a Popiſh King: For I do believe, that ſuch a King wou'd 'ſoon have a Popiſh Council: For if there be Eleven to Seven now for 'the Intereſt of a Popiſh Succeſſor, what may we not expect when we 'have a Popiſh King? And ſhou'd you not then have ſoon Popiſh Judges, 'Juſtices, Deputy Lieutenants, Commanders at Sea and Land, nay and 'Popiſh Biſhops too? For if there be none put into any of theſe Places 'now, that are for acting againſt a Popiſh Succeſſor, well may we expect 'that none ſhall be put in then, but what are for a Popiſh King.——This 'is not to diſinherit a Man for his Religion, but becauſe he has render'd 'himſelf uncapable to govern us, according to our Laws; which, whe-'ther it proceeded from his Religion, or any Thing elſe, is all one to us.

'His

'His being uncapable, is the Ground for our Proceedings, having no other Way to ſecure our ſelves. Upon the whole Matter, I do conclude, 'That a Popiſh King and a Proteſtant Religion are Irreconcilable, and we have no Reaſon to fear a Civil War, ſo long as we have a Law for our Defence, and a Proteſtant King to head us, which we cannot expect without paſſing ſome ſuch Bill under Debate, and therefore I humbly move it may be brought in. 1680. Car. 32 Ref. 21

Upon this, Mr. Finch, eldeſt Son to the Lord Chancellor, declar'd 'That the Buſineſs was of ſo high a Nature; that he cou'd not tell how 'to ſpeak of it without Fear and Trembling. To go about to alter the 'Succeſſion of the Crown, muſt be of great Concernment to all Engliſh 'Men, and therefore to be conſider'd with a great deal of Deliberation, 'for which the Juſtice, Prudence and Uſage of the Houſe call'd aloud. 'He ſaid he was not ſatisfy'd how they cou'd in Juſtice paſs any ſuch 'Bill as was propos'd; for he never heard of any Law which made an 'Opinion in Religion a Cauſe to be diſpoſſeſs'd of Right; in former 'Times it was not ſo, tho' there were Princes and Emperors that were 'Apoſtates: And Queen Elizabeth wou'd not allow of putting any ſuch 'Thing in practice, but rather choſe to proceed againſt the Queen of 'Scots, according to the ſetled Laws of the Nation. This Nation had 'been ſo unfortunate as to cut off one King already, they ought to have 'a Care how they cut off the Right of another, &c.' Mr. Boſcawen immediately exclaim'd, 'Have not the Papiſts always proceeded againſt the 'Proteſtants with a Barbarity ſurmounting the worſt of Heathens? And 'muſt we be ſo mighty careful how to proceed to hinder them from Ruling 'over us, as that we muſt ſtumble at every Straw, and be afraid of every 'Buſh? A Man that is in a Houſe that is on Fire, will leap out of a 'Window rather than be burnt; and ſo he inſiſted upon the Law of 'Self-Preſervation.' He was follow'd by Mr. Trenchard, who, among other Things, ſaid, 'Let it be never ſaid of this Houſe of Commons, 'that they were ſo ſtupify'd or negligent of their Duty to their Country, 'or ſo indifferent in their Religion, or Preſervation of their Liberties, as 'to forget ſo great a Concern. If, when we have done what we can, 'we ſhou'd be conquer'd by Force, or deceiv'd by ſuch little Arts and 'Tricks as may be us'd, a patient Submiſſion to God's Providence muſt 'follow. But to be the Occaſion of our own Deſtruction, by being ſupine, and inconſiderate, will never be anſwer'd to Poſterity.' In Concluſion of the Debate it was Reſolv'd, That a Bill be brought in to diſable the Duke of York to inherit the Imperial Crown of this Realm.

A Bill brought in to diſable the Duke.

Which Bill was read the firſt Time upon the 4th of November, when Sir Leoline Jenkins ſtood up and directly argu'd,' 1. That it was contra- 'ry to Natural Juſtice, to condemn any Man before the Conviction, or 'the Hearing of him. 2. It was contrary to the Principles of our Re- 'ligion; to diſpoſſeſs a Man of his Right, becauſe he differs in Point of 'Faith. 3. He was of Opinion That the Kings of England had their 'Right from God alone, and that no Power upon Earth cou'd deprive 'them of it. 4. It was againſt the Oath of Allegiance, taken in its own 'Senſe, without Jeſuitical Evaſions; which binding all Perſons to the 'King, his Heirs and Succeſſors, the Duke as Preſumptive Heir muſt be 'underſtood.' Other Members argu'd not only for the Legality, but for the Expedience, and even Neceſſity of ſuch a Bill, as the only probable Means of Preſerving the King, the Government and the Proteſtant Religion; and repeated ſome former Arguments: And ſo it was by a great Majority Reſolved, 'That the Bill ſhou'd be read a Second Time on Sa- 'turday Morning, the 6th of November.' At which Time it was likewiſe Reſolved, 'That the Bill be Committed to a Committee of the

New Debates upon it.

'whole House. And that it be an Instruction to the said Committee, 'That the Exclusion in the said Bill do extend to the Person of James 'Duke of York only. And that this House will Resolve it self into a 'Committee of the whole House, on Monday Morning next at Ten a 'Clock, to proceed to the Consideration of the said Bill.' Accordingly, on November the 8th the House Resolved it self into a Committee; and after many Debates about several Amendments, and Clauses to be added, the Bill to disable James Duke of York, &c. was agreed and Reported to the House; and Resolved, 'That the said Bill, with the several Clauses 'and Amendments, be Engrossed.

The Bill Engro'sid.

How this Matter came to be carry'd on with so much impetuous Zeal, Sir William Temple has given a short Account, who says, The Parliament began with the general Knowledge of so many great Persons appearing so publickly against the Duke in Westminster-Hall, and so considerable Ones in the Court it self, and at the Council Table: Those of the first sort fell immediately into the Cabals of Lords and Commons, who fram'd the Bill of Exclusion; wherein they were desperately engag'd, not only, as they profes's'd upon, Opinion of National Ends, but likewise upon that of Self-Preservation, having before now irreparably broken all Measures with the Duke: The Generality of the House of Commons were carry'd, partly with the Plausibleness of the thing, calculated in Appearance only against Popery, without any private Ends as they pretended; and partly with the Opinion of the King's Compliance, upon the Observing such Lords of the Court being engag'd so far in sending away the Duke. All the Duke of Monmouth's Friends drove it on violently; not doubting he wou'd come into the Duke's Place, tho' there was no immediate Provision for that. And all these Circumstances concurring, made so violent a Torrent for carrying this Bill, as nothing cou'd resist, or any Ways divert, and as it happens upon all Occasions, the Opposition made by three or four Men, made the Violence the Greater. Besides these general Circumstances, there were two more Particular and Personal, that seem'd to have a great Influence upon the House: One was, the Lord Russel's setting himself, almost with Affectation, at the Head of this Affair; who was a Person in general Repute of an honest worthy Gentleman, without Tricks or private Ambition, and who was known to venture as great a Stake perhaps as any Subject of England. The other was Sir William Jones entring upon it so abruptly and desperately as he did, the first Day he came into the House; and he being a Person of great Vertue and Piety, and bearing the Name of the greatest Lawyer of England, and commonly of a very wise Man; besides this, of a very rich, and of a wary, or rather timorous Nature; it made People generally conclude that the Thing was certain and safe, and wou'd at last be agreed on all Parts, whatever the Appearance was at Court.

The Chief Causes of it.

3. The King was very uneasy, and not a little provok'd at these Proceedings against his only Brother; but to shew his Resentment in the softest Manner, on the 10th of November, two Days after the Exclusion Bill was order'd to be Engross'd, he sent this Message to the Commons; His Majesty desires this House, as well for the Satisfaction of his People, as of Himself, to expedite such Matters as are depending before them, relating to Popery and the Plot; and wou'd have them rest assured, That all Remedies they can tender to his Majesty conducing to those Ends, shall be very acceptable to Him; Provided they be such as may consist with Preserving the Succession of the Crown in its Legal Course of Descent.

The King's Message to the Commons.

This

Their Addreſs upon it.

This ſerv'd but to encreaſe the Heats of the Commons, who the next Day drew up the following Addreſs to the King: 'We your Majeſty's 'Loyal Subjects, &c. having taken into Conſideration your Majeſty's gra- 'cious Meſſage, do with all Thankfulneſs acknowledge your Majeſty's 'Care and Goodneſs, in inviting us to expedite ſuch Matters as are de- 'pending before us, relating to Popery and the Plot. And we do in all 'Humility repreſent to your Majeſty, That we are fully convinc'd, that 'it is highly incumbent upon us, in Diſcharge both of our Duty to your 'Majeſty, and of that great Truſt repos'd in us by thoſe we repreſent, 'to endeavour by the moſt ſpeedy and effectual Ways the Suppreſſion of 'Popery within this your Kingdom, and the bringing to publick Juſtice 'all ſuch as ſhall be found Guilty of the Horrid and Damnable Popiſh 'Plot. And tho' the Time of our Sitting hath not much exceeded a 'Fortnight, yet we have in this Time not only made a conſiderable Pro- 'greſs in ſome Things which to us ſeem, and (when preſented to your 'Majeſty in a Parliamentary Way) will, we truſt, appear to your Ma- 'jeſty to be abſolutely neceſſary for the Safety of your Majeſty's Perſon, 'the effectual Suppreſſion of Popery, and the Security of the Religion, 'Lives and Eſtates of your Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects: But even in 'Relation to the Tryals of the five Lords Impeach'd in Parliament for 'the Execrable Popiſh Plot, we have ſo far proceeded, as we doubt not 'but in ſhort Time we ſhall be ready for the ſame. But we cannot (with- 'out being unfaithful to your Majeſty, and to our Country, by whom 'we are entruſted) omit, upon this Occaſion, humbly to inform your 'Majeſty, That our Difficulties, even as to theſe Tryals, are much en- 'creas'd, by the evil and deſtructive Counſels of thoſe Perſons who ad- 'vis'd your Majeſty, firſt to the Prorogation, and then to the Diſſolu- 'tion of the laſt Parliament, at a Time when the Commons had taken 'great Pains about, and were prepared for thoſe Tryals; and by the like 'pernicious Counſels of thoſe who advis'd the many and long Prorога- 'tions of the preſent Parliament, before the ſame was permitted to ſit; 'whereby ſome of the Evidence which was prepared in the laſt Parlia- 'ment, may poſſibly (during ſo great an Interval) be forgotten or loſt, and 'ſome Perſons, who might probably have come in as Witneſſes, are ei- 'ther dead, have been taken off, or may have been diſcourag'd from giv- 'ing their Evidence. But of one miſchievous Conſequence of thoſe dan- 'gerous and unhappy Counſels, we are certainly and ſadly ſenſible, 'namely that the Teſtimony of a Material Witneſs [Bedloe] againſt e- 'very one of thoſe five Lords, (and who cou'd probably have diſcover'd, 'and brought in much other Evidence about the Plot in General, and 'thoſe Lords in Particular) cannot now be given viva voce, foraſmuch 'as that Witneſs is unfortunately dead, between the Calling and Sitting 'of the Parliament. To prevent the like, or greater Inconveniencies 'for the future, we make it our moſt humble Requeſt to your moſt Ex- 'cellent Majeſty, That, as you tender the Safety of your Royal Perſon, 'the Security of your Loyal Subjects, and the Preſervation of the true 'Proteſtant Religion, you will not ſuffer your ſelf to be prevail'd upon by 'the like Counſels, to do any Thing which may occaſion in Conſequence '(tho' we are aſſured never with your Majeſty's Intention) either the de- 'terring of a full and perfect Diſcovery and Examination of this moſt 'deteſtable Plot, or the Preventing the Conſpirators therein from being 'brought to ſpeedy and exemplary Juſtice and Puniſhment. And we hum- 'bly beſeech your Majeſty to reſt aſſured (notwithſtanding any Suggeſtions 'which may be made by Perſons, who for their own wicked Purpoſes 'contrive to create a Diſtruſt in your Majeſty of your People) That 'nothing is more in the Deſires, and ſhall be more the Endeavours of Us,

The Bill of Exclusion.

'your Faithful and Loyal Commons, than the Promoting and Advancing 'your Majesty's true Happiness and Greatness.

On the same Day they read the Ingrossed Bill, Intituled, An Act for Securing the Protestant Religion, by Disenabling James Duke of York to inherit the Imperial Crown of England and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging. This was both a Bill of Exclusion and Banishment, with the Penalty of High-Treason annex'd, not much differing from the other Bill brought in the last Parliament; only it had the Addition of this following Clause: 'And be it further Enacted, by the 'Authority aforesaid, That during the Life of the said James Duke of 'York, this Act shall be given in Charge at every Assizes, and the gene-'ral Sessions of the Peace within the Kingdoms, Dominions and Territo-'ries aforesaid; and also shall be openly read in every Cathedral-Church, 'and Parish-Church, and Chappels within the foresaid Kingdoms, Do-'minions and Territories, by the several respective Parsons, Vicars, Cu-'rates and Readers thereof, who are hereby required immediately after 'Divine Service in the Forenoons to read the same Twice in every Year; 'that is to say, on the 25th of December, and upon Easter Day, during 'the Life of the said James Duke of York.

New Debates upon it.

Upon Reading this Bill, Sir Leoline Jenkins, among other things said, 'I desire you to consider, that this Prince is Brother to our present King, 'and Son to our late pious King Charles the First; for whose Memory 'this Nation hath a great Veneration; that this Prince is enrich'd with ex-'cellent Endowments, which he hath employ'd in the Service of this Na-'tion, by Fighting our Battels, and Defending of us from the Oppressi-'on of our Enemies, and is only guilty of this one Crime, which I hope 'upon a mature Deliberation, will not deserve so great a Condemnation. '——I wou'd once more remember you, that there are Laws already 'for the Punishment of the Crimes he is accus'd of, and therefore hum-'bly conceive you ought not to chastize him, by making a new Law, be-'fore any Hearing.' In Answer to him, another Member reflected up-on the Duke for the Breach of the Triple League, the Loss of the Earl of Sandwich, the Firing of London; and was going on more severely, when he was interrupted by the House. Mr. Mountagu desir'd that there might be a Proviso in the Bill, That if the Duke shou'd turn Protestant, that then the Bill shou'd be void, and he not excluded from his Right. Mr. Hyde was still warm against the Bill, and said, 'I do not know that 'any of the King's Murderers were condemn'd without being heard; 'and must we deal thus with the Brother of our King? It wou'd consist 'much better with the Justice of the House, to Impeach him, and Try 'him in a Formal Way, and then cut off his Head, if he deserves it. I 'will not offer to dispute the Power of Parliaments; but I question whe-'ther this Law, if made, wou'd be good in it self. Some Laws have a 'Natural Weakness with them: I think that by which the old long Par-'liament carry'd on the Rebellion, was judg'd afterwards void in it self, 'because there was a Power given, which cou'd not be taken from the 'Crown. For ought I know, when you have made this Law, it may 'have the same Flaw in it, if not, I am confident there are a Loyal Par-'ty which will never obey, but will think themselves bound by their 'Oath of Allegiance, and Duty, to pay Obedience to the Duke, if ever 'he shou'd come to be King, which must occasion a Civil War.' Sir William Jones and Sir Francis Winnington made long Speeches, and both spoke as to the Oath of Allegiance: The Former insisted, that it cou'd never extend to the Successor during the King's Life, and the Latter look'd upon such a Notion as a dangerous Maxim, if ever the next Heir of the Crown

Crown ſhou'd raiſe a Rebellion; for he might thereby challenge Allegiance from the People as well as the King, which might be of pernicious Conſequence: And he further ask'd, 'Doth not the Act of the Thirteenth 'of Queen Elizabeth make it Treaſon, for any Man to ſay that the Par- 'liament cannot alter the Succeſſion.' Upon which Argument, Mr. Finch ſaid, 'I will not ſay that Acts of Parliament cannot diſpoſe of the Succeſſi- 'on, becauſe it was made Treaſon by the Statute in the 13th of Eliza- 'beth: But I will deny, that the Kings of England rule by vertue of any 'Statute-Law, as was ſuggeſted; for their Right is by ſo ancient a Pre- 'ſcription, as that it may juſtly be ſaid to be from God alone, and that 'no Power on Earth ought to diſpute it.' After a little longer Debate, the Bill paſs'd the Houſe by a very great Majority. 1680. Car. 32 Ref 21 The Bill paſſes the Commons.

4. In the mean time, the King, daily more uneaſy and perplex'd, endeavour'd to divert the Humours in the Houſe, by ſending the following Meſſage to them, on the 12th of November: His Majeſty did in his Speech at the Opening of this Seſſion deſire the Advice and Aſſiſtance of his Parliament in relation to Tangier: The Condition and Importance of the Place obliges his Majeſty to put this Houſe in mind again, that he relies upon them for the Support of it, without which it cannot be much longer preſerv'd. His Majeſty doth therefore very earneſtly recommend Tangier again to the due and ſpeedy Care and Conſideration of this Houſe. The King's ſecond Meſſage.

Upon this Meſſage, there aroſe a warm Debate: Some objected, 'That 'it was a Duty incumbent on them to ſecure Things at home, on which 'their All depended, before they enter'd into an Expence of Time about 'Securing Things abroad; Tangier might be of great Importance to 'Trade, but not ſo manag'd as to be any Security to the Proteſtant Re- 'ligion. The Portugueſe, when they deliver'd it up, did Covenant to 'have one Popiſh Church remain there, for the Conveniency of Prieſts 'and Fryars: And tho' it was then agreed, that their Mortality ſhou'd 'not be ſupply'd, but after the Deceaſe of thoſe Perſons, the ſaid Popiſh 'Church might be demoliſh'd, or converted to a Proteſtant Uſe; yet 'things had been otherwiſe manag'd, and the Papiſts there were now 'more than ever: That my Lord Bellaſis, now a Priſoner in the Tower 'for the Plot, had been Governor of Tangier, and even ſtill the Soldiers 'and their Commanders were moſt of that Religion, ſo that the Place 'was but a kind of a Nurſery for a Popiſh Army.' Others argu'd, 'That 'they were indeed afraid of Tangier, but more afraid of a Popiſh Suc- 'ceſſor, and were for ſecuring the Ship before they diſpos'd of the Cab- 'bins: But they were unwilling to give any Mony, becauſe they remem- 'ber'd when above a Million was given for Ships, not one Ship was built; 'and above two Millions given for the Triple League, when it was ſoon 'employ'd for the Breaking of it; and above a Million given for an Actual 'War with France, when we were under private Obligations for Peace.' On the other Side ſome alledg'd the Importance of the Place, 'And that 'if we ſhou'd part with it, we ſhou'd loſe the two Millions we have laid 'out on the Mold; and there wou'd be as great an Outcry, as there was 'upon the Delivery of Dunkirk to the French.' Others again pleaded, 'That there was no need of raiſing new Forces for the Security of Tan- 'gier; ſince there were ſeveral Regiments, beſides the Guards, in Pay 'at home, which might be tranſported thither, with little Charge, and 'be maintain'd there, as cheap as here.' In Concluſion, the Houſe Reſolved to draw up an Addreſs, Humbly repreſenting to his Majeſty, the Debates upon it.

The Commons Addreſs, or Remonſtrance.

dangerous State and Condition of the Kingdom, in Anſwer to his Majeſty's Meſſage.

This Addreſs was long, and in effect a Remonſtrance of all the Grievances in the Reign, with relation to Popery: In Subſtance it contain'd theſe Particulars. 1. 'That Tangier had been ſeveral Times under the 'Command of Popiſh Governors: That the Supplies ſent thither, had 'been in a great Part made up of Popiſh Officers and Soldiers, and that 'the Iriſh Papiſts had been the moſt countenanc'd and encourag'd. '2. That here at home, the Endeavours and Attempts of the Popiſh Par'ty had been ſo bold and ſucceſsful, that it was a Matter of Admiration 'to them, and which they cou'd only aſcribe to an Over-ruling Provi'dence, That his Majeſty's Reign was ſtill continu'd over them, and that 'they were yet aſſembled to conſult the Means of their Preſervation. '3. That this bloody and reſtleſs Party had found Countenance and Pro'tection from the Laws made againſt them: That they had form'd 'Means to diſgrace their Oppoſers; and if they were Judges, Juſtices 'of the Peace, or other Magiſtrates, to have them turn'd out of Com'miſſion: So that after ſome Time, they became able to influence Mat'ters of State and Government; and thereby to Deſtroy thoſe they cou'd 'not corrupt. 4. The Continuance and Prorogation of Parliaments, had 'been accommodated to ſerve the Purpoſes of that Party. 5. Mony 'rais'd upon the People to ſupply his Majeſty's Extraordinary Occaſions, 'had, by the Prevalence of Popiſh Counſels, been employ'd to make War 'upon a Proteſtant State, and to advance and augment the dreadful Power 'of the French King. 6. That great Numbers of his Majeſty's Subjects 'were ſent into, and continu'd in, the Service of that King: And even 'the Miniſters of England were made Inſtruments to preſs the States of 'Holland to accept of a Demand from the French King, of Admitting 'the Publick Exerciſe of the Roman Catholick Religion. 7. That if 'ever any Command were given for the Laws to be put in Execution 'againſt the Papiſts, even from thence they gain'd Advantage to their 'Party, while the Edge of thoſe Laws was turn'd againſt Proteſtant Diſ'ſenters, and the Papiſts eſcap'd in a Manner untouch'd. 8. That the 'Teſt-Act had little Effect; for the Papiſts, either by Diſpenſations ob'tain'd from Rome, ſubmitted to thoſe Teſts, and held their Offices 'Themſelves; or thoſe put in their Places were ſo favourable to the 'ſame Intereſts, that Popery it ſelf had rather gain'd than loſt Ground 'ſince that Act. 9. That a Popiſh Secretary, ſince executed for his Trea'ſons, had maintain'd a Correſpondence at Rome, and in the Courts of 'other Foreign Princes, For the Subduing (to uſe their own Words) 'that Peſtilent Hereſy which had ſo long Domineer'd over this Northern 'World. 10. That out of thoſe Counſels and Correſpondencies was 'hatch'd that Damnable and Helliſh Plot, by the good Providence of 'God brought to light about two Years ſince. 11. That when this Ac'curſed Conſpiracy was firſt diſcover'd, the Papiſts began to ſmother it, 'with the barbarous Murder of a Juſtice of Peace, within one of his Ma'jeſty's own Palaces. 12. That amidſt theſe Diſtractions and Fears, Po'piſh Officers for the Command of Forces were allow'd upon the Muſters, 'upon ſpecial Orders, Counter-ſign'd by a Secretary of State: And in 'like Manner, above Fifty new Commiſſions were granted about the 'ſame time to known Papiſts. 13. That when in the next Parliament, 'the Houſe of Commons were prepared to bring to a Legal Tryal the 'Principal Conſpirators in this Plot, that Parliament was firſt Prorogu'd, 'and then Diſſolv'd: And the Interval between the Calling and Sitting of 'this Parliament had been ſo long, that the Papiſts had gain'd Time and ‘ divers of the moſt conſiderable of his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects had ‘ Crimes of the higheſt Nature forg'd againſt them, the Charge to be ſup-

‘ Forms of Law and Juſtice. 16. That a Preſentment being prepared for the

‘ were in an unprecedented and illegal manner Diſcharg'd; and that with ‘ ſo much Haſte and Fear, leſt they ſhou'd finiſh that Preſentment, that Having gone through theſe Heads, they proceeded thus; ‘ Under theſe

‘ its Adherents, We your Majeſty's faithful Commons found this your ‘ Majeſty's diſtreſſed Kingdom, and other Parts of your Dominions la‘ bouring, when we aſſembled. And therefore from our Allegiance to ‘ your Majeſty, our Zeal to our Religion, our Faithfulneſs to our Coun‘ try, and our Care of Poſterity, we have lately, upon mature Delibera‘ tion, propos'd one Remedy of theſe great Evils, without which, in our ‘ Judgments, all others will prove vain and fruitleſs, and (like all deceit‘ ful Securities againſt certain Dangers) will rather expoſe your Majeſty's ‘ Perſon to the greateſt Hazard, and the People, together with all that's ‘ valuable to them as Men and Chriſtians, to utter Ruin and Deſtruction.
‘ We have taken this Occaſion of an Acceſs to your Majeſty's Royal Pre-‘ ſence, humbly to lay before your Majeſty's great Judgment and Graci‘ ous Conſideration, this moſt dreadful Deſign of Introducing Popery, and,
‘ as neceſſary Conſequences of it, all other Calamities, into your Maje-‘ ſty's Kingdoms. And if after all this, the private Suggeſtions of the ‘ ſubtle Accomplices of that Party and Deſign ſhou'd yet prevail, either
‘ to elude, or totally obſtruct the faithful Endeavours of Us your Com‘ mons for a happy Settlement of this Kingdom, We ſhall have this re‘ maining Comfort, That we have freed our ſelves from the Guilt of ‘ that Blood and Deſolation which is like to enſue. But our only Hope, ‘ next under God, is in your Sacred Majeſty, that by your great Wiſ‘ dom and Goodneſs we may be effectually ſecured from Popery, and ‘ all the Evils that attend it; and that none but Perſons of known Fide‘ lity to your Majeſty, and ſincere Affections to the Proteſtant Religion, ‘ may be put into any Employment, Civil or Military; that whilſt we ‘ ſhall give a Supply to Tangier, we may be aſſured we do not augment
‘ the Strength of our Popiſh Adverſaries, nor increaſe our own Dangers.
‘ Which Deſires of your Faithful Commons, if your Majeſty ſhall graci-‘ ouſly vouchſafe to grant, we ſhall not only be ready to aſſiſt your Ma-
‘ jeſty in Defence of Tangier, but do whatſoever elſe ſhall be in our Power ‘ to enable your Majeſty to protect the Proteſtant Religion and Intereſt,
‘ at Home and Abroad, and to reſiſt and repel the Attempts of your Ma‘ jeſty's and the Kingdom's Enemies.

The Exclusion Bill carry'd up to the Lords,

Within two Days after the drawing up this Remonstrance, which was very unacceptable at Court, upon the 15th of November, the Commons having compleated their grand Bill for Disinheriting the Duke of York, it was solemnly carry'd up to the House of Lords by William Lord Russel, attended by the Lord Cavendish, Sir Henry Capel, and indeed by almost the whole House of Commons. Here it met with a very different Reception. The King himself was Resolv'd, and to all his Friends declar'd against the Bill before it came to be read: And tho' the Earl of Shaftsbury, the Earl of Essex, the Earl of Sunderland, and about Fifteen more, were zealous and violent for it; yet most of the rest of the House were firm and positive against it; among whom the Lord Hallifax appear'd with great Resolution in the Head of all Debates. Upon the first reading of it indeed, it was carry'd in the Affirmative by two Votes only. Upon the second Reading it was strenuously Debated till Eleven a Clock at Night, the King being present all the whole Time; and then the House divided, the No's being 63, the Yea's but 30; the Bishops being 14, were all against it except three. And so the Bill, without any Conference, was thrown out, and totally quash'd, to the great Disappointment and Mortification of all the chief Promoters of this unweildy Attempt.

By whom it is thrown out.

Warm Proceedings of the Commons.

VII. 1. The Noise of this unexpected Turn soon flew about the Nation, and caus'd a Thousand warm Discourses, and strange Conjectures amongst all Sorts of People. As to the House of Commons, they were terribly inrag'd, and they soon began to fall upon Persons, as well as Things; and hearing that the Lord Hallifax had been active against the Exclusion-Bill, they Resolv'd an Address to his Majesty to remove him from his Council and Presence for ever. As to their own Member, Mr. Edward Seymour, they not only petition'd for the same Removal, but likewise agreed to Impeach him upon four Articles. Sir Robert Peyton, another Member, was brought upon his Knees, and Expell'd the House with very opprobrious Language. At the same time several Foremen of Grand Juries were sent for into Custody of the Serjeant at Arms, for Abhorring the Petitioning for Sitting of the Parliament, which was now turn'd to a Breach of Priviledge. Upon this Account they first sent for Sir Giles Philips, and Mr. Coleman out of Devonshire; and they did the same by Captain William Castle, Mr. John Hutchinson, Mr. Henry Walrond, Mr. William Stavel, Mr. Thomas Herbert, Mr. Thomas Staples, and Sir Thomas Holt, Serjeant at Law. And because Sir Francis North, Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas, Advised and was Assisting in drawing up the Proclamation against Petitioning for the Sitting of the Parliament, the Commons Voted, 'That it was a sufficient Ground for the 'House to proceed against him for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.' The like Vote pass'd against Sir Thomas Jones, one of the Judges of the King's-Bench; and Sir Richard Weston, one of the Barons of Exchequer. But for the Lord Chief-Justice Scroggs, they were so incens'd at him, that they resolv'd to Impeach him of High-Treason. To these Proceedings, we may add the Case of Mr. Sheridan, an Irish Gentleman of a good Family, who was kept five Weeks Prisoner, upon bare Suspicion, without any Crime or Breach of Privilege alledg'd; on which Commitment, when he brought his Habeas Corpus, according to the Act of Parliament, most of the Judges were so terrify'd by these Proceedings, that they did not dare to allow it.

The Tryal of the Lord Stafford.

But what caus'd the greatest Notice, and was carry'd on with the greatest Fervour, was the Prosecution of William Howard, Lord Viscount Stafford, one of the five Popish Lords in the Tower, an aged Peer, singled out out from the reſt, and brought to his Tryal before the Lords in Weſtminſter-Hall, on the 30th of November, with all the uſual Forms and Solemnities. The Managers for the Commons, among whom were the moſt conſiderable Lawyers in the Houſe, open'd the Cauſe with great Copiouſneſs and Eloquence, 'they began with the Plot in General, and 'laid open the Malice, Wickedneſs and Horror, of ſo dreadful, bloody 'and Helliſh a Deſign: They ſtrenuouſly inſiſted on the expreſs poſitive 'Oaths of the Witneſſes, upon whom the Credit of the Plot chiefly de-'pended: They expatiated upon Coleman's Letters, and others, clearly 'proving the Deſigns and Activity of the Writers: They preſs'd home 'the execrable Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, charg'd upon the 'Papiſts, as well by the Oaths of ſelf-acknowledg'd Partners in the Fact, 'as by a Letter ſent from London to Tixall, intimating this very Mur-'der the third Day after it was committed: They fully diſplay'd the 'Sham-Plots, and Counter-Contrivances, whereby the Papiſts wou'd 'have ſuborn'd the King's Evidence, and turn'd all the Guilt upon 'his Majeſty's moſt Loyal Subjects: They urg'd the Firing the City, 'the Burning the Navy, the Calling in French Armies, Wild-Iriſh, Spa-'niſh Pilgrims, &c. They recapitulated the ſeveral Tryals of Ireland, 'Whitebread, Langhorn, &c. and alledg'd the Votes of both Houſes of 'Parliament declaring the Plot. To corroborate all which, they repeat-'ed the Cruelties of Queen Mary, the French and Iriſh Maſſacres, the 'Powder-Plot, &c. and they anatomiz'd the wicked Principles and 'Practices of Murdering, Lying, Equivocating, Forſwearing, Faith-Break-'ing, &c. imputed to the Papiſts, as held by them Lawful and Meri-'torious.' In ſum, nothing was omitted, or neglected through the whole Proceſs, but the leaſt Circumſtance fully enforc'd and advanc'd, with ſuch Art and Acuteneſs, as well anſwer'd to ſo great a Cauſe, proſecuted by ſo high an Authority, before ſo illuſtrious Judges, and ſo Auguſt an Aſſembly. 1680. Car. 32 Reſ. 21

Some Witneſſes were firſt produc'd to prove the Reality, or at leaſt the Probability of the Plot in general; but chiefly three appear'd againſt the Lord in particular, namely, Dugdale, Oates, and Turberville, the laſt ſaid to be both a profligate and an indigent Perſon. 1. Dugdale ſwore, 'That at a certain Meeting held at Tixall in Staffordſhire, about 'the End of Auguſt, or Beginning of September, 1678, the Lord Staf-'ford, with Lord Aſton and others, did in the Preſence of the Witneſs, 'give his full Conſent to take away the King's Life, and introduce the 'Popiſh Religion. That on the 20th or 21ſt of September in the Fore-'noon, the Lord ſent for the Witneſs to his Chamber, while he was 'Dreſſing; and, turning his Servants out, offer'd him five Hundred 'Pounds for his Charges and Encouragement, to take away the King's 'Life; and further told him, He ſhou'd have free Pardon of all his Sins, 'and be Sainted; for the King had been Excommunicated, and was like-'wiſe a Traytor and a Rebel, and an Enemy to Jeſus Chriſt.' 2. Oates ſwore, 'That in the Year 1677, both in Spain and at St. Omers, he ſaw 'ſeveral Letters, ſign'd Stafford, wherein his Lordſhip aſſured the Je-'ſuits of his Fidelity and Zeal in Promoting the Catholick Cauſe. That 'in 1678, being in London, his Lordſhip came to the Chamber of Father 'Fenwick, ſince executed, and there in his Preſence receiv'd a Com-'miſſion from him, to be Pay-Maſter-General to the Army: Whereup-'on his Lordſhip ſaid, he muſt of Neceſſity go down into the Country to 'take account how Affairs ſtood there; and did not doubt, but at his Re-'turn, Grove ſhou'd do the Buſineſs. And, ſpeaking of the King, he 'further added, He hath deceiv'd us a great while, and we can bear no 'longer. 3. Turberville gave an Account of Diſobliging his Friends by 'leaving

Dugdale.

And Turberville.

'leaving his Fryars Habit at Doway; and thereupon went into France, 'in the Year 75, where at Paris getting Acquaintance with his Lord-'ſhip, he propos'd to the Witneſs a Way, both to retrieve his Credit 'with his Friends, and make himſelf happy, and this was by Taking away 'the Life of the King of England, who was a Heretick, and a Rebel a-'gainſt God Almighty. That when he took leave of him, his Lord-'ſhip appointed to meet him at London; but he ſoon after return'd into 'France, not being willing to undertake the Propoſals, and was diſcoun-'tenanc'd by his Friends, and reduc'd to Poverty.

His Defence. The accus'd Lord, in his Defence, alledg'd many Things to invalidate the Credit of the Plot, and particularly the Reputation of theſe three Witneſſes. Againſt Dugdale, he produc'd Evidence, 'That he was a 'Perſon of an infamous Life; That he had cheated the Lord Aſton his Ma-'ſter, and defrauded Work-Men and Servants of their Wages; that by 'his Extravagancies and Miſdemeanours, he had run himſelf into ſeveral 'Hundred Pounds Debt, for which he was thrown into Jail, and de-'ſpair'd of ever getting out from thence, otherwiſe than by making the 'pretended Diſcoveries. In the next Place, that he had directly per-'jur'd himſelf, in divers Parts and Circumſtances, as to Time and Place, 'in this and other Depoſitions: And further, he prov'd, That he had 'endeavour'd to ſuborn divers Perſons to make falſe Oaths, and ſo to 'ſtrengthen his own by other Men's Perjury. Againſt Oates, he inlarg-'ed upon the mighty Improbabilities, that ſo many great and rich Con-'ſpirators, who had truſted him with their greateſt Secrets, and whoſe 'Lives were at his Mercy, ſhould ſuffer him to be reduc'd to ſuch a 'wretched Degree of Beggary, as he was acknowledg'd to be when he 'made his firſt Diſcoveries. He likewiſe inſiſted upon his Omiſſions, Ad-'ditions and Contradictions, that plainly appear'd in his ſeveral Depoſiti-'ons about the Plot; and alſo upon his villainous Feigning himſelf to be 'of another Religion, by ſolemn Renunciations of his Faith, and by 'ſuch Sacraments on one ſide, and ſuch Abjurations and Execrations on 'the other, as render'd him unfit to be admitted for an Evidence againſt 'any Man living. As to Turberville, he urg'd that he was perjur'd in this, 'and many other of his Depoſitions; and that his Narrative had many Mi-'ſtakes and Blunders in it. He deny'd that He, or any of his Servants, ever 'ſaw him at Paris; and made ſome Remarks upon his Poverty and 'Want, his looſe Manner of Living, his ſhameful Curſing and Swearing; 'and particularly his uſing theſe Words, God damn Me! there is no 'Trade good now, but that of a DISCOVERER.

It would be too long to mention all the Particulars of this Tryal, which laſted a whole Week, and in which great Skill and Dexterity was us'd by the Managers to ſupport the Credit and Reputation of the Wit-neſſes, among whom they believ'd there was no Contrivance or Confede-racy. The Mana-gers Reply. They argu'd, 'That they had made it plain and apparent in the 'Beginning of the Tryal, by the Teſtimony of ſix Witneſſes, by the De-'clarations of both Houſes of Parliament, by Coleman's Letters, by the 'Tryal and Conviction of other Traytors, That there was a general De-'ſign amongſt the Papiſts, to introduce their Religion, by Raiſing of Ar-'mies, Murdering the King, and Subverting the Government. And as 'to his Lordſhip's particular Caſe, they had three Witneſſes, which ſuf-'ficiently prov'd him Guilty; and ſo expatiated upon the Danger of 'Popiſh Principles, &c. His Lordſhip made two ſeveral Pathetick Spee-ches, beſides his Anſwers to the Witneſſes, and in Concluſion declared, in the Preſence of God, of his Angels, of their Lordſhips, and all who heard him, That he was intirely Innocent of what was laid to his Charge; That he left it to their Lordſhips to do Juſtice, and with all Submiſſion

He is found Guilty.

reſign'd himſelf to them. After which, the Court gave final Judgment; and the Lord Chancellor, who was now Lord High-Steward, collecting the Votes, the Lord Stafford was pronounc'd Guilty by fifty five Votes againſt Thirty One. Upon his being told by the High-Steward, that he was found guilty, he calmly ſaid, God's holy Name be praiſed! And then being ask'd by the ſame Perſon, What he could ſay for himſelf, why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon him according to Law: He reply'd, My Lord, I have very little to ſay; I confeſs I am ſurpriz'd at it, for I did not expect it. But God's Will be done; I will not murmur at it. God forgive thoſe who have falſely ſworn againſt me!

The Lord Chancellor's Speech upon it.

In Concluſion, the Lord Chancellor made this following Speech to his Lordſhip. 'That which remains now to be done, is very ſad on my 'Part; I have never given Sentence on any Man, and I am very ſorry I 'muſt begin with your Lordſhip, a Perſon of your Quality and Fortune, 'deſcended of Noble Anceſtors, a great Sufferer in the late Times, oblig'd 'to the Government for the Moderation you had in the Exerciſe of 'your Religion; oblig'd to the King's Father, and ſo much to this King: 'Yet you have gone about not only to conſult his Death, but even the 'Deſtroying of three whole Nations, both of Body and Soul, as far as in 'you lay; of which you ſtand Impeachd by the Commons, and have 'been found Guilty by the Lords. There have been many and great 'Conſpiracies againſt the Life of the King for the Deſtroying of the 'Government; and they have been carry'd on by Conſults, Letters and 'otherways; by the Burning of London, and the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, the Plot hath been carry'd on Abroad, at White-Hall, 'and London, and your Lordſhip hath been concern'd in them all, with 'a mixture of Malice: You have call'd the King Heretick, and ſaid, He 'was an Enemy to God Almighty; here the Proverb is verify'd, Curſe 'not the King, tho' in the Inward Chamber, for the Birds of the Air 'will reveal it. It hath pleas'd God to leave you to your ſelf, and you 'have digg'd a Pit, and fallen into it your ſelf. God never leaves any 'Man until they leave themſelves; think not ſtill well of your Religion, 'and let not blind Guides miſ-lead you; true Repentance is never too 'late, and be not perſwaded not to confeſs that Sin in Publick, which 'you poſſibly have been Abſolv'd of in Private: For whatſoever value you 'ſet on the Prayers of them you call Hereticks, yet I am ſure That both 'they that clear'd you, and thoſe that condemn'd you, are ſorry for 'your Condition. I will pray for your Lordſhip; and this is the laſt 'Time I muſt call you My Lord.' And ſo he pronounc'd Sentence of Death againſt him according to the uſual Form in Caſe of High-Treaſon.

Shortly after Sentence was paſs'd upon him, ſeveral of his Relations and Acquaintance, ſome out of Zeal againſt Popery, and others out of Kindneſs to his Lordſhip, were daily urgent with him to make Diſcoveries of all he knew, as the only Means to ſave his Life, regain the King's Favour, and obtain the Thanks of the Nation. His Reply was, He was moſt willing and ready, out of a meer Senſe of Duty and Conſcience, without any Temporal View, to diſcover the utmoſt of what he knew, either to the King, or the Houſe of Lords, when ever they required it. Of which the Lords being inform'd, they order'd his Appearance before them the next Day; at which Time he made his Acknowledgments to this Effect: 'That he thought it no Crime for any Man to wiſh his Neighbour 'might be of the ſame Religion wherein he himſelf hop'd to be ſav'd; 'nay to ſeek, and promote it by ſuch Ways and Means, as the Laws of 'God, and the Nation allow: That there had been at divers Times, and 'on ſeveral Occaſions, Endeavours us'd, and Overtures made to obtain 'an

'an Abrogation, or at leaſt a Mitigation of Severities againſt Catholicks; 'but this to be procured no otherwiſe than by Legal and Parliamen-'tary Means: That he himſelf went to Breda, while the King was there, 'and propounded a Hundred thouſand Pounds in Behalf of the Catho-'licks, to take off the Penal Laws: That after the King came in, there 'was a Bill brought into the Houſe of Lords, in Favour of Catholicks, 'but it was oppos'd and quaſh'd by my Lord Chancellor Hyde. That 'there had likewiſe been fram'd by the Earl of Briſtol and others, in 'Order to the Propoſing of them in Parliament, ſeveral Forms of Oaths, 'contain'd in ſuch Terms as might fully expreſs all Duty and Allegiance 'to the King; yet not entangle Tender Conſciences with Clauſes and 'Proviſos, diſagreeable to Faith, and no ways belonging to Loyalty; but 'neither did this ſucceed. That afterwards he had offer'd ſome Pro-'poſals, as well to the Lord Chancellor at his Houſe at Kenſigton, as to 'the Duke of York, concerning ſome Legal Expedients, conducing to the 'Good, as he thought, both of Catholicks and the whole Nation; and alſo 'about Diſſolving the Long Parliament; the Subſtance of which he like-'wiſe communicated to the Lord Shaftsbury, who ſaid, He doubted not 'but that there would come great Advantages to the King by it. Theſe he 'avouch'd were the Chief, and only Deſigns he ever had, or knew of a-'mongſt Catholicks, for Promoting their Religion; of more than theſe, 'he proteſted before Almighty God, and their Lordſhips, he was whol-'ly ignorant.' But this Declaration not giving Satisfaction as to the Plot, his Lordſhip was remanded to the Tower.

Corniſh' and Bethell's Application to the Commons.

As the Day of Execution approach'd, the two famous Sheriffs, Corniſh and Bethell, began to be very ſcrupulous concerning the Sentence, which the King had chang'd from that of Hanging and Quartering, to that of Beheading; and thereupon apply'd themſelves to the Houſe of Commons with theſe following Queries; '1. Whether the King, being nei-'ther Judge nor Party, can order the Execution? 2. Whether the Lords 'can award the Execution? 3. Whether the King can diſpence with any 'Part of the Execution? 4. If the King can diſpence with ſome Part of 'the Execution, why not with all?' This Officiouſneſs was ſhocking to ſome upon the Debate; but Sir William Jones gave it a handſome Turn, ſaying, This Houſe lyes under no Obligation to offer at any Oppoſition; eſpe-cially at a Time when ſuch a Diſpute may end in Preventing the Execution of the ſaid Lord Stafford. Whereupon they came to this Reſolve, 'That 'this Houſe is content that the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex do ex-'ecute William late Viſcount Stafford, by Severing his Head from his 'Body only.'

The Lord Stafford's Speech upon the Scaffold.

Accordingly, on the 29th of December, he was brought to a Scaffold upon Tower-Hill, in the Preſence of an incredible Number of Spectators; where finding the People more than uſually ſilent and attentive, he with a graceful Air, and audible Voice, pronounc'd a long and affecting Speech to them; in which he ſeveral Times proteſted his abſolute Innocence as to thoſe Crimes for which he ſtood condemn'd. Particularly, 'He did, upon his Death and Salvation aver, That he never ſpoke one 'Word either to Oates or Turberville, or to his knowledge ever ſaw 'them, till his Tryal; and for Dugdale, he never ſpoke to him, but about 'ſome trivial Matters, and then was never alone with him.' And to ſatisfy the World he cou'd make no Diſcovery relating to the Plot, he us'd this Argument; 'That whereas he might have ſav'd his Life, if he made any 'ſuch Diſcoveries; his not making of them, when he cou'd, was throw-'ing away his Life, and making himſelf guilty of Self-Murther; which 'he look'd upon as the moſt dangerous of all Sins. He likewiſe renounc'd 'all Indulgences, Diſpenſations and Pardons, that cou'd be given for

'Lies,

1680. Car. 32 Reſ. 21

'Lies, Oaths, and other Crimes in future; and declar'd That no Power 'on Earth cou'd allow him or any Man to lift up his Hand againſt the 'King.' The Subſtance of his Speech, and the manner of his ſpeaking was ſo moving, eſpecially when he came freely to forgive the Perjury of his Witneſſes, that many of the People pull'd off their Hats and bow'd, and others cry'd out, God bleſs you, my Lord! We believe you, my Lord! &c. Having laid his Head upon the Block, the Executioner took the Axe in his Hand, and after a ſhort Pauſe, lifted it up, as it were to take Aim, and laid it down again. A ſecond Time he did ſo, and ſigh'd; but the third Time he gave the fatal Blow, which ſever'd his Head from his Body; he being ſixty eight Years of Age. This Lord was the laſt Perſon we find that ſuffer'd Death for the Popiſh Plot, ſo far as it was confin'd to England; and tho' the Sufferers in that Plot were ſent out of the World by Witneſſes of very bad Reputation, yet it cannot be deny'd, that their Party had given too great an Occaſion of Suſpicion, and had been too buſy and induſtrious in Promoting and Propagating a Religion and a Cauſe, that was inconſiſtent with the Government and Genius of England.

His Execution.

2. While the Commons were on their full Career, the King came to the Houſe of Lords, on the 15th of December, and ſending for the Commons, he made this handſome Speech to both Houſes; 'My Lords 'and Gentlemen, At the Opening of the Parliament I did acquaint you 'with the Alliance I made with Spain and Holland, as the beſt Meaſures 'that cou'd be taken for the Safety of England, and the Repoſe of 'Chriſtendom. But I told you withal, That if our Friendſhip became 'unſafe to truſt to, it wou'd not be wonder'd at, if our Neighbours ſhou'd 'begin to take new Reſolutions, and perhaps ſuch as might be Fatal to Us. 'I muſt now tell you, That our Allies cannot but ſee how little has 'been done ſince this Meeting, to encourage their Dependence upon 'us: And I find by them, That unleſs we can be ſo united at Home, as 'to make our Alliance valuable to them, it will not be poſſible to hinder 'them from ſeeking ſome other Refuge, and making ſuch new Friend-'ſhips, as will not be conſiſtent with our Safety. Conſider, that a Neg-'lect of this Opportunity is never to be repaired. I did likewiſe lay the 'Matter plainly before you, touching the Eſtate and Condition of Tan-'gier. I muſt now tell you again, That if that Place be thought worth 'the keeping, you muſt take ſuch Conſideration of it, that it may be 'ſpeedily ſupply'd; it being impoſſible for Me to prevent it, on an Ex-'pence ſo far above my Power. I did promiſe you the fulleſt Satisfa-'ction your Hearts cou'd wiſh, for the Security of the Proteſtant Reli-'gion, and to concur with you in any Remedies, which might conſiſt with 'Preſerving the Succeſſion of the Crown in its due and Legal Courſe of 'Deſcent: I do again, with the ſame Reſervations, renew the ſame Promiſes to you. And being thus ready on my Part to do all that can 'reaſonably be expected from Me; I ſhou'd be glad to know from you, 'as ſoon as may be, how far I ſhall be aſſiſted by you, and what it is you 'deſire from Me.

The King's ſecond Speech to both Houſes.

The Commons, as was expected, did not go immediately upon his Majeſty's Speech, but Reſolv'd themſelves into a Grand Committee, how to ſecure the Kingdom againſt Popery and Arbitrary Government, the Technical Words of theſe Times. After ſome warm Debate, they Reſolved, 'That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That one Means to 'ſuppreſs Popery, is, That a Bill be brought in immediately, to Baniſh all 'the conſiderable Papiſts out of the Kingdom.' And upon a further Debate on the Miſchiefs and Dangers of Popery, They Reſolv'd, 'That it 'is Several Reſolves of the Commons.

'is the Opinion of this Committee, That as long as the Papists have any 'Hopes of the Duke of York's ſucceeding the King in the Kingdoms of 'England and Ireland, and Dominions thereunto belonging; the King's 'Perſon, the Proteſtant Religion, and the Lives, Liberties, and Pro- 'perties of all his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects, are in apparent Danger 'of being deſtroy'd.' Then upon Reference made to an Act of Queen Elizabeth for an Aſſociation, to revenge her Death upon the Papiſts, they came to a like Reſolution, 'That it is the Opinion of the Committee, 'That a Bill be brought in for an Aſſociation of all his Majeſty's Prote- 'ſtant Subjects, for the Safety of his Majeſty's Perſon, the Defence of the 'Proteſtant Religion, and the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Proteſtant Sub- 'jects, againſt all Invaſions and Oppoſitions; and for preventing the Duke of 'York, or any other Papiſt, from ſucceeding to the Crown.' Two Days after, the Houſe went again upon Conſidering of Ways and Means to ſecure the Kingdom againſt Popery and Arbitrary Government; and after ſeveral Debates, came to theſe three Reſolves,' 1. That it is the Opinion of this 'Houſe, That a Bill be brought in, For the more effectual Securing of 'the Meetings and Sittings of Frequent Parliaments. 2. That it is the 'Opinion of the Houſe, That a Bill be brought in, That the Judges may 'hold their Places and Salaries, quam diu ſe bene geſſerint. 3. That it is 'the Opinion of the Houſe, That a Bill be brought in againſt Illegal Ex- 'action of Money upon the People, to make it High-Treaſon.

After theſe Reſolves, they thought fit to read and conſider the King's laſt Speech; and after many ſevere Reflections upon the French Ambaſſador, and the French Women, and the Duke, and the Duke's Creatures, they Reſolv'd upon an Addreſs by Way of Anſwer to the Speech; in which Addreſs the Commons Repreſented, 'That this Proteſtant King- 'dom can never be ſafe, while there is any Hopes or Expectations of 'a Popiſh Succeſſor; and they beſeech his Majeſty, in his great Wiſdom 'to conſider, Whether, in caſe the Imperial Crown of this Proteſtant 'Kingdom ſhou'd Deſcend to the Duke of York; the Oppoſition which 'may poſſibly be made to his Poſſeſſing it, may not only Endanger the far- 'ther Deſcent in the Royal Line, but even Monarchy it ſelf? They 'therefore became humble Petitioners to his Sacred Majeſty, That in 'tender Commiſeration to his poor Proteſtant People, his Majeſty wou'd 'be graciouſly pleas'd to depart from the Reſervation in the ſaid Speech; 'and whenever a Bill ſhall be tender'd to his Majeſty in a Parliamentary 'Way, To diſable the Duke of York from Inheriting the Crown, his 'Majeſty will give his Royal Aſſent thereto: As alſo to another Act, 'whereby his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects may be enabled to Aſſociate 'themſelves, for the Defence of his Majeſty's Perſon, the Proteſtant 'Religion, and the Security of his Kingdom. And as ſome further Means 'for the Preſervation both of their Religion and Property, they are 'humble Suiters to his Majeſty, That from henceforth ſuch Perſons only 'may be Judges, as are Men of Ability, Integrity, and known Affecti- 'on to the Proteſtant Religion, and that they may hold both their Of- 'fices and Salaries, quam diu ſe bene geſſerint. That no one may bear 'the Office of a Lord-Lieutenant, but who is a Perſon of Integrity, and 'known Affection to the Proteſtant Religion: That Deputy-Lieutenants 'and Juſtices of the Peace may be alſo qualify'd, and may be moreover 'Men of Ability, of Eſtates and Intereſt in their Country: That none 'may be employ'd as Military Officers, or Officers in his Majeſty's Fleet, 'but Men of known Experience, Courage, and Affection to the Pro- 'teſtant Religion. And theſe their humble Requeſts being obtain'd, 'They ſhall on their Part, be ready to Aſſiſt his Majeſty, for the Pre- 'ſervation of Tangier, and for putting his Majeſty's Fleet into ſuch a 'Condition,

3. The Commons receiv'd no Anſwer to this Addreſs till about a Fortnight after; Part of which Time they employ'd in endeavouring to relieve the Proteſtant Diſſenters, who were now thought to deſerve a particular Indulgence. Formerly it had been the Intereſt of the Popiſh Party to promote a Toleration to them, that they might ſhare in the Benefit; but now it was their Intereſt to encourage a ſevere Proſecution of them, to take off the Edge of the Laws againſt themſelves, and to turn the Zeal of the Church of England againſt thoſe who had rais'd ſuch Heats about the Plot. It is obſerv'd that the Bigottry of the Scotch Presbyterians, this Year, very much help'd to throw an Odium upon all of that Denomination in England. Several of them had rigidly aſſerted the Lawfulneſs of the Excommunication and killing of Kings, while the Papiſts were daily Renouncing or Diſowning thoſe Doctrines and Principles. For when James Skeyn, Brother to the Laird of Skeyn, Archibald Steward, and John Spreull, were on the 13th of November examin'd before his Majeſty's Privy-Council at Edinburgh, concerning the late Rebellion at Bothwell-Bridge, and Airdsmoſſe, the ſaid James Skeyn did own and declare, That the Perſons concern'd in either of thoſe Actions were not Rebels: That the Burning of the Acts of Parliament, and the Proclamation made againſt the King, were juſt. That the Excommunication us'd againſt the King, and the Reaſons of it, were juſt: That the killing of the late Archbiſhop of St. Andrews was no Murder, but the Actors were upon their Duty. That there is a Declared War between thoſe that ſerve the Lord, and thoſe that ſerve the King, againſt the Covenant: That it is lawful to kill any of the King's Council and Soldiers, in Defence of the Goſpel. That the King being Excommunicated, and there being now a Lawful Declared War againſt him, on Account of the Covenant, it is lawful to kill him, and all thoſe who are in Oppoſition to the Covenant. Another of them, Archibald Steward, confeſs'd he was in the Rebellion at Airdsmoſſe, and preſent at the Excommunication of the King, and the Burning of the Acts of Parliament: He declared, The King was juſtly Excommunicated, and diſown'd the King's Authority, and thought himſelf not oblig'd to obey him. And as the Diſſenters in England were made the more odious, by the violence of their Brethren in Scotland; ſo a conſiderable Number of the Church-Men, and eſpecially of the Clergy, fell under a Notion of being Popiſhly affected, becauſe they vigorouſly eſpous'd the Intereſt of the Court, in Oppoſing the Aſſociation, and the Excluſion-Bill: For which one Mr. Richard Thomſon a Miniſter in Briſtol, did ſo warmly diſtinguiſh himſelf, that the Houſe of Commons cenſur'd him, and ſent for him into Cuſtody; which turn'd only to his Merit and Preferment in Court. Under which Diſpoſition of the Clergy, many ſevere Reflections were made upon them in the Houſe of Commons.

The Fury of the Scotch Conventiclers.

However it was, the Commons thought it highly ſeaſonable at this Time, to give Eaſe to the Proteſtant Diſſenters, and on the 21ſt of December they read a Bill For Uniting his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects. Upon the Debating of which, the firſt Gentleman that ſpoke, ſaid, There were a ſort of Men, who wou'd neither be advis'd nor over-rul'd, but under the Pretence of Conſcience, break violently through all Laws whatſoever, to the great Diſturbance both of Church and State. Therefore he thought it more convenient to have a Law for Forcing the Diſſenters to yield to the Church, and not to force the Church to yield to them. Another of the ſame ſide ſaid, He was affraid, That if once the Government ſhou'd begin to yield to the Diſſenters, it wou'd be as in Forty One, nothing wou'd ſerve but an utter Subverſion; the Receiving of one Thing wou'd give Occaſion for Demanding more; and it wou'd be impoſſible to give them any Satisfaction, without laying all open, and running into Confuſion.

On the other ſide, a Gentleman ſtood up and ſpoke thus: Sir, this Bill is intended for the Preſervation of the Church, and I am of Opinion, it is the beſt Bill that can be made in order thereto, our Circumſtances conſider'd. But I know not what Effect it may have, becauſe you are to deal with a ſtubborn ſort of People, who in many Things prefer their Humour before Reaſon, or their own Safety, or the Publick Good. But I think this a very good Time to try whether they will be drawn by the Cords of Love or no, and the Bill will be very agreeable to that Chriſtian Charity which our Church profeſſes; and I hope that in the Time of this imminent Danger, they will conſider their own Safety, and the Safety of the Proteſtant Religion, and not longer keep a foot the unhappy Diviſions among us, on which the Papiſts ground their Hopes: But rather, ſeeing the Church ſo far condeſcend, as to diſpenſe with the Surplice and thoſe other Things they ſcruple at, that they will ſubmit to the reſt that is enjoyn'd by Law, that ſo we may unite againſt the Common Enemy. But if this Bill ſhou'd not have the deſired Effect, but on the contrary, notwithſtanding this Condeſcenſion, they ſhou'd continue their Animoſities and Diſobedience to the Church, I think ſtill the Church will gain very much hereby, and leave that Party without Excuſe, and be a juſt Cauſe for the making of more coercive Laws. He was ſeconded by another Gentleman who argu'd thus, What real Love, Friendſhip or Obedience, can the Church expect from ſuch Perſons, as by the Execution of ſuch Laws may be forc'd to come to Church? How can they be depended on, or the Church be ſtrengthen'd by them? You may prevent their Conventicles, and force them either to come to Church, or pay Fines, or be impriſon'd; but you cannot expect that their Opinions or Affections ſhou'd be alter'd by ſuch Proceedings, without which the Church can never be the ſtronger.——Hath the Oxford Act, or that of the 35th of Queen Elizabeth, or any other againſt the Diſſenters, been executed in Favour of the Church? Are not the Diſſenters as many, if not more now, than ever? Is there any Thing more viſible, than that theſe Laws have been made uſe of to ſerve the Popiſh Intereſt, or as Engines rather for the State than the Church; when in the Year 1670, by the ſevere Execution of theſe Laws, all Meetings and Conventicles were prevented, and many Diſſenters came to Church, did not the Toleration happen thereupon? And if this Toleration had been intended for the Advantage of the Proteſtant Religion, why were not the Church-Men or Diſſenters of any kind, pleas'd with it? And if the Oxford Act, and other Laws againſt Diſſenters, were projected in Favour of the Proteſtant Religion, it was ſtrange that they were ſo much promoted by Sir Thomas Clifford, Sir Solomon Swale, and Sir Roger Strickland, who have ſince all appear'd to be Papiſts.

The Events. In Concluſion, this Bill, tho' it was Committed, wou'd not paſs; but another was brought in, which is ſaid to have paſs'd both Houſes, and was privately convey'd away, when the King was to have paſs'd it: This was For Exempting his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects, Diſſenting from the Church of England, from Penalty impoſed upon the Papiſts by the Act of the 35th of Elizabeth. A Reſolve. The Commons concluded the old Year with this remarkable Vote, Reſolved, 'That no Member of this Houſe ſhall accept of any 'Office or Place of Profit from the Crown, without leave of this Houſe; 'nor any Promiſe of any ſuch Office or Place of Profit, during ſuch Time 'as he ſhall continue a Member of this Houſe.

The King under great Difficulties.

4. All this Time, the King found himſelf under vaſt Difficulties, and particularly what Anſwer to give to the Commons laſt Addreſs. Expedients were conſider'd of, and Propoſals by Way of Diverſion, with relation to the Affairs Abroad; but the Commons were now ſo bent upon what they thought the Chief of their Home Concerns, that the Name of any Thing Foreign wou'd not be allow'd amongſt them; nay, the Mention of Spaniſh Leagues, Alliances with Holland, and the King's deſign'd Meaſures with other Confederates, were laugh'd at as Court Tricks, and too Stale to paſs any longer. Both Parties run exceeding high, and tho' they cou'd agree in nothing elſe, yet they did in that one Point of bringing Things to the laſt Extremity. The Earl of Shaftsbury, and his Party, believ'd that the Points of Popular Diſcontents and Petitions, or at leaſt that of the King's Wants, wou'd at laſt bring the Court to their Mercy, in this or ſome other Parliament, therefore they wou'd in no degree recede. On the other Side, thoſe Miniſters who were paſt all Meaſures with the Houſe of Commons, thought there was no Way, but by their Heats, to bring the King to a full Diſlike, and conſequently to a Diſuſe of Parliaments; and by this Means the Duke of York's Intereſt was now in the only Way to be ſecured.

Sir William Temple's Opinion of them.

Theſe Extreams were very apparent to Sir William Temple, in the laſt Debates in the Council, concerning the Anſwer his Majeſty ſhou'd return to the laſt Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons, relating to the Excluſion. Sir William was of Opinion, 'That when both Houſes agreed upon an 'Addreſs to that Purpoſe, his Majeſty ſhou'd give them an Anſwer; but 'till then ſuſpend it, and not ſend a poſitive Reply to one Houſe upon 'ſo weighty an Occaſion, which, for what appear'd, might be contrary 'to the Senſe of the other. By this Means he cou'd be ſecure from the 'Neceſſity of any direct Breach with the Commons; ſince he knew well 'enough, the Lords wou'd not conſent to the Addreſs. And if the 'Parliament came to be Diſſolv'd, it were better for the King it ſhou'd 'break upon Differences between the two Houſes, than between his Ma'jeſty and them; For that wou'd give the Nation an Opinion, that he 'was reſolv'd to live without Parliaments hereafter; which perhaps might 'endanger the Peace at Home, but however wou'd ruin the Hopes of 'our Neighbours Abroad, who had no other of defending themſelves 'againſt France, but by the Power of England. That if this Parliament 'broke upon Diſputes between the two Houſes, it might yet be expe'cted he wou'd call another, and perhaps a Third, and agree with ſome 'of them; by which alone he cou'd be Great and Safe both at Home 'and Abroad. For it was between the King and his Parliament, as be'tween the Mountain and Mahomet, who told the People what Mira'cles he cou'd do when he was at the Top of the Mountain; and to 'that purpoſe, on ſuch a Day, he wou'd call it to him: He did ſo, but 'when the Mountain wou'd not come, he ſaid, That if the Mountain 'wou'd not come to Mahomet, he wou'd go to the Mountain; for unleſs 'they both met, no Wonders cou'd be done.' The King ſeem'd pleas'd with all he ſaid, and with the Compariſon; but thoſe of the Council that were chief in the private Meaſures taken at that Time, were for a poſitive Anſwer to be given to the Houſe of Commons, let them take it how they pleas'd; and accordingly they drew One up in private, and without the Knowledge of Sir William Temple.

After the Thing was finiſh'd, they had ſome doubt as to the Perſon that was to carry it to the Houſe of Commons: Mr. Secretary Jenkins was firſt charg'd with it; but he was thought too unacceptable to the Houſe, for a Meſſage that was like to prove ſo; and the next Morning the King wou'd have had Sir Robert Carr, or Mr. Sidney Godolphin, to have carry'd it, but they both excus'd themſelves. Whereupon the King ſent for Sir William Temple, who had lately told his Majeſty, He expected to be turn'd out of the Houſe in the Morning, and out of the Council in the Afternoon. But not expecting this Order, Sir William freely anſwer'd his Majeſty, That he did not very well underſtand why a Thing agreed upon laſt Night at the Council-Table, ſhou'd be alter'd in his Chamber; but however he was very willing to obey him; and rather, becauſe others had excus'd themſelves, and to ſhew his Majeſty that he intended to play no Popular Games. Upon which he took the Paper, and with the ſame Freedom ſaid to the King, That he was very ſenſible how much of his Confidence he formerly had, and how much he had loſt, without knowing the Occaſion; or elſe he might have had Part in the Conſulting this Change of what was laſt Night reſolv'd, as well as in Executing it; and he wou'd confeſs to his Majeſty, That he had not ſo good a Stomach in Buſineſs, as to be content with Swallowing what other People had Chew'd. Upon which he departed, and deliver'd the Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons upon the 4th Day of January.

He carries the King's Meſſage to the Commons.

The Meſſage was not publickly read till three Days after, tho' the Tenour of it was ſufficiently known; for they were at this Time buſily employ'd in Enquiring into the Crimes and Miſdemeanours of the Judges and others, and particularly were drawing up Articles of Impeachment againſt the Lord-Chief-Juſtice Scroggs, who was accus'd of Endeavouring to ſtifle the Belief of the Plot, Diſcouraging the King's Evidences, Diſmiſſing of the Grand Jury that ſhou'd have preſented the Duke of York, and of unjuſtly Proſecuting ſeveral Writers and Publiſhers of Pamphlets, as Henry Care, George Broome, Edward Berry, Benjamin Harris, Francis Smith Senior and Junior, Jane Curtis, &c. all which Crimes and Miſdemeanours, ought, in their Opinion, to be accounted Treaſon. So they determin'd their Impeachment, and order'd the Articles to be Ingroſs'd and carry'd up to the Lords, by the Lord Cavendiſh. On the other ſide the Lords were as obliging, in ſending at the ſame Time this Meſſage; ‘ Reſolved, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament ‘ aſſembled, That they do Declare, that they are fully ſatisfy'd, that ‘ there now is, and for divers Years laſt hath been, a horrid and Treaſon- ‘ able Plot, Contriv'd and Carry'd on by thoſe of the Popiſh Religion ‘ in Ireland, for Maſſacring the Engliſh, and Subverting the Proteſtant ‘ Religion, and the ancient Eſtabliſh'd Government in that Kingdom: To ‘ which their Lordſhips deſire the Concurrence of this Houſe.’ Upon this the Commons ſoon Reſolv'd, ‘ That the Houſe doth agree with the ‘ Lords in the ſaid Vote, with the Addition of theſe Words; That ‘ the Duke of York's being a Papiſt, and the Expectation of his Coming ‘ to the Crown, hath given the greateſt Countenance and Incourage- ‘ ment thereto, as well as to the Horrid Popiſh Plot in the Kingdom of ‘ England.

The Lords Reſolve.

5. On Friday, the 7th of January, the Houſe of Commons thought fit to read the King's Meſſage and Anſwer to their laſt Addreſs, which did run in theſe Words: CHARLES REX, His Majeſty receiv'd the Addreſs of this Houſe with all the Diſpoſition they cou'd wiſh to comply with their Reaſonable Deſires; but upon Peruſing it, he is ſorry to ſee their Thoughts ſo wholly fix'd upon the Bill of Excluſion, as to determine, That all other Remedies for the Suppreſſing of Popery will be ineffectual: His Majeſty is confirm'd in an Opinion againſt that Bill, by the Judgement of the Houſe of Lords, who Rejected it. He therefore thinks there

The King's Meſſage in Anſwer to the Commons Addreſs.

there remains nothing more for him to ſay, in Anſwer to the Addreſs of this Houſe, but to Recommend to them the Conſideration of all Other Means for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion; in which they have no Reaſon to doubt of his Concurrence, whenever they ſhall be preſented to him in a Parliamentary Way: And that they wou'd conſider the Preſent State of the Kingdom, as well as the Condition of Chriſtendom, in ſuch a Manner as may enable him to preſerve Tangier, and Secure the Alliances Abroad, and the Peace and Settlement at Home. 1680/81. Car. 32 Reſ. 21

When Sir William Temple firſt appear'd with this Meſſage, Sir William Jones, having taken an Affection to him, was ſorry to ſee him upon ſuch an Occaſion; and told him, That for Himſelf, he was old and infirm, and expected to die in a ſhort Time: But You, added he, will in all probability live to ſee the whole Kingdom lament the Conſequences of this Meſſage you have now brought us from the King. Accordingly the Houſe of Commons receiv'd it with the utmoſt Reſentment, and not a little reflected upon the Houſe of Lords for throwing out the Excluſion Bill without ſo much as a Conference, or Propoſal of Expedients; and One ſaid, If the King ſhou'd ask the Lords why they were of that Opinion, many of them would tell him, Becauſe he was of that Opinion, and becauſe they were aw'd by his Preſence. They likewiſe reflected upon the Duke, and Sir Francis Winnington ſaid, If he had ever conſulted the Books writ by his Grand-Father or Father, or their Declarations in Matters of Religion, he wou'd never have brought theſe Difficulties upon his King and Country: It was ſtrange he ſhou'd aim to get Heaven, by Proceedings ſo contrary to what his Father atteſted with his Blood. Then they argu'd afreſh for the Excluſion of the Duke, and ſaid, That a Popiſh Head on a Proteſtant Body wou'd be ſuch a Monſter in Nature, as wou'd neither be fit to preſerve, or be preſerved; and that therefore it wou'd as naturally follow, as Night did the Day, That either the Head will change the Body, or the Body the Head. Then as to Expedients, which were much talk'd of, Colonel Titus alledg'd, That to accept of them to ſecure the Proteſtant Religion, after ſuch a King had mounted the Throne, wou'd be as ſtrange as if there were a Lyon in the Lobby, and they ſhou'd Vote, That they wou'd rather ſecure themſelves by letting him in and Chaining him, than by Keeping him out. Warm Debates upon it.

On the other Side, they were briskly oppos'd by Mr. Hyde, Mr. Finch, and Secretary Jenkins, who argu'd againſt the Invalidity, as well as the Unreaſonableneſs of the Bill, and endeavour'd to convince them of the Folly of Endeavouring to obtain a Thing, which they might be ſure the King and the Lords wou'd never grant. All which only ſo much the more enrag'd them, and in concluſion of the Debate, they came to theſe Three grand Reſolutions. 1. Reſolved, 'That it is the Opinion of this 'Houſe, That there is no Security or Safety for the Proteſtant Religion, 'the King's Life, or Government of this Nation, without Paſſing a Bill 'for Diſabling James Duke of York to Inherit the Imperial Crown of 'this Realm, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging: 'And to rely upon any other Means and Remedies, is not only Inſufficient, but Dangerous. 2. Reſolved, That his Majeſty, in his laſt Meſſage, having aſſured this Houſe of his Readineſs to Concurr in all other 'Means for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, This Houſe doth Declare, That until a Bill be likewiſe Paſs'd for Excluding the 'Duke of York, this Houſe cannot give any Supply to his Majeſty, without Danger to his Majeſty's Perſon, extreme Hazard of the Proteſtant 'Religion, and Unfaithfulneſs to thoſe by whom the Houſe is intruſted. '3. Reſolved, That all Perſons who adviſ'd his Majeſty in his laſt 'Meſſage to this Houſe, to inſiſt upon an Opinion againſt the 'Bill for Excluding the Duke of York, have given pernicious Counſel Three great Reſolves.

Addreſſes againſt Perſons.

'to his Majeſty, and are Promoters of Popery, and Enemies to the King 'and Kingdom.

Not thus ſatisfy'd, they proceeded to name ſeveral Perſons, whom they ſuppos'd had given ill Advice to his Majeſty; and they us'd ſeveral Arguments to prove That Addreſſes might be made, grounded on Common Fame, for their Removal. They inſiſted 'That it was an ancient Right, 'and conſtant Practice of the Commons aſſembled in Parliament, to 'make Addreſſes to the King, grounded on Common Fame, or Mo-'ral Certainty, for the Removing ſuch Counſellors or Officers, as they 'thought were pernicious to the Government.' The Reſult was, that beſides George Earl of Hallifax, they expreſly nam'd Laurence Hyde Eſquire, Henry Marquis of Worceſter, Henry Earl of Clarendon, and Lewis Earl of Feverſham; and Voted an Addreſs to be preſented to his Majeſty, to remove them from all Offices of Honour and Profits, and from his Majeſty's Councils and Preſence for ever. And to proceed yet further, the Houſe enter'd into a Debate of Parliamentary Aids, and againſt all other Ways of Supplying the King's Occaſions, as tending to keeping off Parliaments, and exhauſting the Publick Treaſures, and contracting Debts, and Undermining the Government; and in Concluſion came to two Grand Reſolutions; 1. Reſolved, 'That whoſoever ſhall 'hereafter Lend, or cauſe to be Lent, by Way of Advance, any Money, 'upon the Branches of the King's Revenue, ariſing by Cuſtom, Exciſe, 'or Hearth-Money, ſhall be judg'd a Hinderer of the Sitting of Parlia-'ments, and be reſponſible for the ſame in Parliament. 2. Reſolved, That 'whoſoever ſhall Accept or Buy any Tally, or Anticipation, upon any 'Part of the King's Revenue; or whoever ſhall pay ſuch Tally hereafter 'to be ſtruck, ſhall be adjudg'd to hinder the Sitting of Parliaments, and 'be reſponſible therefore in Parliament.

Two more Reſolves.

6. Thus were Things carry'd to the utmoſt Extremity, and chiefly upon the Account of the Excluſion Bill, in the Proſecution of which they ſeem'd indefatigable. The Lord Ruſſel, upon the firſt Diſappointment in the other Houſe, grew ſo warm as to ſay, That if his own Father had been one of thoſe that refus'd to paſs the Bill, he would have been the firſt Man that ſhould Impeach him of High-Treaſon: Words of an high Nature, and not like to be ſoon forgotten. They all along acted like Men not without Hopes; and being ſtill perſuaded, that moſt of thoſe Peers that rejected the Bill did it to oblige the King, they apply'd themſelves to prevail upon his Majeſty's Reſolution by various Methods. Father Orleans tells us they made uſe of the Ladies, whom they had purchas'd with large Sums, to gain this important Point; and one of thoſe beautiful Creatures caſt herſelf at his Majeſty's Feet, to beg he would conſent to exclude the Duke; which, he ſaid, was a dangerous Tryal of Brotherly Affection, upon a Prince ſo open and yielding in that Particular. No Methods were left unattempted; and even a Memorial from Holland was ſent over by Mr. Sydney, the King's Envoy there, from the Penſioner Fagel, Repreſenting the ſad Conſequences abroad of the King's not agreeing with his Parliaments; the Danger of the Allies, and the Proteſtant Religion; and ſeeming to wiſh that the King would not break with them, tho' it were upon this grand Point. This was at firſt ſuppos'd to be the Contrivance of the Earl of Sunderland, Nephew to Mr. Sydney, and was accordingly reſented at Court.

The King tempted to yield.

All theſe only ſerv'd to exaſperate the King, and to cauſe thoſe about him to make Compariſons between this Year and Forty One, ſo that he might be out of Love with Parliaments. He now found that he could neither ſecure his Miniſters nor his Brother, nor hardly Himſelf; therefore

fore on Monday the 10th of January he resolv'd to put an End to the Session of Parliament. The Commons having private Notice of this, assembled early in the Morning, and before the Usher of the Black-Rod came in, they came to these Three great Resolutions: '1. Resolved, That 'whosoever advis'd his Majesty to Prorogue the Parliament, to any other Purpose than in Order to passing a Bill for the Exclusion of James 'Duke of York, is a Betrayer of the King, the Protestant Religion, and 'of the Kingdom of England, a Promoter of the French Interest, and a 'Pensioner of France. 2. Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this House, 'That the Acts of Parliament made in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth 'and King James, against Popish Recusants, ought not to be extended a-'gainst Protestant Dissenters. 3. Resolved, That it is the Opinion of 'this House, that the Prosecution of Protestant Dissenters upon the Pe-'nal Laws, is at this Time grievous to the Subject, a Weakning the 'Protestant Interest, an Encouragement to Popery, and dangerous to 'the Peace of the Kingdom.' After which the House of Commons were sent for up to the Lords; where his Majesty seated on his Throne, was pleas'd to give his Royal Assent to, 1. An Act Prohibiting the Importation of Cattle from Ireland. 2. An Act for Supplying the late Act for Burying in Woollen: And 3. to a Private Act, concerning Sir Charles Houghton. And then his Majesty was pleas'd to command the Lord Chancellor to Prorogue the Parliament till Thursday the 20th of this Instant January. And thus, in Effect, ended the Fourth Parliament in this Reign, after it had sate two Months, and near three Weeks.

The Commons last Resolves.

The Parliament Prorogu'd.

On the Day of the Prorogation, the Commons had with their expiring Breath sent their kind Commendations and Thanks to the City of London; which so affected them, that on the 13th Instant, the Lord Mayor, Sir Patience Ward, with a Court of Common-Council, order'd a Petition to be drawn up, and presented to the King, setting forth, 'That 'whereas the Parliament had Convicted one of the five Popish Lords 'in the Tower, and were about to Convict the other Four of High-'Treason; That they had Impeach'd the Chief-Justice Scroggs, and were 'about to Impeach other Judges; and all this in Order to the Preserva-'tion of his Majesty's Life, the Protestant Religion, and the Govern-'ment of England: That they were extreamly surpriz'd to see the Par-'liament Prorogu'd in the Height of their Business: That their only 'Hopes were that this was done only in Order to bring such Affairs a-'bout again as were necessary to the Setling the Nation. They there-'fore pray'd, that his Majesty would be pleas'd to let the Parliament sit 'at the Day appointed, and so to continue till they had effected all the 'great Affairs before them.' To this Effect was the Petition, which was further order'd to be deliver'd that Night, or as soon as might be, by the Lord Mayor, attended by the new Recorder George Treby Esquire, and certain Members of the Court of Aldermen, and Common-Council. But this further provok'd the King, and hastned his Resolution of finally parting with his Parliament. Accordingly, two Days before the Time of their Meeting, he by Proclamation Dissolv'd the present Parliament: And in the same Proclamation, he declar'd his Intentions of Calling another Parliament to meet on the 21st Day of March next: but, being offended at the City of London, and hoping to meet with better Success by a Removal, he appointed Oxford to be the Place of their Meeting, where he had formerly, in the Year 1665, found the most imaginable Harmony in and between both Houses.

The Dissolution of the Fourth Parliament.

New Writs.

In this Year there dy'd several Persons of Note and Eminency, of various Qualities and Characters; among whom we shall begin with two of the Nobility, Thomas Boteler Earl of Ossory, and John Wilmot Earl of of Rocheſter. The Firſt was an Iriſh Earl, and an Engliſh Baron, the Eldeſt Son of the preſent famous Duke of Ormond, a Perſon of invincible Courage and Bravery, who did Wonders in the Second Dutch War: His Eminent Loyalty and forward Zeal on all Occaſions to ſerve his King and Country, were manifeſted by many generous and gallant Actions; which, as they caus'd him to be honour'd and eſteem'd by all when living, made him alſo when dead to be generally lamented by the Court and Country, and many famous Elegies to be writ in Memory of ſo great and valiant a Commander. The other, the Earl of Rocheſter, was Son to Wilmot the General, ſo often mention'd in the laſt Volume, who having improv'd his firſt Studies by his Travels abroad, and diſplay'd his Courage in the firſt Dutch War, he appear'd at Court in the 18th Year of his Age, with all the Advantages and Accompliſhments of Body and Mind; a handſome and graceful Perſon, a polite and gentile Behaviour, a Wit and Pregnancy of Fancy not to be imitated, in which, as to ſome Particulars, he ſeem'd to outdo the beſt of the ancient and modern Poets, of which he ſhew'd himſelf a great Maſter. But being gradually corrupted by the Pleaſures of the Court, and the Charms of the Company, as the Duke of Buckingham, &c. the Heat and Vivacity of his Temper tranſported him to the utmoſt Exceſſes and Extravagancies of Thought and Invention; ſo that for keen Satyr, and unlimited Senſuality, he was diſtinguiſh'd in the moſt knowing and voluptuous Court in the World. At length his Body being worn, and ſeiz'd with a lingering Sickneſs, he was made ſenſible of his miſerable Condition, and at laſt, contrary to the Expectation and Belief of his lewd Companions, became a ſolemn and ſignal Penitent; being carry'd off in his Prime, the 32d Year of his Age.

The Earl of Rocheſter,

Dr. Alleſtry. After theſe Noblemen, we ſhall mention four or five Divines, and firſt Dr. Richard Alleſtry, educated in Chriſt-Church in Oxford, where beſides his Learning, he diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his Loyalty to the late King, for which he was a great Sufferer, and ſometime an Exile with the preſent King. After the Reſtoration, he was made Canon of Chriſt-Church, and Regius Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity, and laſt of all, Provoſt of Eaton College; in all which Places he ſhew'd himſelf a Perſon richly furniſh'd with all variety of choice ſolid Learning, requiſite to recommend him to the more intelligent World, for one of the moſt eminent Divines and Preachers in the Age. The next was Dr. James Duport, who had his Education in Magdalen College in Cambridge Univerſity, of which College he was for ſome time Maſter, and afterwards Dean of Peterborough: He was a conſiderable and noted Scholar, and particularly an extraordinary Grecian, as to which he manifeſted his Faculties in ſeveral Pieces, eſpecially his celebrated Paraphraſe upon the Pſalms, and the Book of Job. The Third was Mr. Joſeph Glanvill, an Oxonian, and Fellow of the Royal-Society, Chaplain to the King, and Rector of the great Church in Bathe; he was a great Philoſopher and Virtuoſo, and very much diſplay'd his Parts and Talents in publiſhing ſeveral Books of curious and uncommon Subjects, in which he ſhew'd a rich and warm Fancy, a Quickneſs and Facility of Writing, with a notable Way of Argumentation: He propagated ſome Notions and Opinions in Theology and Philoſophy, which were thought not very ſound in One, or very certain in the Other; and he particularly diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by teaching the Nature of Immaterial Subſtances, Apparitions, Witchcraft, and other Matters above the Credibility of ſeveral of the Age. The Fourth was Mr. Stephen Charnock, Batchelor of Divinity, a Presbyterian Divine, firſt educated in Emanuel College in Cambridge, then remov'd to New-College in Oxford, and afterwards to Dublin, in the Family of Henry

Dr. Duport.

Mr. Glanvill,

Mr. Charnock.

Henry Cromwell. Returning into England, he refus'd Conformity with the Church of England according to the Bartholomew Act; and after ſome Time, he became Paſtor of a Congregation in London, where he was much admired for his ſolid and judicious Preaching, in which he ſhew'd great Parts, a ſtrong Reaſon, a ſound Judgment, together with a curious Fancy; and what was ſtill more valuable, his Love and Charity was as extenſive as his Knowledge; which made him take in whatſoever was amiable in any Perſon or Thing, that came within the Compaſs of it. 1680/81. Car. 32 Reſ. 21

After theſe, we may mention a Fifth, viz. Mr. Chriſtopher Davenport, a Native of Coventry, who after a ſhort continuance in Merton College in Oxford, went over into Flanders, where turning Papiſt, he enter'd into the Order of the Franciſcans in the Reign of King James; and after ſome Travels, he became a noted Miſſionary in England, where he went by the Name of Franciſcus à Sancta Clara, and at length was made one of the Chaplains to the late Queen Henrietta Maria, when he became particularly known to Archbiſhop Laud, and his Acquaintance was made one Article againſt that Prelate. He likewiſe became Theologiſt and chief Chaplain to the preſent Queen Catharine, and was ſeveral times made Provincial Miniſter of his Order for the Kingdom of England. After his Settlement in England, where he continu'd going and coming more than fifty Years, he did extraordinary Service to the Romiſh Church, by gaining Diſciples, raiſing Moneys, writing of Books, and by his unweary'd Endeavours in exerting his great Learning and Abilities in carrying on the general Cauſe of his Party. At laſt he dy'd at Somerſet-Houſe in Peace and Quiet, in the 83d Year of his Age. Mr. Davenport,

We have three other extraordinary, but very different Perſons ſtill to mention; the firſt, Mr. Samuel Butler, of Worceſterſhire by Birth, and of Cambridge by Education, from whence he was taken into the Service of the Counteſs of Kent; in whoſe Family he for ſeveral Years exercis'd his Parts in Painting, Muſick and Poetry, ſo as to be taken notice of by the moſt eminent in thoſe Accompliſhments. Afterwards he was ſucceſſively made Secretary to the Lord Carbury, and the Duke of Buckingham, when he made himſelf famous for that admirable Poem call'd Hudibras, in which he ſurprizingly diſplay'd the ſublimeſt Wit and nobleſt Thoughts in a Dreſs ſo Humorſom and Comical, that it became the chief Entertainment of the King and Court, and all that had a Taſte for the moſt refin'd Ridicule and Satyr. But at length, this Man having the Enjoyment of more Wit than he knew how to manage, and more Pleaſures than he knew how to maintain, became in effect neglected, and dy'd almoſt in Obſcurity. Mr. Butler,

The ſecond was Harry Marten, the Regicide, often mention'd in this Hiſtory, a Perſon moſt deeply ingag'd in all the late Miſeries in the Kingdom, and in the moſt infamous and bloody Part of them, and all with ſuch a merry and careleſs Air, as is ſcarce to be credited upon ſuch a melancholy Occaſion. His natural Parts, his ſharp Repartees, and his exceeding apt Inſtances, made him not only the Sport and Diverſion, but very often the Manager and Director of the Commons in the Long Parliament. Having ſpent a noble Paternal Eſtate, and vaſt Sums, gain'd by Plunder, or given by Parliaments, upon his Debaucheries, he was upon the Reſtoration condemn'd to dye; but in Concluſion confin'd to Chepſtow Caſtle in Monmouthſhire, where he continu'd Priſoner for twenty Years, in a poor wretched Condition, being glad to receive a Pot of Ale from any that wou'd give it him; and thus low in Spirits, and his Wit exhauſted, he dy'd ſuddenly with Meat in his Mouth, in the 78th Year of his Age. Harry Marten,

The laſt was Sir Peter Lely, the renowned Painter of the Age, a German by Birth, who began his Education in Holland, and compleated it in England, where he was highly eſteem'd by the And Sir Peter Lely.

late and the preſent King; the latter of whom made him his Painter, and gave him the Honour of Knighthood. He excell'd in the Correctneſs of his Drawing, and the Beauty of his Colouring; but eſpecially in the graceful Airs of his Figures, the pleaſing Variety of his Poſtures, and his genteel Negligence and looſe Manner of Draperies. Beſides the King, he was extreamly reſpected by all the Perſons of Eminence in the Kingdom; and indeed ſo diſtinguiſhing were his Natural Parts, and alſo his acquired Knowledge, that it wou'd be hard to determine whether he was a better Painter, or a more accompliſh'd Gentleman. While he was continually improving in his Art, he was ſnatcht away by an Apoplectick Fit, in the 63d Year of his Age.

VIII. 1. The Nation was at this Time in the greateſt Ferment, and the King under no leſs Difficulties and Perplexities: But tho' his Majeſty knew not how to Diſſolve his Parliament without Calling another in the ſame Proclamation, yet as ſoon as he had given the Blow, he began to fall into new Meaſures and Contrivances, and to ſhew that he did not ſo much value the Agreeing with his Parliaments, eſpecially if the next ſhou'd not anſwer his Wants and Expectations. And firſt he made ſeveral Removes and Alterations in his Council, and particularly the Earl of Sunderland was remov'd both from the Council and his Secretary's Place, who had voted for the Excluſion Bill not only againſt the King's Mind, but his expreſs Command; which caus'd the Commons to hope that he wou'd not have done ſo, unleſs he believ'd the King intended to comply with them at laſt. About the ſame Time the Names of the Earl of Eſſex, the Earl of Salisbury and Sir William Temple, were ſtruck out of the Council Book, as Perſons not proper for the preſent Times; tho' Sir William tells us that he had juſt then retired of Himſelf, not expecting to be further ſerviceable to his Majeſty's Affairs. In the Room of the Earl of Sunderland, the right honourable Edward Earl of Conway was made one of the principal Secretaries of Sate, and took his Place in the Council, on the 2d of February. About the ſame Time the Earl of Oxford, the Earl of Cheſterfield, and the Earl of Alesbury, were ſworn of his Majeſty's Privy Council, and took their Places at the Board. Shortly after, Sir Robert Sawyer was ſworn his Majeſty's Attorney-General, in the Room of Sir Creſwell Levinz, who was made one of the Judges of the Common-Pleas, in the Place of Sir Thomas Ellis deceas'd. And not long after that, the Earl of Craven was likewiſe ſworn of his Majeſty's Privy-Council.

Several Alterations in Court.

On the other Side, both City and Country were buſily and warmly employ'd in the Election of Members to ſerve in the enſuing Parliament. The City of London led the Way, and ſet an Example; when the Election was made at Guild-Hall on the 4th of February, and the Choice fix'd upon by the Common-Hall, were their old Members, Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Thomas Player, Thomas Pilkington, and William Love Eſquires. As ſoon as the Election was over, an extraordinary Paper was preſented to theſe Four in the Name of the Citizens of London then aſſembled in Common-Hall, containing a 'Return of their moſt hearty Thanks for 'their faithful and unweary'd Endeavours, in the two laſt Parliaments, 'to ſearch into and diſcover the Depth of the Popiſh Plot, to preſerve 'his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, the Proteſtant Religion, and the well Eſta-'bliſh'd Government of this Realm, to ſecure the Meeting and Sitting 'of frequent Parliaments, to aſſert our undoubted Rights of Petitioning, 'and to puniſh ſuch as have betray'd thoſe Rights, to promote the long 'wiſh'd-for Union of his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects, to Repeal the 'thirty fifth of Elizabeth, and the Corporation Act; and more eſpecial-'ly

'ly for their aſſiduous Endeavours in Promoting the Bill of Excluſion of 'James Duke of York.' In fine they concluded, 'That being confident-'ly aſſur'd that They, the ſaid Members for the City, will never conſent 'to the Granting any Money-Supply, till they have effectually ſecured 'them againſt Popery and Arbitrary Power, they reſolv'd, by God's Af-'ſiſtance, to ſtand by their ſaid Members, with their Lives and Fortunes.' In the like Manner were the former Members of Parliament again choſen, in moſt Places in the Kingdom; and in many, ſuch like Papers of Addreſs preſented to them, in their reſpective Countries, as had been done to their Members by the Commonalty of London. And the Zeal was now ſo great, that, contrary to the Cuſtom of the Members treating the Country, now the Country in moſt Places treated them, or at leaſt every Man bore his own Charges.

2. The greateſt Uneaſineſs and Diſappointment to the prevailing Party in the Elections, was the Place of their Meeting, Oxford, the Diſtance of which might naturally cauſe a Diminution of their Power and Influence. Therefore it was reſolv'd by ſeveral of the Nobility to draw up a formal Petition againſt that Place; which was early deliver'd to the King by the Earl of Eſſex himſelf, who introduc'd it by this following Speech: May it pleaſe your Majeſty, The Lords here preſent, together with divers other Peers of the Realm, taking notice that by your late Proclamation, your Majeſty had declar'd an Intention of Calling a Parliament at Oxford; and obſerving from Hiſtory and Records, how unfortunate many Aſſemblies have been, when call'd at a Place remote from the Capital City; as particularly the Congreſs in Henry the Second's Time at Clarendon; Three ſeveral Parliaments at Oxford in Henry the Third's Time, and at Coventry in Henry the Sixth's Time; with divers others which have prov'd very fatal to thoſe Kings, and have been follow'd with great Miſchief on the whole Kingdom: And conſidering the preſent Poſture of Affairs, the many Jealouſies and Diſcontents which are amongſt the People, we have great Cauſe to apprehend, that the Conſequences of a Parliament now at Oxford may be as fatal to your Majeſty and the Nation, as thoſe others mention'd have been to the then Reigning Kings. And therefore we do conceive, that we cannot anſwer it to God, to your Majeſty, or to the People, if we, being Peers of the Realm, ſhould not on ſo important an Occaſion humbly offer our Advice to your Majeſty; That if poſſible, your Majeſty may be prevail'd with, to alter this (as we apprehend) Unſeaſonable Reſolution. The Grounds and Reaſons of our Opinion are contain'd in this our Petition, which we humbly preſent to your Majeſty.

The Earl of Eſſex's Speech to the King.

The Petition it ſelf conſiſted very much of a Recapitulation of the Misfortunes attending the untimely Prorogations, Diſſolutions, and Diſcontinuations of Parliaments of late, at a time when his Majeſty's Perſon, and the whole Nation was in imminent Danger from the Papiſts: And 'now at laſt his Majeſty had been prevail'd to call another Parliament at 'Oxford, where neither Lords nor Commons cou'd be in Safety, but 'wou'd be daily expos'd to the Sword of the Papiſts, and their Adhe-'rents, of whom too many had crept into his Majeſty's Guards: The 'Liberty of Speaking according to their Conſciences wou'd be thereby 'deſtroy'd, and the Validity of their Acts and Proceedings left diſputa-'ble: The Straitneſs of the Place no ways admitted of ſuch a Concourſe 'of Perſons, as now follow'd every Parliament; and the Witneſſes which 'were neceſſary to give Evidence upon the Commons Impeachment, were 'unable to bear the Charges of ſuch a Journey, and unwilling to truſt 'themſelves under the Protection of a Parliament, that was it ſelf 'evidently under the Power of Guards and Soldiers. In Concluſion,

'they pray'd that the Parliament might, as uſually, ſit at Weſtminſter, 'where they might Conſult and Act with Safety and Freedom.' This Petition was ſubſcrib'd by ſixteen Lords, viz. Monmouth, Kent, Huntington, Bedford, Salisbury, Clare, Stamford, Eſſex, Shaftsbury, Mordant, Evers, Paget, Grey, Herbert, Howard and Delamer. The King gave no Anſwer that we find, but frown'd upon the Deliverers of this Petition, and perſiſted in his Reſolution of Holding the Parliament at Oxford.

Libels.

3. All this while Libels, Pamphlets, and ſtrange Stories flew about the City and Country, being for the moſt part publiſh'd and diſpers'd by Francis Smith, Benjamin Harris, Langly Curtis, &c. In Oppoſition to which, and in Favour of the King and Court, there Weekly came out a notable Paper call'd Heraclitus Ridens, written by unknown Perſons, and fill'd with uncommon Wit and Humour, which continu'd for a Year and a Half with no ſmall Succeſs. But at this Time none made greater Noiſe, or caus'd more Enquiries, than a Libel written by an Iriſh Papiſt call'd Fitz-Harris, the Deſign of which was by ſome look'd upon as a ſecond Meal-Tub-Plot. The Myſtery of this, as of many villainous Projects, is hard to be unfolded; but the Main of what we know of it, is to this Effect. Mr. Edward Fitz-Harris, the Son of Sir Edward Fitz-Harris of Ireland, was a particular Correſpondent with the intriguing Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and her favourite Woman, Mrs. Wall, and likewiſe with the Confeſſor of the French Ambaſſador; and the Dutcheſs had ſeveral Times ſupply'd him with Money, and once with two Hundred and fifty Pounds, either for ſecret Service, or Charity, as it was differently reported. Fitz-Harris, having been acquainted with one Everard beyond Sea, where they were both in the French King's Service, about the Beginning of February, after the Diſſolution of the Parliament, he renew'd his Acquaintance with that Gentleman, and repreſented the Advantages he might receive by forſaking the Engliſh, and entering himſelf into the French and Popiſh Intereſt; and particularly that it wou'd be very conducive to that Intereſt, if he wou'd publiſh a Pamphlet, which might ſo reflect upon the King, as ſhou'd alienate both Him and his People, and break the Union between them. Tho' Everard did not give a full conſent to this, yet Fitz-Harris, upon the 21ſt of February, gave him ſome Heads by Word of Mouth to draw up ſuch a Pamphlet: Which Procedure caus'd Everard to acquaint ſeveral with the Project, and particularly one Mr. Smith and Sir William Waller, whom he engag'd in a conceal'd Manner, to be at an appointed Place to hear the further Diſcourſe between them, which was the next Day; and whither the Former came, where he heard Fitz-Harris give his Inſtructions to this purpoſe: 'That the King and Royal Family ſhou'd be traduc'd, as being Pa- 'piſts, and arbitrarily affected from the Beginning; That King Charles 'the Firſt had a Hand in the Iriſh Rebellion, and that Charles the Second 'did countenance the ſame, by preferring Fitz-Gerald, Fitz-Patrick, 'and Mount-Garret, who were engag'd in the ſaid Rebellion: That the 'Act forbidding to call the King a Papiſt, was to ſtop Mens Mouths 'when he ſhou'd encline to further Popery; which appear'd by his ad-'hering ſo cloſely to the Duke of York's Intereſt, and hindering him from 'being proceeded againſt by the Parliament, and hindering the Officers 'put in by the Duke to be turn'd out; and for that the Privy-Counſellors and Juſtices of the Peace, who were for the Proteſtant Intereſt, 'were turn'd out of all Places of Truſt: That it was as much in the Power 'of the People, to Depoſe a Popiſh Poſſeſſor, as a Popiſh Succeſſor, and 'ſeeing there was no Hopes, that the Parliament, when they met at 'Oxford,

His Project.

'Oxford, cou'd do any Good, the People were bound to provide for Themſelves. 1680/81.

This being finiſh'd, they agreed to meet the next Day upon the ſame Buſineſs; and Everard ſent Sir William Waller a Letter to meet there in a conceal'd Manner, and take notice of Paſſages; to whom Everard, upon his coming, gave two Copies of the foreſaid Inſtructions, which Sir William mark'd. Soon after Fitz-Harris came in, and enquired of Everard what he had done; who anſwer'd, He had drawn two Copies of the Buſineſs, and pray'd Fitz-Harris to ſee how he lik'd them: Who, upon Peruſal, alter'd one of them; yet thought it not full enough, but wou'd have it fair wrote over for the French Ambaſſador's Confeſſor. After which, Everard deſired to give him Inſtructions in Writing; which Fitz-Harris did, and in that Paper wrote this Paſſage, That it was in the People's Power to depoſe a Popiſh Poſſeſſor, as well as a Popiſh Succeſſor, and other Treaſonable Heads, and left the ſame with him. And next Day Fitz-Harris came again for a fair Copy writ out, which Everard deliver'd to him, who thereupon promis'd him a Recompence, which was to be the Entrance into the Buſineſs, and that Everard ſhou'd be brought into the Cabal, where ſeveral Proteſtants and Parliament Men were to give an Account to the French Ambaſſador of what was tranſacted. But before Fitz-Harris was to receive the Libel, he was to go to the Lord Howard of Eſcrick, between whom and the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, before this, he had carry'd ſeveral Meſſages, and went a great Way towards bringing his Lordſhip over to the Court Intereſt, who had been an open Enemy to it. This was ſo well purſu'd by Fitz-Harris, that the Lord waited ſeveral Times upon the Dutcheſs, and found the King there; and the Night before the Lord Stafford's Sentence, Fitz-Harris came to him from the King, and told his Lordſhip, That his Majeſty wou'd take it as a great Reſignation to his Will and Pleaſure, if his Lordſhip wou'd go the next Day and vote for my Lord Stafford. Car. 33 Reſ. 21 The Diſcovery of it.

But to take ſome Notice of the Libel it ſelf, it was Entituled, The true Engliſh-Man ſpeaking plain Engliſh, and began thus: 'Sir, I thank 'you for The Character of a Popiſh Succeſſor, which you ſent me; where- 'in our juſt Fears, and the Grounds of them, are juſtly ſet out. But I 'am in greater Fear of the preſent Poſſeſſor; Why do we frighten our 'ſelves about the Evil that is to come, not looking to that which is at 'hand? We wou'd cut off the budding Weed, and let the Poyſonous 'Root lye ſtill; we wou'd ſtop the Channel of our Evils, and let the 'Fountain ſtill run: My Meaning is this. Can Pylades know and Act all 'theſe bloody Conſpiracies, and not impart them to his dear Oreſtes? 'If James be conſcious and guilty, Charles is ſo too: Believe me, theſe 'two Brethren in Iniquity are in Confederacy with the Pope and French 'to introduce Popery and Arbitrary Government, as all their Actions 'demonſtrate: The Parliament, Magna Charta, and Liberty of the Sub- 'ject are as heavy Yoaks, which they wou'd caſt off to be as abſolute as 'their Brother of France; and if this can be prov'd to be their only Aim 'and Endeavour, why ſhou'd not every true Britain be a Quaker thus 'far? Let the Engliſh riſe, and move as one Man to Self-Defence, to o- 'pen Action, and fling off their intolerable Riders; Blow the Trumpet, 'ſtand on your Guard, and withſtand them as Bears and Tygers. And 'ſince there can be no Truſt given to this goodly Couple of Popiſh Bre- 'thren, nor no Relief expected from a Parliament, truſt to your Swords, 'in Defence of your Lives, Laws, Religion and Properties, like the 'ſtout Earl of old, who told his King, That if he cou'd not be defended by 'Magna Charta, he wou'd be reliev'd by Longa Spada.' After many virulent Reflections upon the Scotch Race, all in a Republican Strain, ſpeaking The Libel it ſelf.

ing of the preſent King, he proceeds thus: 'Is it not manifeſt therefore, 'That Scotch Oaths, Breda Promiſes, Proteſtant Profeſſion, Liberty of 'Conſcience, War with France, ſaving of Flanders, is all to delude Pro- 'teſtant Subjects? Is it not apparent that Breaking of Leagues, Dutch 'Wars, Smyrna Fleet, French Meaſures to favour their Conqueſts, Loſs 'of Ships, War in Chriſtendom, Blood of Proteſtants, Reprieving of 'Popiſh Traytors, is all in Earneſt, and done in Favour of Popery? And 'are not his fair Speeches, his true Proteſtant Love to Parliaments juſt 'Rights, and Engliſh Liberties, his pretended Ignorance of the Plot, 'and his Hanging Traytors to ſerve a Turn, but in meer Jeſt? Are not 'his great Debaucheries, his Whoring Courtiers, Popiſh Councils, Cheat- 'ing Rogues, Helliſh Plottings, his ſaving of Traytors, his French Pen- 'ſioners, his Neſts of Whores, and Swarms of Baſtards, his Macks, his 'Cut-Throats, his horrid Murthers, his Burning of London, his Sham- 'Plotting, his ſubborn'd Villians, his Popiſh Officers, his Struglings for a 'Popiſh Succeſſor, his Agreements with France, his frequent Diſſolutions 'of Parliaments, his Buying of Voices, and his falſe Returns, all of them 'Deſigns to ruin us in good Earneſt, and in favour of Arbitrary Govern- 'ment,' &c.

The Deſign of it.

This Libel, as is ſaid, was to have been promoted in the Name of the Nonconformiſts and Diſſenters, and fix'd upon them; and was to be diſpers'd by the Penny-Poſt, to the Proteſting Lords, and Leading Men in the Houſe of Commons, who were immediately thereupon to be taken up and ſearch'd. Everard affirm'd, That the Court had a Hand in it, and that the King had given Fitz-Harris Money, and promis'd him more if it met with Succeſs: And this was the more credited, becauſe the King himſelf had told Sheriff Corniſh, That Fitz-Harris, three Months before his Apprehenſion, had been with Him, and acquainted him he was in Purſuit of a Plot, which very much related to his Perſon and Govern-ment, &c. And that upon Sir William Waller's acquainting the King with the aforeſaid Particulars he had taken while he was conceal'd; tho' his Majeſty thank'd him for it, and commanded Secretary Jenkins to iſ- ſue out a Warrant for the Apprehenſion of Fitz-Harris, and that Sir William ſhou'd take care of the Execution of it: Yet he was no ſooner gone but Sir William declar'd, He was inform'd by two Worthy Gentle- men, That the King was highly offended with him, ſaying, He had broken all his Meaſures; and that he wou'd one Way or other have him taken off. However Sir William was ſo induſtrious, that in a little Time he took Fitz-Harris, and committed him to Newgate, in which Place he continu'd a few Days.

Fitz-Harris ſeized and put in Newgate.

Being in this Place, fetter'd, monyleſs and friendleſs, and his Wife and Family in a ſtarving Condition, he was ſtrangely tempted by ſeveral in- ſinuating Examinations, as we are inform'd from his dying Confeſſion. Particularly the two Sheriffs, Bethel and Corniſh came to him, with a Token from the Lord Howard, which he knew to be true, and brought Heads from Everard, accuſing him of being a Court Emiſſary, employ'd by the King to put the Libel into Proteſtant's Houſes; which he utterly deny'd. They told him he was to be try'd within three or four Days, that the People wou'd proſecute him, and the Parliament Impeach him, and that nothing wou'd ſave his Life but Diſcovering the Popiſh Plot: And then they encourag'd him from the Lord Howard. That if he wou'd declare that he believ'd ſo much of the Plot as amounted to the Introducing the King; or if he cou'd find out any that wou'd charge the Queen, his Royal Highneſs, or make ſo much as a plauſible Story to confirm the Plot, the Parliament wou'd reſtore him to his Father's Eſtate, with the Profits thereof ſince the Reſtoration. Finding himſelf in a miſera-

ble Condition, he ſoon began to ſhew a Compliance, and to harken to the particular Inſtructions they brought, which they ſaid came from forty Lords and Commons, who met that Day in order to addreſs the King in his Behalf, if he ſhou'd confirm their Inſtructions: And they made uſe of the Name of the Earl of Shaftsbury, and others, to ſhew him the Advantages he might gain by ſo doing. Upon which he drew up a formal Story, and Narrative concerning the Plot, but moſtly relating to the general Heads publickly known: But Corniſh told him, Theſe were Things cry'd about the Streets two Years ago. Upon anſwering, He cou'd ſay no more, He told him, He was ſorry for him with all his Heart, but thought he cou'd ſay more if he wou'd; and preſs'd him hard to ſpeak to ſeveral Heads, relating to the Queen, the Duke, the Earl of Danby, and other Perſons of Quality, without which there was no Hopes of Life. But giving no Satisfaction, he was ſoon after as ſtrictly examin'd by Sir Robert Clayton, and the Recorder Sir George Treby. Sir Robert ask'd him what he cou'd ſay to Juſtice Godfrey's Murder. He anſwer'd ſomething. Upon which he reply'd, It may be you are in a Confuſion; recollect your ſelf. Sir George kept him three Hours, preſs'd him about Godfrey's Death; and declar'd, unleſs he cou'd ſpeak to that Murder, he cou'd ſay Nothing. Then ſaying ſomething he had heard from others, he ask'd him, If he cou'd ſay no more? He reply'd, Is not this enough to ſave my Life? Am I not Rogue enough? Hereupon the Recorder ſwore God's Wounds! What were you ever but a Rogue? Then he enter'd upon the Heads of the Examination, and told him all this wou'd not ſave his Life, unleſs he wou'd ſpeak to the Libel, which was a Court-Trick; and it was not for Nothing that he had been ſo often ſeen at the Lady Portſmouth's. The Earl of Shaftsbury likewiſe examin'd him, and told him, That he knew more of theſe Matters than any Man. But before they cou'd effect their Deſigns, he was upon the 11th of March, ſuddenly taken out of their Hands, by Orders from above, and ſent cloſe Priſoner to the Tower.

IX. I. All this ſerv'd to heap up new Fewel againſt the Meeting of the new Parliament, the Time of which was approaching, with the warmeſt Diſcourſes, and the higheſt Expectation of the Kingdom. The King and Court might well foreſee a Storm from ſeveral plain Appearances; however his Majeſty reſolv'd to try an Experiment, and to meet his Parliament with all the outward Marks of Openneſs and Kindneſs. In Order to which, on the 14th of March, he left Windſor-Caſtle, and Meeting with his Royal Conſort, they were ſolemnly receiv'd at the Confines of Oxfordſhire by the High Sheriff Gregory, and at Wheatly by the Lord Norris, Lord-Lieutenant of the County, and conducted with great Pomp, and a mighty Appearance of Gentry, to the City of Oxford. Here they were receiv'd and preſented by the Mayor Bowel, and Body of the City, at the Eaſt-Gate; and from thence attended with loud Acclamations, and all imaginable Demonſtrations of Joy, to Chriſt-Church. The next Day, the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Halton Provoſt of Queen's Colledge, with the Body of the Univerſity, attended their Majeſties, with Latin and Engliſh Speeches, and had the Honour to kiſs their Hands; preſenting to the King at the ſame Time a large Oxford Bible, and to the Queen, the Cuts belonging to the Hiſtory and Antiquities of the Univerſity. In Sum, their Reception here was with ſo much Satisfaction, that it was expreſs'd in the Account given by the Publick, 'That this 'Univerſity was no leſs renowned Abroad, as well as at Home, for its 'Loyalty and Duty to his Majeſty, than for its Learning and Sound Re-'ligion: In a Word, that his Majeſty had met in that Place, with all the 'Demon-

'Demonſtrations poſſible of Duty and Joy, at his having honour'd them 'with his Royal Preſence.' The Place was ſoon fill'd and crowded with Strangers; for on the other ſide, the Members of Parliament brought vaſt Retinues to the Meeting. Thoſe for the City of London, came with a numerous Body of well arm'd Horſe, having Ribbands in their Hats, with theſe Words woven in them, No POPERY, No SLAVERY! And many others of the Members were attended in the like Manner, as apprehending ſome extraordinary Deſigns of the Papiſts againſt them; ſo that at length, the Manner of their Aſſembling look'd more like the Rendezvous of a Country Militia, than the regular Meeting of a Parliament.

The FIFTH PARLIAMENT.

The 21ſt Day of March being come, there began the fifth and laſt Parliament in this Reign, at the City of Oxford; where the Gallery at the Publick Schools was prepared for the Lords, and the Convocation-Houſe for the Commons. Both Houſes being met, the King adorn'd with his Royal Robes, and ſeated on the Throne, made this following remarkable Speech to them:

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, The unwarrantable Pro-'ceedings of the laſt Houſe of Commons, were the Occaſion of my Part-'ing with the laſt Parliament; for I, who will never uſe Arbitrary Go-'vernment my Self, am reſolv'd not to ſuffer it in Others. I am unwilling 'to mention Particulars, becauſe I am deſirous to forget Faults; but 'whoſoever ſhall calmly conſider what Offers I have formerly made, and 'what Aſſurances I renew'd to the laſt Parliament; how I recommended 'Nothing ſo much to them, as the Alliances I had made for Preſervation 'of the General Peace in Chriſtendom, and the further Examination of 'the Popiſh Plot, and how I deſir'd their Advice and Aſſiſtance concern-'ing the Preſervation of Tangier; and ſhall then reflect upon the ſtrange 'unſuitable Returns made to ſuch Propoſitions, by Men that were call'd 'together to Conſult; perhaps, may wonder more, that I had Patience 'ſo long, than that at laſt I grew weary of their Proceedings. I have 'thought it neceſſary to ſay thus much to you, that I may not have any 'new Occaſion given me to remember more of the late Miſcarriages: 'It is much my Intereſt, and it ſhall be as much My Care as Yours, to 'preſerve the Liberty of the Subject; becauſe the Crown can never be 'ſafe when That is in Danger: And I wou'd have you likewiſe be convinc'd, 'That neither your Liberties and Properties can ſubſiſt long, when the 'juſt Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown are invaded, or the Honour 'of the Government brought low, and into Diſreputation.

'I let you ſee, by my calling this Parliament ſo ſoon, That no Irregula-'rities in Parliament ſhall make me out of love with them; and by this 'Means, offer you another Opportunity of Providing for our Security 'here, by giving that Countenance and Protection to our Neighbours 'and Allies, which you cannot but know they expect from Us, and ex-'tremely ſtand in need of at this Inſtant; And at the ſame Time give one 'Evidence more, That I have not neglected my Part, to give that Ge-'neral Satisfaction and Security, which, by the Bleſſing of God, may 'be attain'd, if You, on your Parts, bring ſuitable Diſpoſitions towards 'it: And that the juſt Care you ought to have of Religion, be not ſo 'manag'd and improv'd into Unneceſſary Fears, as may be made a Pre-'tence for Changing the Foundation of the Government. I hope the 'Example of the ill Succeſs of former Heats, will diſpoſe you to a bet-'ter Temper; and not ſo much inveigh againſt what is paſt, as to conſi-'der what is beſt to be done in the preſent Conjuncture. The farther 'Proſecution of the Plot; the Tryal of the Lords in the Tower; the 'Providing a more ſpeedy Conviction of Recuſants; and, if it be pra-'cticable, the Ridding our ſelves quite of that Party, that have any con-

'ſiderable Authority or Intereſt amongſt them, are Things, tho' of the 1680 81
'higheſt Importance, that hardly need to be recommended to you, they are
'ſo obvious to every Man's Conſideration, and ſo neceſſary for our Se- Car. 33
'curity. But I muſt needs deſire you, not to lay ſo much Weight upon Ref. 21
'any One Expedient againſt Popery, as to determine that all Other are 'Ineffectual; And among all your Cares for Religion, remember, That 'without the Safety and Dignity of the Monarchy, neither Religion nor 'Property can be preſerv'd.

'What I have formerly, and ſo often Declared touching the Succeſſion,
'I cannot depart from. But to remove all Reaſonable Fears that may
'ariſe from the Poſſibility of a Popiſh Succeſſor's coming to the Crown;
'if Means can be found, that in ſuch a Caſe the Adminiſtration of the 'Government may remain in Proteſtant's Hands; I ſhall be ready to
'hearken to any ſuch Expedient, by which the Religion might be pre-
'ſerv'd, and the Monarchy not deſtroy'd. I muſt therefore earneſtly 'recommend to you, To provide for the Religion and Government to'gether, with Regard to one another, becauſe they ſupport each other:
'And let us be united at Home, that we may recover the Eſteem and 'Conſideration we us'd to have Abroad. I conclude with this one Ad'vice to You, That the Rules and Meaſures of all your Votes, may be
'the known and eſtabliſh'd Laws of the Land; which neither can, nor
'ought to be departed from, nor chang'd, but by Act of Parliament:
'And I may the more reaſonably require, That you make the Laws of 'the Land your Rule, becauſe I am reſolv'd they ſhall be mine.

Upon finiſhing this Speech, the Lord Chancellor, by his Majeſty's Command, directed the Commons to return to their Houſe, and to chuſe a Speaker. Which they accordingly did, unanimouſly electing William Williams of Grays-Inn Eſquire, Counſellor at Law, and Recorder of Cheſter, who had been Speaker in the laſt Parliament. When the Commons preſented him to his Majeſty, on Tueſday the 22d of March, he made this Speech to the King: 'May it pleaſe your Majeſty, The 'Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament Aſſembled, with Duty 'and Loyalty agreeable to Themſelves and the Perſons whom they Re- 'preſent, have in Obedience to your Royal Pleaſure, for the Diſpoſing 'of themſelves in that great Aſſembly for your Majeſty's Service, conſi- 'der'd of a Speaker; and, to manifeſt to your Majeſty, and the World, 'That they are not inclinable to Changes, have with one Voice Elected 'Me their Speaker, having had the Honour to ſerve your Majeſty and 'the Commons in that Truſt, in the laſt Parliament. With all Humility, 'I preſume again, by their Commands, to ſtand before your Majeſty, to 'receive your Pleaſure, with a Head and Heart full of Loyalty to your 'Sacred Perſon; arm'd with a ſetled Reſolution, never to depart from 'your well known, ancient and eſtabliſh'd Government.'

The Commons Speaker's Speeches to the King.

Tho' the King was not pleas'd with one Expreſſion in the Speech, which diſcover'd a ſort of a Petulancy, yet he thought fit by the Lord Chancellor to approve of the Election, in the uſual Form. Upon which the new Speaker made this further Speech: 'Moſt gracious Sovereign, 'Natural Allegiance commands Loyalty to your Majeſty from every 'Subject. Your ſingular Grace and Favour to Me, in the laſt Parlia- 'ment, continu'd by the Honour I have in this, add more than Dutiful- 'neſs and Obedience to my Loyalty. I am ſet in the firſt Station of 'your Commons for Truſt and Quality; an High and ſlippery 'Place! It requires a ſteddy Head, and a well-pois'd Body in him that 'will ſtand firm there. Uprightneſs is the ſafe Poſture, and beſt Policy, 'and ſhall be mine in this Place, guarded with this Opinion, That your 'Majeſty's Service in this Truſt, is one and the ſame with the Service of ‘ your Commons, and that they are no more to be divided than your ‘ Crown and Sceptre. They truly ſerve the Crown and Country, which ‘ ſhall be my Care and Induſtry, who make the Safety of your Sacred ‘ Perſon, the Defence and Security of the Proteſtant Religion, the Sup- ‘ port of your Majeſty's Government, the Maintenance of the Laws, and ‘ Preſervation of the ancient Conſtitutions of Parliament, one and the ‘ ſame undivided Intereſt, one and the ſame Safety, one and the ſame ‘ inſeparable Security for your Self and People. Theſe are the Deſires ‘ of all good Men, but muſt be the Effects of Good Counſels. For the Ena- ‘ bling of your Majeſty's Great Council now in Parliament aſſembled, ‘ to compleat this bleſſed Eſtabliſhment, with all Humility I Addreſs ‘ to your Majeſty, in the Name and on the Behalf of the Commons in ‘ Parliament; 1. That We and our Servants may be free in our Perſons ‘ and Eſtates, from Arreſts, and other Diſturbances. 2. That in our De- ‘ bates, Liberty and Freedom of Speech be allow'd us. 3. That, as Occa- ‘ ſion ſhall require, your Majeſty will vouchſafe us Acceſs to your Royal ‘ Perſon. I take leave to joyn this humble Petition for my Self, That ‘ nothing by me, in Weakneſs, or through Inadvertency, ſaid or done, may ‘ turn to the Prejudice of the Commons; and that my Behaviour and Pro- ‘ ceedings may receive a benign and favourable Interpretation with your ‘ Gracious Majeſty.

The Chancellor's Speech to him.

Upon this, the Lord Chancellor, by Command from his Majeſty, made this Return to the Speaker: Mr. Speaker, All your Petitions are fully and freely granted by his Majeſty, in as large and ample a manner, as ever any Houſe of Commons yet enjoy'd them: the King is very ſure, the Wiſdom of this Houſe of Commons will make as prudent an Uſe of them, as any of your Anceſtors ever did. Your own particular Petition is grateful to the King too; becauſe he knows you will be as careful to avoid Miſtakes, as his Majeſty is ready to forgive them. And now, Mr. Speaker, theſe Preliminaries being thus over, the King deſires you would haſten to the reſt that are Neceſſary to be diſpatcht, before we can enter into Buſineſs; that ſo we may husband Time, which is now more neceſſary than ever; and he hopes that this Parliament will come to a very happy and proſperous Concluſion: And, that it may do ſo, God Almighty direct and proſper all your Conſultations.

The Proceedings of the Commons.

2. The Houſe of Commons ſoon ſhew'd their Reſolutions to begin where the laſt Houſe ended, and to bring in theſe three Particulars under their Debates; Firſt, the Preparing a Bill againſt the Succeſſion of the Duke of York; the Second, the taking the Bill of the Repeal of the Act of the 35th of Elizabeth, out of the Houſe of Lords; and the Third, a Proſecution againſt the Impeach'd Lords in the Tower; to which was added a Fourth, that was new, a particular Enquiry into the dark Proceedings of Fitz-Harris, before mention'd. They ſpent the three firſt Days in chuſing their Speaker, and confirming him, and in taking ſuch Oaths as the Law directs; ſo that it was Thurſday the 24th of March before they enter'd upon any material Buſineſs. On which Day, the Debates began with a Motion for Printing the Votes; which by Mr. Secretary Jenkins was oppos'd as againſt the Gravity of that Aſſembly; That no great Aſſembly in Chriſtendom did it; That again, It was againſt their Gravity, and a ſort of Appeal to the People. But the Members on the other ſide argu'd, That Printing their Votes was like true Engliſh-men, who are not aſham'd of what they do; and that the People whom they Repreſent, may have a true Account of their Proceedings; and ſo the Reſolution paſs'd for Printing.

This

This being obtain'd, another Motion was made, to Enquire into the Miſcarriage of the Bill for Repeal of the Act of the 35th of Elizabeth, how it came to be ſlipt over in the laſt Parliament, and not preſented for the Royal Aſſent? Which, ſaid the Mover, I look upon as a Breach of the Conſtitution of the Government. But the further Debate of this Matter was Adjourn'd to the next Day. While another Motion was made, 'That for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the 'King's Perſon, a Bill be brought in, to prevent a Popiſh Succeſſor, and 'in particular againſt James Duke of York; and that it be the ſame Bill 'which paſs'd the laſt Parliament.' Upon which Mr. Secretary Jenkins ſtood up and ſaid, I muſt give my Negative to this Motion; and my Reaſon why I do ſo, is, becauſe the King hath declared in his Speech, That as to the Point of altering the Succeſſion, he cannot depart from what he has ſo often declared: The King has given his Vote againſt it, and therefore I muſt do ſo too. It was further argu'd, 'That the King's Speech gave 'them a Latitude for Expedients; and therefore they ſhould not have 'the Bill any more put to the Hazard of Rejection, but think of ſome 'Expedients.' Upon mentioning of the King's Speech, B. W. ſaid, They who adviſ'd the King's Speech, muſt anſwer for it. The Words of the Speech are, If any other Way can be found out, &c. I think thoſe about the King have done enough to ruin Him and Us: But I would have the King ſee, we are ſo far from putting him upon that Streſs, that we would help him out. I think that Speech they read to us, to have Nothing of the King's in it: He is a better Man, and a better Proteſtant than to do it of Himſelf: Therefore I would not put on a Reſolution as flat and as ſhort as that is in the King's Speech. The King has gone ſo far as this Reſolution in his Speech comes to, in his Declaration about Diſſenters formerly; and yet from the Reaſons from hence, he was perſwaded to revoke it. If Perſons have been ſo prevalent as to put the King upon this Speech, let me ſee thoſe Perſons ſo forward in bringing the King into a Thing, to help him out; if they do not, I hope the King will lay the Blame at their Doors, and not at Ours. Notwithſtanding this Warmth, the Houſe came to that Temper, as to agree, 'That in Order to pay the 'King all the Reſpect that might be, they would ſet a-part a Time to 'conſider of Expedients, and accordingly they appointed Saturday the '26th for the Debate of them.

Debates about the Excluſion Bill

The next Day the Commons began upon a Motion that was made for Returning Thanks to thoſe Places, who had generouſly and without Expence choſen their Members; and the Members ſo freely Elected, were ordered to ſend their particular Thanks to thoſe that choſe them. Then they proceeded to reſume Yeſterday's Debate upon the Loſs of the Bill for Repeal of the Act of the 35th of Elizabeth. Upon which Sir William Jones ſtood up, and ſaid, This Matter deſerves mature Conſideration, whether in Reſpect of the Loſs of the Bill, or the Shaking of the very Conſtitution of Parliament. The Bill that is loſt, is of great Moment, and of great Service to the Country, and perhaps to their Lives, in the Time of a Popiſh Succeſſor. Thoſe Men that hinder'd the Paſſing the Bill, had a Proſpect of that; and if it be ſent up again, we are like to meet with great Oppoſition. But be the Bill what it will, the Precedent is of the higheſt Conſequence: The King has his Negative to all Bills; but I never knew that the Clerk of the Parliament had a Negative.—— No Man that knows Law or Hiſtory, but can tell that to Bills Grateful and Popular, the King gives his Conſent to them: But if this Way be found out, that Bills ſhall be thrown by, it may be hereafter ſaid, they were forgot, and laid by; and ſo we ſhall never know whether the King would paſs them or no. If this be ſuffer'd, 'tis in vain to ſpend Time here, &c.

About the Diſſenters.

1680/81. Car. 33 Ref. 21

In Concluſion, the Buſineſs was referr'd to a Conference with the Lords, concerning the Conſtitution of Parliaments, in Matters relating to Paſſing of Bills.

About Fitz-Harris.

They next read the Account of Fitz-Harris, formerly mention'd, together with the Libel he wrote againſt the King and Government. Upon the whole, they thought the Matter ſo full of Knavery and Subtlety, and of that Conſequence to the Publick, that for the better Enquiry, they reſolv'd to Impeach the ſaid Fitz-Harris of High-Treaſon; and accordingly they appointed Secretary Jenkins Himſelf to carry up the Impeachment to the Houſe of Lords. Whether conſcious of the Myſtery, or fearful of Offending, he directly refus'd, and ſaid, The ſending him upon that Meſſage, reflected upon the King his Maſter, and let them do what they wou'd to him, he wou'd not go. This caus'd a new Ferment; but being threatned by the Houſe, and adviſ'd by his Friends, he ſaid at laſt, he was ready to obey the Order of the Houſe, and was ſorry his Words had given Offence; and went up with the Meſſage. Upon which Colonel Birch, ſaid, We ought all to give God Thanks for this Diſcovery of Fitz-Harris, next to the firſt Diſcovery of the Plot. It is a great Service to the Nation, and it is not the firſt that Sir William Waller has done. If ever the Thanks of the Houſe was deſerv'd, it is for this Diſcovery; and I move that Sir William Waller may have the Thanks of this Houſe; which was accordingly obtain'd and done.

He is Impeached.

1681. Car. 33 Ref. 21

3. On Saturday the 26th of March, came on the great Buſineſs of the Excluſion, which began with the Reading a Paper of Expedients, which we do not find was ever yet publiſh'd in Print, and therefore the more convenient to be inſerted. It was Entituled, Heads of the Expedient propos'd, in lieu of the former Bill for Excluding James Duke of York; viz.

Expedients inſtead of the Excluſion Bill.

'1. That the Duke of York be baniſh'd, during his Life, five hundred Miles from England, Scotland and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories to them belonging. 2. That the whole Government, both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, ſhall, upon the Demiſe of the King, be veſted in a Regent, for ſuch Time as the Duke of York ſhall ſurvive. 3. That the Regent be the Princeſs of Orange; and in Caſe of her Deceaſe without Iſſue, or with Iſſue in Minority, then the Lady Anne. 4. That if the Duke have a Son Educated a Proteſtant, then the ſaid Princeſſes reſpectively ſhall ſucceed in the Regency, during the Minority of ſuch Son, and no longer: Which obviates an incurable Abſurdity in the former Bill of Excluſion. 5. That the Regent do nominate the Privy-Counſel, and they to be, or not to be approv'd in Parliament, as ſhall be judg'd Safeſt, upon directing the Drawing up of this intended Act. 6. That notwithſtanding theſe Kingdoms (out of Reſpect to the Royal Family and Monarchy it ſelf) may be govern'd by the ſaid Regent, in the Name and Style of James the Second, &c. yet it ſhall by this intended Act be made Capital for any to take up Arms on his Behalf, or by his Commiſſion, not ſign'd by the ſaid Regent, or granted by Lawful Authority deriv'd from, and under ſuch Regent; or to maintain an Opinion, That the Retaining the ſaid Name and Style, ſhall in this Caſe purge the Diſabilities impos'd by this Act, or elude the Force thereof. 7. That Commiſſioners be forthwith ſent to the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, to take their Oaths, That they will take upon them the Execution of this Act, and that their Oaths be here Recorded. 8. That all Officers, Civil and Military, forthwith take Oaths to obſerve this Act, from Time to Time, as in the Act for the Teſt. 9. That his Majeſty wou'd graciouſly declare to Call a Parliament in Scotland, in Order to Paſſing the like Act there, and recommend the ſame; and

'the

'the like to be done in Ireland, if thought neceſſary. 10. That in Caſe the 'ſaid Duke ſhall come into any of theſe Kingdoms, then ſhall he be ipſo facto 'Excluded, and ſhall ſuffer, as in the former Bill; and the Sovereignty 'ſhall be forthwith inveſted in the Regent, upon ſuch his Coming into 'any of theſe Kingdoms. 11. That all conſiderable Papiſts be Baniſh'd 'by Name. 12. That all their Fraudulent Conveyances be defeated. '13. That their Children be Educated in the Proteſtant Religion. By 'this Means theſe Three Kingdoms will be United in the Defence of the 'Proteſtant Religion, his Majeſty's Perſon, and Government; and a ſure 'Foundation laid of an effectual League with Holland, and conſequently 'with the reſt of Chriſtendom, in Oppoſition to the growing Greatneſs 'of France.

1681. Car. 33 Ref. 21

Upon this Matter the Houſe fell into a long Debate, and ſoon ſhew'd it ſelf more inclinable to the old Bill, than to any new Expedients. A Regency was much argu'd, as the beſt Expedient to preſerve the Monarchy; upon which Subject Sir W. Poultney ſpoke thus. Conſider what is a Regency; I never heard of it, but of a Prince in Poſſeſſion, in Minority, or Lunacy; and it has generally been very unfortunate: But to talk of a Regency in futuro in Condition and Limitation of Time, I never heard of. This Expedient does not anſwer the King's Speech, nor your former Bill; they make the King but a Shadow, and they divide Perſon from Power; our Law will not endure it. The Perſon divided from the Power, both will be courted. The King leads you to conſider Expedients, but ſuch as will conſiſt with the Safety and Dignity of Monarchy. This muſt be two Kings at the ſame Time, one by Law, and another by Right. —The former Bill has been under Conſideration of all the People of England, and perhaps all the Proteſtants of Europe; all the Wits of Learned Men have made their Objections againſt it, yet notwithſtanding all People are ſtill of the ſame Mind. And now we run upon the moſt miſ-ſhapen Thing, which it may be two or three Years before we underſtand it; and we may expect to have an Operation of it, no Body knows when. Mr. H. C. appear'd more for Expedients, and argu'd, If the Excluſion of the Duke be the beſt Way to preſerve Religion, this Houſe cannot do it alone; If we cannot have that beſt Way, we are guilty to our Country, if we take none. If a Man be Sick, and ſo order'd that Nothing muſt be taken but by Direction of Three Phyſicians, and Two are for giving him the Jeſuits Powder, and One againſt it, and he thinks he does the Duty of his Profeſſion; but they all Three not agreeing, muſt the Patient take Nothing? And we are but one Part of the Legiſlative Power.— When Men preſs ſo faſt, they may come late into their Inn by tyring their Horſes. Let a Grand Committee try Expedients, elſe 'tis not Conſultare, but Dicere. In Anſwer to the Simile of the three Phyſicians, Mr. J. S. ſaid, If the Caſe be ſuch, that the Two, in the Judgment of the Third, did offer Nothing to the Sick Man but what was Mortal, he ought not to venture upon his own Diſreputation in joyning with them. And another, call'd T. B. ſaid, Expedients had been mov'd for already, as the Jeſuit's Powder for an Ague; but our Diſeaſe is a Pleuriſy, and we muſt let Blood. Sir William Jones and Sir Francis Winnington were immoveably for the former Bill of Excluſion, and none appear'd ſo directly againſt it as Colonel Legg, who urg'd the Dangers of a Republick, and told them, when his Father was in Priſon in the late Troubles, an eminent Man, then in Power, in Diſcourſe with him, ſaid, I have oblig'd you, and if the King come in, as I believe he will, then think of Me: Look to your Selves when you are in the Saddle again; if once you divide, Adieu to Monarchy for ever. As to Expedients, the longer they were urg'd, the more they were exploded. One compared them to Cucumbers, which after after they were well dreſs'd, were to be thrown away. Another ſaid, It ſeems to me, as if a Man that ſcorch'd his Shins at the Fire, inſtead of removing himſelf further off, ſhou'd ſend for a Maſon to remove the Chimney back. —If I am to leap over a River, I had rather have no Staff, than a broken one. I ſee no Remedy to ſave Religion, unleſs Excluding the Duke. In Concluſion the Bill was order'd to be brought in, on Monday Morning, the next Day of Meeting.

And upon Fitz-Harris.

As ſoon as they had finiſh'd this Matter, and been well heated with it, they were ſuddenly inflam'd by another; An Account brought to the Houſe, That the Lords had finally thrown out the Impeachment of Fitz-Harris, and had directed That he ſhou'd be Proſecuted at Common Law. This was ſuch a Diſappointment and Surprize, juſt at their Riſing, that they knew not how to digeſt. Sir Thomas Littleton cry'd out, I ſee by the Lords refuſing this Impeachment, no further Uſe of a Parliament: They will be a Court, or not a Court, to ſerve a preſent Purpoſe.— Sir William Jones did not only exclaim againſt the other Houſe, but againſt the Biſhops in particular, Declaring, They had no Right to Vote in this Caſe. Serjeant Maynard ſaid, That their All was at Stake; and if they muſt not proſecute, Holland and Flanders muſt ſubmit to the French, and they run over all. After a few warm Speeches, they came to theſe Three Grand Reſolutions: '1. Reſolved, That it is the undoubted Right 'of the Commons in Parliament Aſſembled, to Impeach before the Lords 'in Parliament any Peer or Commoner, for Treaſon, or any other Crime 'or Miſdemeanor; And that the Refuſal of the Lords to proceed in Par-'liament upon ſuch Impeachment, is a Denyal of Juſtice, and a Violati-'on of the Conſtitution of Parliaments. 2. Reſolved, That in the Caſe 'of Edward Fitz-Harris, who by the Commons had been Impeach'd 'of High-Treaſon before the Lords, with a Declaration, That in conve-'nient Time they would bring up the Articles againſt him, for the Lords 'to Reſolve, That the ſaid Fitz-Harris ſhall be proceeded with according 'to the Courſe of Common Law, and not by Way of Impeachment at this 'Time, is a Denial of Juſtice, and a Violation of the Conſtitution of Par-'liaments, and an Obſtruction to the further Diſcovery of the Popiſh 'Plot, and of great Danger to his Majeſty's Perſon, and the Proteſtant 'Religion. 3. Reſolved, That for any Inferior Court to proceed againſt 'Edward Fitz-Harris, or any other Perſon lying under an Impeach-'ment in Parliament, for the ſame Crimes for which He or They ſtand 'Impeach'd, is a high Breach of the Priviledge of Parliament.

Three great Reſolves.

The Excluſion Bill read.

On Monday the 28th of March, the Excluſion Bill was read; upon which Mr. Secretary Jenkins ſtood up, and fearleſly ſaid, No Bill was ever offer'd in Parliament of the like Nature, ſo much againſt the Juſtice of the Nation; It condemns a Man unheard, and by a Law made Ex poſt Facto; not only againſt the Fundamental Juſtice, but againſt the Wiſdom of the Nation, and will introduce a Change of Government. If the Duke will try to cut this Law with his Sword, if he overcome, he will have the ſame Power to ſet aſide all Laws, both for Religion and Property; the Power will be in the Hands of the Conqueror, and certainly he will change the Government. It is againſt the Religion, and Oaths of the Nation, &c. Poſſibly I am too tedious, and not willingly heard. If the Bill be againſt the Religion, oblig'd by Oaths, againſt the Government and the Wildom of the Nation, I hope you will throw it out. Whereupon Mr. T. B. ſaid, Mr. Secretary has mov'd to throw out the Bill, and deſir'd to be heard patiently; I find no Body Seconds him, pray let him go on and Second Himſelf. And ſo the Bill was order'd a Second Reading. They were reſuming the Debate about Fitz-Harris, when on a ſudden the Uſher of the Black-Rod commanded their Attendance in the Houſe of Lords, where they found the King in his Robes, who told them, He perceiv'd there were great Heats between the Lords and the Commons; and their Beginnings had been ſuch, as he cou'd expect no good Succeſs of this Parliament, and therefore thought fit to Diſſolve them: And accordingly the Lord Chancellor declar'd the Parliament Diſſolv'd, after it had ſat but ſeven Days. The King immediately took Coach, and drove with all ſpeed to Windſor, leaving both Houſes in an Amaze, and the City of Oxford in a perfect Conſternation; and ſo the next Morning poſted to White-Hall, ſeeming extremely pleas'd he had made his Eſcape, as it were, and got a Deliverance from his Fifth and Laſt Parliament. 1681. I. 1. THE ſudden Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, with its natural Conſequences, ſhew'd an unuſual Courage in the King, and gave a remarkable Turn to the Fate of the Nation. It open'd a Paſſage to a more independent Adminiſtration, and a leſs unactive Government than before; ſo that his Majeſty had both a Pretence and an Opportunity, for the Remainder of his Reign, to act more like an Abſolute Monarch, than ever he had done ſince the Reſtoration. All which ſeem'd to have its Riſe from the inſuperable Fears and Apprehenſions of the Popiſh Plot, and in Conſequence of a Popiſh Succeſſor, which gave ſuch terrible Diſquiets to the King, and which he found gradually to diminiſh in the Intervals of Parliament, and afterwards to diſappear upon the Diſuſe of them. He likewiſe found that his greateſt Conceſſions wou'd not anſwer his Purpoſes, but more was, and ſtill wou'd be expected; and therefore he ſeem'd reſolv'd to exert his Authority, to retrench and retrieve his Extravagancies, to husband his Revenues, and to ſupply his Neceſſities by other than Parliamentary Methods: And being tired out with the endleſs Stories of the Plot, and ſatiated, if not infected, with the Blood he had ſhed of Thoſe whom he look'd upon as Innocent, he grew ſtill more tricking and artful in his Proceedings, and more ſanguinary in his Temper, eſpecially againſt the Popular Proſecutors; and that Good-Nature, which had ſometime made him accounted The Delight of Mankind, ſeem'd ſenſibly to leſſen, and a more regular Revenge, or Retaliation to take place, upon ſeveral Occaſions and Things that happen'd in the remaining Part of his Reign. How juſt his Reſentments were, is hard to determine, having been ſo differently repreſented by the Heats and Humours of Parties; but we may ſafely ſay that he had met with hard Uſage, and great Provocations from ſome Leaders, whoſe Aims were little known to their Followers; of which the far greater Part of the Nation in Time became ſo ſenſible, as to give their moſt publick Teſtimonies of it: So that, notwithſtanding ſome Severities that had been unuſual to his Nature, and former Practice, for ſome Time before he dy'd, he The King's general Proceedings, and Succeſs.

he not only gain'd more Authority and Reverence, but more Love and Affection, than he had met with for ſeveral Years before.

Whatever his Intentions were as to his future Government, he began with Art and Smoothneſs, and to pave the Way by a well-penn'd Declaration to all his Loving Subjects, touching the Cauſes and Reaſons that mov'd him to Diſſolve the two laſt Parliaments, as follows: 'It was with 'exceeding great Trouble, that We were brought to the Diſſolving of 'the two laſt Parliaments, without more Benefit to our People by the 'Calling of them: But having done our Part, in giving ſo many Oppor-'tunities of Providing for their Good, it cannot be juſtly imputed to Us, 'that the Succeſs hath not anſwer'd our Expectations. We cannot at 'this Time but take notice of the particular Cauſes of our Diſſatisfaction, 'which at the Beginning of the laſt Parliament We did recommend to 'their Care to avoid, and expected We ſhou'd have had no new Cauſe 'to remember them.

'We open'd the laſt Parliament, which was held at Weſtminſter, with 'as gracious Expreſſions of our Readineſs to ſatisfy the Deſires of our 'good Subjects, and to ſecure them againſt all their juſt Fears, as the 'weighty Conſideration, either of Preſerving the Eſtabliſh'd Religion, 'and the Liberty and Property of our Subjects at Home, or of Support-'ing our Neighbours and Allies Abroad, cou'd fill our Heart with, or 'poſſibly require from Us. And We do ſolemnly declare, That we did 'intend, as far as wou'd have conſiſted with the very Being of the Go-'vernment, to have comply'd with Any Thing, that cou'd have been pro-'pos'd to Us, to accompliſh thoſe Ends. We ask'd of them the Support-'ing the Alliances We had made for the Preſervation of the General 'Peace in Chriſtendom; We recommended to them the Further Exami-'nation of the Plot; We deſired their Advice and Aſſiſtance concerning 'the Preſervation of Tangier; We offer'd to concur in any Remedies 'that cou'd be propos'd for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion, that 'might conſiſt with Preſerving the Succeſſion of the Crown in its due 'and legal Courſe of Deſcent: To all which we met with moſt unſuita-'ble Returns from the Houſe of Commons; Addreſſes, in the Nature of 'Remonſtrances, rather than of Anſwers; Arbitrary Orders for taking 'our Subjects into Cuſtody, for Matters that had no Relation to Privi-'leges of Parliament; ſtrange Illegal Votes, declaring divers Eminent Per-'ſons to be Enemies to the King and Kingdom, without any Order or 'Proceſs of Law, any Hearing of their Defence, or any Proof ſo much 'as offer'd againſt them.

'Beſides theſe Proceedings, they voted as followeth on the 7th of Ja-'nuary [the two Reſolves againſt Lending of Mony, and Buying any Tally 'of Anticipation.] Which Votes, inſtead of giving Us Aſſiſtance to ſupport 'our Allies, or enable Us to preſerve Tangier, tended rather to diſable 'us from contributing to Either, by our Revenue or Credit; not only 'expoſing Us to all Dangers that might happen either at Home or Abroad; 'but endeavouring to deprive Us of the Poſſibility of Supporting the 'Government it ſelf, and to reduce Us to a more helpleſs Condition than 'the Meaneſt of our Subjects. And on the 10th of the ſame Month they 'paſs'd another Vote [Againſt the Proſecution of Proteſtant Diſſenters 'upon the Penal Laws]. By which Vote, without any Regard to the 'Laws eſtabliſh'd, they aſſum'd to themſelves a Power of Suſpending Acts 'of Parliament. Whereas our Judges and Miniſters of Juſtice, neither 'can, nor ought, in Reverence to the Votes of either or both the Houſes, 'break the Oaths they have taken, for the due and impartial Execution 'of our Laws; which by Experience have been found to be the beſt Sup-'port, both of the Proteſtant Intereſt, and of the Peace of the King-

'dom. Theſe were ſome of the Unwarrantable Proceedings of that Houſe of Commons, which were the Occaſion of our Parting with that Parliament. 1681. Car. 33 Reſ. 22 2.

'Which we had no ſooner Diſſolv'd, but we caus'd another to be forthwith Aſſembled at Oxford; at the Opening of which, We thought it neceſſary to give them Warning of the Errors of the former, in hopes to have prevented the like Miſcarriages: And We required of Them to make the Laws of the Land their Rule; as We did, and do reſolve, they ſhall be Ours. We further added, That What We had formerly and ſo often declared concerning the Succeſſion, We wou'd not depart from; but to remove all Reaſonable Fears that might ariſe from the Poſſibility of a Popiſh Succeſſor's coming to the Crown, if Means cou'd be found, that in ſuch a Caſe the Adminiſtration of the Government might remain in Proteſtants Hands, We were ready to hearken to any Expedient, by which the Religion Eſtabliſh'd might be preſerv'd, and the Monarchy not deſtroy'd. But contrary to our Offers and Expectation, We ſaw, that no Expedient wou'd be entertain'd, but that of a Total Excluſion, which We had ſo often declar'd, was a Point, that in our own Royal Judgment, ſo nearly concern'd us both in Honour, Juſtice and Conſcience, that we cou'd never conſent to it. In ſhort, we cannot, after the ſad Experience We have had of the late Civil Wars, that murder'd our Father of Bleſſed Memory, and ruin'd the Monarchy, conſent to a Law, that ſhall eſtabliſh another moſt Unnatural War, or at leaſt make it neceſſary to maintain a Standing Force for the Preſerving the Government and Peace of the Kingdom. And We have Reaſon to believe, by what paſs'd in the laſt Parliament at Weſtminſter, that if We cou'd have been brought to give our Conſent to a Bill of Excluſion, the Intent was, not to reſt there, but to paſs further, and to attempt ſome other great and important Changes, even in the Preſent.

'The Buſineſs of Fitz-Harris, who was Impeach'd by the Houſe of Commons of High-Treaſon, and by the Houſe of Lords referr'd to the Ordinary Courſe of Law, was on a ſudden carry'd on to that Extremity, by the Votes which the Commons paſs'd on the 26th of March laſt, that there was no Poſſibility left of Reconciliation. [Here the three forerecited Votes were inſerted.] It was a Matter extremely ſenſible to Us, to find an Impeachment made uſe of to delay a Tryal, that We had directed againſt a profeſs'd Papiſt, charg'd with Treaſons againſt Us, of an Extraordinary Nature: And certainly the Houſe of Peers did themſelves Right in Refuſing to give Countenance to ſuch a Proceeding. But when either of the Houſes are ſo far tranſported, as to Vote the Proceedings of the Other to be a Denyal of Juſtice, a Violation of the Conſtitution of Parliaments, of Danger to our Perſon, and the Proteſtant Religion, without Conferences firſt had to examine upon what Grounds ſuch Proceedings were made, and how far they might be juſtify'd; This puts the two Houſes out of Capacity of Tranſacting Buſineſs together, and conſequently is the greateſt Violation of the Conſtitution of Parliaments. This was the Caſe; and every Day's Continuance being like to produce new Inſtances of further Heat and Anger between the two Houſes, to the Diſappointment of all Publick Ends for which they were Called, We found it neceſſary to put an End to this Parliament likewiſe.

'But notwithſtanding all this, let not the reſtleſs Malice of ill Men, who are labouring to poyſon our People, ſome out of Fondneſs for their old beloved Common-Wealth Principles, and ſome out of Anger at their being diſappointed in the particular Deſigns they had for the Accom- 3.

'plishment of their own Ambition and Greatneſs, perſuade any of our 'good Subjects, That we intend to lay aſide the Uſe of Parliaments: For 'We do ſtill Declare, That no Irregularities in Parliaments, ſhall ever 'make us out of Love with Parliaments; which We look upon as the 'beſt Method for Healing the Diſtempers of the Kingdom, and the On-'ly Means to preſerve the Monarchy in that due Credit and Reſpect which 'it ought to have both at Home and Abroad. And for this Cauſe 'We are reſolv'd, by the Bleſſing of God, to have frequent Parliaments; 'and both in and out of Parliament, to uſe our utmoſt Endeavours to 'extirpate Popery, and to redreſs all the Grievances of our good Subjects, 'and in all Things to govern according to the Laws of the Kingdom. 'And We hope that a little Time will ſo far open the Eyes of all our 'good Subjects, that our next Meeting in Parliament ſhall perfect all that 'Settlement and Peace, which ſhall be found wanting either in Church 'or State. To which, as We ſhall contribute our utmoſt Endeavours, ſo 'We aſſure our Self, That we ſhall be aſſiſted therein by the Loyalty 'and good Affections of all thoſe who conſider the Riſe and Progreſs of 'the late Troubles and Confuſions, and deſire to preſerve their Country 'from a Relapſe. And who cannot but remember, that Religion, Liber-'ty and Property were all loſt and gone, when the Monarchy was ſhaken 'off; and cou'd never be reviv'd, till that was Reſtored. Given at our 'Court at White-Hall, the 8th Day of April, 1681.

On the ſame Day, it was Order'd by his Majeſty in Council, That the ſaid Declaration be forthwith Printed and Publiſh'd, and Read in all Churches and Chappels throughout this Kingdom; which for the moſt part was Chearfully obey'd, and with remarkable Succeſs. To weaken the natural Effects of a Thing ſo Popular, there came out two celebrated Pieces, the Firſt Entituled, A Juſt and Modeſt Vindication of the Proceed-ings of the two laſt Parliaments, aſcrib'd to the ingenious Pen of Sir William Jones. In which he tells us 'That the Peers at Oxford were ſo to-'tally ignorant of the Counſel, that they never once thought of a Diſſo-'lution till they heard it pronounc'd; but the Dutcheſs of Mazarine had 'better Intelligence, and publiſh'd the News at St. James's many Hours 'before it was done.' As to the Declaration, he ſays, 'That tho' the 'King did not communicate this Paper to the Council till Friday the 8th 'of April, yet Monſieur Barillon, the French Ambaſſador, read it over 'three Days before, and demanded of a Gentleman there his Opinion of 'it.' He ſuppoſes it to be of a French Extract, and charges it with having Galliciſms in it, and particularly that Expreſſion, That it was a Mat-ter extremely ſenſible to Us; 'a Form of Speech peculiar to the French, 'and unknown to any other Nation.' He blames the mean Condeſcen-ſion of the King, yet he likewiſe queſtions the Validity of the Decla-ration; 'ſince no King of England before, as King, ever ſpoke to his Sub-'jects, but either Perſonally in Parliament, or under the Broad Seal of 'England; whereas this Declaration was only ſign'd by a Clerk of the 'Council, and therefore void of Authority.' He expoſtulates, 'That We 'have had Miniſters heretofore ſo bold, as to accuſe a pretended Factio-'ous Party in the Houſe, but never did any go ſo high as openly to Re-'preſent the whole Houſe of Commons as a Faction; much leſs to cauſe 'them to be Denounc'd ſo in all the Churches of the Kingdom, that ſo 'the People might look upon it as a kind of Excommunication.' The ſecond Piece was call'd A Letter from a Perſon of Quality to his Friend, concerning his Majeſty's late Declaration, &c. the Author of which ve-ry freely tells us, 'That there never was more Occaſion for a Parliament, 'than at the Opening of the laſt, held at Weſtminſter; never had People 'juſter Fears, nor of weightier Conſideration, to be ſecured againſt; ne-

'teſtant Religion more expos'd to an utter Extirpation both at Home 'and Abroad.' Speaking of the Perſon of the King, he informs us, 'In Car. 33
'his Private Capacity as a Man, he can only Eat and Drink, and perform Reſ 22
'ſome other Acts of Nature; but that all his Actings without Himſelf, are 'only as a King, and in his Politick Capacity he ought not to Marry,
'Love, Hate, make War, Friendſhip or Peace, but as King, and agree-
'able to the People, and their Intereſt he governs.' And as to the Lords rejecting Fitz-Harris's Impeachment, he ſays Their Votes wou'd not have born a Conference. This Author was ſoon after laſh'd by the Satyrical Anſwer. Pen of Mr. John Dryden, who undertook to expoſe the Exorbitancies of Him and his Friends, and to vindicate the Honour and Dignity of the Houſe of Lords, as to the Caſe of Fitz-Harris, and to ſhew that they ought in ſuch Matters to be ſole Judges. Without which, he ſays, The Number of Impeachments wou'd be ſo increaſed, that the Peers wou'd have no time for any other Buſineſs of the Publick. Again, The Commons may make Spaniels of the Lords, throw them a Man, and bid them go Judge, as we command a Dog to Fetch and Carry.

As both Parties had now appeal'd to the People, ſo it ſoon appear'd which met with the greateſt Succeſs: The King's Declaration having been read in all Churches, and enforc'd by frequent Argumentations, it rais'd a Spirit of Indignation againſt particular Perſons, and produc'd innumerable Addreſſes of Thanks and Congratulations, which, for ſeveral Months, Many Addreſſes of Thanks for it. flow'd from all Parts of the Nations, Counties, Corporations, &c. moſt of them engaging their Lives and Fortunes, for the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Government in Church and State as by Law Eſtabliſh'd. Among theſe Loyal Addreſſes, that from Norwich was obſerv'd to run higheſt for the King's Prerogative, and a little reflecting upon the Exorbitancies of the late Houſes of Commons: But, as if it were a notorious Scandal to the Parliament, the Grand Jury of Middleſex preſented it at the King's-Bench as a publick Libel; but with no Diſcouragement to the prevailing Party, who more zealouſly continu'd their Addreſſes. It wou'd be too tedious to enumerate all, which weekly fill'd the Gazettes, and to mention how kindly they were receiv'd by the King, who never ſuffer'd thoſe that brought them to depart without ſome gracious Mark of his Favour. The Reception was quite otherwiſe to ſome others, who took upon them in their Petitions to direct his Majeſty about the Calling and Continuance of Parliaments. It is obſervable that the City of London was divided in theſe Matters; Moſt of the Court of Aldermen, and ſome of the Common-Council, had drawn up a Loyal Addreſs, as the whole Borough of Southwark had done before; which they preſented to the King at Windſor by the Hands of Sir William Turner and Sir John Moor, with diſtinguiſhing Countenance and Favour: But another Party in the City having compos'd a far different Petition, both for Form and Matter, and being the ſame Day carry'd to Windſor by the Lord Mayor, one Alderman, and the Recorder, they were refus'd Admittance to the King's Preſence, but order'd to attend the Council at Hampton-Court the Thurſday following, where they receiv'd a Reprimand from the Lord Chancellor, and a further Mortification by the kind Reception of the Lieutenancy of London, who that Day came with the Offers of their Lives and Fortunes; among whom was Sir George Jeffryes the King's Servant, and late Recorder of London, who appear'd with his Sword on, as one of the ſaid Lieutenancy.

And as theſe Addreſſes prevail'd, all the contrary News Papers call'd Domeſtick Intelligence, &c. and Weekly Printed for Francis Smith, Benjamin Harris and Langly Curtis, were by Order of Council, as was reported, put down and silenced: And the foremention'd Francis Smith, called Elephant Smith, the most notorious Vender of such Papers, was committed to Newgate. To answer and expose these and the like Papers and Pamphlets, and to vindicate the present Government against all Opposers, Mr. Roger L'Estrange enter'd the Lists; and joining in the same Design with Heraclitus Ridens, before mention'd, he began to publish his Observators, soon after the Appearance of the King's Declaration; a Work that continu'd a long time, made a great Noise, and had no small Influence upon the Nation; and particularly serv'd to keep up the Divisions and Distinctions of Whigg, Tory and Trimmer, and to lay open the Faults of two of them with the utmost Sharpness and Severity. This Gentleman, having been a strict Cavalier, and a grand Sufferer, ever stood up as a Champion for his Party, for which he was attack'd by Variety and Numbers of Adversaries; in all which Encounters he shew'd he cou'd fence with great Quickness, Cunning and Dexterity, so as sometimes to wound and disarm, and other times to drive his Enemy out of the Field. Yet it has since appear'd plain, that both he and they often fought in the Dark, or in a very uncertain Light; particularly in that great Point of the King's Religion, or rather Inclination to Popery, in which both the Offender and Defender were perhaps equally ignorant; the one charging and the other clearing him without any Knowledge. However it was, he with Heraclitus, and some others back'd with Legal Authority, not only maintain'd their Ground this Reign, but are thought to have stemmed the Tide of a popular Current, which, with a little more help, might probably have over-run the Nation. In order to promote the same Design, this Year there appeared a celebrated Poem, call'd Absalom and Achitophel, which very much surpriz'd and delighted the Nation, and so satyrically and solemnly expos'd the Earl of Shaftsbury, and his chief Followers, that it made a mighty Impression upon the Minds of both Parties. It was written by Mr. Dryden before mention'd, tho' then unknown to be the Author, and shews the great Power and Energy of the English Tongue; there being many Lines in it, which are justly thought equal to any in the Ancient Poets.

Alterations and Preferments at Court.

2. Soon after the Dissolution of the last Parliament, there began to be some Alterations and Preferments at Court; and first his Majesty began with his own Natural Son Charles Duke of Richmond, Son to the Dutchess of Portsmouth, whom at nine Years of Age he made Knight of the Noble Order of the Garter. A few Days after, April the 27th, in Consideration of the faithful Services perform'd by the Right Honourable Laurence Hyde, Esquire, first Commissioner of the Treasury, in that and other Employments of eminent Trusts, his Majesty was pleas'd to create him Viscount Hyde of Kennelworth, and Baron of Wooton-Basset. Not long after, as a Mark of the great Satisfaction his Majesty had in the many faithful Services which his Lordship had render'd the Crown, he was pleas'd to confer upon the Right Honourable Heneage Lord Finch, Lord-Chancellor of England, the Honour and Dignity of an Earl of this Kingdom, by creating him Earl of Nottingham. Besides these Noblemen, at the beginning of Easter Term, the Lord Chief-Justice Scroggs having obtain'd a Writ of Ease, Sir Francis Pemberton was made Lord Chief-Justice of the Court of the King's-Bench; who having receiv'd his Commission, and taken the Oaths, was on the 13th of April brought by the Lord-Chancellor to pay his Duty to his Majesty; by whom he was most graciously receiv'd, suitable to the Opinion he had of his great Integrity, Loyalty and Knowledge of the Laws.

This

This celebrated Lawyer enter'd upon his Employment with a nice and difficult Affair, the Tryal of Edward Fitz-Harris, about whom there were mighty Expectations to ſee what the Court wou'd do in his Caſe, after the Houſe of Commons had made ſuch menacing Votes againſt any that ſhou'd preſume to try him. However, his Tryal was reſolv'd upon, and within leſs than a Month after the Diſſolution of the Parliament, April 26th, he was Indicted of High-Treaſon at the King's-Bench Bar, and the Bill given to the Grand-Jury of Middleſex, of which Mr. Godfrey, Brother and Heir to the late Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, was the Foreman. It was with ſome Heſitation that they were made to receive this Bill, in regard he had been impeach'd by the Houſe of Commons, till they were inform'd and ſatisfied by the Court, 'That all the Judges of 'England had the Day before met, and reſolv'd upon the Queſtion, Nemine Contradicente, That they might lawfully proceed in the Tryal, 'notwithſtanding the aforemention'd Votes of the Houſe of Commons.' Whereupon the ſaid Jury found the Bill, and Fitz-Harris was arraign'd at the Bar, on the laſt Day of April: He was thrice bid to hold up his Hand, inſiſting upon the Impeachment in Parliament; but at laſt he held up his Hand, and heard his Indictment read; which was for High-Treaſon, expreſs'd in a certain Writing call'd The True Engliſhman, &c. full of horrid Expreſſions againſt the King, as has been formerly remembred. To which Indictment he put into Court a Dilatory Plea againſt the Juriſdiction, alledging, That having been impeach'd by the Commons in Parliament, he cou'd not be try'd there; but his Plea not being under Councils Hand, was refus'd to be receiv'd: However, the Court gave him time to conſider whether he wou'd ſtand by ſuch a Plea, in regard it might be fatal to him in caſe he ſhou'd be over-rul'd; and aſſign'd him for Council Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Williams the late Speaker, Mr. Pollexfen, and Mr. Wallop, as he deſired, to argue the ſaid Point of Judicature, if he perſiſted in ſuch a Plea.

Proceedings againſt Fitz-Harris.

His Plea.

At the time appointed, four Days after, the Priſoner was again brought to the Bar, attended with his Council; at which time the King's Attorney, Sir Robert Sawyer, entered a Demurrer to the Priſoner's Plea, and chiefly inſiſted on the manifeſt Defect of Form, 'In regard the Plea 'run that the ſaid Fitz-Harris was Impeached in the late Parliament at 'Oxford, de Alta Proditione, but does not ſay of what ſort or manner 'of Treaſon, nor ſets forth the Impeachment at large, which a Plea ought 'to do, whenever it is to the Juriſdiction.' After which the Council of the Priſoner join'd in Demurrer; but upon their earneſt Motion, tho' oppos'd by the Attorney-General, three Days time was given them to prepare themſelves to maintain the ſaid Plea by Argument. At laſt, on the 7th of May, the Matter was argued at large by Williams, Winnington, Wallop and Pollexfen, for the Priſoner; and by the Attorny-General, the Sollicitor, Serjeant Jeffreys, and Sir Francis Withens for the King. The King's Council, and alſo the Court, artfully inſiſted, 'That they 'medled not at all with the Privilege of the Houſe of Commons, or the 'Juriſdiction of the Lords in Parliament, which was not in the Point, 'but only as to the Form of the Plea;' while the Priſoner's Council as vigorouſly inſiſted upon both thoſe Points. After all the Debate, which was very curious, and laſted above four Hours, the Lord Chief-Juſtice declar'd, That the Court wou'd take a convenient time to conſider, before they gave their Judgment. Accordingly, four Days after, when the Priſoner was again brought to the Bar by the Lieutenant of the Tower, the Lord Chief-Juſtice Pemberton, in the Name of the whole Court gave Judgment, and declared, 'That he and his Brethren had conſider'd of 'the Plea, and that they had alſo conſulted with others of the Judges; and

'and that Himſelf, Mr. Juſtice Jones, and Mr. Juſtice Raymond were of 'Opinion That the Plea was inſufficient, Mr. Juſtice Dolben alone 'doubting.' In conſequence, the Plea was Over-rul'd, and the Priſoner order'd to plead Over; and accordingly he pleaded Not Guilty; but alledging that a Material Evidence on his Part was now in Holland, his Tryal was put off till near a Month, till the Beginning of the next Term, and the 9th of June.

He accuſes the Earl of Danby, &c.

But before that Day, Fitz-Harris was call'd again into the King's-Bench-Court upon another Account, namely to give Evidence to the Grand-Jury, upon a Bill of Indictment againſt one De Puy, who had been Groom of the Robes to his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York. The Grand-Jury were urgent that the Evidence might be given to them in private, but the Court thought fit to over-rule that; and Fitz-Harris declar'd upon Oath, in open Court, a great deal of ſcandalous Matter, concerning the Queen, and the Duke, and the Earl of Danby; and particularly the Latter, with Relation to the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, which he ſaid De Puy had told him a little before the Death of that Gentleman; but all this he ſpoke from De Puy's Mouth. Of his own Knowledge, he only ſaid thus much, That the Earl of Danby coming down the Stairs at Windſor, he heard him ſay, That now he would make Godfrey's Heart ake: To which he added, That preſently after the Murder De Puy told him, That the Earl had ſent Godfrey on an Errand, from which he would never return. Upon this unexpected Evidence, the Earl of Danby's Name was likewiſe inſerted into the Bill of Indictment againſt De Puy, as an Acceſſary to the ſaid Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; and the Bill was accordingly found againſt them Both. But this Bill never took Place; and not long after Fitz-Harris, finding no Relief, retracted all, and declar'd, That what he ſaid was purpoſely deſign'd to ſtave off his Tryal till a new Parliament; and that he was particularly put upon to accuſe the Lord Danby of Godfrey's Murder, becauſe the Crime of Murder was not inſerted in his Pardon.

Retracts.

3. But juſt before Fitz-Harris was to be try'd, the Court thought it convenient to bring on the Tryal of a Perſon charg'd with the higheſt Crimes, but of a different Nature; Dr. Oliver Plunket, the Titular Primate of Ireland, whoſe Tryal was long expected, and whoſe Conviction would probably confirm the Belief of the Popiſh Plot in that Kingdom, according to the Votes of the laſt Weſtminſter Parliament. To prove which Plot, and to condemn which Man, at the Meeting of that Parliament, ſeveral Witneſſes were incourag'd to come over from Ireland, who now wanting Money, and likewiſe their Pardons, they were forc'd to work hard to obtain both; and they were ſoon found to be proper Inſtruments for different Kinds of Services. About ſeven of them were thought fit to be firſt employ'd againſt Plunket, who was try'd at the King's-Bench Bar, on the 8th Day of June, for High-Treaſon. The Sum of the Charge and Proofs againſt him, was, 'That the Priſoner 'was made Primate of Ireland by the Pope, at the Recommendation of 'the French King; and that upon his Election he made theſe Conditi-'ons with his Chriſtian Majeſty, to raiſe Sixty or Seventy thouſand Iriſh, 'to be ready to joyn with the French to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religi-'on; the ſaid Plunket having ingag'd to get Dublin, London-derry, and 'all the Sea-Ports into their own Hands, to levy War, and carry on the 'Deſign, and that they ſhould have the King of France to protect them 'during Life: Moreover, upon this Contract, the ſaid Plunket, for the ma-'naging this War, and Maintenance of this vaſt Body of Men, had tax'd 'the Iriſh Clergy ſeveral Sums of Money, viz. Some of them Ten,

'ſome Twenty, nay ſome Forty Shillings per Annum; and had himſelf 'pitch'd upon Carlingford Haven for the Landing of the French; which 'Invaſion was to have been made in the Year 1679, a Year after the Diſ-'covery of the Plot in England. And beſides a French Army, there 'was likewiſe a Spaniſh Army provided, that were to Land with them.' Theſe, and ſome other like Matters were ſworn againſt the Priſoner, by Witneſſes who were moſt, if not all, profeſs'd Papiſts.

His Defence.

In his Defence, the Priſoner, beſides his alledging many peculiar Hardſhips, inſiſted, not only upon the Malice of his Accuſers, but the mighty Improbabilities of the Facts Charg'd upon him. He acknowledg'd, 'That 'he had the Title of Primate of all Ireland, but his Juriſdiction was li-'mited to the Province of Ulſter, where the whole Number of Men, 'Women and Children of the Roman Catholicks, did not amount to Se-'venty Thouſand Souls: That the Popiſh Clergy in Ireland were very 'Poor, and had no Revenue nor Land, but liv'd as the Presbyterians in 'England, and were totally unable to contribute to any great Deſign: 'That he himſelf never receiv'd a Farthing of Money but in his own 'Diſtrict, and for his own Livelyhood, in which the Prieſts under him 'gave ſome Twenty, and ſome Thirty Shillings a Year; and that he ne-'ver receiv'd above Threeſcore Pounds a Year in his Life, unleſs ſome 'Gentleman wou'd now and then give him Ten Shillings for his Relief: 'That he was never able to keep above one Servant, and the Place he 'liv'd in was a little Thatch'd Houſe, wherein was only a little Room for 'a Library, not ſeven Foot High; Therefore how was it poſſible for 'thoſe Things charg'd againſt him to be true? Beſides, he had an At-'teſtation of his good Behaviour in Ireland, under the Hands of the 'Earl of Eſſex, and the Lord Berkly, when they were Lord-Lieute-'nants of that Kingdom.' Tho' the Accuſation look'd very Romantick, not to ſay malicious, yet the Witneſſes were ſo perfect and poſitive in their Oaths, that the Jury found him guilty of High-Treaſon, and Sentence paſs'd upon him accordingly. I have been aſſur'd from an unqueſtionable Hand, that the Earl of Eſſex Himſelf was ſo ſenſible of this poor Man's Hardſhips, that he generouſly apply'd to the King for a Pardon, and told his Majeſty that the Witneſſes muſt needs be perjur'd; for thoſe Things ſworn againſt him could not poſſibly be true. Upon which the King in a Paſſion ſaid, Why did you not atteſt this at his Tryal? It would have done him good then: I durſt pardon no Body. And ſo concluded with the ſame Kind of Anſwer he had given to another Perſon formerly, His Blood be upon your Head, and not upon Mine!

He is Condemned.

The Tryal and Condemnation of Fitz-Harris.

4. The very next Day after Plunket's Tryal, Thurſday the 9th of June, came on the much-expected Tryal of Fitz-Harris, who was arraign'd at the ſame Bar for his Treaſonable Libel. It was now become a Party Cauſe; and tho' he was acknowledg'd to be a Papiſt, the Whiggs were for ſaving him, and the Tories for Hanging him; and the Former are ſaid to have taken great Pains in the making of a Jury, but were unexpectedly diſappointed. The Libel, mention'd in the Indictment, was ſo fully prov'd upon him by Mr. Everard, Mr. Smith, and Sir William Waller, that he could not deny it; but continually inſinuated that what he did was by the Order of his Superiors, and the Lord Howard of Eſcrick was brought in as a Party. To confirm theſe Inſinuations, Titus Oates, Mr. Corniſh, Colonel Manſel, Mr. Hunt and Mr. Bethel, appear'd in the Behalf of the Priſoner, but with no better Effect than throwing an outward Suſpicion upon the Court. And beſides the Lord Howard, the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and her Woman Mrs. Wall, appear'd in the Court, at the Inſtance of the Priſoner Himſelf; but they fully deny'd what he he chiefly wanted them to affirm, their Employing him in any Buſineſs of this Nature, and alledg'd, 'That what little Money he receiv'd from Court 'was meer Charity.' In this Tryal, which laſted ſeveral Hours, Papers were privately put into the Hands of the Jury, containing Reaſons why they ought not to find the Priſoner Guilty, and concluded with a Menace, in caſe they did ſo, 'That they ſhould anſwer it in Parliament, and 'that the Nation would never leave them, till they had ruin'd them and their Families.' And as they withdrew from the Bar, ſome Perſons ſaid to them in their Paſſage Find him Guilty, if you dare! Wagers were laid that he would be acquitted; but it ſeems one of the Jury turn'd the Scale by Threatning to faſt with them all, ſo that at length they brought him in Guilty; having been firſt inform'd by the Court, that the Vote of the Houſe of Commons could be no Bar to their Verdict. Mr. Hawles complains of great Hardſhips in this Matter, which the Reader may ſee in his Remarks upon this and other Tryals. And Mrs. Fitz-Harris did ſeveral Years after aver to a Perſon of Worth, That the Buſineſs of the Libel was a Court Trick, and the King was privy to it; which, if true, ſhews to what wretched Shifts they were reduc'd, and what poor Means they were forc'd to uſe to countermine their Oppoſers at that Time.

Lord Howard Committed.

However, within two Days after her Husband's Tryal, She and her Maid did both accuſe the Lord Howard of Eſcrick of the Contrivance of the ſaid Treaſonable Libel; upon which Accuſation his Lordſhip was committed to the Tower, on the 12th of June. And on the laſt Day of Trinity Term, a Bill of Indictment againſt the ſaid Lord, being deliver'd in to the Grand-Jury of Edminton Hundred, then ſerving in the King's-Bench for the County of Middleſex, ſworn to by Mrs. Fitz-Harris, and her Maid and ſome others, and the Jury not thinking the Evidence ſufficient, they were ready to Indorſe it with an Ignoramus; when Mr. Ward, one of the Clerks of the Crown-Office, attending upon them, withdrew it from before them. Of which Action they complain'd to the Court, where they were told, that the Attorney-General might ſtop theſe Proceedings as he ſaw Occaſion, or Words to that purpoſe; but the Jury being no ways ſatisfy'd, they went immediately and preferred a Bill of Indictment againſt the ſaid Ward to the Grand-Jury of Oſwelſton Hundred, then attending, for his High Miſdemeanour; which Bill was preſently found by this laſt mention'd Jury.

Fitz-Harris's Confeſſion.

In the mean Time, Fitz-Harris made his Confeſſion at large to Dr. Hawkins, Miniſter of the Tower, out of which ſome Particulars have already been mention'd. Among thoſe not before mention'd, we are to remember, that he often told the Doctor, 'That there was a Deſign 'laid by the Proteſtant Party to ſeize the Perſon of the King, and carry 'him into the City, and there detain him till he had condeſcended to call 'a Parliament, which ſhould ſit till the Excluſion Bill againſt the Duke 'was paſs'd, all Evil Counſellors remov'd, Men of their Chuſing put 'into Places of Truſt, the Militia ſetled, the Navy put into good 'Hands, and all Grievances redreſs'd according to their Liking; and 'had this Deſign ſucceeded, the Biſhops and others of the Clergy wou'd 'have ſuffer'd ſeverely. The Party ingag'd in this Deſign, he ſaid, were 'Men of Intereſt, and could have Sixty thouſand Men at Command, 'at a ſhort Warning: That Hayns and He were both privy to this De'ſign, and had ſeveral Meetings with the Lord Howard about it; and 'as a particular Encouragement, the Lord Howard aſſur'd them of Break'ing the Settlement of Ireland, taking off the additional Revenue of 'the Biſhops, and Grantees, whoſe Eſtates were to be ſhar'd among the 'Party.' Then upon the Words of a Dying Man, he declar'd, 'That 'concerning this Deſign to ſeize the King, It was every Word true.'

He

He afterwards told the Doctor, 'That to his Knowledge Hayns 1681.
'was tamper'd with to come in againſt the Queen, the Duke, and the 'Earl of Danby, who were the chief Perſons aim'd at; and that a con- Car. 33
'ſiderable Perſon ſaid to him, I prithee, Fitz-Harris, find me out Men that Reſ. 22
'will ſwear the Murder of Godfrey againſt the Duke; which he to humour
'him, ſaid, There are Men, if there were Money; to which the Perſon
'reply'd, Find me the Men, and the Money ſhall not be wanting.' He moreover declar'd, 'That a Paper of Inſtructions was put into his Pock'et in Weſtminſter-Hall, wherein he was bid to ſpeak boldly, and not
'ſpare the Greateſt, the King Himſelf; and if he did not ſpeak againſt
'the Queen, his Royal Highneſs, the Lord Powis, and his Lady, Lord
'Arundel, Lord Bellaſis, Lord Peters, Lord Danby and Lord Peterbo'rough, all his Friends would forſake Him.' At another Time he in-form'd him, 'That his Wife laſt Night had whiſper'd to him, How a 'certain Perſon had been with her from a great Lord, to deſire him to
'ſay Nothing when he came to dye, and they did not value what he had ſaid
'to Doctor Hawkins elſewhere; and if ſhe could perſwade him not to 'declare any Thing againſt the Party, when he came to be Executed, they 'had promis'd to continue their Allowance to her of three Guineas a 'Week, and to make her the ſame Preſent of three Hundred Guineas, on 'the Day of his Execution, which ſhould have been made him on the 'Day of his Tryal, had he been acquitted.' And when he reduc'd his Confeſſion to Writing, he often ſaid, His Confeſſion would injure his poor Wife and Children; her Allowance would be withdrawn, and ſhe would loſe thoſe, who were now her beſt Friends. And indeed when it came to be publiſh'd, it was very ſurprizing, and provoking to thoſe who had ſo much endeavour'd to ſave his Life.

His Execution, together with Plunket.

On Friday the firſt of July, both He and Dr. Plunket before-menti-on'd, were drawn on two Sledges to Tyburn, and both Hang'd and Quarter'd. Plunket in a long Speech declar'd himſelf abſolutely Innocent of the Crimes he was accus'd of, forgave his Enemies, and pray'd for the King, Queen, and Duke of York. But Fitz-Harris made a very ſhort Speech, in which he declar'd, 'He was no further concern'd in 'the Libel, than to diſcover to the King what Practices of that Kind
'were againſt him, tho' thoſe that employ'd him refus'd to do him Ju-
'ſtice at his Tryal; and that he never had a Farthing of Money of the 'King in his Life, but on the Account of the like Service.' And re-ferr'd what he had further to Declare, to what he had left with Doctor Hawkins. The two Sheriffs, not ſatisfy'd, urg'd him to ſpeak more ful-ly; and Mr. Bethel ſaid, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you declared when you were in New-Gate, that you knew more of the Popiſh Plot than any Man; you ought to ſay what you know before you dye. Then Mr. Corniſh ſaid, Mr. Fitz-Harris, if you know any Thing that may ſave Innocent Blood, you ought to declare it. He ſtill referr'd them to what he had left with Do-ctor Hawkins; which made them very earneſt to know what it was, and where. But the Doctor told them, That they were Papers which probably were not in his Power to produce; and having Notice before, of the Deſign to ſtifle the Confeſſion by his not owning it at his Death, he deſir'd the Dying Man to declare, Whether all that he had left with him were true? The Sheriffs ſeem'd much concern'd that he ſhould put this Queſtion to him, and ſaid, He had nothing to do to put Queſtions there, nor ſhould he. He quickly reply'd, Shall I not bid the Dying ſpeak the Truth? Upon which, Fitz-Harris turn'd to him and ſaid, Yes, 'tis true. After which, the Sheriffs could learn nothing Material from him, tho' often urg'd; and ſo they proceeded to the Execution. which, and his Confeſſion, was the ſubject Matter of Diſcourſe amongſt all People, for a conſiderable Time after.

Proceedings againſt the contrary Party;

II. 1. The King ſeem'd no ways pleas'd with the Blood of theſe two different Sufferers, and had Reaſon to wiſh that neither of them had been proſecuted, or brought upon the Stage; yet he found it neceſſary for his preſent Repoſe, that both ſhould dye without Mercy. All which ſerv'd but to increaſe his Diſlike and Averſion to that Party which had driven him to this Neceſſity, and given him ſo great a Diſturbance; and to raiſe in him a more vindictive Diſpoſition, and a warmer Reſolution of making them feel the Weight of Sovereign Power. Fitz-Harris's Confeſſions, which he at ſeveral Times made to Dr. Hawkins, gave him a fair Occaſion of ſearching after a new Sort of Plotters, who were now to attone for all former Proceedings and Proſecutions; and accordingly there was a great Noiſe of Warrants iſſu'd out againſt ſeveral Offenders, as Rouſe, Hayns, White, and one Colledge, commonly call'd the Proteſtant Joyner, and eſpecially the Earl of Shaftsbury, now by Way of Eminency call'd the Proteſtant Earl; who were all ſent to the Tower for High-Treaſon, about the Beginning of July. To prevent theſe and the like Perſons accus'd, and to countermine againſt the Deſigns from above, Means was ſoon found in the City to keep all Proteſtant Friends from the Laſh of the Law; and by the Help of their two celebrated Sheriffs, Bethel and Corniſh, ſuch Grand-Juries were ſecured, as ſeem'd to put them out of all Danger from the Government: Which Grand-Juries, by length of Time, and frequent Practice, obtain'd the noted Title of IGNORAMUS; a Title accounted Ignominious and Infamous by one Sort of Men, and Glorious and Renowned by Another.

Wright. Hawles. Leſtrange. Tryals. Sprat. Collections. Wood. Langbane. &c.

Particularly Colledge.

However, the Court reſolv'd to proceed firſt in the moſt Regular Way, and to try the Temper of the City-Juries; and ſo begun with ſingling out the Proteſtant Joyner, Stephen Colledge, a Perſon, tho' of ordinary Education, of Parts and Courage, for the moſt part a Diſſenter from the Church of England, of an uncertain Religion, yet a ſtrenuous Aſſertor of the Proteſtant Cauſe: He was undoubtedly of a pragmatical Spirit, and of a ſawcy Behaviour with reſpect to his Superiors; and would take the Liberty both to ſing and talk any Thing againſt the King and his beſt Friends. This Man, who had been very active in the Death of the Lord Stafford, and a zealous Defender of the Honeſty of Dugdale, &c. had now the Fortune to have thoſe very Evidences turn'd againſt himſelf. Accordingly, when a Bill of Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt him was deliver'd to the Grand-Jury of London, theſe Men appear'd, and, if their Credit had been unſuſpected, ſwore enough to condemn any Man whatſoever: But the Grand-Jury, of which one Wilmore was the Fore-Man, was prepar'd againſt all ſuch Attacks, and at once threw out the Bill with an Ignoramus; which made a mighty Noiſe and Rejoycing in the City, and diſcover'd how much his Cauſe was eſpouſed.

An Ignoramus.

This Diſappointment and Triumph ſo exaſperated the Court, that they ſeem'd reſolv'd to proceed with the utmoſt Severity; and finding that part of the Treaſonable Words and Actions charg'd upon him had paſs'd at Oxford, they determin'd to lay the Scene there; and for his Tryal, four Judges were appointed to meet there at the Aſſizes, Chief-Juſtice North, Juſtice Jones, Juſtice Raymond, and Juſtice Levinz. To make ſure of the Bill of Indictment, we are told, that the King's Counſel poſted thither, with the ſeveral Witneſſes, and were privately ſhut up with the Grand-Jury, till they were prevail'd upon to find the Bill; a Practice much complain'd of afterwards. In the mean Time, the Priſoner was allow'd by the King and Council to have a Counſellor and a Sollicitor, Weſt and Smith, Remov'd to Oxford.

Smith, to adviſe and aſſiſt him, before his Tryal; which Favour was look-ed upon as a Deſign to betray him. For when he was going from the Priſon at Oxford to his Tryal, the Jaylor and Meſſenger ſuddenly ran him into a Houſe, and by Order of the King's Counſel, took from him all his Papers of Inſtructions, and carry'd them to them; as well to diſable him to make his Defence, as to enable them to proceed againſt him by ſome Way in which he was leſs, or wholly unprovided. Thus beſet, he was arraign'd at Twelve a-Clock, Auguſt 17th, when he immediately demanded his Papers of the Court; which was poſitively refus'd him till he pleaded Not Guilty; and then two of them, which were not of his Hand-Writing, were ſtill deny'd him: The One was a Speech which he was to ſpeak at his Tryal, which the Court told him was a Libel; the Other was a Paper of Directions, what and how to plead, written by his Solicitor Aaron Smith, in which they found theſe Words: 'Before you 'Plead, ſpeak to this purpoſe: My Lords, I have been us'd not only unlike an Innocent, or an Engliſh-Man, but I believe more barbarouſly than any Convicted Villain under the Tyranny of Turkey, or France: When I was firſt apprehended, I was, contrary to the Privilege of the City of London, hurry'd out from thence before a Secretary of State.—— I might with as much Juſtice have been hang'd at Tyburn by the Way, as to be brought hither to be murder'd with a little more Formality.— If the Attorney-General, or any of the King's Council interrupt you, &c. Anſwer thus, I will not be murder'd in Hugger-Mugger.—— When you come to open your own Evidence, ſpeak to this purpoſe, to the Judges and Jury, I hope you will not bring ſo much Scandal upon your ſelves, as to be the Pope's Drudges; and give the firſt Blow to the Proteſtant Cauſe, by convicting me upon ſuch Infamous Evidence. Upon the Refuſal of his Papers, Colledge cry'd out, This is a horrid Conſpiracy, not only againſt my Life, but againſt all the Proteſtants in England! which put the Court and King's Council to the Whiſper; and the Court was Adjourn'd, under the Pretence of going to Dinner; tho' it is believ'd the true Reaſon was to give the King's Council an Opportunity of ſorting their Evidence, and altering the Method of Proceeding.

His Tryal.

His Inſtructions.

Upon the Return of the Court in the Afternoon, the King's Attorney, Sir Robert Sawyer, mov'd, that the King's Evidence might be examin'd in the Hearing of one another; in which he was over-rul'd, but the Rule not obſerv'd. The Firſt Witneſs was Stephen Dugdale, who ſwore, 'That Colledge told him that the King was a Papiſt; that he was as 'deep in the Plot as any of them all; that he had a Hand in Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Death; that he was a Rogue; that nothing was to 'be expected from him but Popery and Arbitrary Government; that 'he had ſhew'd him ſeveral ſcandalous Libels and Pictures, of which he 'was the Author; that he had a Silk Armour, a Brace of Horſe-Piſtols, 'a Pocket-Piſtol, and a Sword; that he ſaid he had ſeveral Stout Men 'to ſtand by him, and that he would make uſe of them for the Defence 'of the Proteſtant Religion, and that the King's Party was but a Handful to His.' Turberville ſwore that the Priſoner ſaid at Oxford, 'There 'was no Good to be expected from the King, and that he wiſh'd the King 'would begin; if he did not, they would begin with Him, and ſeize Him'; and ſaid He came to Oxford for that Purpoſe.' Smith ſwore 'his ſpeaking ſcandalous Words of the King, and of his having Armour, and that 'when he ſhew'd it to the Witneſs, he ſaid, theſe are the Things which 'will deſtroy the pitiful Guards of old Rowley! He expected the King 'would ſeize ſome of the Members of Parliament at Oxford; if ſo He 'would be one that ſhould ſeize Him; that he ſaid Fitz-Gerald at Oxford 'had made his Noſe bleed, but before long he hop'd to ſee a great deal

His Accuſation.

'more Blood ſhed for the Cauſe; that if any, nay, if Rowley Himſelf 'came to diſarm the City, he wou'd be the Death of him.' Beſides theſe Three who had been Evidence againſt the Lord Stafford, one Stephens ſwore to the finding the Original of that Scandalous Picture, &c. call'd the Raree Show, in the Priſoner's Chamber. Haynes ſwore he ſaid, 'Un-'leſs the King wou'd let the Parliament ſit at Oxford, they wou'd ſeize 'him, and bring him to the Block; and that he ſaid The City had fifteen 'Hundred Barrels of Powder, and a Hundred Thouſand Men ready at 'an Hour's Warning.' Mr. Maſters ſwore, 'That he juſtify'd the Pro-'ceedings of the Parliament in 1641; at which the Witneſs wondring 'how he cou'd juſtify that Parliament that rais'd the Rebellion and cut 'off the King's Head, the Priſoner reply'd, That that Parliament had 'done Nothing but what they had juſt Cauſe for; and the laſt Weſtmin-'ſter Parliament was of the ſame Opinion: That he call'd the Priſoner 'Colonel in Mockery, who reply'd, Mock not, I may be one in a little 'Time.' Laſtly, Sir William Jennings ſwore as to the Priſoner's Fight-ing with Fitz-Gerald, and the Words about his Bleeding.

His Defence. On the other Side, there appear'd ſeveral Witneſſes for the Priſoner, and Titus Oates in Chief, whoſe Buſineſs was to ingage with the Three Plot-Diſcoverers, Dugdale, Turberville and Smith. As to Dugdale, he teſtify'd 'That he hear'd him ſay, He call'd God to Witneſs, he knew 'nothing againſt any Proteſtant in England: And having tax'd him af-'terwards for Swearing againſt Colledge before the London Grand-Jury, 'he anſwer'd, It was all long of Colonel Warcup, for he cou'd get no 'Money elſe, and he had promis'd him a Place in the Cuſtom-Houſe: 'And that Dugdale had given out he had been poyſon'd, when in Truth 'it was the Pox; as he cou'd make appear by the Phyſician that cur'd 'him.' In oppoſition to which Dugdale ſwore, Upon the Oath he had taken, and as he hop'd for Salvation, it was all falſe; and as to the Pox, if any Doctor wou'd come forth, he wou'd ſtand guilty of all that was imputed to him. As to Turberville, Oates teſtify'd, 'That asking him whe-'ther he was a Witneſs againſt Colledge, he ſaid He wou'd break any Man's 'Head that ſhou'd ſay ſo; for he neither was a Witneſs, nor cou'd give 'any Evidence againſt him: But after he came from Oxford, he own'd 'he had ſworn before the Grand-Jury, and ſaid, The Proteſtant Citi-'zens had deſerted him; and God damn him, he wou'd not Starve.' In Concluſion, Oates ſaid, Upon the Word of a Prieſt, what I ſay is true; As I am a Miniſter, and in the Preſence of God, this Gentleman did ſay theſe Words to me. In Anſwer to this Turberville Swore, 'He once met 'Dr. Oates, but did not ſpeak a Tittle to him about any Evidence; ad-'ding, Upon my Oath, I did not: and truly I always look'd upon the Do-'ctor as a very Ill Man, and never wou'd converſe much with him.' Againſt Smith, Oates atteſted, 'That he heard him ſwear, God damn 'him, he wou'd have Colledge's Blood: Upon which he ſaid, Mr. Smith, 'you profeſs your Self to be a Prieſt, and have ſtood at the Altar; and 'now you intend to take upon you the Miniſtry of the Church of En-'gland; theſe Words do not become a Miniſter of the Goſpel; His Re-'ply was, God damn the Goſpel.' This is Truth, continu'd Oates, I ſpeak it in the Preſence of God and Man. On the other Side, Smith ſaid, Not one Word of this is true, upon my Oath. Then addreſſing himſelf to Oates, he ſaid, 'Tis wonderful you ſhou'd ſay this of Me. But I will ſufficiently prove it againſt you; That you have confounded the Goſpel, and deny'd the Divinity too.

It wou'd be too tedious to mention all the Evidences for the Priſoner; only that Haynes was prov'd an Ill Man, and had ſtolen a Tankard, and ſomething was ſaid againſt moſt of the King's Witneſſes, to invalidate their their Credit. In ſumming up the whole, the Attorney-General complain'd, That it was an unhappy Thing, That Doctor Oates ſhou'd come in againſt thoſe Men that had ſupported his Evidence before: And Mr. Serjeant Jefferys thus argu'd to the Jury; If Dugdale, Smith and Turberville, be not to be believ'd, you perjure no leſs than Three Men; and, in them, trip up the Heels of all the Evidence and Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot. In ſum, the Jury brought him in guilty of High-Treaſon, and the Court declared, They were well ſatisfy'd in the Verdict given, and ſo condemn'd him to be Drawn, Hang'd and Quarter'd. His Execution was deferr'd fourteen Days, till the 31ſt of Auguſt; during which Time, in Company he ſeem'd to be very little concern'd, but often had terrible Agonies when he was by himſelf; and his Religion appear'd to be very much mix'd with Enthuſiaſm. At his Execution he made a long Speech, 'in 'which he declar'd he dy'd of the Church of England, according to the 'beſt Reformation of the Church from all Idolatry, Superſtition, &c. He 'complain'd of great Hardſhips, and ſaid he knew of no Plot, but the 'Popiſh Plot, and deny'd the Main of his Accuſation; He gave an Account of his Journey to Oxford, and that he heard the Parliament as 'well as the Earl of Shaftsbury, was to be deſtroy'd there; and that the 'Arms that He and Others had, were for their own Defence, in caſe 'the Papiſts ſhou'd make an Attempt upon them by way of Maſſacre, &c. 'And he particularly declar'd thus, I do believe that I am as certainly 'Murder'd by the Hands of the Papiſts, as Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey 'Himſelf was, tho' the Thing is not ſeen.' Being Hang'd, by the King's Order, his Body was deliver'd whole to his Friends; and his Death was ſo much reſented or regretted, that he was by many accounted and call'd a Martyr. Whatever he was, it is hard to vindicate his inſatiable Endeavours after the Blood of the Lord Stafford and others; and his Dying by the ſame Witneſſes whoſe Credit he had ſupported, looks more like the juſt Vengeance of Heaven, than the unjuſt Puniſhment of Men.

His laſt Speech and Execution.

2. On the ſame Day that Colledge ſuffer'd, the famous Titus Oates, whoſe Salary had been abridg'd ſome Months before, was now by Order of Council turn'd out of his Lodgings at White-Hall, where he had continu'd near Three Years, had his Salary taken quite from him, and Orders given him not to come within the Verge of the Council-Chamber: And all occaſion'd by his inſolent Behaviour, and ſome Miſdemeanors laid to his Charge; his Proceedings at Colledge's Tryal being alſo remember'd, where in the Court he ſaid to Sir George Jefferys, Mr. Serjeant, you ſhall hear of this in another Place! From this Time the Belief and Fears of the Popiſh Plot more ſenſibly declin'd and diminiſh'd, and the Infirmities and Abſurdities of it became more viſible to all Men. So that the King and the Court had now a breathing Time from all the Vexations of it; and his Majeſty ſeem'd more to enjoy himſelf this Summer, than in ſome Years before; being daily complimented by the Addreſſes of his Subjects, which ſtill flow'd from all Parts of his Kingdom. For which Addreſſes, and the general Proceedings of the Court, Heraclitus and Leſtrange were now the weekly Champions.

Oates diſcarded at Court.

This Summer, his Majeſty had a new Opportunity of Obliging the greateſt Part of his Subjects: Great Numbers of poor French Proteſtants, driven by a ſevere Perſecution from their own Country, came over into England for Shelter and Refuge. Upon which the King was pleas'd to declare in Council, 'That he held himſelf oblig'd, in Honour and Con-'ſcience, to comfort and ſupport all ſuch afflicted Proteſtants, who by 'Reaſon of the Rigours and Severities us'd towards them, upon Ac-

Favours to the French Proteſtants.

'count of their Religion, ſhou'd be forc'd to quit their Native Country, 'and ſhou'd deſire to ſhelter themſelves under his Majeſty's Royal Pro-'tection, for the Preſervation and free Exerciſe of their Religion.' And in Order hereunto, his Majeſty was pleas'd further to Declare, 'That he 'will grant unto every ſuch Diſtreſſed Proteſtant, who ſhall come hither 'for Refuge, and reſide here, his Letters of Denization, under the 'Great Seal, without any Charge whatſoever; and will likewiſe recom-'mend it to his Parliament, at their next Meeting, to paſs an Act for the 'General Naturalization of all ſuch Proteſtants as ſhall come over as 'aforeſaid, &c.' And afterwards, when a Suſpicion was rais'd, that many of theſe Exiles, pretending to be Proteſtants, were really French Papiſts, and therefore dangerous Enemies in Diſguiſe, the King was pleas'd to publiſh another Advertiſement, as might ſufficiently obviate that Objection and Difficulty; and likewiſe granted ample Letter Patents for Collecting Monies all over England for their Relief, which had a noble Effect in all Counties. In the ſame Summer, to oblige the Church of England, He appointed under him, certain Deputies or Commiſſioners of Eccleſiaſtical Affairs; to whom he delegated his Power to Diſpoſe of all ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Preferments as belong'd to his immediate Patronage. The Names of which Commiſſioners were, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of London, the Lord Radnor, the Lord Halliſax, the Lord Hyde, and Mr. Edward Seymour: Which Commiſſion continu'd in Force about Three Years.

The Court at Newmarket.

In the midſt of the Nation's Addreſſes and Congratulations, on the 10th of September, both the King and the Queen repaired to New-Market, to be entertain'd with the Pleaſures and Diverſions of that Place. Here they were ſoon attended by a numerous and Solemn Appearance of the Univerſity of Cambridge, at the Head of which was the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Humfrey Gower, Maſter of St. John's Colledge; who with the reſt being admitted, he made this following Speech, of which great Notice was taken at that Time: 'SACRED SIR! We your Majeſty's moſt 'faithful and obedient Subjects, of the Univerſity of Cambridge, have 'long, with the greateſt and ſincereſt Joy, beheld, what we hope is in 'ſome Meaſure an Effect of our own Prayers; the generous Emulation 'of our Fellow-Subjects, contending who ſhou'd Firſt and Beſt expreſs 'their Duty and Gratitude to their Sovereign, at this Time eſpecially, 'when the Seditious Endeavours of unreaſonable Men have made it ne-'ceſſary to aſſert the Ancient Loyalty of the Engliſh Nation, and make 'the World ſenſible, That we do not degenerate from thoſe Prime 'Glories of our Anceſtors, Love and Allegiance to our Prince.

Dr. Gower's Speech to the King there.

'That we were not ſeen in thoſe Loyal Crowds, but choſe rather to 'ſtand by and applaud their Honeſt and Religious Zeal; we humbly 'preſume will not be imputed to the Want of it in our Selves, either 'by your Majeſty, or your People. For, SIR, it is, at preſent, the great 'Honour of this your Univerſity, not only to be Stedfaſt and Conſtant 'in our Duty, but to be Eminently ſo, and to ſuffer for it, as much as 'the Calumnies and Reproaches of Factious and Malicious Men can in-'flict upon us: And that they have been hitherto able to do no more than 'vent the Venom of their Tongues; that they have not proceeded to 'Plunder and Sequeſtration, to violate our Chappels, rifle our Libraries, 'and empty our Colledges, as once they did; Next to the over-ruling 'Providence of Almighty God, is only due to the Royal Care and Pru-'dence of your moſt Sacred Majeſty, who gave ſo Seaſonable a Check to 'their Arbitrary and Inſolent Undertakings.

'But no Earthly Power, we hope, no Menaces or Miſery ſhall ever 'be able to make us Renounce, or Forget our Duty. We will ſtill believe

'and

'and maintain, That our Kings derive not their Titles from the People, 1681.
'but from God; That to Him only they are accountable; That it belongs Car. 33
'not to Subjects, either to Create or Cenſure, but to Honour and Obey Reſ. 22
'their Soveraign, who comes to be ſo, by a Fundamental Hereditary
'Right of Succeſſion, which no Religion, no Law, no Fault or Forfeiture
'can alter or diminiſh. Nor will we abate of our well-inſtructed Zeal
'for our moſt Holy Religion, as it is Profeſs'd, and by Law Eſtabliſh'd
'in the Church of England; that Church which hath ſo long ſtood, and
'ſtill is the Envy and Terror of her Adverſaries, as well as the Beauty
'and Strength of the Reformation.

'It is thus, DREAD SIR, That we have learn'd our own, and thus
'we teach others their Duty to God and the King; in the conſcientious
'Diſcharge of both which, we have been ſo long protected and encou-
'rag'd by your Majeſty's moſt Juſt and Gracious Government; that we 'neither need nor deſire any other Declaration, than that Experience for 'our Aſſurance and Security for the future. In all which Grace and
'Goodneſs, GREAT SIR, we have Nothing to return; We bring no
'Names and Seals, no Lives and Fortunes, well capable of your Maje-
'ſty's Service, or at all worthy of your Acceptance; Nothing but Hearts
'and Prayers, Vows of a zealous and laſting Loyalty; our Selves and 'Studies, all that we can, or ever ſhall be able to perform, which we here
'moſt ſincerely promiſe, and moſt humbly tender to your Majeſty's Feet,
'a mean and a worthleſs Preſent; but ſuch a One as we hope will not be
'diſdain'd by the moſt Gracious and Indulgent Prince, that Heaven ever
'beſtow'd upon a People.

To which lofty Speech his Majeſty was pleas'd to anſwer, That he was The King's Anſwer.
fully ſatisfy'd of the Loyalty of the Univerſity, and that he did not at all doubt but they wou'd always act according to what they there Declared. His Majeſty further told them, That he wou'd conſtantly own and defend the Church of England, as Eſtabliſh'd by Law: This he bid them be aſſur'd of, for he wou'd be as good as his Word, whatever Repreſentation, either had, or ſhou'd be made of Him to the contrary. Being further pleas'd to add, That there was no other Church in the World that Taught and Practis'd Loyalty ſo Conſcientiouſly as that did. Upon the whole, the King ſhew'd an unuſual Pleaſure and Satisfaction, and told the Vice-Chancellor, That he and his Queen wou'd ſhortly make a Viſit to the Univerſity; but laid his Commands upon him, So to Order his Reception, that what he intended for a Favour and Kindneſs, ſhou'd not prove a Trouble and Burden to that learned Body.

Accordingly, on September the 27th, both their Majeſties ſet forth, at- His and the Queen's Entertainment at Cambridge.
tended by the whole Court; and about two Miles from Cambridge, were met by Sir Thomas Slater, High Sheriff of the County, with his Men in their Liveries; and ſoon after by the Mayor and Aldermen, &c. with all Formality. At the Entrance of the Town, the Scholars were regularly placed, firſt Under-Graduates and the Batchelors, in one continu'd Rank from thence to the Schools; and as their Majeſties paſs'd, they on their Knees fill'd the Air with the loud Acclamations of Vivat Rex! Vivat Regina! As they came to the Schools, they found the Regent-Walk crouded on both ſides with Regents and Non-Regents, through whoſe joyful Applauſes they walk'd till they came near two Chairs of State; the Vice-Chancellor, Heads of Colledges, and all the Doctors ſtanding in their Scarlet Robes. Their Majeſties being ſate, the Univerſity Orator, Mr. Billers, ſpoke firſt in Latine to the King, and then in Engliſh to the Queen. The Vice-Chancellor, after a ſhort Latine Speech, deliver'd a large Bible to his Majeſty, and then another Speech to the Queen, with a Book call'd, A View of the late Troubles in England. After the Ceremony remony of Creating ſeveral Noblemen Doctors, the Royal Pair went to King's College Chapel, where after two Speeches and Preſents made by Dr. Coppleſton, the Provoſt of that College, they were pleas'd to go up to the Top, and view all that magnificent Structure. From whence they went to Trinity-College; and after hearing two Speeches, to St. John's College, where Dr. Gower, the Maſter and Vice-Chancellor, after Speeches, Preſents, and ſhewing them the Library, entertain'd their Majeſties in his long Gallery, with ſo much Grandeur and Satisfaction at Dinner, that the King was pleas'd to tell him, while he waited at the Table, That he cou'd find but one Fault, and that was the over-great Plenty. And parting with him at the College Gate, he declared at large, how highly he was ſatisfy'd with his Reception, and the Regard he wou'd always have for the Univerſity of Cambridge; and the Queen was pleas'd to give him her particular Thanks for this Entertainment. In Sum, the whole was ſo great and magnificent, and withal ſo zealous and hearty, to the Nobility as well as their Majeſties, that the Court was never better ſatisfy'd with any Entertainment, of which the News ſoon reſounded through the whole Kingdom.

New Sheriffs, and a Lord Mayor.

3. During theſe pleaſing Times, the City of London, or a prevailing Party there, was very buſy and active in croſſing and oppoſing the Meaſures of the Court. In order to which, they with great Difficulty choſe two new Sheriffs, Mr. Thomas Pilkington, one of their Members of Parliament, and Mr. Samuel Shute, Perſons of the ſame Stamp with the laſt Sheriffs, Bethel and Corniſh. But upon an Election of a Lord Mayor, on Michaelmas Day, Sir John Moor, an Addreſſer, was choſen into that Office, with three Hundred Voices more than Sir John Shorter and Sir Thomas Gold; tho' with great and unuſual Oppoſition, by the Sheriff's Party. This Election was very much to the Satisfaction of the Court, but that of the Sheriffs as much to the contrary; concerning which the King had ſhortly an Opportunity of Expreſſing his Diſpleaſure: For when, on the 13th of October, Sir George Treby Recorder, and theſe Sheriffs were ſent to invite their Majeſties in the Name of the City, to do them the Honour of Dining at Guild-Hall on the 28th, the King gave them this Anſwer, Mr. Recorder, an Invitation from my Lord Mayor, and the City, is very Acceptable to Me; and to ſhew you that it is ſo, notwithſtanding that it is brought by Meſſengers that are ſo Unwelcome to Me, as theſe two Sheriffs are, yet I Accept it. However, it was obſerv'd, that not long before the King had condeſcended to a leſſer Matter, by diſtinguiſhing the Loyal Apprentices of London, and giving a Brace of Bucks for a Dinner at Sadlers-Hall, and ſending many of his principal Courtiers to Dine with them, and directing his Son the Duke of Grafton to be one of the Stewards for another Year.

A Struggle in the City.

The firſt Effect of the new Election of Sheriffs was a Struggle at Hick's-Hall, where the Seſſions for the County of Middleſex were held the Week before Michaelmas Term. At which time Sir George Jefferys, being Chair-Man to the whole Bench, required Mr. Goodenough, the Under-Sheriff, to alter Two of the Pannel, as the Juſtices have Power to do by the Statute of the Third of Henry the Eighth. Which he refuſing to do, the two Head Sheriffs, Pilkington and Shute, were call'd; and not appearing, they were Fin'd Fifty Pounds a Man. Notwithſtanding that, the Recorder put in a Proteſt, that the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex were never bound to attend in Perſon at Hick's-Hall. After which, the ſaid Fine being Eſtreated, a Common-Council in London Declared, 'That 'they wou'd ſtand by their Sheriffs, and defend them againſt any Suit of 'Law that ſhou'd be brought touching that Matter, and that at the 'Charges

'Charges and Expences of the City.' And to ſhew their Diſpoſition, at the Seſſions for London, held at the ſame Time, Rouſe before-mention'd being charg'd with High-Treaſon, and a Bill of Indictment Exhibited to the Grand Jury attending for that City, againſt Him, notwithſtanding Eight Witneſſes ſwore Matter of Fact poſitively againſt him, they found the Bill Ignoramus, as had been formerly done in the Caſe of Stephen Colledge. 1681. Car. 33 Reſ. 22

4. This was a particular Mortification to the Court, but not ſo great a Diſcouragement as to hinder the bringing on the Tryal of the Head of the Party, the Earl of Shaftsbury, which had been long in Preparing. In order to it, on the 24th of November, all the Judges ſate with the Lord Mayor and Aldermen at the Old Bayly, by a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer; all Mens Heads being fill'd with the greateſt Expectations. The two Sheriffs, Pilkington and Shute, had Impanell'd a Grand Jury of theſe one and twenty noted Men, Sir Samuel Barnadiſton, Foreman, John Morden, Thomas Papillon, John Dubois, Charles Hearle, Edward Rudge, Humphrey Edwin, John Morrice, Edmund Harriſon, Joſeph Wright, John Cox, Thomas Parker, Leonard Robinſon, Thomas Sheperd, John Flavell, Michael Godfrey, Joſeph Richardſon, William Empſon, Andrew Kendrick, John Lane, and John Hall. To theſe was exhibited a Bill of Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt the Earl; and after Inſtructions given them by the Lord Chief Juſtice Pemberton, and a Paper found in the Earl's Study produc'd, the eight following Witneſſes appear'd, John Booth, Edward Turberville, John Smith, Brian Haynes, John Macnamarra, Dennis Macnamarra, Edward Ivey, and Bernard Dennis; ſeveral of whom had been Evidences in Stephen Colledge's Tryal. The Grand Jury were for a while very urgent to examine theſe Witneſſes in private, but the Court over-rul'd them in that Point, intimating that his Majeſty deſign'd to have the Matter as publick as it cou'd be. Then they mov'd to have them examin'd ſeparately; to which the Court conſented, but the vaſt Concourſe of People made it almoſt impracticable.

Proceedings againſt the Earl of Shaftsbury.

Witneſſes.

Booth ſwore, 'That he was engag'd to Captain Wilkinſon, who ſaid he 'had a Commiſſion from the Lord Shaftsbury and ſeveral others to go to 'Carolina, and was about that time introduc'd into the Earl's Acquain-'tance by the Captain, and was with them four or five Times between 'Chriſtmaſs and March; That the Captain told him he was to command 'Fifty Men to be the Earl's Guard at the Oxford Parliament, and wou'd 'have had him to be One; That if the King did not conſent to ſeveral 'Acts of Parliament, and other Things, they were to purge the Guards 'and Court of ſeveral Perſons, particularly the Earl of Worceſter, the 'Lord Clarendon, the Lord Halliſax, the Lord Feverſham, and Mr. Hyde: 'And tho' the Captain told him this at firſt, he afterwards, a little before 'the Meeting of the Oxford Parliament, heard the Earl ſay the ſame 'Things, with a particular Complaint That he thought himſelf not ſufficiently valu'd, or reſpected; of which he gave ſome Intimation to Wal-'ter Banes, and then writ it down, and ſent it to the Council in a Cover.' Booth,

Turberville ſwore, 'That about February he heard the Earl ſay, There 'was little Good to be had from the King, as long as his Guards were 'about him; for were it not for them, we wou'd quickly go down to 'White-Hall, and obtain what Terms we thought fit: And at Oxford he 'heard his Lordſhip ſay, He wonder'd the People of England ſhou'd 'ſtickle ſo much about Religion; if he were to chuſe a Religion, he wou'd 'One that ſhou'd beſt carry on their Cauſe.' Smith teſtify'd a great deal of Diſcourſe between him and the Lord Shaftsbury, reflecting upon the Turberville, Smith,

King, as 'That he was a weak and unconstant Man, easily led by the 'Nose, &c. and said, That if the King shou'd offer any Violence to the 'Parliament at Oxford, he wou'd meet with a strong Opposition, for the 'Gentlemen out of the Country came well provided with Horse and Arms 'to Oppose, and that they might lawfully do it, if he offer'd any Violence 'to them: And that he further said to him, Mr. Smith, if the King were 'not as well satisfy'd with the Coming in of Popery, as ever the Duke of 'York was, do you think the Duke wou'd be so much concern'd in the 'Bringing in of Popery as he is?' Hayns swore, that the Earl said, 'If 'the King did not give Hayns his Pardon, he made himself the Author of 'the Plot, and that He and Others wou'd raise the Kingdom against him; 'That he gave the Earl an exact Account of Transactions since King 'Charles the First's Coming to the Crown, and that the Earl said The 'Duke of Buckingham had as much Right to the Crown as any Stuart in 'England: And further the Earl said, The King has no more Religion 'than a Horse; when he came first to England, he had a Tincture of Po-'pery, and was much inclin'd that Way; but since he was degenerated 'from all the Principles of Christianity, and was just like a perfect Beast.'

Hayns,

The First Macnamarra swore, 'That the Earl said to him, That the King 'was a faithless Man, had the Dutchess of Mazarine for his Cabinet 'Council, was Popishly affected, and took the same Methods his Father 'did, which brought his Head to the Block, and We will bring his thi-'ther: and he deserv'd to be depos'd as much as King Richard the Second.

J. Macnamarra,

The other Macnamarra likewise testify'd the same Words; and that it was the latter End of March, or Beginning of April. Ivey swore, 'That 'the Earl told him that Haynes had something to discover about the 'Death of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; and if the King deny'd him a Par-'don, they wou'd rise upon him, and force him to give one; and that they 'design'd to depose him, and set up another in his stead.' Last of all Dennis testify'd, 'That the Earl urg'd him to speak home against the Queen 'and the Duke as to the Plot, and bid him speak to his Friends in Ire-'land to be in Readiness to assist the Common-Wealth of England; for 'they intended to have England under a Common-Wealth, and Extirpate 'the King and his Family.

D. Macnamarra Ivey, and Dennis.

But what made more Noise than the Testimony of these Witnesses, and had greater Effects upon the Nation, was the Paper of Association found in the Earl's Study, and believ'd to have been form'd by Himself, which was read as following: 'We the Knights, &c. finding to the Grief 'of our Hearts, the Popish Priests and Jesuits, and their Adherents and A-'betters have for several Years last past pursu'd a most pernicious and hel-'lish Plot, to root out the true Protestant Religion as a Pestilent He-'resy, to take away the Life of our Gracious King, to subvert our Laws 'and Liberties, and to set up Arbitrary Power and Popery. 2. And it 'being Notorious that they have been highly encourag'd by the Counte-'nance and Protection given and procured for them by James Duke of 'York, and by their Expectations of his Succeeding to the Crown, and 'that through crafty Popish Counsels his Designs have so far prevail'd, 'that he hath created many and great Dependents upon him, by bestow-'ing his Offices and Preferments both in Church and State. 3. It ap-'pearing also to Us, That by his Influence Mercenary Forces have been 'levy'd and kept on foot for his secret Designs, contrary to our Laws; 'the Officers thereof having been nam'd and appointed by Him, to the 'apparent Hazard of his Majesty's Person, our Religion and Government, 'if the Danger had not been timely foreseen by several Parliaments, and 'Part of those Forces, with great Difficulty, caus'd by them to be Dis-'banded at the Kingdom's great Expence: And it being evident, that 'notwith-

‘ notwithſtanding all the continual Endeavours of the Parliament to de‘ liver his Majeſty from the Counſels, and out of the Power of the ſaid
‘ Duke, yet his Intereſt in the Miniſtry of State and Others have been ſo ‘ prevalent, that Parliaments have been unreaſonably Prorogu'd, and ‘ Diſſolv'd, when they have been in hot Purſuit of the Popiſh Conſpira‘ cies, and Ill Miniſters of State, their Aſſiſtants. 4. And that the ſaid

‘ Gariſons, the Army and Ammunition, and all the Power of the Seas
‘ and Soldiery, and Lands belonging to theſe three Kingdoms, to be put ‘ into the Hands of his Party, and their Adherents, even in Oppoſition
‘ to the Advice and Order of the laſt Parliament. 5. And as We, conſi‘ dering with heavy Hearts, how greatly the Strength, Reputation and ‘ Treaſure of the Kingdom both at Sea and Land is Waſted and Conſumed, ‘ ſtructive Deſigns; and finding the ſame Counſels, after exemplary Ju‘ ſtice upon ſome of the Conſpirators, to be ſtill purſu'd with the utmoſt

‘ continual Hazard of being Murder'd to make way for the ſaid Duke's ‘ Advancement to the Crown, and the whole Kingdom in ſuch Caſe is ‘ deſtitute of all Security of their Religion, Laws, Eſtates and Liberty;
‘ ſad Experience in the Caſe, Queen Mary, having prov'd the wiſeſt Laws
‘ to be of little Force to keep out Popery and Tyranny under a Popiſh ‘ Prince. 6. We have therefore endeavour'd in a Parliamentary-Way
‘ by a Bill for the purpoſe to Bar and Exclude the ſaid Duke from the ‘ Succeſſion to the Crown, and to Baniſh him for ever out of theſe King‘ doms of England and Ireland. But the firſt Means of the King and ‘ Kingdom's Safety being utterly rejected, and we left almoſt in Deſpair
‘ of Obtaining any Real and Effectual Security, and knowing our Selves
‘ to be intruſted to Adviſe and Act for the Preſervation of his Majeſty

There was likewiſe found among the Lord Shaftsbury's Papers, beſides the Aſſociation, a Book of the ſeveral Counties of England, rang'd in Alphabet, under the Heads of Worthy Men on the one ſide, and Men Worthy on the other; being intended, and made uſe of for a diſcriminating Liſt of the Royaliſts and Republicans, as afterwards appear'd; and under the Cypher of Men Worthy, was couch'd the Conceit of Men worthy to be hang'd. However it was, neither the Papers found upon the Earl, nor the Witneſſes againſt him cou'd prevail upon the Grand-Jury to find the Bill; but the former not appearing to be in his Hand, and the latter not of ſufficient Credit with them, they return'd the Bill Ignoramus; which was brought into the Court with extraordinary Shouts and Acclamations of the People. The Witneſſes againſt the Earl were preſently aſſaulted by the Rabble, and in ſuch danger of their Lives, that the Sheriffs, by the Command of the Judges, were oblig'd to guard them that Night as far as the Savoy, towards their Lodgings; among whom Graham the Sollicitor againſt the Earl was in particular danger. Several Bonfires were made that Night in the City, at which many Riotous Actions were committed; and the general Cry was a Monmouth, a Shaftsbury, a Buckingham. And a Medal was caſt, upon which Medal Mr. Dryden made a very very ingenious Poem. Four Days after, the Earl of Shaftsbury, and the Lord Howard of Eſcrick, both Priſoners in the Tower, were brought by Habeas Corpus, and bail'd at the King's-Bench; the former had the Lord Ruſſel, Sir William Cooper, Mr. Mountagu, and Mr. Charlton for his Bail; himſelf being bound in a Recognizance of Three thouſand Pounds, and each other in half the Sum. The Lord Howard was alſo bail'd in the ſame manner; but particular Orders were tranſmitted by the Privy-Council to the Lord-Mayor, to ſend to every Ward and Pariſh to prevent all Bonfires and Bells Ringing that Night. Theſe Proceedings of Ignoramus Juries, and the new diſcover'd Aſſociation, tho' applaud-ed by many, rous'd the Indignation, and rais'd the higheſt Reſentments of the greateſt part of the Nation in the beginning of the next Year. 1681. 5. But before we finiſh this Year, it will be neceſſary to take ſome Notice of the Affairs of Scotland; where his Royal Highneſs the Duke ſeem'd more ſucceſsful than his Brother at home. On the 28th of July, the Parliament ſat in that Kingdom, where the Duke of York preſided as his Majeſty's High Commiſſioner. At the opening of the Seſſions the King's Letter was read, ſetting forth, 'That he had call'd them at that 'time to adviſe of ſuch things as may truly conduce to the Security and 'Intereſt of that Kingdom; and as an eminent Expreſſion of his Favour, 'he hath named his moſt dear and moſt intirely beloved Brother James 'Duke of Albany and York, to be his Commiſſioner there, &c.' After which the Duke himſelf made a ſolemn Speech to them, in which he de-clared, 'The high Eſteem he had of the great Honour and Happineſs the 'King had been pleas'd to do him, in making Choice of him to ſerve 'as his Commiſſioner in that his ancient Kingdom; ſince it ſhew'd to all 'the World the Goodneſs the King had for him, and Confidence he had 'in him, and capacitated him, not only to ſerve his Majeſty as becomes a 'Loyal Subject, but alſo to evince the real Concern he had for the Good 'of that Kingdom, and his Readineſs to ſerve it, and improve its Inte-'reſt: That his Majeſty had commanded him to aſſure them, That he 'would inviolably maintain and protect the Proteſtant Religion as by Law 'Eſtabliſh'd in that Kingdom, and the Church-Government by Arch-Bi-'ſhops and Biſhops: That he would maintain and allow the Properties and 'Rights of his Subjects according to the due Courſe of Law, and that he 'did expect that they would not be ſhort of the Loyalty of their Ance-'ſtors, in vigorouſly aſſerting and clearing his Royal Prerogative, and in 'declaring the Rights of his Crown, in its Natural and Legal Courſe of 'Deſcent, &c.' After which, his Royal Highneſs entertain'd the whole Parliament at a ſplendid and magnificent Feaſt; the Lords by themſelves, and the Commons by themſelves, at ſeveral Tables, in ſuch a manner as gave a general Satisfaction to that Noble Aſſembly. A Parliament in Scotland. King's Letter. Duke of York's Speech.

On the Firſt of Auguſt, the Parliament return'd a moſt Loyal and Du-tiful Anſwer to his Majeſty's Letter, fill'd with the higheſt Compliments, and the largeſt Expreſſions of Gratitude. And alſo, in Purſuance and Confirmation of their zealous Affections, on the 14th of the ſame Month, the Parliament paſs'd an Act Acknowledging and Aſſerting the Right of Succeſſion to the Imperial Crown of Scotland: By which 'They Recog-'nize and Declare, That the ſaid Crown is by Inherent Right, and the 'Nature of the Monarchy, as well as by the fundamental and unalterable 'Laws of the Realm, tranſmitted and devolv'd by Lineal Succeſſion, 'according to Proximity of Blood; and that no Difference in Religion, 'no Law nor Act of Parliament can alter or divert the Right of Succeſ-'ſion and Lineal Deſcent of the Crown to the neareſt and lawful Heirs; 'and therefore it is declared High-Treaſon, by Writing, Speaking, or 'any Act of Succeſſion.

1681. Car. 33 Ref. 22

'any other manner of Way to endeavour the Alteration, Suſpenſion or 'Diverſion of the Right of Succeſſion.' At the ſame Time they paſs'd another Act Ratifying all former Laws for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion; by which all the Laws made by King James, King Charles the Firſt, and the preſent King, for Setling and Securing the Liberty and Freedom of the true Kirk of God, and the Proteſtant Religion, preſently profeſs'd in this Realm, and all Acts againſt Popery, were confirm'd. To which Act was annex'd a long and remarkable Teſt and Oath, to be taken by all Officers in Church and State, all Graduates in the Univerſities, and innumerable Others.

Several other Acts paſs'd before the Breaking up of the Parliament; but none had a more immediate Effect than the Teſt Act laſt mentioned, which in the Event caus'd great Diſcontents and Emotions amongſt the Presbyterian Party of that Kingdom. This Teſt, tho' afterwards explain'd and qualify'd, was ſtill ſo contrary to the Senſe of that Party, that ſeveral of their Miniſters refus'd it, and ſome of the Laiety; among whom of greateſt Note was Archibald Campbel, Earl of Argyle, Son to the famous Marquis ſo often mention'd in the laſt Volume. This zealous and active Man, notwithſtanding he had receiv'd very particular Favours from the King after his Father's Forfeitures, during the Sitting of the Parliament, had by many indirect Ways attempted to hinder his Majeſty's Service; and he, the Preſident of the Seſſion, and his Friends took their Opportunity in Wording the Teſt, to add the very ſame Clauſes, that afterwards gave any Colour of Scruple to themſelves, as Dr. Sprat aſſures us. And as ſoon as the Parliament was Adjourn'd, the Earl, firſt at Edinburgh, next in traverſing ſeveral Shires, made it his chief Buſineſs in all Places to inſinuate into the Minds of the Clergy and Laiety all imaginable Prejudices againſt the whole Tenor of the Teſt. On his Return afterwards to Edinburgh he often poſitively declared, He would either not take it at all, or take it with a Reſerve of his own Explanation; which he put in Writing, and diſpers'd it about. At length he was Apprehended by the High Commiſſioner, and the Privy-Council, and proſecuted by the King's Advocate before the higheſt Court of Juſtice, according to the Laws of his Country; and after a full and equal Tryal, he was found Guilty of Treaſon, by the Judges, and a Jury not only of his Peers, but alſo ſeveral of them his own neareſt Relations. Soon after Judgment, tho' the King had no Thought of taking his Life, and no further Prejudice was deſign'd againſt him, but the Forfeitures of ſome Juriſdictions and Superiorities, which he and his Predeceſſors had ſurreptitiouſly acquir'd, and tyrannically exercis'd; yet he took the firſt Opportunity to make his Eſcape, not daring to venture on the King's Mercy, of which he had met with ſo large a Share, when he was under the like Sentence of Condemnation. Upon his Flight, his Arms were revers'd and torn, with all publick Solemnity, and ſuch other Marks of Diſhonour denounced againſt him, as were by the Cuſtoms of Scotland, due to Traytors. By his Caſe publiſh'd by his Friends at large, he ſeems to have met with great Hardſhips, and rather to have been proſecuted for the Sake of his Family, than Himſelf; but however it was, it gave Riſe to new Diſturbances; and the Earl, before low, and now deſperate in his Fortunes, never left purſuing his Revenge, till he met with his own Deſtruction.

His Condemnation and Flight.

6. And now to conclude the Year, we ſhall take Notice of ſome few Promotions, and Deaths of conſiderable Perſons. Beſides thoſe already mention'd this Year, in July, his Majeſty being deſirous to place a laſting Mark of Eſteem upon the Family of Sir George Carteret, late Vice-Chamberlain of the Houſehold, as well for the long and loyal Services of Promotions at Home.

of the ſaid Sir George at Home and Abroad, as for the Merit of his Son Sir Philip Carteret, who loſt his Life in his Service at Sea, was graciouſly pleas'd to create young Sir George Carteret, Son to Sir Philip, a Baron of England, by the Name of Baron Carteret of Hawnes in the County of Bedford. Afterwards his Majeſty was pleas'd to conſtitute his Grace the Duke of Grafton Colonel of his Firſt Regiment of Foot-Guards, in the Room of Colonel Ruſſel, who had reſign'd that Command. And ſoon after, George Legg Eſquire, Maſter-General of the Ordnance, was ſworn of his Majeſty's Privy-Council. Sir Samuel Morland had invented a wonderful Engine, which, with the Strength of Eight Men, would force the Water in a continual Stream, at the rate of above Sixty Barrels an Hour, from the River Thames up to the Top of Windſor-Caſtle, and from thence into the Air above Sixty Foot higher, to the great Admiration of all that ſaw it. This Experiment being often repeated before the King, Queen, and foreign Ambaſſadors, gave ſo much Satisfaction to his Majeſty, that on the 14th of Auguſt he ſent for Sir Samuel Morland, and in the Preſence of Prince Rupert, and many of the Nobility, Declared, That he was highly pleas'd with all the late Experiments and extraordinary Effects of Sir Samuel's Water-Engine; and therefore, as an Earneſt of his particular Grace and Favour, gave him with his own Hand, and order'd him to wear it on his Breaſt during Life, a fair Medal of Gold, faſtned to a great Ribbon, on the one ſide of which Medal was his Majeſty's Effigies, ſet round with Diamonds of a conſiderable Value; and on the other Side the following Inſcription, CAROLO II. Magnæ Britanniæ, Franciæ & Hiberniæ, Regi, Samuel Morlandus Eques Auratus & Baronettus, MAGISTER MECHANICORUM, in rebus adverſis ſummo Vitæ periculo, in proſperis, fælici Ingenio frequens adfuit. After which the Lord Chamberlain, by his Majeſty's Order, caus'd him to be ſworn Maſter of the MECHANICKS, and the Inſcription on the Medal to be Regiſter'd in the great Parchment Roll of the Office. 1681. Car. 33 Reſ. 22

As to the Deaths of conſiderable Men, we ſhall begin with two worthy Divines, and firſt Dr. Michael Honywood, Educated in Chriſt-College in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and immediately after the Reſtoration made Dean of Lincoln, where his pious and hoſpitable Behaviour ſhew'd he was equal to that Dignity; and he was particularly diſtinguiſh'd for his munificent Benefactions to his own College, as well as to that Church and Deanery, for which he built and gave a very handſome Library, and which he deſign'd very much to improve, if his Life had continu'd longer. The next was Mr. Thomas Gouge, Educated in King's-College in Cambridge, and above twenty Years Miniſter of St. Sepulchres in London, which he loſt by his Non-Conforming to the Act of Uniformity, tho' for ſeveral of his laſt Years he continu'd in the Communion of the Church of England; an admirable and glorious Man, whoſe excellent Temper, unaffected Goodneſs, and univerſal Benevolence, attracted the Love and Veneration of all Parties, who could never find the leaſt Blemiſh in his Life and Converſation. His Charities were ſo diffuſive, and his Labours in Procuring and Diſtributing them ſo indefatigable, that Dr. Tillotſon ſaid of him; 'that all Things conſider'd, there have not, ſince the 'Primitive Times of Chriſtianity, been many among the Sons of Men, 'to whom that glorious Character of the Son of God might be better 'apply'd, That He went about doing Good. The Deaths of Dr. Honywood, Mr. Gouge.

The next to be mention'd were two eminent Baronets, Sir Richard Brown, and Sir Thomas Herbert, both conſiderable Travellers. The Former was likewiſe Doctor of the Civil-Law, who after his Travels became one of the Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber, and Clerk of the Council Sir Richard Brown,

1681. Car. 33 Ref. 22

Council to King Charles the First, by whom he was employ'd abroad in several remarkable Negotiations, as the Marriage of his Daughter to the Prince of Orange, &c. From 1641 to 1660, in the most difficult Times, he continu'd Resident in the Court of France for both the King Charles's, where he chiefly subsisted upon his own Estate, with much Honour and Reputation; and returning with the present King, he executed his Office of the Clerk of the Council for some Time, till Years made him retire to his Seat in Kent, where he spent the Remainder of his Time in a pleasing Retirement, and studious Recess. The Other, Sir Thomas Herbert, was a Gentleman of the Family of the Earls of Pembroke, who after great Travels through Europe, Asia and Africa, fell in with the Parliamentarians against King Charles the First, by whom he was appointed to be a near Attendant on the King from the Time of his being brought to Holdenby House. He thus continu'd to the last Moment of his Life, with great Observance and Fidelity; which gave him an Opportunity to see exactly into the Character of that good Prince, and fully convinc'd him, that he was no Papist, no Arbitrary and obstinate Man, &c. as he and others had been made to believe from the common Representation of his Enemies. For which Service, he was after the Restoration made a Baronet of England; and besides an Account of his Travels, he left behind him Memoirs of the two last Years of the Reign of King Charles the First, a Book written with as much Candour, Simplicity and Impartiality, as perhaps any in the Age.

Sir Thomas Herbert,

The next were two memorable Astrologers, &c. and great Antagonists, Sir George Wharton and Mr. William Lilly, both great Writers, and deeply ingag'd in opposite Parties. The first had an Academical Education at Oxford, who at the Beginning of the Civil Wars turn'd his Estate into Money, and rais'd a gallant Troop of Horse for the King, and for several Years employ'd first his Sword, and then his Pen in the same Cause, writing upon several Subjects, and oftentimes against William Lilly and John Booker; in which he shew'd himself a pleasant Companion, a witty Droll, and a waggish Poet, as well as a considerable Astronomer and Mathematician. After the Restoration he was made a Baronet, and at length dy'd in Retirement at Enfield in Middlesex. The other, William Lilly, had no Academical Education, and therefore the more Remarkable, considering the strange Variety of his Writings, which were fill'd with Physical and Astrological Predictions of a surprizing Nature, and generally with great Bitterness turn'd against the Fate of the Royal Family; for which he was a long Time Idoliz'd by the Vulgar as a true Prophet, and a Person of the profoundest Knowledge. After the Restoration, he was generously screen'd by his Antagonist Wharton, but his Fame very much declin'd, tho' to the last he retain'd the Reputation of a knowing Physician, when he left the World at Walton upon Thames. Since we are to mention all Persons that Excell in their Way and Profession, we may after him very well take Notice of John Lacy, the celebrated Actor and Comedian, a Yorkshire-Man, and originally an Apprentice of John Ogilby when he was a Dancing-Master; a Person who for many Years perform'd all the Parts he undertook to a Miracle, and indeed he was both the Wonder and Delight of the Stage; being so highly approv'd by the present King, an unquestionable Judge in Dramatick Arts, that he caus'd several Pictures of him to be drawn in different Habits and Postures, in Memory of his rare and surprizing Performances.

Sir George Wharton,

William Lilly,

And John Lacy.

III. I. This Winter, soon after the Discharge of the Earl of Shaftsbury, and the publick Appearance of his Association, the Nation began to be be rous'd and irritated after an unuſual Manner. The King and Court were diſappointed and exaſperated: Both Parties began to boaſt of their Strength and Numbers, and to ſhew their Reſentments with more Heat than formerly; but it ſoon appear'd where the Majority lay, and the moſt publick Teſtimony was given of it, to the great Mortification of one Side. The firſt Effect of this Commotion, was letting all the Laws looſe, which in the laſt Year had begun to be put in Execution, againſt the Diſſenters, who had ſo unanimouſly or openly eſpous'd the Earl of Shaftſbury's Cauſe, that it was not to be doubted but that they were true Friends to the new Aſſociation. The ſecond Effect was the Appearance of innumerable Addreſſes, which a ſecond Time flow'd from all Parts of the Nation, now in Abhorrence of the ſaid Aſſociation, and the Practices of the Earl of Shaftsbury and his Party. A third was, the Clergy's frequent Preaching up Paſſive Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance, and carrying thoſe Doctrines and Opinions to the utmoſt Height this Year; in which theſe Divines were encourag'd and ſupported by ſome of the moſt conſiderable Lawyers in the Inns of Court, who occaſionally and dayly alledg'd the Acts of Parliament made ſince the Reſtoration. 1681. Car. 34 Reſ. 22

The Effects of the new Aſſociation.

The Proſecution of Diſſenters.

As to the Proſecution of the Diſſenters, ſome have judg'd it to be a Piece of Court Artifice in playing the Church of England and them againſt each other, to the Weakning of Both; and others, a Juſt Reſentment againſt that Party, which had formerly caus'd ſuch Miſchiefs, and of late given ſuch Uneaſineſs to the Crown. However it was, the King, whoſe Principle and Practice, againſt the Inclinations of his long Parliament, had been to indulge the Diſſenters, was now drawn in to promote a rigorous Proſecution of them. The Humour of the Magiſtrates and People at this Time, made the Matter more eaſy to him; for ſoon after the Diſcharge of the Earl of Shaftsbury, the Juſtices of Middleſex ſhew'd a greater Forwardneſs in putting the Laws in Execution againſt their Meetings, which they now look'd upon rather as Seditious than Religious Aſſemblies. Under that Denomination, the Laws had been formerly made againſt them in this Reign; and in purſuance of that, they humbly preſented to his Majeſty, in December, 'That an Intimation of his Pleaſure 'was neceſſary at this Time, as to the putting the Laws in Execution 'againſt Conventicles; in regard that when it was lately given them in 'Charge at the Council-Board, to put the Laws in Execution againſt 'Popiſh Recuſants, there was no mention made of Suppreſſing Conventi- 'cles; and therefore it was pretended, That they were not to be diſturb'd 'or medled with.' Upon which his Majeſty was pleas'd to take this Occaſion to Command the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, and the ſaid Juſtices of the Peace, 'to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to ſuppreſs all Con- 'venticles, and Unlawful Meetings, upon Pretence of Religious Wor- 'ſhip: His Majeſty declaring, It is his expreſs Pleaſure, That the Laws 'be effectually put in Execution againſt them, both in City and Country.

Proceedings of the Juſtices at Hicks's-Hall.

Accordingly, the Juſtices of the Peace for the County of Middleſex, at their Seſſions at Hick's-Hall, before Hilary-Term, order'd by their publick Act, dated the 13th of January, 'That whereas the Conſtables 'and Church-Wardens, &c. of every Pariſh and Precinct within the ſaid 'County, had been enjoyn'd laſt Seſſions to make a Return the firſt Day 'of this, of the Names of the Preachers in Conventicles, and the moſt conſi- 'derable Frequenters of the ſame within their ſeveral Limits; which 'Order not being obey'd, but contemn'd by ſome, it was therefore by 'the Juſtices then aſſembled, deſired, that the Lord Biſhop of London 'will pleaſe to direct thoſe Officers which are under his Juriſdiction, to 'uſe their utmoſt Diligence, that all ſuch Perſons may be Excommunica- 'ted who commit Crimes deſerving that Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, and that 168½. Car. 34 Ref. 22 'the ſaid Excommunications may be publiſh'd in the Pariſhes where the 'Perſons live, that they may be taken Notice of, and be obvious to the 'Penalties that belong to Perſons Excommunicate, viz. Not to be admitted for a Witneſs, or return'd upon Juries, or capable to ſue for any 'Debt.' And they further order'd in the ſame Seſſions, 'That the Statute of the Firſt of Elizabeth, and the Third of James, be put in due 'Execution, for the Levying Twelve Pence per Sunday upon ſuch Perſons who repair not to Divine Service and Sermons at their Pariſh, or 'ſome other publick Church.' All which made way for all Sorts of Proſecutions, both in City and Country, which in many Places were carry'd on with great Spite and Severity, where there never wanted buſy Agents and Informers, of which a few were ſufficient to put the Laws in Execution. So that, for the moſt Part, the Diſſenters, this Year, and much longer, met with cruel and unchriſtian Uſage, greater than any Subjects had felt ſince the Reſtoration. For what they had done before that Time was afreſh remember'd, and rais'd ſuch an Indignation and Prejudice againſt them, as the wiſeſt Men cou'd not eaſily conquer. The Beginnings of theſe Proceedings rais'd a mighty Noiſe and Diſcontent, and occaſion'd ſome Reflections upon the King which were very rude and violent; as particularly, Mr. Frederick Harvey ſaid, That the King's Conſenting to the Tyrannical Proceedings of Convicting Diſſenters, he did not queſtion but wou'd make him the Head ſhorter; and that he did admire the City did not ſecure him the laſt Lord Mayor's-Day, when they had him there: For which Words, he was committed Priſoner to Newgate for High-Treaſon.

But to return to the Proceedings at Hicks's-Hall, there was another Act of the ſame Seſſions, which bore Date the 18th of January; with which the Juſtices of the Peace attended upon his Majeſty at White-Hall the ſame Day, and preſented the Paper to his Royal Hands. It contain'd, 'That they the ſaid Juſtices were ſenſible of their great Ho-'nour and Happineſs in being the Firſt who return'd their humble and 'hearty Acknowledgment for his moſt Gracious Declaration; which be-'ing follow'd by a Multitude of Addreſſes from all Parts of the King-'dom, his Majeſty hath had a full Diſcovery of the Peoples Affections, 'and that his Enemies were neither ſo Numerous nor Formidable as they 'were by ſome apprehended to be: That now, as his Majeſty can have 'no Cauſe to fear them, ſo they the ſaid Juſtices hope He will never be 'perſwaded to truſt them; That they are aſham'd that they, who live ſo 'near his Royal Perſon, were not likewiſe the firſt in Expreſſing their 'Indignation againſt that moſt Execrable and Traiterous deſign'd Aſſoci-'ation, lately diſcover'd by his Majeſty, which certainly in the Judgment 'of all good Men may more corrupt the Blood of the wicked Inventers, 'than if they ſhou'd be diſcover'd and attainted by Law: That the ſaid 'Treaſon was not only againſt the King, but the Monarchy; and if any 'Perſons ſhou'd attempt, under Colour or Pretence of ſo horrid and 'damnable a Contrivance, to diſturb the Peace and Quiet of his Maje-'ſty's Government they doubted not, but that whatſoever Impunity they 'might meet with upon Earth, yet they ſhou'd not eſcape the Divine 'Juſtice.' This Paper being read, his Majeſty was pleas'd heartily to thank thoſe Juſtices for their conſtant Affection to Him, and the Eſtabliſh'd Government.

Their Addreſs againſt the Aſſociation.

Others, To this Purpoſe were innumerable other Congratulations and Addreſſes to the King, ſome before, but moſt after this of Middleſex, from Norwich, Hereford, Briſtol, the Lieutenancy of London, the Inns of Court, and all Parts of the Kingdom; all which were call'd A ſecond Edition of Loyalty, or a New ſort of Addreſſes circulating a Second Time.

But

But none was taken more Notice of than that from the Gentlemen of the Middle Temple, which was preſented on the 19th of February, with great Satisfaction to his Majeſty. It was read by Mr. Edmund Saunders, as following: 'We your Majeſty's moſt Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, profeſſing the Study and Practice of your Majeſty's Laws in the Society of 'the Middle-Temple, do with all Humility proſtrate our Selves at your 'Royal Feet; and conceiving our Selves, by reaſon of our Profeſſion, 'more oblig'd than Others of your Majeſty's Subjects, to offer to your 'Sacred Majeſty our Senſe of that Execrable Paper, purporting the Frame 'and Form of a Taiterous Aſſociation, produc'd at the late Proceedings 'againſt the Earl of Shaftsbury at the Old-Baily; Do therefore Declare 'it our Opinion, That the ſame contains moſt groſs and apparent Treaſons, more manifeſtly tending to the Ruin of your Majeſty's Dominions, than the Old Hypocritical Solemn League and Covenant, which 'they that were ſeduced to take, are no more bound to keep, than he 'that ſhou'd ſwear to murder his Father, is oblig'd to commit the Paricide. And it is moſt evident to us, That whoſoever promoted that 'Rebellious Aſſociation, deſign'd by the ſaid Paper, or Countenanc'd the 'ſame, by refuſing, upon full Evidence, to find Bills of Indictment againſt 'the Authors and Promoters thereof, and thereby, as much as in them 'lay, preventing their being brought to a fair Tryal, have in a high Meaſure perverted the Laws, and cou'd have no other Deſign thereby, than 'to Uſurp to themſelves an arbitrary and tyrannical Dominion, not only 'over your Subjects, but over your Majeſty alſo. And we humbly beſeech your Majeſty, favourably to accept of this reiterated Teſtimony of 'our Allegiance, all of us, jointly and ſeparately delaring, before the Almighty, That we do from our Souls utterly Deteſt and Abhor that, and all 'other Aſſociations whatſoever, promoted againſt your Majeſty's Crown 'and Dignity. And that we will, to our utmoſt Power, endeavour to 'preſerve your Sacred Majeſty, your Heirs and Lawful Succeſſors, from 'all Rebels, Traytors, and from all Conſpiracies againſt your Perſon, or 'moſt Excellent Government; and will make it our daily and hearty 'Prayer to the King of Kings, to grant your Majeſty a long and proſperous Reign.

That of the Middle Temple in particular.

This Addreſs caus'd the Obſervator and his Friends to triumph, who call'd it An Act of Authority, as well as of Bravery and Duty; it being no leſs than the Opinion of that Learned Society, tranſmitted to the Publick, upon the Matter in Queſtion. And what added to this Triumph was the Addreſs from Newark, publiſh'd the ſame Day, which promis'd his Majeſty, 'That whenever he ſhou'd, in his great Wiſdom, be pleas'd 'to call another Parliament, they would admit no Candidates for that Borough, but ſuch as ſhou'd declare beforehand their Abhorrence of that 'Aſſociation.' And indeed there began at this Time to be a general Emulation who ſhou'd ſhew themſelves moſt loyal to the King, or moſt faithful to the Duke. The City of London had a particular Opportunity of expreſſing their Affection, by means of an unuſual Accident, which happen'd in the Beginning of the Year. Some baſe unknown Perſon had in the Night cut, mangled and defac'd the Duke of York's Picture, which, with the King's, hung up in Guild-Hall, both nobly painted, as a ſignal Ornament to the City. Upon which Action, the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen publiſh'd a Declaration in Print, 'In which proteſting their 'deep Reſentment of that inſolent and villanous Act, to be abhorr'd by 'every Loyal Subject; and being greatly concern'd and deſirous to find 'out the Author thereof, they therefore unanimouſly Publiſh and Declare, That Whoſoever can diſcover the Perſon who committed that 'Fact, the ſaid Lord Mayor and Aldermen will not only acknowledge

'the ſaid Diſcovery as a moſt Acceptable Service to the City, but alſo 'pay to ſuch Diſcoverer the Sum of five Hundred Pounds upon the Of-'fenders Conviction.' In Return to which generous Act of the City, his Royal Highneſs ſent a Gentleman out of Scotland, expreſly to Compliment the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen, and to thank them for their great Reſpect, and open Juſtice to his Cauſe.

An Account of the Aſſaſſination of Mr. Thynne.

2. In the midſt of theſe Court Succeſſes, the City and Country were allarm'd with the Noiſe of a publick Aſſaſſination, ſtrange and unuſual in the Streets of an Engliſh City; but the leſs to be admired, as committed by the Hands of Foreigners. Of which this was the Occaſion. Joſceline the laſt Earl of Northumberland, of the Family of Piercy, dying in the Year 1670, left no Iſſue beſides Elizabeth his Daughter and ſole Heir, at the Time of his Death about four Years of Age; which young Lady, being ſo great a Fortune, was in her Minority marry'd to Henry Earl of Ogle, Son and Heir apparent to the Duke of Newcaſtle, who dying ſoon after ſuch Marriage, left her a Virgin Widow. After which many aſpired to the Happineſs and Advantage of a ſecond Match with this fine young Lady; among whom was a German Lord call'd Count Coningsmark, who Sojourning in England, was honourably countenanc'd by the King Himſelf. But the young Lady, chiefly by Means of her Grand-Mother, as is reported, was ſecretly marry'd the laſt Summer to Thomas Thynne of Longleet Eſquire, one who had been a Member in ſeveral Parliaments, a Gentleman of great Note both in City and Country, having a noble Eſtate of Ten Thouſand Pounds per Annum, given him by an Uncle. This Marriage, it ſeems, was not made ſo well to the Satisfaction of all Parties, but that the young Lady was prevail'd with, the laſt Michaelmas Term, to convey her ſelf privately into Holland; and this was done before her Husband had ever bedded with her. Hereupon the Town was allarm'd with the Approach of a mighty Suit at Law, concerning the Validity of the Match; and the beſt Civilians of Doctors-Commons were ingag'd and retain'd on one ſide or other. And not only ſo, but Count Coningsmark, who had left England ſome time before, began afreſh to concern himſelf, and again came over to London in Diſguiſe. He had already ſent two Challenges to Mr. Thynne, by a Dependent of his call'd Captain Vratz; but inſtead of anſwering himſelf, he ſent ſix Men after him into France, to kill both the Count and the Captain; but they both eſcap'd in the Conflict, and kill'd two themſelves, as the Captain afterwards declared. However it was, on Sunday Night, the 12th of February, Mr. Thynne, as he was paſſing the Pall-Mall near the Hay-Market in his Coach, was encounter'd by three Men on Horſe-back, one of which diſcharg'd a Muſquetoon into the Coach, and with two Brace of Bullets mortally wounded him; and having perform'd this deſperate Act, they rod away and made their Eſcape.

Count Coningſmark the Cauſe.

The Aſſaſſines taken,

The King having been inform'd of what happen'd, immediately gave Orders for the Stopping all Perſons that cou'd not give a good Account of themſelves in the ſeveral Ports; and for making diligent Search in Town, in Order to diſcover the Aſſaſſinates. The Diligence of thoſe who made the Search was ſo ſucceſsful, that upon ſome Information given them, they trac'd the Murtherers to their ſeveral Lodgings, and there apprehended them, and brought them the next Day before the Council, which was Extraordinarily aſſembled for that purpoſe. The chief of them being examin'd, readily confeſs'd the whole Fact, and ſaid 'He was a German, by Name Vratz, and a Captain of Foot; That he 'had accompany'd Charles-John Coningsmark in his Travels, and came 'with him into England; That the Friendſhip and Acquaintance he had

'with

'with him, and the Favours he had receiv'd from his Family, had made 'him nearly ſenſible of the Affronts that Mr. Thynne had put upon the 'Count, by his Diſcourſes and otherwiſe, and therefore reſolv'd to take 'Satisfaction of him; and being inform'd on Sunday, That Mr. Thynne 'was gone abroad in his Coach, he took Horſe, with a Friend, and a 'Servant of his own, who were provided with a Muſquetoon, and them-'ſelves arm'd with Swords and Piſtols: That meeting his Coach in the 'Pall-Mall, he rod up to it, and bid the Coach-Man ſtand, intending 'fairly to fight Mr. Thynne; but his Servant, not rightly apprehending 'what he ſaid, diſcharg'd his Muſquetoon upon Mr. Thynne, whereup-'on they made their Eſcape.' Six Days after, Count Coningsmark was taken at Graves-End in a Diſguiſe, intending to imbark on a Veſſel that wat going out; He was next Morning brought to Town, and examin'd in Council before the King, who referr'd the Matter to the Lord-Chief-Juſtice, and his Lordſhip committed him Priſoner to Newgate. On the 28th of February, the Three Principals, Captain Chriſtopher Vratz, Lieutenant John Stern, and George Boroski a Polander, were together with the Count try'd at the Old-Baily; where they were ſoon convicted and Condemn'd; but the Count, who was Indicted as Acceſſary, was with great Difficulty, and perhaps no leſs Partiality, found Not Guilty, and acquitted: The Three were executed in the Pall-Mall, the Lieutenant and Polander being very penitent; tho' their Notion had for ſome Time been That Obedience to the Orders of their Superiors wou'd clear any Man from Guilt. But the Captain ſeem'd to continue in his firſt Opinion, That God had a greater Favour for Gentlemen, than to require Punctilios of Humility at their Hands; and that it was abſurd to think, that ſo many Thouſand Gentlemen in the World, that ſtood upon their Honour and Reputation as much as He, ſhou'd be for ever damn'd, becauſe they cou'd not Stoop to Things that wou'd ſpoil the Figure they made in the World.

and Executed. Coningſmark eſcapes.

As this Accident made a great Noiſe, ſo it was at firſt look'd upon as a Party Cauſe, Mr. Thynne being ſo deeply ingag'd with thoſe now call'd the Whigs, and the more upon the Account of the Acquittal of Count Coningsmark. But ſome look'd upon it as a juſt Judgment upon him for his treacherous Practices to another Lady, noted for her Modeſty and Vertue, who had bravely reſiſted the Temptations of a vicious Court, and more particularly the Courtſhip of the Duke of Monmouth, as being a Marry'd Man. The Duke inrag'd at the Diſappointment, it ſeems apply'd himſelf for Revenge to an Unmarry'd-Man, his Friend Mr. Thynne, who by the Help of his great Eſtate, and his honourable Propoſals and Pretenſions, as it is ſaid, found Means and Opportunity at length baſely to betray her Vertue, and then ſhamefully abandon'd Her. This was fully remember'd after his Death, and it became a ſort of a Saying, That if he had marry'd the Lady he had bedded, or had bedded the Lady he had marry'd, he had never come to this Untimely End. As to the Lady Ogle, who was an innocent but unfortunate Occaſion of this Diſaſter, ſhe was afterwards marry'd to the Duke of Somerſet, and ſoon ſhew'd to the World that her Worth and Reputation was above all Blemiſh.

Reflections upon it.

3. Immediately after the Execution of the Criminals, the King, Queen and Court repair'd to Newmarket, where it was deſign'd that the Duke of York from Scotland ſhou'd meet them with publick Pomp and Solemnity. In Order to which, his Royal Highneſs landed at Great Yarmouth, on the 10th of March, where he was receiv'd by the Bayliffs and Corporation, with all the Marks of Joy and Reſpect, and entertain'd with as noble a Dinner as cou'd be provided upon ſo ſudden an Occaſion. From thence, thence, with great Satisfaction, he was attended by Mr. Knyvet the High-Sheriff of Norfolk, and a glorious Train of the Neighbouring Gentry, to the City of Norwich; where he was again magnificently treated by the Mayor and Aldermen, with Banquets and Bonefires, and lodg'd that Night at the Biſhop's Palace. The next Day, towards the Evening, he arriv'd at Newmarket, where he was receiv'd by both their Majeſties with all the Demonſtrations of Kindneſs and Affection; having been met ſeveral Miles out of Town by a numerous Appearance of Noblemen and Gentlemen, then attending the Court; and now the popular Acclamations for the Duke of York appear'd in all Places as great as any that had been for the Duke of Monmouth.

The very next Day, the two Royal Brothers had the Pleaſure of an Addreſs from the Artillery Company in Briſtol, which, becauſe it was much diſcours'd of, and more particularly decipher'd the Aſſociation, is for the moſt Part here remember'd: Theſe Addreſſers 'Expreſs from 'the Bottom of their Souls an utter Abhorrence of all Covenants and Aſ- 'ſociations whatſoever, made againſt or without his Majeſty's Approba- 'tion, eſpecially that Treaſonable One ſeiz'd in the Cloſet of the Earl of 'Shaftsbury; wherein the Securing the Proteſtant Religion, and the De- 'fence of his Majeſty's Royal Perſon and Eſtate, is made the Pretence; 'but the Subverſion of the Eſtabliſh'd Religion, and the final Deſtruction 'of his Majeſty and Lawful Succeſſors, is the Real Deſign: And this to 'be perform'd, not by the Major Part of a Parliament, as in the late de- 'ſtructive Rebellion; but by devolving his Majeſty's Crown and Scep- 'tre into the Hands of the Major Part of the Members of both Houſes, 'Subſcribing that Aſſociation, though Diſſolv'd, without Regard to their 'Quality, or Number. His Majeſty's Guards, for the Defence of his Royal 'Perſon, are falſly ſtil'd Mercenary Forces, and a Terror to all the good 'People of the Land: His Majeſty's Royal Brother to be Excluded and 'Deſtroyed, if he came into England, and all who ſhall oppoſe that Re- 'bellious, Accurſed, Helliſh and Unprecedented Aſſociation, are to be 'purſu'd to Deſtruction, tho' in Defence of his Majeſty's Title.' After ſome other Expreſſions, they conclude, 'That they will aſſert and de- 'fend the Rights and Prerogatives of his Majeſty and Lawful Succeſſors, 'in Oppoſition to all Unions and Societies made to the contrary; and that 'they cannot think that Man fit to be a Repreſentative in Parliament, 'who will not diſown ſuch Aſſociations.

4. While the King and the Court were entertaining themſelves with all ſorts of rural and field Sports, the Univerſity of Cambridge, in the Beginning of April, waited upon his Majeſty with a Loyal Addreſs of Abhorrency. At which Time alſo the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Coya, with the reſt of the Body, waited upon the Duke of York, and in the Name of Himſelf and the Univerſity, made a ſhort Speech in Latin, 'To con- 'gratulate his Royal Highneſs's Return into England, and to acknowledge 'that by his good Conduct, the Government of Scotland, both in Church 'and State, is ſettled in Peace; and therefore they cou'd by no means 'doubt, but that under his Majeſty, his Royal Highneſs's Preſence wou'd 'have a great Influence in Effecting the ſame here in England; by 'which means all Great Britain being joyn'd in One, the Church of 'England, and the Rights of the Crown may for ever flouriſh.' To which Speech his Royal Highneſs was pleas'd to return an Anſwer to this Effect; 'That he gave the Univerſity his Thanks for their kind Expreſſi- ons; That he was very glad of this and all other Occaſions to Declare, That he wou'd ever ſtand by the Church of England, as now Eſtabliſh'd, and Countenance the Members of it, as having ſeen by Experience, that they they are the beſt Supporters of the Crown; and that he wou'd uſe his Endeavours and Intereſt for the Preſervation of the King's Perſon, and the Government in the State, and the Church of England, as now Eſtabliſh'd by Law. And now ſeveral other Addreſſes alſo which were made to the King, had particular Words in them Congratulating the Duke's happy Return into England.

They chuſe the D. of Albemarle their Chancellor.

As the Credit of the Duke of York increas'd, ſo that of the Duke of Monmouth began to be in danger, tho' he had preſerv'd and kept it up by all imaginable Arts of Popularity. Theſe were really diſguſtful to the King, tho' he ſtill retain'd a ſecret and warm Affection for him; but now having a fair Opportunity of checking his Grandeur, he thought fit to ſignify his Pleaſure to the Univerſity of Cambridge, that they ſhou'd chuſe another Chancellor in the Place of the Duke of Monmouth. With which Order the Univerſity readily comply'd, and made choice of his Grace the Duke of Albemarle to be their Chancellor. Accordingly, for the more ſolemn Inſtallment of their new Chancellor, the Heads of the Univerſity, with other Members, to the Number of two Hundred and fifty, repair'd to London, and made a pompous Proceſſion in all their Robes and Habits, from Northumberland-Houſe to Albemarle-Houſe. Here the Ceremony was perform'd with great Decency and Grandeur, and his Grace was entertain'd with ſeveral Speeches. After which, his Grace was pleas'd to expreſs in very obliging Terms, his great Satisfaction in the Place into which they had Elected him, and his Readineſs to do them all Acts of Kindneſs to the utmoſt of his Power. The whole was concluded by a noble and ſplendid Entertainment; at which were preſent, beſides thoſe of the Univerſity, ſeveral Perſons of Honour and great Quality, beſides an infinite Number of Spectators.

The Duke of York treated at London.

As ſoon as the King return'd to London, together with his Royal Brother, on the 10th of April he was attended by the Lord Mayor, the Recorder, and Court of Aldermen; who having paid their Duty to the King, upon his Return from Newmarket, they all went to St. James's, where they waited upon his Royal Highneſs, and congratulated his Happy Return into England, and to that his particular Palace. A few Days after his Royal Highneſs was ſolemnly invited by the Artillery Company, to their Annual Feaſt held at Merchant-Taylors-Hall, which he readily accepted of, as being their Captain-General, and went accompany'd with great Numbers of the Nobility, and other Perſons of Quality. The Entertainment was manag'd with more than ordinary Pomp and Splendor, and after Dinner, upon his Retiring into another Room, great Numbers of the Citizens crowded in, and were admitted to kiſs his Royal Highneſs's Hand.

An oppoſite Invitation.

In Oppoſition, as it were, to this Invitation, the Party moſt zealous againſt Popery and the Duke's Succeſſion, to ſhew and improve their Strength, appointed a Publick Meeting, with a Sermon and a Dinner, as uſual among particular Bodies and Societies; and they invited their Gueſts, upon a Ticket in theſe Words: It having pleas'd Almighty God, by his wonderful Providence, to Deliver and Protect his Majeſty's Perſon, the Proteſtant Religion, and Engliſh Liberties, hitherto, from the Helliſh and frequent Attempts of their Enemies, the Papiſts; In Teſtimony of thankfulneſs herein, and for the Preſerving and Improving Mutual Love and Charity, among ſuch as are ſenſible thereof, You are deſired to meet many of the Loyal Proteſtant Nobility, Gentry, Clergy and Citizens, on Friday the 21ſt Day of this Inſtant April, 1682, at Ten a Clock, at St. Michael's Church in Cornhill, there to hear a Sermon, and from thence to go to Haberdaſhers-Hall to Dinner; and to bring this Ticket with you. The Court, which daily grew more vigilant and jealous, ſoon diſcover'd the Matter,

Matter, and publiſh'd this following Order of Council, dated April the 19th, 'Whereas the Appointing of Publick Faſts and Thankſgivings is 'Matter of State, and belongs only to his Majeſty by his Prerogative; 'And his Majeſty being inform'd, that in the City of London, Invitations 'have been made of great and unuſual Numbers, by Printed Tickets, one 'of which is hereunto annex'd; his Majeſty looks upon the ſame as an In-'ſolent Attempt; in manifeſt Derogation of his Right, and of dangerous 'Conſequence: The Matter of the ſaid Invitation being of a Publick Na-'ture, and Manner of Carrying it on, tending to Sedition, and Raiſing 'Diſtinctions and Confederacies amongſt his Subjects, againſt the known 'Laws and Peace of the Kingdom; his Majeſty therefore, by the Advice 'of his Council, hath thought fit, and doth hereby ſtrictly charge and 'command the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, as they will an-'ſwer the contrary at their Peril, to take immediate and effectual Care 'to prevent and hinder the ſaid Meeting, as an Unlawful Aſſembly; and 'all Sheriffs, Conſtables, and other his Majeſty's Officers in the ſaid City, 'are hereby commanded to be Aiding and Aſſiſting therein.

A Letter from Scotland in favour of the Duke.

On the ſame Day, for an Increaſe of the Duke's Credit, was publiſh'd by Authority a remarkable Letter ſubſcrib'd by ſeven Biſhops in Scotland, and directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſoon after his Royal Highneſs's Departure from that Kingdom: It bears date at Edinburgh, March 9, 1682, and ſets forth, 'That ſince his Royal Highneſs came into that Kingdom, 'they, the ſaid Biſhops, found their Caſe much chang'd for the better, 'and their Church and Order ſenſibly reliev'd and reſcu'd; which, next 'to the watchful Providence of God, they can aſcribe to nothing ſo much 'as to his Royal Highneſs's gracious Owning, and vigilant Protecting of 'them; who upon all Occaſions gave freſh Inſtances of his Eminent Zeal 'againſt the moſt unreaſonable Schiſm, which by Renting threatens the 'Subverſion of their Church and Religion; and concerns himſelf as a Pa-'tron to them in all their Publick, and even Perſonal Intereſts. That 'they did never propoſe to his Royal Highneſs any Rational Expedient, 'which might conduce to the Relief or Security of the Church, which 'he did not readily embrace and effectuate: That the Peace and Tran-'quillity of that Kingdom is the Effect of his prudent and ſteddy Conduct 'of Affairs: That the Humours of the wicked Phanaticks there, are 'much reſtrain'd from dangerous Eruptions, upon their Apprehenſions 'of his Vigilance and Juſtice; And that they deſire the ſaid Archbiſhop 'of Canterbury to make their Dutiful Acknowledgments to his Royal 'Highneſs for all his Princely Favours to them, with Aſſurance of their 'firm Endeavours to ſerve him, and of their moſt fervent Prayers for his 'Temporal and Eternal Happineſs.' Subſcrib'd, St. Andrews, Glaſco, 'Edinburgh, Galloway, Dunkeld, Brechin and Dumblain.

His R. Highneſs goes for Scotland.

5. Shortly after, his Royal Highneſs had an Occaſion of going once more, and the laſt Time, into Scotland, deſigning to bring his Dutcheſs and Family from thence, and to make but a very ſhort Stay. Accordingly on the 3d of May he departed from Windſor, accompany'd with ſeveral Perſons of Quality, and went down in one of the King's Yatchts to imbark on the Glouceſter, commanded by Sir John Berry, and attended by the Dartmouth, the Ruby, and the Happy Return, &c. But on Friday Morning early, May the 5th, the Glouceſter Frigate unhappily ſtruck upon the Sand call'd the Lemon and Oar, about ſixteen Leagues from the Mouth of the Humber, tho' the Weather was fair, and one Ayres, reckon'd the beſt Coaſter in England, his Pilot. His Royal Highneſs being awak'd out of his Sleep, and perceiving the Danger, ſtill ſtaid as long as he cou'd ſafely on Board, till, having notice given him, that there was above ſeven Foot

Foot Water in the Hold, he put off in his Pinnace, with as many of the beſt Perſons as it wou'd well hold, and ſav'd himſelf on Board of the Mary Yacht. Other Boats were immediately ſent to ſave the Men in the ſinking Ship; but before any Service cou'd be done, the Duke and the reſt, to their unexpreſſible Grief, ſaw the Veſſel ſink to the Bottom of the Sea. By which the Earl of Roxborough in Scotland, the Lord Obryan, the Laird of Hopton, Sir Joſeph Douglas, Lieutenant Hyde Brother-in-law to the Duke, with ſeveral of the Duke's Servants, and above a Hundred and Thirty Seamen, were miſerably loſt; the Commander, Sir John Berry, hardly eſcaping by a Rope over the Stern, into Captain Wyborn's Boat. We are told ſomething very remarkable concerning the poor Seamen in the ſinking Ship, who in the midſt of the Difficulty and Confuſion, when they ſaw their old Maſter the Duke out of Danger, they expreſs'd a particular Joy and Thankfulneſs for his Preſervation, while they themſelves were in a dying and deplorable Condition. Upon this extraordinary Eſcape, a remarkable Medal was ſtruck, on which was the Duke's Effigies in Buſt, with theſe Words round it, JACOBUS DUX EBORACENSIS ET ALBANENSIS G. B. F. The Reverſe, is a Ship ſinking in the Ocean, and a Rock and Caſtle at a Diſtance, with theſe Words, IMPAVIDUM FERIUNT. 1682. Car. 34 Reſ. 23 His Eſcape at Sea.

Soon after this ſad Diſaſter, the Duke ſafely arriv'd at the deſired Country, on the 7th of May; where on the next Day he went to Council, and there declar'd, That it was his Majeſty's Pleaſure to conſtitute the Lord Haddo Lord-Preſident of the Seſſions, Lord-Chancellor of the Kingdom, the Earl of Queensbery Lord-Treaſurer, and the Earl of Perth Lord-Juſtice-General; and then having taken his ſolemn and laſt Leave of that Kingdom, he with his Dutcheſs, and the Lady Anne, together with a great Train of Nobility, went to Leith-Road, where he embark'd in the Happy-Return, and on the 26th arriv'd ſafe at the Buoy in the Gun-Fleet: Of which, an Expreſs coming to Windſor, both their Majeſties, attended with a numerous and ſplendid Train of Nobility, came the next Day in their Coaches to Putney, and there took Barge, and went down the River to meet the Duke and Dutcheſs, which they did at Eriff; and at the Approach of the King's Barge, the Ships in the Road ſaluted him with a general Diſcharge of their Cannon. Then their Royal Highneſſes, &c. enter'd the Barge; and after particular Expreſſions of Joy for the Duke's great Deliverance at Sea, the Royal Brothers and Conſorts came to White-Hall, where they landed; being ſaluted all the Way up the River by the Ships in the Road, and great Guns from the Tower. From whence they went to Arlington-Houſe in the Park, where they were entertain'd with a ſumptuous Banquet, and whither the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City repair'd, to congratulate his Royal Highneſs's happy Return and Eſcape: And that Night the City blaz'd with Bone-Fires, and gave all the outward Demonſtrations of Joy and Satisfaction. His Arrival and Reception in England,

During the reſt of this King's Reign, which was two Years and eight Months, his Royal Highneſs the Duke continu'd in England, and often with the King's Perſon and Preſence, over whoſe Actions and Proceedings he is thought to have had a more than uſual Influence, and to have been a great Cauſe of ſome Severities and Irregularities charg'd upon his Majeſty, who appear'd more willing to paſs his latter Days with more Eaſe and Indolence. Yet notwithſtanding, I have been aſſur'd from knowing Perſons, that in theſe latter Days the King began to take more to Buſineſs than in many Years before, to exert himſelf, and to ſhew his Anger and Reſentments againſt an increaſing Party that had ſo much diſturbed his Repoſe, and threatned his Safety; in which he found anſwerable Suc- Where he continues the reſt of the Reign.

ceſs, in ſecuring the Rights and Dignity of the Crown, as ſome, or endangering the general Liberties of the People, as others expreſs it. However he knew the Humour of the Nation ſo well, and valu'd his Quiet ſo much, that he kept himſelf under ſuch proper Limitations, as not to ſink or overthrow Himſelf; and more than once took an Occaſion to ſay to his Brother the Duke, Brother, I am reſolv'd never to Travel again; you may do ſo, if you pleaſe.

The preſent State of Affairs.

IV. 1. As the Vigilance and Severities of the Court ſeem'd actually to increaſe, ſo the Heats and Exorbitances on the other ſide ſeem'd as much to give Occaſion to them, and to require a ſtrict Hand and a ſtrict Rein to manage them. The Struggles on each Side were this Year brought to a Criſis; and the preſent Circumſtance of Affairs is thus deſcrib'd by a Great Man in his intended Advice to the King: Speaking of the Times of Rebellion, he ſays, 'The Scene is only chang'd; from 'Skirmiſhes and Battles in the Fields, and Sieges of Cities and Towns, 'it is come now to Altercations and Fightings between Sheriffs and o-'ther Officers, Grand-Juries and Petty-Juries; and they and the Courts 'of Juſtice, who by Law are the Conſervators of our Peace, are ingag'd 'in the Quarrels, and Verdicts are found, and Judgments given as the 'litigant Parties exceed one another in Power and Practice, more than 'by the Merits of the Cauſe; which ingageth almoſt the whole People 'of one ſide or other, in every Caſe. So that now Juſtice hath loſt its old 'deep Channel, and all Cauſes are carry'd by a fierce impetuous Tor-'rent, which in Time, if not diverted, may break all our Banks, and bring 'a general Inundation: For it is come to this already, that all Reverence 'to Miniſterial Officers, Juries, and Judges, is loſt; and there is now no 'Caſe of Moment almoſt, wherein there is not Muſtering of Parties, and 'inſtead of Parliaments, Appeals are made to the People, who can nei-'ther meet nor judge in a Body, and therefore end all Controverſies 'by quarrelling Parties.' In ſum, there was ſeldom more need of the Reins of Government, than at this Time. And all this while, the Preſs, which the laſt Year had been under ſome Reſtraint, ſwarm'd with innumerable Books and Pamphlets, which ſerv'd more to whet and ſour Men's Minds, than to bring them to any right Underſtanding. Among theſe, none made a greater Noiſe than The Life of Julian the Apoſtate, in which was artfully drawn a Parallel between Him and the Duke of York, the Excluſion maintain'd and vindicated, and Paſſive Obedience exploded as a Mahometan Doctrine. The Author was Mr. Samuel Johnſon, a Clergy-Man of the Earl of Bedford's Family, a Man of a ſober Life and good Morals, and of notable Wit and Parts, but of ſuch a fiery and fearleſs Spirit, as might rouſe the Vigilance of the beſt, as well as the worſt of Governments. This Book did not only occaſion many ſharp Anſwers, and the Author to be mark'd out by the Publick; but that and other Accidents caus'd Paſſive Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance to be more zealouſly preach'd up and maintain'd, both by Divines and Lawyers, and to become more faſhionable, if not more neceſſary Doctrines, than in any Time before this Year: by which Means they were ſwell'd and carry'd to that Height, as made them ſo difficult to be reconcil'd with the Liberties of the Nation, or with that great Deliverance that happen'd afterwards.

A Swarm of Pamphlets.

The Earl of Shaftsbury againſt Mr. Cradock.

As to publick Tryals, Eaſter Term yielded ſeveral Paſſages of conſiderable Note in the King's-Bench Court at Weſtminſter: The Earl of Shaftsbury, after his Eſcape, had brought his Action of Scandalum Magnatum againſt one Mr. Cradock, a conſiderable Citizen and Mercer in Pater-Noſter-Row, for ſpeaking ſome Words implying the Earl to be a Traytor; which Action being laid in London, the Defendent's Council ſhew'd and alledg'd, 'That there was no Probability of a Fair Tryal by 'a London Jury, by Reaſon that the Earl was not only free of the City, 'but alſo of the Skinner's-Company, of which Sheriff Pilkington was 'Maſter, and that therefore the Jury ought to ariſe out of ſome Neigh-'bouring County:' To which the Court inclin'd, and gave the Earl his Choice of a Jury out of any County in England; but the Earl reply'd, That he had rather lay down his Action, than admit it to be try'd in any other County, in regard moſt of them had put Abhorrences upon him: Which poſitive Reſolution confirm'd the Lord Chief-Juſtice in his Opinion of the Earl's total Reliance upon a London-Jury, and therefore order'd, 'That unleſs he would conſent to try his Cauſe by a Country Jury, it 'ſhould not be Try'd in London;' whereupon the Earl diſcontinu'd his Action. The like Rule was made ſoon after in the ſame Court, between the ſaid Earl and Mr. Graham, Principal of Clifford's-Inn, againſt whom his Lordſhip had brought an Action of Conſpiracy, as having been appointed by the King's Council to be Sollicitor in the Indictment againſt the Earl at the Old-Baily. The like Rule was alſo made in the Exchequer in Mr. Slingsby Bethel's Caſe.

Wilmore's Caſe.

Alſo Mr. Wilmore, the Foreman of Stephen Colledge's Ignoramus Jury, having convey'd away a young Boy and ſent him to Jamaica, a Writ de Homine replegiando was brought againſt him; upon which Writ, the Sheriffs Pilkington and Shute making an inſufficient Return, and poſitively refuſing to return Elongatus eſt, the only Legal Return in that Caſe, they were both brought into the King's-Bench upon an Attachment, where they receiv'd a ſharp Reprimand from the Court, and were glad to ſubmit, with a promiſe of better Behaviour for the future. Hereupon an Elongatus eſt being return'd, a Capias in Withernam iſſu'd out againſt Wilmore, to take him into Cuſtody, and detain him till he produc'd the Boy. Nor was this ſufficient, but the ſaid Wilmore was on the end of May Try'd at the King's-Bench upon an Information exhibited by the Attorney-General, for Kidnapping the ſaid Boy, being under the Age of Thirteen, and unknown to his Parents; and upon full Evidence of the plain Fact, he was found guilty by a Kentiſh Jury, who never went from the Bar; ſo much Difference was there between a Country and a City Jury. The foreſaid Wilmore had been indicted in the City for the ſaid Crime of Boy-Stealing, but the Grand-Jury there found the Bill Ignoramus. And to the ſame Effect, one Harris, being Try'd at Guild-Hall, for diſperſing a ſcandalous Libel againſt the Government, was found Not Guilty, againſt the moſt apparent Evidence, and poſitive Directions of the Court; the Jury giving no other Reaſon but their own Will and Pleaſure. Thus the London Juries began to be diſtinguiſh'd and fam'd abroad in the Nation; againſt which, and the like Actions, the Court reſolv'd upon two preventing Expedients; one was to alter the late Method of Electing Sheriffs, and bring it to the ancient Courſe, and the other was to bring a Quo Warranto againſt the City Charter itſelf; both which were effected in Time.

And others.

On the contrary Side, three Perſons, Nathaniel Thompſon, William Paine, and John Farewell, were Try'd at Guild-Hall, 'for Writing, 'Printing and Publiſhing infamous and Seditious Libels, by Way of Let-'ters to Mr. Prance and other Perſons, defaming the Publick Juſtice of 'the Nation in the Proceedings againſt the Murtherers of Sir Edmund-'bury Godfrey:' And being Convicted, after a full Hearing, they were Condemn'd to ſtand in the Pillory, where they felt the utmoſt Severity of an inrag'd Multitude; when the like Criminals of the other Party, as Aaron Smith, &c. had formerly come off untouch'd.

A Struggle about the Sheriffs of London.

2. The 24th of June, the cuſtomary Day for Electing Sheriffs of London for the enſuing Year, was the great Time of Struggle between the two Parties. Not long before, at a Dinner, call'd the Bridge-Houſe Feaſt, the Lord Mayor, according to ancient Cuſtom, had choſen Mr. Dudley North by the Ceremony of Drinking to him; and thereupon iſſu'd out his Summons to the ſeveral Companies to appear at Guild-Hall, on the ſaid 24th Day of June, for the Confirmation of Mr. North, and for the Election of another Sheriff. At the appointed Day a vaſt Concourſe of People aſſembled at Guild-Hall, reſolving to oppoſe the Lord Mayor, who was ſitting with the Sheriffs on the Huſtings: There were two Parties appear'd in Competition, Mr. North and Mr. Box on the Tory Party, and Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois on the other. The Poll was manag'd by the preſent Sheriffs, Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Shute; in which it was obſerv'd, that the Names of thoſe who Poll'd for the Confirmation of North, and the Election of Box, were refus'd to be enter'd; and on the other Side, it was ſaid, that ſeveral Men's Names were enter'd who were not actually preſent, or not duly intituled to Vote. The Lord Mayor ſeeing this violent Oppoſition, by Proclamation adjourned the Court to the 27th of June, and departed the Hall. Upon Proclaiming of God Save the King, the People hiſs'd, and cry'd God Save the Proteſtant Sheriffs! No Adjournment, &c. and preſs'd ſo hard upon the Lord Mayor, that he was thrown upon his Knees, and endanger'd by the Croud. Notwithſtanding this Adjournment, and againſt more than one expreſs Command of the Lord Mayor, the two Sheriffs continu'd to Poll on till Night. The next Day, being Sunday, admitted of no Buſineſs: But on Monday Morning, the Lord Mayor, the Court of Aldermen, and the two Sheriffs were all ſent for to appear before the King and Council; where the Matter being fully examin'd, the two Sheriffs were committed Priſoners to the Tower, by a Warrant ſign'd by Twenty four Privy-Counſellors, who made a further Order, 'That Mr. Attorney-General ſhould forthwith Exhibit an Information in the King's-Bench againſt Thomas Pilkington and Samuel Shute Eſquires, Sheriffs of London, and Henry Corniſh Eſquire, one of the Aldermen, and ſuch Others as upon Examination ſhould be found to have been Promoters and Encouragers of the late Enormous Riot, and that he do proceed againſt them according to the utmoſt Severity of the Law.

The Court takes Notice of it.

On Tueſday the 27th of June, the appointed Day of meeting, the Common-Hall was again Adjourn'd by the Lord Mayor to the 5th of July. And three Days after, the two forementioned Sheriffs were brought by Habeas Corpus by the Lieutenant of the Tower to the King's-Bench Bar, where they were admitted to be Bail'd by four Gentlemen of conſiderable Eſtates; themſelves being bound in two Thouſand, and the Bail in one Thouſand Pound Bonds a-piece. At the ſame Time they pleaded Not Guilty to an Information for a Tumultuous and Riotous Aſſembly in Holding the Common-Hall after it was Adjourn'd, and the Aſſembly diſcharg'd. Being thus at Liberty, the Sheriffs met at the Common-Hall on the 5th of July; and notwithſtanding the Lord Mayor, being now ſick, ſent Order by the Recorder to Adjourn the Hall to the 7th following, the Validity of the Adjournment was deny'd, and the Sheriffs and the Multitude proceeded to the Election, and declar'd their Choice of Papillon, and Dubois. On the 7th the Lord Mayor and his Party met again at Guild-Hall; but ſome Diſputes ariſing concerning the laſt Adjournment, four noted Lawyers were ſent for to the Court of Aldermen to argue the Validity of the Point, Sir George Jeffreys and Mr. Saunders for the Lord Mayor, and Mr. Pollexfen and Mr. Williams on on the other Side; but coming to no Concluſion, the Court was further Adjourn'd to that Day Seven-Night, the 14th of July. 1682.

But immediately before that Day, the King and Court thought fit to interpoſe, and his Majeſty was pleas'd to iſſue out an Order of Council in theſe Words: 'His Majeſty having been inform'd by the Lord Mayor and divers of the Aldermen of London, That the Diſorders and Riots 'ariſen in the City upon the Day appointed for the Election of Sheriffs, 'have been chiefly occaſion'd by the Proceedings of the Common-Hall 'in an irregular Way, contrary to what hath been anciently accuſtom'd; 'His Majeſty, by the Advice of his Council, hath thought fit, for the 'better keeping of the Peace of the City, to direct, and hereby to re-'quire the Lord Mayor to maintain and preſerve intire the Ancient Cu-'ſtoms of the City; and for the better doing thereof, to take effectual 'Order, that at the Common-Hall to be held to Morrow, all Proceed-'ings be begun a-new, and carry'd on in the uſual manner, as they ought 'to have been upon the 24th Day of June laſt.' This was read the next Day in the Common-Hall, but oppos'd by the adverſe Party with great Noiſe and Clamour; ſome crying out for the Reading of the Statute of the 16th of Charles I. Chap. X. in which was a Clauſe Declaratory, That the Privy-Council have no Authority to Examine, Determine or Diſpoſe of the Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, Goods and Chattels of any of the Subjects of this Kingdom. But this being look'd upon as no ways pertinent to the preſent Caſe, they proceeded accordingly: The Lord Mayor, in the firſt Place, declared Mr. North duely Elected by Him, and that he would Poll for the other Three, viz. Box, Papillon, and Dubois; and in order to it, caus'd Books to be prepared with Three Columns only. In the mean Time, the Sheriffs, with a Salvo Jure to their former Election of Midſummer-Day, went on a-part, and Poll'd for Four Heads. The next Day, the Lord Mayor declared Mr. Box duly Elected by the Majority of Votes in his Books, and therefore North and Box to be Sheriffs for the next Year. On the other Hand, the preſent Sheriffs declar'd Papillon and Dubois to have the Majority in their Books; and ſo the Poll, but not the Conteſt, ended.

The Court again interpoſes.

North, and Box Choſen Sheriffs.

On the 27th of July the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen aſſembled again, not without Apprehenſions of a Diſturbance from the contrary Party; therefore two Companies of Foot were order'd to be up at the Exchange that Day, and the Lieutenancy plac'd themſelves in the Gallery before the Room where the Court of Aldermen ſate, to keep off the Multitude from preſſing in upon them. Very great Numbers were gather'd into Guild-Hall, requiring an Anſwer to a Petition, which they had formerly deliver'd to that Court, demanding that Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois ſhould be call'd forth to give Bonds to ſerve for the next Year's Sheriffs. Some few of the Chief of this Party being at length call'd in, the Lord Mayor caus'd the following Paper to be read to them, as a final Anſwer: 'Gentlemen, This Court hath conſider'd of your Petition, and 'will take Care that ſuch Perſons ſhall take the Office of Sheriffs upon 'them as are duly Elected, according to Law and the antient Cuſtoms of 'this City; and in this, and in all other Things, this Court will endea-'vour to maintain the Rights and Privileges of the Chair, and of the 'whole City; and wherein ye think that we do otherwiſe, the Law muſt 'judge between Us.' With this Anſwer the Lord Mayor commanded them, in the King's Name, to depart; and he alſo laid his Commands upon Sheriff Pilkington to go out, and cauſe them to depart; which Mr. Sheriff durſt not diſobey, tho' he himſelf and all that Party were highly diſſatisfy'd with the Anſwer. And thus the Matter reſted for near two Months,

The Mayor carries his Point.

Months, when the Power of the ſame Party began ſenſibly to diminiſh; and ſo ſenſibly, that Heraclitus thought it not neceſſary to contend with them any longer, but totally laid down his Satyrical Pen, after Eighteen Months Uſe of it, in a ſort of a Triumph.

A Conteſt between the D. of Ormond, and the E. of Angleſey.

3. In the mean time, there happen'd a ſort of an inteſtine Difference at Court, which occaſion'd much Diſcourſe at this Time. The Earl of Angleſey had ſome time ſince wrote Obſervations and Reflections upon the Lord Caſtlehaven's Memoirs concerning Ireland; in which the Duke of Ormond thought himſelf and the Government ſo openly reflected upon, that he judg'd it convenient to make a publick Complaint of it, and to repreſent the Caſe in Writing to the King and Council. Whereupon his Majeſty order'd the Repreſentation to be read in Form, and a Copy of it to be deliver'd to the Earl of Angleſey, and that he ſhou'd appear to make Anſwer thereunto, at a Council to be held at White-Hall, on the 23d of June. In Obedience to this, the Earl of Angleſey, then labouring under an acute Diſtemper, appear'd, made a ſhort Speech to his Majeſty in Vindication of himſelf, diſcuſs'd the Matter with the Duke of Ormond, and then put in his Anſwer to his Repreſentation or Complaint againſt him. This done, another Council was held on the 13th of July; at which Time the Duke delivering a Paper to the Board containing ſeveral Charges againſt him, it was then order'd that a Copy of it ſhou'd be ſent to the Earl, and he to return an Anſwer to it, on the 20th at Hampton-Court. But no Council being then held, notwithſtanding the Earl had anſwer'd to the Duke's particular Charges the next Day, the Matter was deferr'd ſeven Days longer. Another Council being therefore held that Day, the Charges and Anſwers were debated, and the two Lords concern'd being withdrawn, the Council paſs'd this Reſolution, 'That the Earl of Angle-
'ſey's Obſervations, &c. was a ſcandalous Libel againſt his late Majeſty, 'againſt his preſent Majeſty, and againſt the Government.

Upon this mortifying Sentence both Lords were call'd in, and Angleſey was particularly told, 'That his Majeſty conceiv'd him blameable in a 'particular Clauſe or Paſſage in his Book, wherein the Committees of 'the Parliament of Ireland were mention'd as having been in at the In-
'triegues of the Popiſh Faction at Court.' After which, a further Hearing was appointed in Council on the 3d of Auguſt following; but Angleſey continuing extreamly Ill, and finding himſelf, as he ſaid, prejudic'd by the Lords of the Council, he wrote a Letter the Day before to the King, extenuating that, and vindicating ſome other Paſſages: This was read in Council, and in ſome degree reſented, but no further Proceedings appear'd upon it. But about the ſame Time the Earl of Caſtlehaven was more than once call'd in, and queſtion'd about his Memoirs; which he acknowledging to be his own, that Book likewiſe was by his Majeſty and Council adjudg'd To be a ſcandalous Libel againſt the Government. In Concluſion, on the 9th of Auguſt, the Privy-Seal, by his Majeſty's Command, was taken from the Earl of Angleſey by Sir Leolin Jenkins, principal Secretary of State, without any further Hearing, and given to George Earl of Hallifax, whom the King ſhortly after honour'd with the Title of a Marquiſs. The Earl of Angleſey had been in favour at Court ever ſince the Reſtoration, and had enjoy'd the Privy Seal near ten Years; and when he came to deliver it up, he deſired the Secretary to let his Majeſty know, That at the Signification of his Pleaſure, he delivered the Seal more joyfully than ever he received it.

4. But to return to the Conteſt in the City; during the long Vacation, Mr. Box, who had been choſen Sheriff to ſerve with Mr. North, thought thought it better to pay his Fine, than to take upon him the Office. Hereupon the Lord Mayor call'd a Common-Hall on the 19th of September, and propos'd the Electing of another Sheriff in his Place; which was violently oppos'd by the adverse Party, who cry'd out No North, no North! no Election! &c. But the Lord Mayor being steddy and resolute, went on in the Election, and by the Majority of his Party, Peter Rich, Esquire, a Lieutenant-Colonel in Southwark, and twice a Burgess in Parliament for that Borough, was chosen, and so declared; whereupon the Lord Mayor dissolv'd the Court, and return'd to his House in Triumph. Notwithstanding which, the two Sheriffs, Pilkington and Shute, continu'd the Assembly, and put the Question to their own Party, who only remain'd, Whether they wou'd abide by their former Choice of Papillon and Dubois, or not. In the mean Time the Lord Mayor sent a Message to them, declaring the Court was dissolv'd, and requiring them to depart; yet still they went on with the Poll, and casting up their Books, declar'd the said Papillon and Dubois Sheriffs Elect. But the next Morning the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen waited upon the King at White-Hall, and gave a full Account of the Proceedings; which caused the two Sheriffs to be immediately sent for to the Council, where they were severely reprimanded, and told They had been guilty of a high Misdemeanour; and were not dismiss'd but upon good Bail to answer to an Information for the same. So on the 28th of September, in the Morning, Mr. Dudly North and Mr. Peter Rich were according to Custom sworn Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, before the Lord Mayor in the Hustings: At which Time, to prevent a Tumult, a Company of the City Train'd-Bands were drawn up in Guild-Hall. And two Days after the said Sheriffs were presented by the Recorder in the Exchequer, and sworn there; the old Sheriffs giving up their Office at the same Time.

A new Contest in the City.

North and Rich the Sheriffs.

This great Point gain'd, a new Struggle happen'd on Michaelmas Day, which being the customary Time for the Election of a Lord Mayor, the Whig Party muster'd their utmost Strength against Sir William Prichard, who was the next in Course, and set up against him two several Aldermen, Gould and Cornish, of whom the last had been Sheriff but the Year before. At the first Appearance these two had the Majority of Votes; till at last, upon a long Scrutiny and a thorough Examination into the Capacity of the Voters, it was found that a great Number had appear'd for them, who were not legally intituled to Voices, and, as was reported, no less than Sixty in the single Company of the Merchant-Taylors: Which kind of People being struck out of the Number, it appear'd that Sir William Pritchard had 2138 Votes, Gould 2124, and Cornish 2093. Whereupon, on the 25th Day of October, Sir William was by the Court of Aldermen at Guild-Hall declar'd Lord Mayor Elect, and the usual Ceremonies then and there perform'd to him as such, with mighty Shouts and Acclamations from all the Loyal Party in the City. Two Days after, he was presented to his Majesty at White-Hall by the Court of Aldermen, Recorder and Sheriffs, where the King was pleas'd to tell them, That they had made Choice of a Person to be their Lord-Mayor, of whose Loyalty and Affection to the Establish'd Government, and Ability to discharge that great Office, he was well assured, and that he did Approve of him. And at the same time his Majesty express'd his particular Satisfaction he had in the good Administration of Sir John Moore, now going out of his Office. On the 30th of October Sir William Prichard was sworn at Westminster-Hall; at which Solemnity many of the other Party refus'd to attend, as on other Years. And they proceeded so far that they appointed Mr. Williams and Mr. Wallop, Councellors at Law, to move in the King's-Bench, 'That a Mandamus might be directed to Sir John Moore,

Sir William Prichard Lord Mayor.

1682. Car. 34 Ref. 23

'and the Aldermen of London, to ſwear either Alderman Gould, or Alderman Corniſh, into the Office of Lord Mayor of London.' But the Motion was look'd upon as ridiculous, and the Lord Chief-Juſtice refus'd to give it the leaſt Countenance; 'ſuch a Mandamus in the Disjunctive, 'being a thing never heard of, and abſurd in it ſelf.

The Whig Party declines.

This new Settlement of the Sheriffs of London, and back'd by a Lord Mayor of the ſame Principles, prov'd a terrible Blow to the diſaffected Party, and forc'd them to depend and rely upon more deſperate Attempts. Many of them found themſelves in great Danger from the violent, if not ſeditious Oppoſitions they had made to the Court; and perceiv'd that now they cou'd be no longer protected by their Fellow Subjects, under the Name of Ignoramus Juries. Particularly the Head of them, the Earl of Shaftsbury, being conſcious of the Variety of his dark Practices, and finding he was now in the Compaſs of the Juſtice he had lately fruſtrated, thenceforth gave over all his quieter and more plauſible Arts of Embroiling, whereby he proudly bragg'd, He ſhou'd, in Time, leiſurely Walk the King out of his Dominions; and ſuddenly betook himſelf to more precipitate Enterprizes; allarming his Confidents with a near Proſpect of their Common Danger, and inflaming them to Inſurrections, and baſer Actions, which produced thoſe Conſpiracies that made ſo great a Noiſe the next Year. He form'd a Council of Six, a Correſpondence with Scotland, and other Matters to effect his Ends; but ſtill his great Spirit began to ſink, and his Courage to forſake him, inſomuch that he durſt not ſtay in England; but abandoning his Aſſociates, in the Month of November, he went, or rather fled over into Holland, and ſhelter'd himſelf under the Protection of thoſe very States, which he had formerly threatned and endeavour'd utterly to exterminate.

The Earl of Shaftsbury retires into Holland.

Before his Departure, and at that Time, all things tended to the Declenſion and Downfal of that Party he had ſo rigorouſly ſupported, and almoſt created. A Quo Warranto was determin'd to iſſue out againſt the City of London, and likewiſe other Places, upon their Account. The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs were very active and vigilant in ſuppreſſing their Clubs and Conventicles; ſo that they were forc'd to betake themſelves to more ſecret Counſels and Contrivances: And in this Michaelmas-Term, all the Weekly Intelligences, which were daily publiſh'd to keep up and animate, were by publick Authority prohibited, and all the Hawkers ſilenc'd. The Reins of Government were now held with a more ſtrict and ſteddy Hand than in ſeveral Years before, as appear'd in ſeveral Inſtances: Particularly upon the Celebration of the Fifth of November, the Multitude were ſo unruly after the Bonefire, that they gather'd together in great Numbers, crying out a Monmouth, a Monmouth! and knocking down ſuch as they ſuſpected not to be of their own Gang, and committing many other Riotous Actions in Cheapſide and the Neighbouring Parts. But they were ſoon diſpers'd by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, aſſiſted by ſome of the Train'd-Bands, who took ſeveral of the Rioters, and committed them, ſome to Newgate, and others to the Counters; of which moſt of them were afterwards Fin'd and Pillory'd. This Diſturbance immediately cauſed a ſtrict Order from the King and Council, commanding, 'That no Perſon whatſoever ſhou'd preſume to 'make any Bonefire, and other Fire-Works, without ſpecial Order 'ſo to do from the Lord Mayor and other Magiſtrates.' Which Order being vigilantly obſerv'd by the Juſtices of Middleſex, and the Lord Mayor, who with the Sheriffs rid up and down the Streets of London all the Evening of Queen Elizabeth's Day the 17th of November; no riotous Actions, nor no Burning of the Pope, &c. was ſuffer'd that Night, as had been uſed for ſeveral late Years.

The Tory Party prevail.

All

All theſe Things ſerv'd to eſtabliſh the Power and Intereſt of his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, who on the 24th of November brought on a great Cauſe, which was Try'd between Him and the late Sheriff Alderman Pilkington, for theſe Words ſpoken by the Defendent; The Duke of York has fired the City, and is now come to cut our Throats. This was the greateſt and moſt noted Scandalum Magnatum that perhaps was ever Try'd; and the Words being fully prov'd by Sir William Hooker, and Sir Henry Tulſe, both Aldermen of London, the Jury found for the Plaintiff, and gave no leſs than a Hundred Thouſand Pound Damages; ſo forward were the Juries at this Time. Whereupon, on the laſt Day of the Term, Mr. Pilkington render'd himſelf, in Diſcharge of his Bail, a Priſoner in Execution; and Mr. Sheriff North was Elected into his Place of Alderman.

5. And now it is Time to come to more independent Matters, ſuch as Embaſſies, Promotions, and Deaths, and ſo finiſh the old Year 1682, which became very remarkable for the Arrival of two very extraordinary Ambaſſadors to the King, never known before in England. The Firſt from the Emperor of Fez and Morocco, his Name Hamet Ben Hamet Ben Haddu Ottor, a Man of great Abilities and Eminency in his own Country: His Buſineſs was about ſettling a Peace with Tangier, and much reſpected in England, highly complimented at Court, and at both the Univerſities, and he ſeem'd to expreſs no leſs Eſteem for the Engliſh Nation: But upon his Return, for Reaſons unknown here, he was reported to be receiv'd by his Maſter with Diſgrace. The other Ambaſſador was from as far as the King of Bantam, or Suroſoam, in the Iſland of Java in the Eaſt-Indies; his Buſineſs was about the Eaſt-India Trade there, in which the Dutch had at that Time made ſeveral Incroachments, and in Concluſion gain'd their Point.

Two Embaſſies.

Honours and Preferments this Year were very numerous; and beſides the Favours conferr'd on the Marquis of Hallifax, before mention'd, on the 20th of September, the profound Earl of Sunderland was by his Majeſty's Command readmitted a Privy-Counſellor; and not long after, upon the Lord Conway's Reſignation, he was again made one of the principal Secretaries of State. On the 25th of September, the Duke of Hamilton was elected a Knight Companion of the honourable Order of the Garter, in a Chapter held at White-Hall. Towards the End of November, his Majeſty was pleas'd to confer upon Sir John Bennet, Knight of the Bath, the Dignity of a Baron of England, under the Stile and Title of John Lord Oſſulſton. And ſhortly after his Majeſty was pleas'd to create his old Friend and Servant, James Duke of Ormond in Ireland, a Duke of England, by the ſame Name and Title; And the Lord Marquis of Worceſter, a Duke of the ſame Kingdom, by the Name and Title of Duke of Beaufort; And the Lord Norris, an Earl, by the Name and Title of Earl of Abington. And with a greater Flood of diſtinguiſhing Favours, cheap and acceptable, at the Beginning of December, his Majeſty was pleas'd to grant the Title and Dignity of an Earl of this Kingdom, to Edward Viſcount Cambden, by the Name and Stile of Earl of Gainſborough: And to Conyers Lord Darcy, by the Name and Stile of Earl of Holderneſs: And to Thomas Lord Windſor, Governor of the Town and Garriſon of Kingſton upon Hull, by the Name and Stile of Earl of Plymouth: As alſo the Title and Dignity of a Viſcount, to Horatio Lord Townſhend, by the Name and Stile of Viſcount Townſhend of Raynham: The Titles and Dignities of a Baron and a Viſcount, to Sir Thomas Thynne, Baronet, by the Name and Stile of Baron Thynne of Warmiſter, and Viſcount Weymouth: The Title and Dignity of a Baron, to Colonel George Legg, of his Majeſty's Privy-Council, and Maſter-General of the Ordnance, by the Name and Stile of Baron of Dartmouth. His Majeſty at the ſame Time created the celebrated Colonel John Churchill, Lord Churchill of Aymouth in Scotland. And his Majeſty obſerving the extraordinary Inclination with which his Grace the Duke of Grafton had apply'd himſelf to Sea Affairs, and the Succeſsful Progreſs he had made therein, to encourage this Diſpoſition in him, was graciouſly pleas'd to confer upon him the Office of Vice-Admiral of England, vacant by the Death of his Highneſs Prince Rupert; whoſe Office of Conſtable and Governor of the Caſtle and Foreſt of Windſor, and Lord-Lieutenant of the Counties of Berks and Surry, his Majeſty conferr'd upon Henry Earl of Arundel, Son and Heir to his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, Earl-Marſhal of England.

The Deaths of Prince Rupert,

Of the eminent Perſons that dy'd this Year, we ſhall begin with Three of the higheſt Rank, Prince Rupert, the Duke of Lauderdale, and the Lord Chancellor Finch. The Firſt was Couſin-German to the preſent King, and Third Son of the Queen of Bohemia, and own Brother to the Princeſs Sophia, who beſides his Foreign Titles, was Duke of Cumberland, Earl of Holderneſs, Knight of the Garter, &c. A Perſon of whom much has been ſaid in this and the laſt Volume, who after innumerable Toils, and Variety of Heroick Actions, both by Land and Sea, ſpent ſeveral Years in ſedate Studies, and the Proſecution of Chymical and Philoſophical Experiments, with which the King was very much pleas'd and delighted. He dy'd on the 29th of November, and 63d Year of his Age, generally lamented; having maintain'd ſuch good Temper, and exact Neutrality, in the preſent unhappy Diviſions, that he was honour'd and reſpected by Men of the moſt differing Intereſts. The next was John Maitland, Duke of Lauderdale, a Perſon who had been many Years in Favour with the King, and had promoted ſome of the moſt unjuſtifiable Proceedings in the Reign; therefore much fear'd and hated both in Scotland and England, and the more for having ſo great an Influence at Court. He was a Man of great Wit and Parts, and conſiderable Learning, but of an impetuous Spirit, and very looſe as to his Morals, if not Principles: for he was formerly a zealous Covenanter and Aſſerter of Liberty againſt the late King, and in the preſent Reign an Enemy to the Presbyterians, and a great Promoter of Arbitrary Power; and at the ſame Time a ſecret Underminer of Epiſcopacy in Scotland, by putting it upon a new Foundation in that Kingdom, The meer Pleaſure of the King. The Third was Heneage Earl of Nottingham, and Lord Chancellor of England, a Perſon who by his great Abilities, Ingenuity and Induſtry, had rais'd himſelf to the higheſt Poſts in the Law, to all which he was a great Ornament, and in all which he ſo much diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his Eloquence, that he was by ſome ſtil'd the Silver-Tongu'd Finch, and by others the Engliſh Cicero. Dr. Burnet ſaid of him, 'That his great Parts, and 'greater Virtues, were ſo conſpicuous, that it wou'd be a high Pre-'ſumption in him to ſay any Thing in his Commendation.' He held his high Station in the moſt boiſterous Seaſon with as even a Conduct, as ſteddy a Steerage, and as little Envy from others, as any before him; only he cou'd not eſcape being thought too Yielding to the Times, in the great Tryal of the Lord Stafford. He dy'd in the 60th Year of his Age, and was ſucceeded, as to the Great Seal, by Sir Francis North, Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common Pleas; to which Station Chief-Juſtice Pemberton was remov'd, and ſucceeded in his own by Sir Edmund Saunders.

The Duke of Lauderdale,

Lord Chancellor Finch,

Sir John Finch,

Next to the Chancellor, we ſhall mention an excellent Brother of his, Sir John Finch, who dy'd much about the ſame Time; a moſt accompliſh'd Gentleman, who had vaſtly improv'd himſelf by his Travels in his younger ger Years, where he gain'd the higheſt Eſteem imaginable. At Padua, where he was a Doctor of Phyſick, he was unanimouſly preferr'd to be Syndick of that whole Univerſity, an Honour no Engliſh Man ever had before, and had a Statue erected to the Memory of his excellent Government; and the great Duke of Tuſcany, invited by the Fame of his Learning and Virtues, made him his publick Profeſſor at Piſa; all the Italian Princes ſtriving who ſhou'd moſt honour a Perſon, ſo knowing and meritorious above his Years. After having been made the King's Reſident in Tuſcany, and his Ambaſſador in Conſtantinople, he dy'd at London, and was bury'd in the Chappel of Chriſt-Colledge in Cambridge, to which Colledge he was a munificent Benefactor. 1682. Car. 34 Reſ. 23

After theſe Men of Noble Blood, we ſhall mention three Knights, Sir Henry Blount, Sir Thomas Browne, and Sir Philip Warwick. The Firſt had his Education in Trinity-Colledge in Oxford, and after that in Gray's-Inn in London; in both which he diſplay'd his pregnant Parts and facetious Wit, that was almoſt peculiar to Himſelf: After which he travell'd into ſeveral Countries, made a Voyage to Conſtantinople, and all the Levant, in the Reign of the late King, by whom he was Knighted. But when his Cauſe declin'd, he comply'd with, but not fomented the late Troubles, in which Times he was much employ'd in Regulating the Abuſes of the Law, and other Matters. He liv'd to a great Age, and was eſteem'd by thoſe that knew him a Gentleman of a very clear Judgment, great Experience, much Contemplation, and of a notable Foreſight into Government. The Second, Sir Thomas Browne, had his Education in Pembroke Colledge in Oxford, in which Univerſity he commenc'd Doctor of Phyſick, as well as at Leyden in Holland; being after that Fellow of the Colledge of Phyſicians at London. After his Travels, he fixt at the City of Norwich, where he was highly eſteem'd, and attended by inumerable Patients for his admirable Skill in Phyſick, which he practis'd there with great Succeſs for many Years. He was likewiſe diſtinguiſh'd for his Piety and Humanity, his great Learning and Inſight into Nature; and his Religio Medici alone is a laſting Monument of his extenſive Genius, and his capacious Soul. The Laſt, Sir Philip Warwick, was likewiſe a Traveller, who having return'd to his own Country with many Accompliſhments, became Secretary to the Lord Treaſurer Juxon, and Clerk of the Signet, and accompany'd the late King in all his Troubles, with all the Marks of the moſt inviolable Loyalty. After the Reſtoration, he acted under the Lord Treaſurer Southampton with Honour and Fidelity, and with ſo much Dexterity, that, being then a Knight, he was often call'd Sir Philip the Knight-Treaſurer. He was eſteem'd a Man of a very publick Spirit, above all the Riches and Preferments in the World, of true Honeſty and Integrity; and has been ſince his Death celebrated for his poſthumous Memoirs of the Reign of King Charles the Firſt, &c. in which Book there is great Knowledge and Simplicity, and ſeveral conſiderable Paſſages, to be found in no other Writer.

Sir Henry Blount,

Sir Thomas Browne,

Sir Philip Warwick,

Laſt of all dy'd Anthony Aſhley Cooper, the famous Earl of Shaftsbury, at his Houſe in Amſterdam, after he had liv'd there but a little above ſix Weeks, being now ſixty one Years of Age; of whoſe Character and Actions, much has been already remember'd. But in general, I have been aſſur'd by an eminent Perſon who knew him well, and was thought to have joyn'd too much in his Meaſures, That he was the Author and Occaſion of the moſt unjuſtifiable Actions in this Reign; when in Power, the greateſt Tyrant, when out, the greateſt Incendiary; Arbitrary in one Caſe, and Seditious in the other: So that in the latter Part of his Time he plainly ſhew'd, That there is no Man more dangerous to the Repoſe of a Government, than a diſappointed Courtier that ſets up for the People's Patriot.

And the Earl of Shaftsbury.

triot. And it is obſerveable that his intire Friend Mr. Locke, tho' he diſplays his wonderful Abilities, and ſhews his Sagacity and Penetration almoſt to knowing of Mens Thoughts, ſays little or nothing of his Honeſty, Simplicity or Integrity. However, he has one Saying of his, worthy of a Place in Hiſtory, namely, That Wiſdom lay in the Heart and not in the Head; and that it was not the Want of Knowledge, but the Perverſeneſs of the Will, that fill'd Mens Actions with Folly, and their Lives with Diſorder.

The State of the Nation.

V. I. About the Entrance of the new Year, the State of the Nation ſeem'd to have been in a more quiet and calm Condition, than ever ſince the Breaking out of the Popiſh Plot; the one Party being forc'd to give Way to the other, more apparently than for ſeveral Years before. The Struggles and Contrivances of the declining Party were either more feeble, or more clandeſtine; the Pulpits were againſt them, as well as the Univerſities and Inns of Court, and the King and the Duke of York gain'd Ground every Day. In the midſt of this time of Eaſe and Pleaſure, on the Firſt Day of January, Humphrey Mackworth and Thomas Montgomery Eſquires, the preſent Treaſurers of the Middle-Temple, and other the Officers of that Honourable Society, waited on his Majeſty at White-Hall, to wiſh him a Happy New-Year; and in a very Loyal Speech expreſs'd their unanimous Reſolutions to adhere to their former Addreſſes; and they were very kindly and graciouſly receiv'd by his Majeſty. They then paid the like Reſpect to his Brother the Duke, and were as handſomly receiv'd by his Royal Highneſs. For which Compliments, ſhortly after his Majeſty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon Mr. Mackworth, as a diſtinguiſhing Mark of his Royal Favour to the Loyal Society of the Middle-Temple. The ſame Honour was about the ſame time conferr'd upon Dudley North Eſquire, the Senior Sheriff of London and Middleſex; in Gratitude to the City for having lately Voted in a Common-Council, 'That the Thanks of the Corporation ſhou'd be return'd 'to Sir John Moore, for his good Adminiſtration of the Office of Lord 'Mayor laſt Year.

The Duke of Monmouth's Popularity.

On the other ſide, the Duke of Monmouth and his Party were contriving and entering into ſecret and deſperate Methods: Since the Departure of the Earl of Shaftsbury, his Grace was more effectually the Head of that Party, and every Accident was turn'd as much as poſſible to the promoting his Popularity. About the Beginning of this Year there happen'd a ſmall Tranſaction beyond Sea, which made his Name more diſcours'd of than at other Times: The Horſes of England are valuable and famous on many Accounts, and among others for Racing; and it was upon this Conſideration the French King invited into France the moſt noted Racers from ſeveral Countries, by expoſing a Plate, or Prize, of a Thouſand Piſtoles, to be run for before him, in the Plain d'Echere, near St. Germain en lay. And accordingly on the 25th of February, N. S. the ſaid Race was Run before the King, Queen and Dauphine, by ſeveral famous Horſes, where the Duke of Monmouth's Horſe won the Prize; and was afterwards purchas'd by the French King. This ſeem'd to add to the Fame of the Duke, and the French King himſelf, partly upon this Account, was pleas'd at that Time to countenance the Honourable Bernard Howard Eſquire, a younger Brother of the Duke of Norfolk, ſo far as to allow him to come in his Coach within the Louvre it ſelf; a Preheminence due only to the Princes of the Blood, and ſome few others of the higheſt Quality in France.

The King at Newmarket.

Soon after, the King of England, having made the Earls of Huntington and Peterborough Privy Counſellors, thought fit to go take the uſual Diverſion verſion of Newmarket, together with the Queen, the Duke, Dutcheſs, &c. Within a few Days after his Arrival there, March 16th, his Majeſty was waited upon by a Committee from the Lord Mayor and Aldermen and Common-Council of London, with this following Petition and Addreſs: 1682/3. Car. 35 Ref. 23

London Addreſs.

'We, &c. being highly ſenſible of the great Happineſs we enjoy under 'your Majeſty's moſt Wiſe, Benign and Gracious Government, and of 'the many Priviledges and Immunities by your Majeſty and your Royal 'Progenitors granted to this Your Imperial Chamber, moſt humbly pro'ſtrating our Selves at your Royal Feet, return our unfeigned Thanks 'and Acknowledgment, humbly begging your Sacred Majeſty to believe, 'That as none of our Fellow Subjects have receiv'd larger Bounties from 'the Crown, ſo none ſhall be more ready to ſacrifice their Lives and For'tunes in the Service thereof, in the Defence of your Sacred Perſon, your 'Lawful Heirs and Succeſſors, and the Government as now by Law Eſta'bliſh'd in Church and State, than We your obedient and dutiful Subjects of 'the Loyal City of London. And as we have lately receiv'd an Expreſſion 'of your Royal Grace and Favour to us, in your Majeſty's being pleas'd 'to order a Stop to be put (until a further Hearing) to a Patent for the 'Grant of a Fair and Weekly Markets for Live Cattel in Conduit-Mead, 'which wou'd be greatly prejudicial to the Inhabitants in and about Smith'field, your Hoſpital of St. Bartholomew, and your City of London in 'general; ſo we humbly conceive our ſelves oblig'd in Duty to return 'our hearty Thanks to your Sacred Majeſty, imploring the Continuance 'of your Royal Grace and Favour. And your Petitioners, as in Duty 'bound, ſhall for ever Pray, &c.

A great Fire at Newmarket,

But ſix Days after, about Eight at Night, there ſuddenly broke out a terrible Fire in Newmarket, which conſum'd about Half of the Town. The King Himſelf by the approaching of the Fury of the Flames was immediately driven out of his own Palace, and remov'd himſelf into another Quarter of the Town, remote from the Fire, and as yet free from any Annoyance of Smoke and Aſhes. There his Majeſty finding he might be tolerably well accommodated, reſolv'd to ſtay, and continue his Recreations as before, till the Day firſt appointed for his Journey back to London. But he had no ſooner declar'd that Reſolution, when the Wind, as conducted by an inviſible Power, ſuddenly chang'd about, and blew the Smoke and Cinders directly on his new Lodgings, and in a Moment made them as untenable as the other. Upon which, the King being put to a new Shift, and not finding the like Conveniency elſewhere, immediately declared he wou'd ſpeedily return to White-Hall, which he did very ſhortly after, together with his Royal Brother, and ſome others. This happening ſeveral Days before the appointed Time, the Misfortune at Newmarket was afterwards accounted and call'd a Providential Fire; as defeating and preventing a black Conſpiracy form'd againſt him and his Brother in their Return to London; which will be afterwards more particularly remember'd.

Which cauſes the King to remove.

2. Shortly after the King's Return to White-Hall, and the whole Court's Removal to Windſor, the declining Party in London ventur'd upon an extraordinary Attempt and Exploit, ſuch as had never been known in that City: One Broom, Clerk of the Skinner's Company, and Coroner of London, having receiv'd a Latitat out of the King's-Bench in an Action upon the Caſe, at the Suit of the late Candidates, Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, againſt the Lord Mayor, Sheriff North, and ſeveral Loyal Aldermen; the ſaid Broom acquainting them with the Writ, they all ſubmitted to his Arreſt, and went with him as Priſoners to Skinners-Hall, and there remain'd under his Cuſtody till one a Clock at Night. In the mean mean time eight Companies of the Militia were immediately rais'd by the Lieutenancy, and poſted all that Night in ſeveral Parts of the City, to prevent any Tumults which might ariſe from ſo ſtrange a thing as the Arreſt and Detainer of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London. But it ſo happen'd, that one Fletcher, a common Serjeant of the Poultry-Counter, having an Action of Debt, upon a Bond of four hundred Pounds, againſt the ſaid Broom, which Action had been enter'd the Week paſt, and Broom acquainted with it, who promis'd to give Bail; but the Serjeant finding that Promiſe not perform'd, and perceiving him ſo officiouſly pert againſt the chief Magiſtrates of the City, without any further Delay, he arreſted his Body in his own Precincts, Skinners-Hall, and immediately carry'd him to the Counter. Broom being thus remov'd, and none left in Charge of the Lord Mayor and his Fellow Priſoners, they demanded if there were any about the Houſe that had Orders to detain them any longer in that Place, which being anſwer'd in the Negative, they all departed peaceably to their Habitations.

However, this help'd to haſten the Fate of the City; and the whole Contrivance and Management was thought to be ſuch an open Inſult upon the Friends of the King and Court, that the Governors and Repreſentatives were forc'd to diſclaim the Action by the following Order, at a Common-Council held at Guild-Hall not long after: 'That whereas Sir William Prichard, Knight, Lord Mayor of this City, was in a rude Manner lately Arreſted at the Suit, or in the Name of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois; And whereas it hath been alledg'd by the ſaid Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, That the Action upon which the ſaid Arreſt was, was proſecuted at the Inſtance of the Citizens of London: The Members of this Court, to deliver themſelves and ſaid Citizens from this undue Imputation, do declare, That they were not Privy or Conſenting to the ſaid Action, or Arreſt, and do Diſown and Diſapprove the ſame.' In conſequence of which, ſhortly after, Broom the Coroner was, by the Common-Council, put out of that Office, and made uncapable of Enjoying any Place of Preferment in the City.

Diſclaim'd by the Common-Council.

The Tryal of the great Riot in the City.

In the midſt of this unſeaſonable Heat, on the 8th of May, and at Guild-Hall, came on the long-expected Tryal of the great Riot committed at the ſame Place upon Midſummer-Day laſt, at the Election of Sheriffs for London and Middleſex. And this was try'd before the Lord Chief-Juſtice Saunders, upon an Information exhibited in the Crown Office by the Attorney-General, as has been formerly hinted. The Information was particularly againſt fourteen Perſons, viz. the then Sheriffs, Pilkington and Shute, the Lord Gray of Wark, Sir Thomas Player, Corniſh, Bethel, Jenks, Goodenough, Deagle, Jekyl, Freeman, Wickham, Keys, and Swinock; and the Subſtance of it was, 'That there had been a Riotous and unlawful Aſſembly, of a thouſand Perſons unknown, who endeavour'd to raiſe a Tumult by Clamours, Outcries, and Diſorders, in Contempt of the Laws of the Kingdom, aſſaulted the Lord Mayor, forc'd him upon his Knees, threw off his Hat, beat down the Sword, and continu'd the Hall after a Legal Adjournment; denying the Authority of the Lord Mayor, &c. in which Riotous Aſſembly the ſeveral Defendents were concern'd and involv'd.' The Counſel for them, Mr. Thomſon, Mr. Williams, Sir Francis Winnington and Mr. Wallop, made two Challenges of the Array; but the Challenges were over-rul'd: The Matter being open'd, the Points in Queſtion were, Firſt the Lord Mayor's Right of Calling, Adjourning and Diſſolving the Common-Hall; and ſecondly to prove the Riot upon the Defendents; both which were ſo fully made out, that Judgment was given againſt them; and they were all ſeverally fin'd, as follows; Pilkington, five Hundred Pounds; Shute, a Thouſand thouſand Marks; Corniſh, the ſame Sum; Lord Gray, the ſame Sum; Sir Thomas Player, five Hundred Marks; Bethel, a Thouſand Marks; Jenks, three Hundred Marks; Deagle, four Hundred Marks; Freeman, three Hundred Marks; Goodenough, five Hundred Marks; Keys, a Hundred Marks; Wickham, a Hundred Marks; Swinock, five Hundred Marks, and Jekyl, two Hundred Marks; being thus diſtinguiſh'd, perhaps, not ſo much for their preſent Guilt, as their former Behaviour and Activity upon ſuch like Occaſions. And ſoon after this Tryal, Sir Patience Ward, an Alderman of the ſame Strain, was try'd at the King's-Bench Bar, upon an Information of Perjury, for giving falſe Evidence in the late Cauſe try'd between the Duke and Pilkington. The Perjury was prov'd upon him by the Oaths of ſeveral Aldermen, and other Perſons of Credit, among whom were two of the Jury that had try'd the ſame Cauſe. Whereupon Sir Patience was convicted, and found guilty by the Jury; but the Judgment of the Court was reſpited till a more convenient Seaſon. 1683. Car. 35 Reſ. 24

Sir P. Ward caſt.

And now the City appear'd more and more loyal and obſequious to the King and the Duke; and on the 6th of June was held a Common-Council in Guild-Hall, where all the Treaſonable and Irregular Acts of that Court, in the Times of Rebellion, were formally Repeal'd, and a Bill paſt in the ſaid Common-Council For Declaring and Aſſerting the Ancient Rights of the Chair; by which Bill the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen were reſtored to their Negative Voice, which had been taken away by an Act in the late troubleſome Times, and before then had never been queſtion'd. It was alſo at this Common-Council Declar'd and Enacted, That the Lord Mayor has ſufficient and lawful Power of chuſing one Sheriff: And accordingly, the Lord Mayor, the next Day, at that call'd the Bridge-Houſe Feaſt, did Declare his Choice, by the old Ceremony of Drinking to Mr. Alderman Daniel, as one of the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, for the enſuing Year. About the ſame Time was erected in one of the Niches of the Old Exchange, a noble Statue of King Charles the Firſt, with the following Inſcription cut in Marble: ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ: Sereniſſimi ac Religioſiſſimi Principis CAROLI PRIMI, Angliæ, Scotiæ, Franciæ, et Hiberniæ Regis, Fidei Defenſoris, (Bis Martyris, in Corpore, et in Effigie) Impiis Rebellium Manibus ex hoc Loco deturbata et confracta, A. D. MDCXLVIII. Reſtituta, et hic demum collocata A. D. MDCLXXXIII. And not long after, the Scaffolds in Weſtminſter-Hall, after they had ſtood there and incommoded the Hall for above three Years, were at laſt by publick Order taken down and remov'd.

The Zeal of the City.

A Statue erected to the late King.

3. All the loyal and forward Proceedings of the City of London cou'd not prevent and keep off the great Buſineſs of the Quo Warranto, which for ſeveral Months hung like a dark Cloud over their Heads, and threatned the very Being of their noble Corporation, and the total Forfeiture of their Charter. And what made way towards the Succeſs of the Government, was the delivering up of the Charter of Norwich, and ſome other Corporations, while this grand Cauſe was depending. Yet ſtill, in the midſt of the various Diſcourſes about it, it was very much hop'd that Judgment wou'd be given for the City of London, as ſome of the Judges and the King's Council had given out it wou'd, tho' the contrary ſeem'd reſolv'd on. The Quo Warranto, which had been long threatned, was actually brought againſt the City in Hilary Term, in the Beginning of this Year, to ſhew by what Warrant they pretended to be a Corporation, and to have the Priviledges mention'd in the Writ; to which the City pleaded at the Kings-Bench Bar, and ſet forth their Right, and the King reply'd,

The Quo Warranto againſt London Charter.

1683. Car. 35 Ref. 24

ply'd, and ſet forth ſeveral Matters done by them, contrary to the Duty of a Corporation. The Crimes on which this Writ was grounded were Two: 'Firſt, for Exacting Tolls in their Markets illegally, and particularly raiſing Money for rebuilding Cheapſide Conduit. Secondly, for framing 'and printing a ſcandalous Petition, wherein they charg'd the King with 'obſtructing the Juſtice of the Nation, by proroguing the laſt Weſtminſter Parliament'. Whether theſe were ſufficient Cauſes of ſeizing their Liberties and Franchiſes, was argu'd pro and con by the Solicitor General, and Sir George Treby the Recorder, in Hilary-Term, and by the Attorney General, and Mr. Pollexfen, in Eaſter-Term, very largely, learnedly and elaborately. It was alledg'd in general 'That the City 'Charter and Priviledges were ſo well confirm'd by Kings, and particular 'Acts of Parliament, that they cou'd not, or ought not to be forfeited, 'tho' poſſibly regulated; and that it was a part of every Free-Man's 'Oath to maintain them to the utmoſt, and conſequently they cou'd not 'give them up.' To which it was anſwer'd, 'That all Charters came 'originally from the Crown; that an unforfeitable Charter was a Nullity in itſelf; it was ſetting up Imperium in Imperio, a Government 'Independent of the Power that really created it; that the Acts of Parliament were as much a Declaration and a Confirmation of the King's 'Original Right, as of their Priviledges, &c. and therefore the Free-'Mens Oaths were under the ſame Conditions and Limitations.

Arguments on both Sides.

Theſe, and many other Particulars being argued at large, the Matter hung till the 12th of June, the firſt Tueſday in Trinity-Term, when, after a great Concourſe and mighty Expectations, Judgment was given by Mr. Juſtice Jones, in the Abſence of the Lord Chief-Juſtice Saunders, who was then ſick, and unfit to appear. His Lordſhip, having conciſely ſumm'd up all the paſt Proceedings, in a very remarkable Speech, gave Judgment, and declared it to be the unanimous Opinion of that Court, That the Liberties and Franchiſes of the City of London be ſeiz'd into the King's Hands. After which he particularly declar'd, by the King's expreſs Command, That Judgment ſhou'd not be enter'd, till his Majeſty's Pleaſure be further known. This Sentence made a great Noiſe, and the latter Part was look'd upon as a Deſign to make the Citizens reſign their own Liberties, inſtead of being condemn'd to a Deprivation of them. However great Complaints were made, and this Judgment was obſerv'd by Mr. Hawles and others, to be ſtrange and unwarrantable, conſidering the Importance of it; it being deliver'd by two Judges only, and no Reaſon given of that Judgment; whereof Sir Francis Wythens was one, who, he thinks, hear'd but one Argument in the Caſe. However, Jones and He, to confirm this Judgment with more Authority than their own, they both declar'd upon the Bench, that their Brother Raymond was of the ſame Opinion with them, and ſo was the Lord Chief-Juſtice Saunders; tho' he was at that Time paſt his Senſes, and had only Underſtanding enough to expoſtulate with them, for troubling him, when he had loſt his Memory. The ſame Author, exclaiming againſt this and other Irregular and Unjuſt Judgments in the latter End of this Reign, tells us, That being once with a certain Nobleman, of a conſiderable Character in the Council, who complaining, 'That the King 'was miſ-led by the Advice of his Lawyers'; he ask'd him, 'Whether 'the King put his Judges and Council upon doing what was done, without conſidering whether it was Legal, as the common Vogue was he 'did; or that his Lawyers firſt advis'd what to be done, was Law:' The Nobleman anſwer'd him, on his Honour, That the King's Counſel at Law, firſt advis'd the King might do by Law what he wou'd have done, before he commanded them to do it.

Reflections upon it.

It

It can hardly be deny'd, that however ſmall the Pretentions were for this Proſecution, the Provocations were not inconſiderable in the Eye of any Government; and the City ſeem'd ſo ſenſible of this, that two Days after Judgment given, a Common-Council was call'd, to conſult how to proceed in this Exigency. Here they reſolv'd to draw up a ſubmiſſive andyielding Petition, which was order'd ſoon after to be preſented to the King at Windſor: It was entituled, The humble Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in Common-Council Aſſembled; in which the Petitioners 'Acknowledg'd their hearty 'and unfeigned Sorrow for the Miſgovernment of the City of late 'Years, whereby the Citizens had fallen under his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, 'which had occaſion'd a Quo Warranto, and Judgment to be pronounc'd 'againſt them; that they were deeply and thankfully ſenſible of his Ma-'jeſty's great Favour in not requiring Judgment to be immediately en-'ter'd thereon: And conſidering this their diſtreſſed Condition, they 'humbly caſt themſelves at his Royal Feet, imploring his Princely Com-'paſſion and Grace, to be extended to this his Ancient City, moſt hum-'bly begging his Majeſty's Pardon for all their Offences, with moſt ſo-'lemn Promiſes and Aſſurances of conſtant Loyalty and Obedience to 'his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, and of a regular Adminiſtration 'of his Government in that City for the future; and humbly begg'd 'his Majeſty's Commands and Directions.' Upon the Reading this Petition in the Common Council, and putting the Queſtion whether they approv'd of it, it is remarkable that there were but two Perſons in the Aſſembly that held up their Hands by Way of Diſſent; ſo much intimidated were the Generality of the Body at this Time.

The City's Submiſſion.

This Petition was carry'd to Windſor on Monday the 18th of June, and preſented to the King by the Lord Mayor, and ſeveral loyal Aldermen and Citizens of London. After the Reading of it, they were all order'd to withdraw; and being call'd in again, the Lord-Keeper North, by the King's Command, in a Speech declar'd to them, 'That for the 'ſakes of ſo many of the preſent Magiſtrates, and other eminent Citizens 'in London, who were of undoubted Loyalty and Affection to his Ma-'jeſty's Service, his Majeſty wou'd ſtill ſhew the City all the Favour they 'cou'd reaſonably deſire; And tho' he had obtain'd Judgment in a Quo 'Warranto, it was not his Intention to prejudice them in their real 'Properties or Cuſtoms. That the City had not been well adviſ'd, to 'defer their Application to his Majeſty thus long, even till the Court had 'pronounc'd Judgment; It might have been done with much better 'Grace, if it had been more early. However his Majeſty wou'd not 'reject their Suit, if they agreed upon the Particulars the King did now 'require of them: For, ſays he, his Majeſty requires your Submiſſion 'to theſe following Regulations: 1. That no Lord Mayor, Sheriff, Re-'corder, Common-Serjeant, Town-Clerk, or Coroner of the City of London, or Steward of the Borough of Southwark, ſhall be capable of, or 'admitted to the Exerciſe of their reſpective Offices, before his Majeſty 'ſhall have approv'd them under his Sign-Manual. 2. That if his Ma-'jeſty ſhall diſapprove the Choice of any Perſon to be Lord Mayor, and 'ſignify the ſame under his Sign-Manual to the Lord Mayor, or, in De-'fault of a Lord Mayor, to the Recorder, or Senior Alderman; the Ci-'tizens ſhall within one Week proceed to a new Choice: And if his Ma-'jeſty ſhall in like Manner Diſapprove the ſecond Choice, his Majeſty may, 'if he pleaſe, Nominate a Perſon to be Lord Mayor for the enſuing Year. '3. If his Majeſty ſhall, in like Manner, Diſapprove the Perſons choſen 'to be Sheriffs, or either of them; his Majeſty may appoint Perſons to be 'Sheriffs for the enſuing Year, by his Commiſſion, if he ſo pleaſe. 4. The Preſented to the King.

The City reſtored upon certain Terms.

1681. Car. 33 Ref. 22

'Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen may alſo, with the Leave of his 'Majeſty, diſplace any Alderman, Recorder, &c. ut ſupra. 5. Upon the Elec- 'tion of an Alderman, if the Court of Aldermen ſhall judge, and declare 'the Perſon Preſented to be Unfit, the Ward ſhall chuſe again; and up- 'on a Diſapproval of a ſecond Choice, the Court may appoint another in 'his Room. 6. The Juſtices of the Peace are to be by the King's Com- 'miſſion; and the Setling of theſe Matters to be left to his Majeſty's At- 'torney, and Solicitor General, and Council learned in the Law.' Then the Lord Keeper told them, 'That theſe Regulations being made, his Ma-' jeſty wou'd not only Pardon this Proſecution, but Confirm their Charter ' in ſuch a Manner, as may be conſiſtent with them.' Concluding thus, ' My Lord Mayor, the Term draws towards an End, and Midſummer- ' Day is at Hand, when ſome of the Officers us'd to be choſen, whereof ' his Majeſty will reſerve the Approbation: Therefore it is his Majeſty's ' Pleaſure, that you return to the City, and conſult the Common-Council, ' that he may ſpeedily know Your Reſolutions hereupon, and accordingly give his Directions. That you may ſee the King is in Earneſt, and ' the Matter is not capable of Delay, I am commanded to let you know, ' He hath given Order to his Attorney General to enter upon Judgment ' on Saturday next, unleſs you prevent it by your Compliance in all theſe ' Particulars.

Which are conſented to.

According to this Order, two Days after, a Court of Common-Council was again held in Guild-Hall; where the Queſtion being put, Whether they ſhou'd aſſent and ſubmit to his Majeſty's Order of Regulations, as above expreſs'd; the Court was divided, but it was carry'd in the Affirmative by a Majority of Eighteen Voices; the Yeas being 104, and the Noes 86. The next Day the Sheriffs waited on his Majeſty at Windſor, to ſatisfy him they had ſubmitted to his Regulations, and had put off the Election of Sheriffs from the 24th of June, to the 6th of July. And thus ended the whole Proceedings, which have been often accounted hard and unjuſt on one ſide, and baſe and mean on the other; yet it is to be remember'd, that the Judgment againſt the City, their yielding Petition, and their final Submiſſion, all happen'd at ſuch an extraordinary Juncture of Time, when the People were ſo amus'd and amaz'd with new and ſtrange Diſcoveries againſt the Government, that hardly any Notice was taken of theſe uncommon Proceedings. Upon which Diſcoveries and Conſpiracies we ſhall enter in the following Chapter.

CHAP. V.

From the Firſt Diſcovery of the Rye-Houſe-Plot, to the Day of the Death of King Charles the Second.

Containing the Space of One Year, 7 Months, and above 3 Weeks.

The RYE-HOUSE Plot, &c.

I. 1. AT a Time when the Three Kingdoms injoy'd a ſetled Peace, and profound Security, while the greateſt Part of the Neighbouring World was involv'd in Wars and Calamities, on the 12th Day of June, the King and Council, and ſoon after the City and Country, were ſuddenly awaken'd and ſurpriz'd with the Diſcovery Sprat. King's Declaration. Welwood. Wright. Tryals. Gazettes.

Diſcovery of an extraordinary Conſpiracy againſt the King and Government; which in effect gave a fatal Blow, and brought Ruin to an already declining Party. In Plots and Conſpiracies, there are uſually ſo many Secrets, as well as Shams, that it is the hardeſt Buſineſs for an Hiſtorian to lay them open; but we ſhall take our Account from what has been given by the Government, from the ſworn Informations of particular Perſons, and the Tryals and Confeſſions of ſome of the Sufferers: In order to the clearing of which, we ſhall be oblig'd to go a little back, as far as the Month of October laſt. This Conſpiracy was moſt commonly call'd The Rye-Houſe-Plot; that Houſe, and the Deſign there being the principal Scene, and the moſt diſtinguiſhing Branch of it. But according to the largeſt Extent, it has been often call'd the Fanatick, the Whiggiſh, or Preſbyterian-Plot. Some have call'd it a Piece of State-Policy, and no better than an Impoſture: But others, who could not get over the Difficulties ariſing from plain Confeſſions, as well as other Proofs, have ſtood up for the Reaſonableneſs, if not Juſtice of the Cauſe, and have call'd it a Combination or Aſſociation of Patriots, for the Defence of the invaded Liberties and Religion of the Nation. 1683. Car. 35 Ref. 24

The Riſe of it.

But by whatever Name it was diſtinguiſh'd, it ſeem'd plainly to have had its firſt Riſe from the Arts and Management of the Earl of Shaftſbury, who brought it more eſpecially to operate in the Months of October and November, when his Party, as well as himſelf, was driven out of all Holds, and into a Sort of a Deſparation, by the Eſtabliſhment of the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and the Danger of the Loſs of the City Charter, as has been already remember'd. The Deſign itſelf was two-fold, a general Way by an Inſurrection, and ſeizing the King's Guards, and a more compendious Way of Aſſaſſinating the King and Duke: The former was of longer Standing, and conſulted and promoted by the ſuperior Agents; but the other was more lately reſolv'd on, tho' long in Embryo, and undertaken by the inferior Sort. The chief Perſons concern'd in one Part or other, tho' not equally Guilty, beſides the Earl of Shaftſbury, the Head of them, were, Firſt the Duke of Monmouth, whom his Party had long alienated from his Duty and Gratitude to his Royal Father, poyſon'd his Mind with forbidden Hopes, and made a prime Inſtrument to effect all their Deſigns. Next, the Lord Gray of Wark, who for ſome Years had been ingag'd in the warmeſt Deſigns of the Party; eſpecially after he found his private Crimes were not like to paſs in a quiet State with Secrecy or Impunity. Then, the Earl of Eſſex, whoſe high Spirit, and ſecret Ambition had betray'd him into the moſt dark Deſigns, contrary to the expreſs Advice and Injunction of his dying Father. Next, the Lord Howard of Eſcrick, who had always been a buiſy Promoter of Republican Projects for Alterations in Church and State; and for a Time the ſecond Favourite of the Diſaffected, while he was impriſon'd with the Earl of Shaftsbury. And the Lord Ruſſel, a Perſon of eminent Rectitude, Piety, and Sobriety, but inſenſibly drawn into dangerous Company, and miſ-led by a Notion, to this Effect, 'That 'Reſiſtance was lawful upon the ſmaller, as well as the greater Invaſions 'of the Conſtitution.' Colonel Algernoon Sidney, a Perſon who had been deeply ingag'd in the late Times of Confuſion, and had merited ſo well of the Good old Cauſe, that he was nominated to be one of the King's Judges, tho' he did not actually ſit amongſt them.

The Chief Perſons concern'd in it.

Beſides theſe of noble Blood, we are to mention ſome others, as Mr. John Hambden the Younger, an unfortunate Gentleman, who retain'd the Hereditary Temper of a Family, which ſhew'd that the violent Defence of the beſt Things are often attended with the moſt pernicious Conſequences. Sir Thomas Armſtrong, a debauch'd Bully and Bravo, who had forfeited his Life, and diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by Murdering Mr. Scroop, a conſiderable Gentleman, in the Play-Houſe. Lieutenant Colonel Walcot, an old Officer in Cromwell's Army, who was introduc'd by the Lord Howard, under the Name of a ſtout and able Soldier, into the intimate Acquaintance of the Earl of Shaftsbury, who made him one of his Legatees in his Will, and from whom he never after parted till his Death. Colonel John Romſey, who had gotten Credit in Portugal, by his Courage and Skill in Military Affairs; and being a Soldier of Fortune, and fit for any deſperate Attempt, he was likewiſe recommended to the Earl of Shaftsbury, to whom he became an entire Creature and Dependent. Thomas Shepard, Merchant of London, a violent Nonconformiſt, but of a plentiful Eſtate, and of as eminent Repute as any of his Rank on the Exchange. The two Goodenough's, Richard and Francis, both zealous Friends to the Party, who had been for ſome Years, and by Turns, Under-Sheriffs of London; ſo that the whole Art and Myſtery of Securing Ignoramus Juries paſs'd through their Hands. Major Holms, a Fifth-Monarchy-Man, an old Officer under Cromwell, and a Truſtee for his Family, acquainted with the Earl of Argyle in Scotland, and made privy to all his Secret Deſigns. Richard Rumbald Malſter at the Rye-Houſe, another old Army-Officer, a deſperate Perſon, who had often before laid Deſigns for Murdering the King. William Rumbald, his Brother, a Perſon much of the ſame Temper. Aaron Smith, a furious Zealot, who had ſignaliz'd himſelf when he was Solicitor in the Tryal of Stephen Colledge, William Hone, a Joyner, a melancholy Enthuſiaſt, of the ſame Trade and Spirit with Colledge. John Rouſe, an active Agent in all the tumultuous Proceedings of the City Elections. Zachary Bourn, a Brewer, and Joſiah Keeling a Salter, both Independents; Thomas Lea, a Dyer, and Andrew Barber, both Anabaptiſts. Laſtly, John Ayloff, Joſeph Tyley, Edward Norton, Edward Wade, Richard Nelthorp, and Robert Weſt, all of them Republican Lawyers, Men of notable Heads, and voluble Tongues, who had undertaken to reform the chief Errors in Church and State.

1683. Car. 35 Ref. 24

Others in Scotland.

Beſides theſe in England, by the Earl of Shaftsbury's Means, a Correſpondence was form'd and kept up with Scotland, where ſeveral Inſtruments were employ'd and ingag'd in the ſame general Deſign. Of all which, the Head and Chief was the Earl of Argyle, who after his Condemnation and Flight, formerly mention'd, became a reſtleſs and indefatigable Promoter of all Projects againſt the preſent Eſtabliſh'd Government. Among the reſt that joyn'd with him, were Sir Hugh and Sir John Campbell, near Relations to the ſaid Earl; Sir John Cockran, Mr. Baillie and Mr. Monroe, who were employ'd in London, to joyn and act with the Engliſh Managers of the Deſign. Beſides theſe, there were the Lord Melvil, Mr. James Steuart, Sir Patrick Hume, Hugh Scot, William Carſtares, and ſome others. But of all the Conſpirators, whether Engliſh or Scotch, the deepeſt Man, next to the Earls of Shaftsbury and Argyle, was Robert Ferguſon, a Scotch Man living in England: He had been divers Years a fierce Independent Preacher in the City of London, and had long exercis'd his virulent Pen againſt the Government, in which he had a peculiar Talent; and by means of a fluent Tongue, a ſubtil Head, and invincible Spirit, he animated the whole, and moreover excited and actuated the blackeſt Part of the Contrivance.

The Earl of Shaftsbury's Concern in it.

All theſe had for a conſiderable Time proceeded with ſlow Steps, and Leaſurely, as their chief Mover the Earl of Shaftsbury expreſs'd it, till Michaelmas and October put them beyond common Hopes, and precipitated them into extraordinary Methods. The Earl himſelf was ſo allarmed, that he immediately abſconded, and us'd all poſſible Means to terrify his his Aſſociates into ſpeedy Action, by the Proſpect of the preſent imminent Dangers. Accordingly, he ſent for the Lord Howard in his Retirement, and told him, That finding the due Elections of the City fruſtrated, and the falſe Sheriffs eſtabliſh'd, he could no longer think any Honeſt Man ſafe; and had therefore made his Retreat, having done all Things neceſſary for a ſudden Inſurrection: That many Thouſands were ready in the City to Maſter the Gates, and Attack White-Hall: That they within were to be aſſiſted from the Adjacent Counties with a Thouſand or twelve Hundred Horſe, under good Officers. Only he complain'd of the Backwardneſs of the Duke of Monmouth, and other great Men, who had promis'd, 'by Riſing in other remote Counties at the ſame Time, to give 'Diverſion to the Standing Forces.' This being communicated by his Lordſhip to the Duke, he alſo complain'd of the Earl of Shaftsbury's Acting of late on a ſeparate Bottom, and that his preſent Fears had blinded his uſual Prudence; and therefore he deſired a ſpeedy Meeting with him, to re-eſtabliſh a better Underſtanding for the future. This being reported to the Earl, he reply'd, His People were impatient of longer Delays, having advanc'd ſo far, that there was no Retreat; and thereupon he proceeded to declare his vehement Suſpicion of the Duke of Monmouth; That his Dilatorineſs proceeded from ſome private Correſpondence between Him and the King; That it was to be fear'd his Grace acted with a different Proſpect from theirs, only minding his own Advancement: Whereas his own Reſolutions were, that ſince it was plain their Liberties were not to be ſecured, but under a COMMON-WEALTH, he alone with his Intereſt would attempt the Deliverance of his Country: If the reſt of the Lords would concur with him, they might ſhare in the Glory; elſe he hop'd he ſhould be able to effect the Work without them, by the Help of an honeſt briſk Party in the City. Upon this Anſwer, the Duke ſuſpecting that before all Perſons could be in a Readineſs, the Earl's unſeaſonable Anxiety for his own Safety might put him on raſh and dangerous Meaſures, therefore he was the more deſirous to have a Meeting with him. In a few Days, they and the Confederate Lords met; and their Differences and Suſpicions were in ſome meaſure piec'd up, and they began again to act joyntly towards a ſpeedy Inſurrection. 1683. Car. 35 Ref. 24

To this purpoſe ſeveral Days were propos'd, One about the latter End of October, but it was deferr'd till the Concurrence of the ſeveral Counties could be ſignify'd up: Then that of Queen Elizabeth, November 17th was nam'd, but rejected, becauſe the King's Guards were commonly in Arms to ſuppreſs the wonted Tumults. At laſt the 19th of November was fix'd on; which happening to be of a Sunday, while ſome excepted againſt it for that Reaſon, Ferguſon boldly reply'd, That the Sanctity of the Day was ſuitable to the Sanctity of the Work. The Day being thus determin'd, they immediately prepar'd their ſeveral Parts: eſpecially the great Managers held Aſſemblies to receive Accounts, how the Counties were diſpos'd, and to conſult upon ſurprizing the Guards; for which End the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, undertook to view their Poſture, and reported back, That the ſeizing them was a Thing very feaſible. In the mean Time the Earl of Shaftsbury was very uneaſy, and weary of lodging in Holes, where every Sound and Breath of Air became frightful to him, wherefore with repeated and importunate Meſſages he urg'd the other Lords to keep to the Day; expoſtulating with them upon their former Slowneſs, whereby they had loſt ſo many plain Opportunities. At length one Day, when their great Council about London was aſſembled at Mr. Shepard's Houſe in Ab-Church-Lane, the Earl ſent Colonel Romſey to quicken their Debates, and once for all learn the final Reſult of their Determinations.

But

1683. Car. 35 Reſ. 24

The Failures at laſt.

But they having juſt before receiv'd ſeveral Advices out of the Weſt, that their Friends there, eſpecially in Taunton and Devonſhire, could not poſſibly be ready on ſo ſhort a Warning, immediately ſent him back ſuch Word; concluding it could not be avoided, but He and They muſt be content to reſpite the Time to a longer Day. This poſitive Anſwer broke all his Meaſures, and made him inſtantly reſolved to leave England. Wherefore removing his Lodging into Wapping, where he and his Cauſe had many Friends; the very Night that Place was burnt, being the Night of the ſame 19th of November, when he expected to ſet the Nation on a Flame, he privately ſculk'd down the River, and took Shipping for Holland; leaving his Friends with this Ominous Prognoſtick, That their Deſign cou'd not long be conceal'd, there being ſo many acquainted with it. Which indeed prov'd true, tho' he liv'd not to ſee it fulfill'd; and of the Thirty Engliſh Agents, formerly mention'd, Eight, viz. the Lord Howard, Romſey, Shepard, Weſt, Keeling, Brown, Lea and Barber, all afterwards turn'd Diſcoverers and Informers.

The Steps of the chief Perſons concern'd.

2. After the Earl of Shaftsbury's Departure and Death, which happen'd in a ſhort Time, the Great Machine mov'd upon other Hinges; for while he continu'd in England, all the Deliberations of the Actors ſeem'd to receive Life and Vertue from his Direction and Approbation. But now, tho' much diſpirited, they reſolv'd to puſh forwards, and form'd themſelves into ſeveral Cabals and Committees. They had a ſupreme Council of Six, compos'd of the Duke of Monmouth, the Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Gray, the Lord Howard, Colonel Sidney and Mr. Hambden; among whom the Lord Ruſſel was ſometimes preſent, and others admitted upon eſpecial Occaſions, as Romſey, Armſtrong, Shepard, Ferguſon, &c. Theſe met at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, ſometimes at the Lord Ruſſel's, but moſt frequently at Mr. Shepard's in Ab-Church-Lane; while other Subordinate Cabals aſſembled at Mr. Weſt's Chambers in the Temple, and at ſeveral Publick Houſes and Taverns, in and about London, to conſult and communicate their Reſolutions to each other. Having their Meetings ſo often in Places of Publick Entertainment, to prevent the Obſervation of Drawers and Servants, they invented a Jargon whereby they veil'd their Deſigns under Canting Terms and borrow'd Words: The King they ſometimes call'd Church-Warden of White-Hall; the King and Duke, the Black-Bird and the Gold-Finch, the Captain and Lieutenant. Blunderbuſſes, Muſquets and Piſtols, went by the Names of Swan-Quills, Gooſe-Quills and Crow-Quills. The Inſurrection was ſtiled the General Point, the Aſſaſſination the Lopping Point, and Striking at the Head, with ſeveral other Names borrow'd from Terms of Law, which the Lawyers among them had wantonly abus'd. But when they were free, and amongſt themſelves, they diſcours'd of the whole Contrivance in plain Language; their common Healths being ſuch as theſe, To the Man who firſt draws his Sword againſt Popery and Slavery, in Defence of the Proteſtant Religion. Confuſion to the two Brothers, Popery and Slavery; meaning the two Royal Brothers at White-Hall. And when ſome of them, leſs harden'd in Cruelty, expreſs'd ſome Horror of ſuch a villanous Blow, and deſir'd that the Infamy might be thrown on the Papiſts; others, particularly Ferguſon, declared, They thought the Action too good for the Papiſts to have the Honour of it; and often applauded it as a Glorious Work; That it wou'd be an Admonition to Princes to take heed how they oppreſſed their Subjects; That he hop'd to ſee the Fact rewarded in Parliament, and the Actors have the Honour of Statues erected to them, with the Title of PRESERVERS OF THEIR COUNTRY. So alſo when Nelthorp and Walcot, and ſome few others, declar'd themſelves willing willing to joyn in the Inſurrection, but at firſt ſhrunk at the Horror of the Aſſaſſination, R. Rumbald and R. Goodenough impiouſly maintain'd the King and the Duke's Murder as the more pious Deſign of the two, and recommended it as Keeping one of the Ten Commandments, and the beſt Way to prevent Shedding Chriſtian Blood. 1683. Car. 35 Ref. 24

As to the Inſurrection.

As to the Point of the Inſurrection, the City of London was by them divided into Twenty Parts; and to that End one of the largeſt Maps of the City and Liberties was hung up in Mr. Weſt's Chamber, the moſt uſual Place of their Rendezvouzes; the making the ſeveral Partitions and Allotments of the whole, being committed to R. Goodenough, who by reaſon of his general Acquaintance, by being ſo often Under-Sheriff, was judg'd the fitteſt Man for that Work. Each Part was to furniſh out a competent Number of Men, who in Time of Action were to be commanded by ſome of the old Officers of Cromwell's Army, that were in Town for that purpoſe. By this means they doubted not but they ſhou'd have a ſecret Body of Eight or Ten Thouſand of well appointed Men; Goodenough alone having aſſured them, that out of ſeven Diviſions only there were three Thouſand Men ready at an Hour's Warning for the firſt Onſet. The Counties were alſo to be in Readineſs at the exact Time, and the Conſpirators in each of them to be commanded by a truſty and experienc'd Head. In the mean Time, to advance their Numbers, the active Agents were employ'd in London to encourage their Friends that were privy to the Deſign, and bring in ſuch as were thought to be diſaffected, by ſtarting the Matter firſt in general and ambiguous Terms, according to Inſtructions given them, and then as they found them Suſceptible, coming cloſer home, and laying open the whole Contrivance. Ways were alſo concerted for bringing in the Sea-Men about Wapping, by throwing up a Golden Ball on Black-Heath; they being thought diſcontented for Want of Pay. And when all Things ſhou'd thus be in readineſs, it was reſolv'd that the Tower of London ſhou'd be attempted by Stratagem, the Savoy forc'd, the Guards ſurpriz'd, and the King and the Court beſet in White-Hall; which was to be attack'd on all Sides, both by Water and Land; not doubting but there to make ſure of the King, his Brother and Friends, or at leaſt if they ſhou'd attempt to fly, to intercept them by Men poſted on all the Roads about, to hinder their Eſcape. And all Things thus ſucceeding, that they might not want any neceſſary Means for purſuing their Deſign to the utmoſt, they projected the ſeizing the King's Revenues in the Cuſtom-Houſe, Exciſe-Office, Chimney-Money, the Plate in Lombard-Street, and the Caſh of the Wealthy Citizens, who, if they appear'd unwilling to part with it, the Villain Ferguſon advis'd That ſome of them ſhou'd be hang'd up for a Terror to the reſt. But, once for all, it may be here obſerv'd, That the Execution of all theſe and many more Treaſons and Cruelties was propos'd, before they had agreed upon any certain Form of Government to be ſet up in the Place of that which they had reſolv'd to pull down: Only, as they had agreed to deſtroy the Magiſtracy of London, the preſent and the late Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, &c. ſo they reſolv'd that Alderman Corniſh or Gould ſhou'd be declar'd Lord Mayor, and Papillon and Dubois Sheriffs, &c.

And as to the Aſſaſſination.

And now the Lopping Point, as they call'd it, the Aſſaſſination, kept pace in the inferior private Cabals; and the Politicians amongſt them look'd upon it as more compendious and expeditious in compaſſing the great Deſigns. Many Ways were therefore propos'd for effecting this extraordinary Point: Some were for having the King and the Duke ſet upon in St. James's Park, as they were going privately and ill attended to that Palace: Others were for ſinking their Barge, when they went down the River for their Diverſion; or elſe to do it in their Return from the Play-

1683. Car. 25 Ref. 34

Play-Houſe by the Wall in Covent-Garden: Others again were for ſhooting them with Pocket Blunderbuſſes in the Play-Houſe it ſelf; which extreamly pleas'd Fergusſon, who thereupon ſaid, That then they wou'd die in their Calling: And others were for undertaking it between Windſor and Hampton-Court, or in their Going to Wincheſter; or if they ſhou'd happen to be preſent at the Bull-Feaſt in Red-Lyon-Fields. But the moſt preferable Method, and which was finally determin'd, was to attempt it upon the two Brothers Return this Year from Newmarket; and the Place reſolv'd on was the Rye-Houſe, within two Miles of Hodſden in Hertfordſhire, inhabited by Richard Rumbald formerly mention'd, a Place private, commodious, and of ſome natural Strength. The Attempt was to be made by a Party of Forty bold Men, arm'd with Blunderbuſſes and Piſtols, and Commanded by Rumbald and Captain Walcot, who were privately to muſter in the ſaid Rye-Houſe, againſt the Day of the King's coming back, deſign'd on the 31ſt of March: And while the King's Coach ſhou'd be ſtopp'd by a Cart purpoſely overturn'd in a narrow Paſſage of the Way, ſome ſhou'd fight the ſmall Guard that uſually attended his Majeſty, and others fire into the Coach, and kill both the Brothers at the ſame Time. One-Ey'd Rumbald undertook to be a Marks-Man with a Blunderbuſs, which he profanely ſaid, Mr. Fergusſon ſhou'd Conſecrate; and Walcot, who ſtood upon a Point of Honour, not to kill any Man baſely, was to charge and fight the Guards. And it was further reſolv'd, That upon the ſame Day, many Lords and Perſons of Quality of their Party, ſhou'd be invited to Dine in London, that they might be the more ready to appear among the Citizens upon the Arrival of the News; the Actors having contriv'd the Manner of their Eſcape by ſo near a Paſſage, that they hop'd to get to the City, before the News cou'd be brought by other Hands.

The Rye-Houſe the Place appointed.

That Deſign defeated.

But while all Things were in a great Forwardneſs, and they were triumphantly entertaining themſelves with the Rewards of ſome, and the Puniſhment of others, Heaven was pleas'd to defeat all their pernicious Counſels, by ſuffering the Fire formerly mention'd to break out at Newmarket, which oblig'd the King and the Court to return from thence about a Week ſooner than was intended. The Conſpirators receiv'd the News with various Apprehenſions, and their confus'd Sentiments of it appear'd both in their Looks and Words: One of them cou'd not forbear calling it a Providential Fire, and Walcot himſelf ſaid, He thought it an Expreſſion of God's diſapproving the Undertaking; but the inveterate Fergusſon ſaid, That he perceiv'd God had reſerv'd the King for his own Judgment; yet he declar'd, That the Deſign muſt inſtantly be re-aſſum'd, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong undertook to be a principal Aſſiſtant.

The Inſurrection goes on.

In the mean Time the ſuperior Managers for the Inſurrection were carrying on their Treaty with the Scottiſh Commiſſioners: For no ſooner were the Scots in London inform'd by their Correſpondents in Edinburgh, that the People there were in a greater Readineſs than they firſt imagin'd, but they ſtruck in with the Engliſh, and agreed upon certain Conditions, 'That they ſhou'd riſe firſt, if the Engliſh, upon ſpeedy Notice, wou'd 'immediately ſecond them; That the Inſurrection in both Kingdoms 'ſhou'd be before Harveſt; That Arms and Ammunition ſhou'd be tranſ-'ported out of Holland into Scotland, whither the Earl of Argyle ſhou'd 'haſten to head their Party there.' Theſe Things in general were quickly concluded; but there were ſome Particulars that rais'd ſuch Difficulties, as were like to overturn the Deſign: The Engliſh, now more ſetled in their Intentions, wou'd have had the Scots declare immediately for a Common-wealth, and the Extirpation of Monarchy; but the Scots declin'd that Point, affirming, That the Generality of their People wou'd never never hearken to that at firſt. In the next Place, The Scots demanded Thirty Thouſand Pounds to be ſent them for Arms, Ammunition, &c. but the Engliſh, who would truſt them with any thing ſooner than Money, after many Expoſtulations from Argyle and his Agents, cou'd be brought to no more than Ten Thouſand Pounds, and rais'd many Doubts and Scruples about that Sum; which caus'd the Scots to reſent the Matter, and to tell them, That they were only good at Fire-ſide Plotting; whereas, for their Part, they were reſolv'd to riſe, tho' they had nothing to fight with but their Claws. However at length, they came to an A- ‘greement, That the Ten Thouſand Pounds ſhou'd be rais'd, and put ‘into the Hands of Mr. Shepheard, who was to return the Bills for it ‘by Ferguſon to Amſterdam. 1683. 3. Thus ſucceſsfully was the Deſign going forwards, when a timely Diſcovery ſtopt it in its full Career: This was firſt made on the 12th Day of June, by Joſiah Keeling, Citizen and Salter of London; a Perſon of good Credit in the common Buſineſs of his Calling, but one whoſe perverſe Principles as to Religion and Government, had tranſported him into ſtrange Undertakings; for he was a ſpecial Aſſiſtant at the unheard-of Arreſt of the Lord Mayor of Lonon; and was alſo to have been one of the Forty Aſſaſſines, who with Rumbald and Walcot, were to have murder'd the King and the Duke at the Rye-Houſe. This Man having for ſome Time labour'd under great Uneaſineſs of Mind, and the Laſhes of a tormenting Conſcience, for being involv'd in ſo much Guilt, appear'd voluntarily before the Lord Dartmouth and Mr. Secretary Jenkins, and there made open Confeſſion of the whole Matter, and ſubſcrib'd his Depoſitions. But finding that the King and his Miniſters were exceeding diffident of his ſingle Intelligence on a Buſineſs of ſo vaſt a Moment, he conſider'd which Way he might beſt ſtrengthen his Evidence. To that End he prevail'd upon Goodenough, who had an entire Confidence in him, that his Brother John Keeling might be admitted into the next Meetings of the Conſpirators, he himſelf promiſing to be anſwerable for his Secrecy. This was done, and thereupon both the Brothers gave in their joynt Teſtimony upon Oath on the 14th of June, touching the Progreſs of the Treaſon. So they continu'd to do for a Day or two more, till John Keeling dropt ſome Expreſſions to his Relations, which they whiſper'd among their Acquaintance, That ſomething was working, which might do Miſchief to Honeſt People. This, and freſh Alarms from the Government, caus'd ſeveral of them to meet and conſult what to do; but Fear and Confuſion ſo wrought upon them, that they all ſeparated, and reſolv'd upon Flight. Only Walcot ſaid at parting, God wou'd yet deliver the Nation, tho' he did not approve of the preſent Inſtruments. And Ferguſon, to keep up his former Character, took his leave in theſe Words, He perceiv'd they were Strangers to this Kind of Exerciſe, but he had been us'd to fly, and wou'd never be out of a Plot as long as he liv'd; and that he hop'd yet to meet ſome of them at Dunbar before Michaelmas. The whole Defeated by Keeling's Diſcovery.

Immediately after, an unuſual Commotion appear'd every where in all Mens Looks and Actions, a Mixture of Joy and Wonder, for the Diſcovery, and the Strangeneſs of it; and the whole Kingdom was in ſome ſort of a Conſternation. Warrants were immediately iſſu'd out againſt ſeveral of the Conſpirators, eſpecially thoſe of Keeling's Acquaintance; and on the 23d of June was publiſh'd the King's Proclamation for Apprehending Colonel John Romſey, Richard Rumbald Maſter, Richard Nelthorpe Eſquire, Edward Wade Gent. Richard Goodenough Gent. Capt. Walcot, William Thompſon, James Burton and William Hone; for Proclamations againſt the Conſpirators.

any of which, a Hundred Pounds was offer'd to the Diſcoverer. Upon this Proclamation, Colonel Romſey, for a Pardon and Reward, ſurrender'd himſelf the next Day; and being examin'd by Mr. Secretary Jenkins, he made a large Confeſſion; which was ſoon after confirm'd by two others, Mr. Weſt and Mr. Sheppard: So that on the 28th of June there came out a Second Proclamation, for the Apprehending of James Duke of Monmouth, Ford Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armſtrong Knight, and Robert Ferguſon, who were all fled; for any of which five Hundred Pounds was offer'd as a Reward to the Diſcoverer. Shortly after the Lord Howard came in; and upon his Information, Warrants for High-Treaſon were iſſu'd out againſt the Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Ruſſel, and others, who were taken up accordingly. As to the Duke of Monmouth, he had formerly been taken up, upon Suſpicion of promoting Sedition and Riots, and was admitted to Bail; but finding his Name in the Proclamation, he took the firſt Opportunity to make his Eſcape. But for Ferguſon himſelf, we are told, That when the Warrants were deliver'd to Mr. Legat the Meſſenger, to ſeize him with the reſt of the Offenders, Mr. Secretary Jenkins gave Legat a ſtrict Command not to take Ferguſon, but to ſhun him where-ever he met him; which is a Myſtery not eaſy to be underſtood, but has caus'd Variety of Conjectures.

The Satisfaction and Addreſſes of the Nation.

Mens Minds now began to be fill'd with Pleaſure, as well as Horror; and on the 2d of July, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of the City of London, in a full Body waited on his Majeſty in the Banquetting-Houſe at White-Hall with their Addreſs of Congratulation, 'Declaring their Thanks to Almighty God for bringing to light 'this impious and execrable Machination, deſign'd for the Deſtruction of 'of his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, and of his deareſt Brother James Duke 'of York, and for the Deſtruction of his Majeſty's beſt Subjects, and to 'involve this and the future Generation in Confuſion, Blood and Miſery; 'carry'd on, notwithſtanding their ſpecious Pretences, by known Diſ-'ſenting Conventicles, and Atheiſtical Perſons, &c.' Which Addreſs being moſt kindly received by his Majeſty, they then waited on his Royal Highneſs the Duke, and made their Compliments to him on the ſame Occaſion. Immediately after, the honourable Society of the Middle-Temple Addreſs'd in the like Manner, who declared themſelves 'Concern'd 'more than ordinary to ſhew their Loyalty, in regard ſome of the firſt 'diſcover'd Conſpirators did unhappily appear to be of that Society.' They were follow'd by the other Inns of Court, the City of Weſtminſter, the Borough of Southwark, and by all the Counties and Corporations in the Kingdom, whoſe Addreſſes flow'd in with an Inundation from all Parts, in greater Numbers, and with warmer Expreſſions, than ever had been known; to the great Diminution, as well as Mortification of the Whig-Party, at that Time. At the ſame Time alſo, the ſeveral Ambaſſadors and Miniſters of Foreign Princes Congratulated his Majeſty, in their Maſters Names, for his happy Delivery from the Conſpiracy and Aſſaſſination. And the French King, to ſhew his Affection to his Brother of England, publiſh'd alſo in his Dominions an Edict or Proclamation for the Apprehenſion of the Four before-mention'd, Monmouth, Gray, Armſtrong and Ferguſon, promiſing five Hundred Piſtoles for the Diſcovery of each of them.

Walcot's Tryal.

II. I. While all Mens Minds were excited by Curioſity, and fill'd with Expectations, ſeveral of the Perſons accus'd of the Plot were brought to Tryal; and the firſt was Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Walcot, who was try'd at the Old-Baily, on the 12th of July, before the Lord Chief Tryals. Sprat. Kennet. Burnet. State Tracts Hawles. &c.

Chief Juſtice Saunders, and other Judges for High-Treaſon againſt the King and Government. The Witneſſes againſt him were four; Colonel Romſey, Joſiah Keeling, Zachary Bourn and Counſellor Weſt; who in their Depoſitions firſt gave ſome general Account of the Plot, and then of the particular Share in which the Priſoner was concern'd: Romſey firſt ſwore, 'That the Priſoner came to Weſt's Chamber where the Deponent was preſent, when a Liſt was brought of the Aſſaſſines, and agreed to joyn with them, intending to command a Party to charge the Guards; That he undertook to go and view Rumbald's Houſe, and bought a Horſe for that purpoſe: That he was preſent at the Dividing London into Twenty Parts in order to an Inſurrection; and at the Conſult for Buying of Arms after the Diſappointment at the Rye-Houſe: That he was at the Meeting for carrying on the Conſpiracy on Thurſday before the Diſcovery; and that after it, they met at Captain Tracy's, Walcot's own Lodging, the Deponent being preſent'. 2. Keeling depos'd, 'That Walcot was at the trayterous Aſſembly at the Salutation-Tavern, where the Deponent was call'd Gulick, and a Health drunk to the Engliſh Gulick; Weſt declaring that Gulick in Dutch was Keeling in Engliſh; adding, He hop'd to ſee Keeling at the Head of as good an Army at Wapping, as they heard one Gulick was then at Cologne.' 3. Bourn ſwore, 'That Walcot us'd to come to Ferguſon when he lodg'd at his Houſe; and that He and ſeveral others met at the Dragon on Snow-Hill, and often in other Places, in order to raiſe Men, and divide the City into Twenty Parts, for ſecuring the King and the Duke: That almoſt every Time they met, at leaſt three Times, the Priſoner at the Bar was there: That he was at the laſt Meeting at Tracy's, where they debated of Standing to it with Sword in Hand, and of Killing Keeling for making the Diſcovery. 4. Weſt teſtified, That the Priſoner, upon the Election of the London Sheriffs, ask'd him, Will the People do nothing to ſecure themſelves? and acquainted him with the Inſurrection then deſigned within three Weeks or a Month: That the Earl of Shaftsbury was in the Deſign, and had engag'd the Priſoner: That he had an Expectation of being Colonel of Horſe; asking the Deponent, Whether he would have any Command under him? That upon his Refuſal, he deſir'd him to lend him a Suit of Silk Armour: That the ſaid Walcot told him of ſeveral Deſigns to attack the King and the Duke: That in the Buſineſs of the Rye-Houſe, he undertook to command the Party that was to ſet upon the Guards: That after the Diſappointment, he met with the other Conſpirators, where they diſcours'd of it, and complain'd they had not Arms in Readineſs: That he ſometimes made One at the Deponent's, and at the Young-Devil-Tavern: That he was preſent at the Meeting at Tracy's, relating to their Eſcape; the Priſoner himſelf then ſaying, God wou'd ſtill deliver the Nations, &c.

Witneſſes, Romſey,

Keeling,

Bourne.

And Weſt.

Beſides theſe living Witneſſes, there was a Letter produc'd under his own Hand, which made a great Impreſſion both upon the Court and Jury: It was written to Mr. Secretary Jenkins, immediately after he found his Name in the King's firſt Proclamation, and intimated to his Honour, 'That he was come to Town to lay himſelf at his Majeſty's Feet: That this was the firſt Crime he had been guilty of ſince the King's Reſtoration, and too ſoon by much now: That he was ready to diſcover to his Majeſty all that he knew in England, Scotland and Ireland, which might be ſomething more than the firſt Diſcoverer cou'd acquaint him with, eſpecially as to Ireland: That his Intimacy with a Scotch Miniſter, through whoſe Hands much of the Buſineſs paſs'd, occaſion'd his knowing very much; and that the Buſineſs was laid very Broad,

Walcot's Letter.

‘ or he was miſ-inform’d ; concluding with a Propoſal, That he would ‘ follow the Traytors who were fled, and give Notice what Meaſures ‘ they ſhou’d take ; with other the like Expreſſions. There was likewiſe a Paper given in Evidence that was taken about him in Newgate ; in which he deſir’d Romſey and Weſt to ſpare him, ſaying, They had Ground enough to ſerve the King upon other Men. But as to his private Confeſſion to the King upon his firſt Examination, that was not produc’d againſt him ; tho’ in that he told ſeveral new Particulars of the Conſpiracy, and nam’d the Men of Quality who had undertaken to raiſe the ſeveral Shires.

His Defence, The Priſoner’s Defence conſiſted Firſt of a plain Denyal of having had any hand in the Aſſaſſination ; ſaying, ‘ He knew well enough, if he had ‘ undertaken to charge the Guards, while others kill’d the King, he was ‘ equally guilty with thoſe that kill’d him ; but that he was ſick of the ‘ Gout during the Meetings, while the King was at New-Market : ‘ Moreover, that thoſe Witneſſes were ſufficiently involv’d themſelves, ‘ and ſwore againſt him to ſave their own Lives : That he never knew ‘ Goodenough and Rumbald : That the laſt Meeting at his Lodgings was ‘ appointed by Romſey, he himſelf knowing nothing of it : That he came ‘ accidentally to the other Meetings only to hear News. He confeſs’d ‘ he heard there was a Deſign amongſt ſeveral Great Lords and Gentlemen for Aſſerting Liberties and Properties ; but that he was not at ‘ their Conſultations. In ſum, He had heard a great deal of an Inſurrection, but had no Part in it, and therefore his Fault cou’d be only ‘ Miſpriſion of Treaſon. And as to the Letter produc’d againſt him, he ‘ alledg’d, That what he had promis’d to diſcover, he had only heard from ‘ Ferguſon.’ In Anſwer to this Defence, the King’s Council alledg’d, ‘ That there is nothing more juſt than to make uſe of ſome Traytors to ‘ convict others, elſe Treaſon might take effect without Diſcovery : That ‘ becauſe the Witneſſes had been concern’d in the Plot, therefore they ‘ were to be believ’d ; for who ſhou’d know it but thoſe that were concern’d ? That better Witneſſes cou’d not have been had, except the ‘ Thing had ſucceeded : That the very being at Treaſonable Conſults, ‘ and keeping them private, is not only Miſpriſion, but High-Treaſon. ‘ And as to having the Gout, Weſt told him, he remember’d it very well ‘ by a good Token, that the Priſoner himſelf ſaid, He was afraid when And Condemnation. ‘ the Time came, he ſhou’d not be able to draw on his Boot.’ In Concluſion, he was, in a very ſhort Time, brought in Guilty of High-Treaſon by the Jury.

Hone’s Tryal. 2. On the ſame Day another Criminal was brought to the Bar, William Hone a Joyner, who wou’d have immediately confeſs’d himſelf guilty of a great Part of the Accuſation. But refuſing to confeſs all, he was requir’d to Plead, and his Tryal was brought on the next Day. Then again he deſir’d he might retract his Plea, and offer’d to plead Guilty ; but ſince he wou’d not own the whole Indictment, for the Satisfaction of the Nation, which was very curious at that Time, the following Witneſſes appear’d againſt him. Keeling, 1. Keeling ſwore, ‘ That the Priſoner ‘ was at the Dolphin-Tavern, where ſeveral ſorts of Arms were agreed ‘ on to be provided under the borrow’d Names of Swan-Quils, Gooſe-Quils, Crow-Quils, Sand and Ink : That after that Meeting, Hone ‘ told the Deponent, he was one of them who were to go down to the ‘ Rye-Houſe to aſſaſſinate the King. That he ſince alſo told him, That ‘ it would never be well till the Black-Bird and the Gold-Finch were ‘ knock’d on the Head ; explaining thoſe Terms to be meant of the King ‘ and the Duke.’ To which Atteſtation, Hone reply’d, That as to the Black-Bird he own'd it, but not as to the Gold-Finch. 2. Weſt depos'd, 'That Goodenough having told him he wou'd try Hone, whether 'he wou'd attempt on the Duke without the King, the Deponent ask'd 'Hone, whether he had ſeen Goodenough? He anſwer'd, He had, and 'that he had ſpoken to him about a Job for the Duke. That at ano-'ther Time alſo the Priſoner ask'd the Deponent, Maſter, ſhall we do Weſt, 'nothing? Adding, That if the Duke of Monmouth wou'd be true, and 'appear, he wou'd bring fifty or threeſcore Men from the other Side of the 'Water, to help to do the Buſineſs. And that the Deponent demanding 'what Buſineſs? he anſwer'd, A briſk Puſh at the two Brothers. That 'being further queſtion'd, What Brothers? he ſaid, The Captain and 'Lieutenant; which were the counterfeit Names they ſometimes us'd for 'the King and Duke. 1683. Car. 35 Reſ. 24

Black-

Beſides theſe two Witneſſes, who were more immediately concern'd themſelves, Sir Nicholas Butler depos'd, 'He had known Hone many 'Years, and always knew him guilty of Plotting and Contriving, and 'Ready for ſuch Enterprizes as this; particularly he had projected the 'Taking off the King and the Duke with Croſs-Bows from Bow-Steeple, 'whilſt they were ſtanding in a Houſe directly over-againſt it on the Lord 'Mayor's Day: That the Priſoner confeſs'd this very thing, when exa-'min'd before his Majeſty; and that he had alſo acquainted ſeveral Per-'ſons, That he was to make one to kill the King and the Duke.' Laſtly Captain Richardſon, the Keeper of Newgate, teſtify'd, 'That the Priſo-'ner confeſs'd to Sir Nicholas Butler, in his Preſence, that Goodenough 'came to him and told him, He wanted Labourers; that Hone ask'd him 'for what? Goodenough ſaid It was to kill the King and the Duke; and 'that he did agree to be one of the Number: That Hone did ſay another 'Time, He was for killing the King and ſaving the Duke; but that 'Goodenough was for Both: That he told him of the Buſineſs of the Rye-'Houſe, calling it The Place where the King was to have been kill'd.' To all this Hone the Priſoner made no Anſwer, but That he was drawn in by Goodenough; and as to the killing the King from Bow-Steeple, he ſaid he was told of it by Another. And ſo the Caſe appear'd ſo plain, that the Jury found him guilty of High-Treaſon, without going out of the Court. Sir N. Butler, And Richard-ſon. Hone caſt.

3. The Third Tryal was of the higheſt Importance to the Publick, and brought on with the greateſt Expectation of the People, which was that of William Lord Ruſſel, Son and Heir to the Earl of Bedford, a Per-ſon often mention'd, of that Worth and Probity, but of that Intereſt and Popularity, that the Court was brought under ſome Neceſſity of bring-ing him to Deſtruction; and his very Tryal rais'd the Pity of Thou-ſands of People. But his own and his Family's Actions being ſo well re-member'd, either Policy or Revenge was almoſt ſure to take place; and his Tryal came on with great Formality at the Old Baily, on the ſame Day with Hone's, and before Eight ſeveral Judges, the Lord Chief Juſtice Saunders, the Lord Baron Mountague, Mr. Juſtice Windham, Mr. Juſtice Jones, Mr. Juſtice Charlton, Mr. Juſtice Levins, Mr. Juſtice Withens, and Mr. Baron Street; together with the Attorney and Solicitor-Gene-ral, the King's Council at Law, and a conſiderable Jury ſummon'd by the preſent Sheriffs, Sir Dudley North, and Sir Peter Rich; and the whole was carry'd on with as much Art and Management, as Grandeur and For-mality. At his Arraignment the Priſoner ſtruggled hard to obtain a Day longer for his Tryal, as having Witneſſes that might come before Night; and then he urg'd to have it deferr'd till the Afternoon, but in both he was over-rul'd; the Niceneſs of the Time being now a ſpecial Advantage The Lord Ruſ-ſel's Tryal. The Formality of it.

to either Side. However he was allow'd to make uſe of what Papers he had, which was thought a Favour, becauſe ſome others had been formerly refus'd that Liberty. Next, he deſir'd to have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury; to which the Attorney-General anſwer'd, That he had indulg'd him ſo far as to ſend him a Note of the Men return'd, but no other Pannel cou'd be given him. The Jury being call'd, he challeng'd the Foreman, for being no Free-Holder in London; which being a Point of Law, he had Council allow'd him, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Holt and Mr. Ward, who argu'd the Validity of the Challenge. But the Judges in the Court over-rul'd the Plea, and gave their ſeveral Opinions, 'That in Caſe of 'Treaſon, a Free-Hold was no good Cauſe of Challenge, eſpecially in the 'City of London, where Cuſtom had been otherwiſe, and the Citizens 'were ſuperior to common Free-Holders;' and he was further told, 'That there cou'd be no Hardſhip in his Caſe, ſince he might Challenge 'thirty five without Cauſe, and his Jury conſiſted of Men of unqueſtionable Quality and Subſtance.

Witneſſes; Romſey,

The Jury ſworn, the three chief Witneſſes that appear'd were Colonel Romſey, Mr. Shepard, and the Lord Howard. 1. The Colonel depos'd, 'That in the End of October, or in the Beginning of November 1682, 'there met at Mr. Shepard's Houſe in Ab-Church-Lane, the Duke of Mon-'mouth, the Lord Gray, the Lord Ruſſel the Priſoner, Sir Thomas Arm-'ſtrong, and Robert Ferguſon: That the Earl of Shaftsbury deſir'd him 'to go to them thither, to know what Reſolution was taken about the 'Riſing at Taunton; that he did go, and Mr. Shepard carry'd him up 'where they were, and he deliver'd his Meſſage. That the Anſwer was, 'Mr. Trenchard had fail'd them; and there cou'd be no more done in the 'Matter at that Time: That there was at the ſame Time a Diſcourſe 'by all the Company about ſeeing what Poſture the Guards were in, that 'they might know how to ſurprize them; That ſome of them undertook 'to go and ſee: That the Lord Ruſſel in particular did ſpeak about the

Shepard,

'Riſing, and gave his Conſent to it.' 2. Mr. Shepard teſtify'd, 'That 'in October laſt, Ferguſon requeſted of him, in the Duke of Monmouth's 'Name, the Conveniency of his Houſe, for the Meeting of ſome Perſons 'of Quality; and that the ſame Day in the Evening the Duke of Mon-'mouth, the Lord Gray, the Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong and Fer-'guſon came: That they deſired to be private, and none of his Servants 'to come up: That their Diſcourſe was how to ſurprize the Guards: 'That the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, 'went one Night to the Mews to view them: That the next time they 'came, Armſtrong ſaid, The Guards were remiſs, and the Thing was fea-'ſible: That they had two Meetings of this Kind at his Houſe; That in 'one of them ſomething was read by Ferguſon in the Nature of a Decla-'ration, ſetting forth the Grievances of the Nation in order to a Riſing: 'That he cou'd not poſitively ſay that the Lord Ruſſel was there when 'it was read; but the ſaid Lord, the Priſoner, was there, when they diſ-'cours'd of ſeizing the Guards.

And the Lord Howard.

In the third Place, the Lord Howard began his Teſtimony with a long Story about the Plot in general, which was complain'd of as foreign, and deſign'd only to exaſperate the Jury; but what peculiarly related to the Priſoner, was to this Effect: 'That after the Earl of Shaftsbury's Flight, 'the chief Perſons concern'd in the Conſpiracy in his Time, began to 'conſider they had gone ſo far, that it wou'd be unſafe for them to make 'a Retreat; and that in ſo great an Affair, conſiſting of ſo many Particulars, 'which were to be manag'd with ſo much Niceneſs, it wou'd be neceſſa-'ry to have ſome Select Council; and that therefore they reſolv'd to 'erect a Cabal among themſelves, which uſually conſiſted of ſix Perſons,

1683. Car. 35 Ref. 24

'the Duke of Monmouth, the Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Ruſſel, Colonel 'Sidney, Mr. Hambden Junior, and the Deponent; and this was about 'the middle of January laſt. That they met at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, 'where it was preſently agreed, their proper Province was to take care 'of the Inſurrection: That the chief things they debated were, Whe- 'ther that Inſurrection ſhou'd begin firſt in London, or the Country; then, 'what Counties and Towns were fitteſt, and moſt ready for Action; then, 'What Arms were to be got, and how to be diſpos'd; then, that it was 'neceſſary to have a common Bank of twenty five or thirty Thouſand 'Pounds, to anſwer the Occaſions of ſuch an Undertaking; but that the 'greateſt Point was to order it ſo, as to draw in Scotland into a Conſent 'with them; becauſe it was requiſite that all Kinds of Diverſion ſhou'd 'be given to the King's Forces. That about Ten Days after, every one 'of the ſame Perſons met again at the Lord Ruſſel's Houſe: That they 'then came to a Reſolution of ſending ſome Perſons to the Earl of Ar- 'gyle, to ſettle the Correſpondence with him, and that a Meſſenger ſhou'd 'be diſpatcht into Scotland to invite ſome Scotch-Men hither, who beſt 'underſtood the State of Scotland, to give an Account of it: That the Per- 'ſons determin'd to be ſent for, were Sir John Cockran, the Lord Melvil, and 'one of the Name of Cambel: That Colonel Sidney was intruſted to take 'care of a Meſſenger; and he told the Deponent, he had ſent Aaron 'Smith: That then they agreed, not to meet again till the Return of the 'Meſſenger; who was gone about a Month before they heard any thing 'of him: That all this Debate at the Lord Ruſſel's went without Contra- 'diction, all there preſent giving their Conſent: That as for raiſing of 'Money, every one was put to think of ſuch a Way, that Money might 'be Collected without giving Cauſe of Jealouſy. That after this, the 'Deponent met no more with them; but when he return'd out of the 'Country, he was inform'd that Aaron Smith was come back, and that 'Sir John Cockran was alſo come to Town.

The Lord Ruſſel's Defence.

To all this the Lord Ruſſel made Anſwer, 'That he cou'd not but think 'himſelf mighty unfortunate to ſtand charg'd with ſo high a Crime, 'and that intermix'd with horrid Practices and Speeches of other People, 'while the King's Council took all Advantages to heighten Things againſt 'him. That he was no Lawyer, and a very unready Speaker, and alto- 'gether a Stranger to Things of this Nature: That he was ſenſible he 'was not ſo provided, as to make his Defence as otherwiſe he ſhou'd do; 'but he thought the Gentlemen of the Jury were Men of Conſcience, 'that valu'd Innocent Blood, and hop'd they wou'd conſider the Witneſ- 'ſes, that they ſwore to ſave their own Lives: That the two Times they 'met, was upon no form'd Deſign, only to talk of News and Things in 'General: That the Lord Howard having a voluble Tongue, they de- 'lighted to hear him diſcourſe: That he knew of no ſuch Council of ſix 'choſen, for who ſhou'd chuſe them?' As to Colonel Romſey, 'he was 'notoriouſly known to have been highly oblig'd to the King and the 'Duke; and it was ſtrange he ſhou'd be capable of ſuch a Deſign as to 'Murder the King: That the Time was Elapſed by the 13th of the King, 'which limits Proſecution to ſix Months: Neither was the Deſign of Le- 'vying War, Treaſon, unleſs it appear'd by ſome Overt-Act.' And then he deſiring to know upon what Statute he was Indicted, he was told 'the 'Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third. Upon which he inſiſted up- on a Matter of Law, and particularly, 'That the Buſineſs at Mr. Shepard's 'Houſe was ſworn to only by one Witneſs.' To which he was anſwer'd, 'That if there were one Witneſs of one Act of Treaſon, another of a ſe- 'cond, and another of a third, that manifeſted the ſame Treaſon, it was 'ſufficient.' And the Attorney-General and Sir George Jeffreys made a home home thruſt at him: The Former ſaid, Your Lordſhip remembers, in my Lord Stafford's Caſe, there was but one Witneſs to one Act in England, and another to another in France: And the Latter ſaid, There was not ſo much Evidence againſt Him, as there is againſt your Lordſhip.

Witneſſes for him.

For a further Defence of his Lordſhip, there appear'd a noble Train of Witneſſes, which very much affected the Audience, viz. The Duke of Somerſet, the Earl of Angleſey, Mr. Edward Howard, the Lord Cavendiſh; the Lord Clifford, Dr. Tillotſon, Dr. Burnet, Dr. Cox, Dr. Fitz-Williams, Mr. Lutton Gore and Mr. Spencer. Some of theſe teſtify'd that the Lord Howard, before he was taken, declared, He believ'd the Lord Ruſſel innocent, and knew nothing againſt him. Others ſpoke to his Lordſhip's private Character, and declar'd his great Worth and Probity, his virtuous and ſober Life, and conſequently the great Improbability of his being thus ingag'd.

Anſwers.

As to what concern'd the Lord Howard's ſaying he believ'd the Priſoner Innocent, it was anſwer'd by that Lord Himſelf, who confeſs'd, 'He had ſaid ſo, being then himſelf not accus'd, ſo that he 'intended to out-face the thing both for Himſelf and the Party; but 'now his Duty to God, the King, and his Country required it, he muſt 'ſay the Truth; and that tho' the Council of Six were not choſen by any 'Community, yet they did erect themſelves by mutual Agreement one 'with another into that Society.' The reſt was anſwer'd by the King's Council at Law, who expatiated upon the Matter, and particularly inſiſted, 'That the Witneſſes againſt the Lord Ruſſel were not profligate 'Perſons, nor Men who wanted Faith and Credit before that Time; but 'ſuch againſt whom there had been no legal Exceptions made by Him-'ſelf: That there was no Contradiction, no Correſpondence or Contri-'vance at all between them; and that it cou'd not be imagin'd ſuch 'Men ſhou'd damn their own Souls to take away the Life of a Gentle-'man, againſt whom they had no Quarrel.' As for Colonel Romſey's being much oblig'd to the King and the Duke, 'It was apparent by many In-'ſtances, that no ſuch, tho' the greateſt Obligations, had hinder'd ill Men 'from Conſpiring againſt his Majeſty. For was not the Earl of Eſſex, 'were not divers others of the Conſpirators in like manner oblig'd, and 'advanc'd in Eſtate and Honour by the King?' As for the ſeveral Divines, and Men of Honour and Quality produc'd to teſtify the Virtue and Sobriety of his Lordſhip's Converſation, it was anſwer'd, 'That an Affecta-'tion of Popularity had often prov'd a Snare ſtrong enough to tempt 'many Men, who had otherwiſe been of great Temperance and Virtue: 'Nor indeed cou'd there be any more dangerous Enemies to a State or 'Kingdom, than ſuch as come ſober to endeavour its Deſtruction.' Which ſingular Obſervation was now particularly turn'd againſt the Lord Ruſſel: For Mr. Weſt depos'd, 'That the Under-Actors in the Conſpiracy moſt 'depended on the ſaid Lord, for this very Reaſon, becauſe they look'd 'on him as a Man of great Sobriety.' In Concluſion, notwithſtanding the Lord's ſolemn Atteſtation of his Innocence, the Jury, after an Adjournment of the Court to the Afternoon, brought him in Guilty of High-Treaſon. This Verdict has been generally accounted a great Hardſhip, and the Sum of that Hardſhip was, 'That it was only ſworn that 'Treaſonable Words were ſpoke in his Hearing, to which he was Con-'ſenting; tho' no Words of his were expreſs'd, that imported any ſuch 'Conſent; therefore at moſt it cou'd be only a Miſpriſion.

He is found guilty.

The ſtrange Death of the Earl of Eſſex.

4. But that which was believ'd to have very much influenc'd the Jury, was a diſmal Attempt made in the Tower that Morning of the Tryal, upon the Body of the Earl of Eſſex, who was found with his Throat cut with a Razor from Ear to Ear; which was immediately look'd look'd upon to be done with his own Hands, and to be the Effect of Pride and Deſpair. This caus'd an unuſual Commotion in People's Minds, and the News was timely brought to the Old-Bayly; and was probably the main Reaſon why the Lord Ruſſel was ſo urgent to put off his Tryal a little longer, and likewiſe why on the other Side they would not allow the Favour. However it was, the Fact was twice mention'd and inſinuated by the King's Council, for no other End, that appear'd, but to exaſperate the Jury, now ſuſceptible of any Impreſſion; and it is reported that ſome of them ſaid, That it went further with them than all the Evidence of the Witneſſes produc'd. As to the Truth and Circumſtances of the Murder, which then made a mighty Noiſe, there gradually aroſe innumerable Conjectures, and ſeveral Murmurings and ſcandalous Reports, as if it proceeded from the Treachery and Deſigns of the Court, and not from the Earl's own Hands. And more eſpecially, becauſe the King and the Duke of York were at that very Time within the Tower, where they had not been for ſeveral Years before. But the Coroner's Inqueſt, which conſiſted of conſiderable Men, after a full Examination of the Earl's Chief Servant and the Warder, unanimouſly found him a Felo de ſe. And I have been aſſur'd from two eminent Divines, who ſaw the Body ſoon after the Fact, that there was not the leaſt Appearance of Violence offer'd by any other Perſon, no Marks of Struglings, nor no Signs of Villany: And that the Circumſtances appear'd ſo plain, that his Lady, his Brother Sir Henry Capel, and his neareſt Relations were ſatisfy'd, and acquieſc'd in the Jury's Verdict: And this they did the more readily, becauſe it was well known that the Earl us'd frequently to juſtify Self-Murder; which I have been further aſſur'd by another Divine, an Ear-Witneſs, and an intimate Acquaintance. It is very remarkable that the Fact was committed juſt by the Place where he took his laſt leave of his Father the Lord Capel, when he went to his Execution, and where he had receiv'd ſo ſolemn a Charge from him to adhere to the Royal Cauſe; the Memory of which, being reviv'd by the coming of the King and Duke, from whom he had receiv'd ſo many Favours, was thought to have thrown him into this fatal Fit of Deſpair. More of this is taken notice of in the ſecond Volume, in the latter End of 1648.

Conjectures upon it.

As to the Character of this unfortunate Nobleman, it has been more than hinted at already, in his former Proceedings in the Privy-Council, and his warm Deſigns upon the Lieutenancy, and more abſolute Government of Ireland, the obtaining of which he had been promis'd by the Earl of Shaftsbury. He was a Man of conſiderable Parts and Abilities, and had ſeveral valuable Qualities, as Generoſity and Bravery, and great Marks of Honour and moral Honeſty, tho' not without ſuch a Mixture of Cunning as could not be approv'd of by Sir William Temple: But as to Religious Principles, we are aſſured from ſuch as beſt knew him, that he had not any great Belief of the Truth of the Goſpel; and that he had too much of a reſtleſs and aſpiring Temper; and tho' he had receiv'd ſeveral Favours from the Crown, yet he had met with ſome Diſappointments which he knew not well how to bear; which drove him into new Methods, to extol the Dignity of Parliaments, to affect Popularity, and to aſſume the ſpecious Name of a Patriot. It is certain that the King was moſt ſenſibly affected at the firſt Account of this Tragical Accident, and with a Sigh ſaid, My Lord of Eſſex needed not to have deſpair'd of Mercy, for I ow'd him a Life. And he afterwards declar'd thus in Print, 'As 'for the deplorable End of the ſaid Earl, his Majeſty freely owns, there 'was no Man in his Dominions more deeply afflicted with it than him-'ſelf; his Majeſty having been thereby depriv'd of an extraordinary Op'portunity to exerciſe his Royal Clemency, and to teſtify to all his Loy'al Subjects and Old Friends, how highly he valu'd the Memory and 'Sufferings of the Lord Capel.' Accordingly, when the Earl's Son, a young Lad, was brought or appear'd before him, his Majeſty receiv'd him with peculiar Tenderneſs and Good-Nature, and adviſ'd him, To preſerve the Principles, and follow the Example of his Glorious Grand-Father.

Rouſe's Tryal.

5. To return to the Tryals: The fourth Perſon brought before the Judges at the Old-Bayly, was John Rouſe, a Perſon formerly mention'd, a noted Incendiary in the City of London, who having been Indicted for Treaſonable Words, eſcap'd Puniſhment by an Ignoramus-Jury. The Subſtance of the Accuſation againſt him at this Time, was, 1. Thomas Lea ſwore, 'That the ſaid Rouſe undertook to provide a Hundred Arms
'for the City-Diviſions: That he ſaid, Nothing could be done unleſs the
'King were ſeiz'd; adding, We remember Forty One, when the King
'went and ſet up his Standard; therefore we will ſeize them, that they
'ſhall not ſet up their Standard. That he propos'd to have a Ball play'd
'on Black-Heath; to that End ſome Sea-Captains muſt be ſpoken to,
'he promis'd to ſpeak to Ten: That when the Ball ſhould be won, e'very Captain might take his Party, and tell them they had other Work,
'and then go with long Boats and Arms to ſeize the Tower: That the 'Priſoner had ſeveral ſuch Diſcourſes, and went divers Times to view
'the Tower to that End: That after the Diſcovery, he ſaid to Goode-
'nough and Nelthorp, Be not diſcourag'd, but let the Buſineſs go on; that 'he ſaid, Take off the King and the Duke, and then no Man can have
'Commiſſion to fight for them: That he alſo affirm'd, He was under an 'Oath of Secrecy, never to truſt but one at a Time with the Deſign.'

Lea,

Leigh,

2. William Leigh Mate ſwore, 'that the ſaid Rouſe further endeavour'd to 'get Sea-Men to ſeize on, and command ſome of the King's Ships, ly'ing as Guard-Ships at Woolwich and Deptford: That being ask'd, What
'he would do with Ships without Powder and Shot, with which they 'could not be provided without ſurprizing the Tower? he reply'd, We
'muſt ſecure the Tower and White-Hall both, or we can do nothing.

And Corbin.

Beſides theſe Two, to prove the ſaid Rouſe's former Trayterous Temper of Mind, Mr. Corbin, who had ſworn before the Ignoramus Jury, now teſtify'd, 'that upon ſome Diſcourſe concerning the Parliament at 'Oxford, the Priſoner ſaid, He foreſaw it would be a ſhort Seſſions, but
'that theſe frequent Prorogations and Diſſolutions would not avail him:
'For whatever the King has, the Parliament gave him, and they may
'take it away when they pleaſe: That the King had forfeited his Crown,
'and had no more Right to it than he had.' Againſt this, all the Defence Rouſe made was, 'That the Words atteſted by Corbin, were ſpo-
'ken upon a Suppoſition of the Pope's Power over Princes: That as for
'William Leigh he had nothing to ſay againſt him, but hop'd he was an
'Honeſt Man; and for Thomas Lea, Himſelf firſt began thoſe Treaſo-
'nable Diſcourſes, which Rouſe intended to have reveal'd, had not the 'other got the Start of him.' But this being only ſupported by his ſingle Affirmation without one Witneſs to ſtrengthen it, the Jury preſently brought him in Guilty of High-Treaſon.

His Defence and Condemnation.

Blague's Tryal and Acquittal.

At the ſame Time and Place was try'd Mr. William Blague, a Sea-Captain, for being concern'd in the ſame Deſign of Seizing the Tower, &c. together with John Rouſe; but the Evidence againſt him being imperfect, with reſpect to High-Treaſon, and ſome Circumſtances appearing in his Favour, the Jury brought him in Not Guilty.

The Executions of Walcot, Hone, and Rouſe.

6. About a Week after the Tryals, on the 20th of July, the three ordinary Criminals, Walcot, Hone and Rouſe, were drawn upon Sledges to their Excution at Tyburn, where they all had Speeches, Confeſſions and Prayers; being attended, beſides the Sheriffs, by Dr. Cartwright Dean of Ripon, and Mr. Smith Ordinary of Newgate. Walcot acknowledg'd 'what he had told the King, and writ to the Secretary of State; 'That the Buſineſs was laid very deep; and he ſaid, An Act of Indulgence would do well, becauſe the King had a great many Men to take 'Judgment of. He ſaid he did not blame the Judges, nor the Jury, nor 'the King's Council, but ſome Men that came as Witneſſes againſt him, 'who were deeper concern'd, and more engag'd than Himſelf. He 'perſiſted, he was to have had no Hand in the King's Death, tho' he confeſs'd 'it was propos'd when he was preſent, therefore the King might juſtly 'make him ſuffer. He declar'd he did not know that this Conſpiracy 'was older than laſt Auguſt or September; but ſo old he own'd it was.' The next was Hone, who more expreſly 'own'd himſelf Guilty of the 'Crime for which he ſtood Condemn'd, according to the Laws of God 'and Man. He again alledg'd that he was drawn in; and confeſs'd he 'did ſay, He was for Killing the King, and Saving the Duke of York:' And in his Prayer he particularly begg'd Pardon for that Sin. Laſtly, Rouſe, among other Things ingenuouſly confeſs'd 'He had deſerv'd the 'Sentence paſs'd againſt him; that he had heard and underſtood too 'much in ſeveral Kinds of Meetings, eſpecially of ſome, who tho' they 'call'd themſelves True Proteſtants, were Ten thouſand Times worſe than 'any others.' In his Prayer he has theſe Words; Dwell and reign in the Heart of the King, give him a Long, Proſperous and Happy Reign. —— Bleſs him in his Royal Family and Relations, in his Royal Brother. —— Give Loyalty towards our dread Sovereign, who is a merciful and gracious Prince, whom thou haſt ſet as thy Vicegerent to reign over us. —— We muſt needs acknowledge and ſmite upon our Thighs, that we in Juſtice are brought hither; That we have nothing to do, but to condemn our ſelves, and juſtify the Juſtice of the Land, and to pray to God to bleſs his Majeſty to Reign in theſe Nations, and thoſe that ſhall ſucceed him upon the Throne.

Attempts made to ſave the Lord Ruſſel.

Theſe Executions were the next Day ſucceeded by that of the Lord Ruſſel, whoſe Caſe was pity'd, and whoſe Perſon was admired to a very high Degree; and having many great and rich Friends, ſeveral Attempts were made, as well for his Eſcape, as his Pardon. For the obtaining of the latter, we are aſſured that his Father offer'd his Majeſty no leſs than a Hundred thouſand Pounds for his Life, a Sum very Tempting at this Seaſon; but the Neceſſity of the Times, and the Influence of the Duke of York, are thought to be the main Reaſons why the King prov'd Inexorable. Upon which, a Petition was drawn up for Six Weeks Reprieve, which was preſented by the Lord Ruſſel's Wife; and tho' carry'd by ſo excellent a Lady, and Daughter to the King's greateſt Friend, the Earl of Southampton, it was rejected: and it is ſaid the King's Reply was, Shall I grant that Man Six Weeks, who, if it had been in his Power, would not have granted me Six Hours? As to the Lord Ruſſel's Eſcape, it was particularly projected by his intimate Friend the Lord Cavendiſh, who was willing to run any Hazard to ſerve him; and therefore being about the ſame Size, tho' of no Reſemblance in Faces, he ſent a Meſſage to him by Sir James Forbes, that he would come and change Cloaths with him in Priſon, and try if by ſuch a Diſguiſe he could make his Eſcape. But the Lord Ruſſel was too generous to throw his Friend into ſuch imminent Danger at this Time; therefore he declined ned the obliging Offer, and ſeem'd to have no other Thoughts but to prepare himſelf for Death. In which Preparation he met with no common Difficulties from the two celebrated Divines attending him, Dr. Tillotſon and Dr. Burnet, who much endeavour'd to ſettle his Belief of the Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance, about which his Lordſhip was of a different Opinion from them. He thought 'That a viſible Deſign to bring 'in Popery and Arbitrary Power, which he took to be the preſent Caſe, 'was ſufficient to juſtify Reſiſtance.' But they told him 'That remote 'Fears and Conſequences, together with Illegal Practices, were not ſuf-'ficient in that Caſe; but ſtill the Laws of God and the Land did bind 'Subjects to Submiſſion.' He alledg'd, 'That upon that Hypotheſis, he 'did not ſee a Difference between a Legal and a Turkiſh Conſtitution.' But they anſwer'd, 'That a Total Subverſion alter'd the Caſe; and then 'the King's Authority would come under ſuch a Suſpenſion as might 'give Liberty to his Subjects to Save themſelves.' After ſome Struglings, his Lordſhip ſeem'd ſatisfy'd for a while, but Dr. Tillotſon having Reaſon to think otherwiſe, wrote him a remarkable Letter the Day before his Execution, which is here inſerted, eſpecially becauſe it ſo fully gives the Reaſons and Grounds for Paſſive Obedience, which Doctrine was now in its Height, and embrac'd by Men of all Profeſſions. The Letter will admit of no Abridgment, and is as follows:

He Prepares for Death.

Dr. Tillotſon's Letter to him.

'My Lord, I was heartily glad to ſee your Lordſhip this Morning 'in that calm and devout Temper at the Receiving of the Bleſſed Sacra-'ment; but Peace of Mind, unleſs it be well grounded, will avail little: 'And becauſe tranſient Diſcourſe many Times hath little Effect for want 'of Time to weigh and conſider it, therefore in tender Compaſſion to 'your Lordſhip's Caſe, and from all the Good-Will that one Man can 'bear to another, I do humbly offer to your Lordſhip's deliberate 'Thoughts theſe following Conſiderations concerning the Points of Re-'ſiſtance; if our Religion and Rights ſhould be invaded, as your Lord-'ſhip puts the Caſe, concerning which I underſtand by Dr. Burnet, 'that your Lordſhip had once receiv'd Satisfaction, and am ſorry to find
1. 'a Change. I. That the Chriſtian Religion doth plainly forbid the Reſi-
2. 'ſtance of Authority. II. That tho' our Religion be eſtabliſh'd by Law '(which your Lordſhip urges as a Difference between our Caſe, and 'that of the Primitive Chriſtians) yet in the ſame Law which Eſtabliſh-'es our Religion, it is Declared, That it is not Lawful upon any Pre-'tence whatſoever to take up Arms, &c. Beſides that, there is a parti-'cular Law Declaring the Power of the Militia to be ſolely in the King. 'And that ties the Hands of Subjects, tho' the Law of Nature and the 'general Rules of Scripture had left us at Liberty; which I believe they 'do not, becauſe the Government and Peace of Human Society could
3. 'not well ſubſiſt upon theſe Terms. III. Your Lordſhip's Opinion is 'contrary to the Declared Doctrine of all Proteſtant Churches; and 'tho' ſome particular Perſons have taught otherwiſe, yet they have 'been contradicted herein and condemned for it by the Generality of 'Proteſtants And I beg your Lordſhip to conſider how it will agree 'with an Avow'd Aſſerting of the Proteſtant Religion, to go contrary 'to the general Doctrine of Proteſtants. My End in this is to convince 'your Lordſhip that you are in a very Great and Dangerous Miſtake, 'and being ſo convinc'd, that which before was a Sin of Ignorance, will 'appear of a much more heinous Nature, as in Truth it is, and call for a 'very particular and deep Repentance; which if your Lordſhip ſincere-'ly exerciſe upon the Sight of your Error, by a Penitent Acknowledg-'ment of it to God and Men, you will not only obtain Forgiveneſs of 'God, but prevent a mighty Scandal to the Reform'd Religion. I am

'very

'very loath to give your Lordſhip any Diſquiet in the Diſtreſs you are 'in, which I commiſerate from my Heart, but am much more concern'd 'that you do not leave the World in a Deluſion and Falſe Peace, to the 'Hindrance of your Eternal Happineſs. I heartily pray for you, and 'beſeech your Lordſhip to believe that I am, with the greateſt Sincerity 'and Compaſſion in the World, My Lord, your Lordſhip's moſt faith- 'ful and afflicted Servant. 1683. Car. 35 Reſ. 24

He goes to his Execution.

It does not appear what Effect this Letter had upon his Lordſhip: The next Day, being Saturday the 21ſt of July, having taken his laſt leave of his ſorrowful Lady, the Lord Cavendiſh, and ſeveral others of his Friends at Newgate, his Lordſhip took Coach with Dr. Tillotſon and Dr. Burnet, who accompany'd him to the Scaffold erected in Lincolns-Inn-Fields; where Ten Companies of the King's Guards, and a Troop of Horſe, were ready drawn up to ſecure the Peace againſt ſo mighty and a vaſt Concourſe of People that appear'd there on that melancholy Occaſion; and where there were ſo many weeping Eyes and bleeding Hearts. Having mounted the Scaffold cover'd with Mourning, his Lordſhip gracefully bow'd to thoſe that were preſent, and after a ſhort Pauſe, he told the Sheriff, That he expected the Noiſe would be ſuch that he ſhould not be heard, and therefore he had ſet down in Writing what he thought fit to leave behind him; proteſting his Innocence of any Deſign againſt the King's Perſon, or of altering the Government. He then told the Sheriff he had been informed That Captain Walcot had ſpoken ſome Things concerning his Knowledge of the Plot, and deſir'd to know whether the Report were true. The Sheriff anſwer'd, That he did not hear him ſo much as name his Lordſhip. The Other reply'd, He hop'd he did not, for to his Knowledge, he had never ſeen or ſpoken with him in his Life; and then in the Words of a Dying Man, he profeſs'd, he knew Nothing of a Plot, either againſt the King's Life or Government: But that he had done with the World as going to a better, that he had forgiven all the World heartily, and thank'd God he dy'd in Charity with all Men: He wiſh'd all the Proteſtants might love one another, and not make way for Popery by their Animoſities. Then Kneeling, his Lordſhip pray'd to Himſelf, after which Dr. Tillotſon kneel'd down and pray'd with him, and then he pray'd a Second Time by himſelf; which done, he embrac'd the two Divines, and made himſelf ready: And ordering the Executioner, after he had lain down a ſmall Moment, to do his Office without a Sign, he laid himſelf down upon the Block. The Executioner miſſing his firſt Stroke, tho' with that he took away Life, at two more he ſever'd his Head from his Body; which were order'd by the Sheriff to be deliver'd to his Friends and Servants, as being given them by his Majeſty's Favour and Bounty.

His Speech.

And Death.

The Paper he left behind him.

The Paper he left in the Sheriff's Hands was very long, and made a great Noiſe: The Subſtance of it was; 'Firſt he bleſs'd God, that he was 'born of worthy good Parents, and had had the Advantage of a Religious 'Education, which for many Years had ſo influenc'd and poſſeſs'd him, 'that he felt the Effects of it in his preſent Extremity: That as he had 'liv'd, ſo he dy'd a true and ſincere Proteſtant, and in the Communion of 'the Church of England, tho' he cou'd never yet comply with, or riſe 'up to all the Heights of ſome People: That he had always lov'd his 'Country much more than his Life, and never had any Deſign of Chang- 'ing the Government, which he valu'd and look'd upon as one of the 'beſt Governments in the World, and wou'd have ſuffer'd any Extremi- 'ty, rather than conſented to any Deſign to take away the King's Life. 'That for the King he wiſh'd him well, and ſincerely pray'd for him; 'That the Proteſtant Religion, the Peace and Safety of the Kingdom 'might flouriſh under his Government, and that he in his Perſon might

1683. Car. 35 Ref. 24

'be happy both here and hereafter. That as for the Share which he had 'in the Proſecution of the Popiſh Plot, he proceeded in it in the Sincerity of his Heart; being fully convinc'd, That there was a Conſpiracy 'againſt the King, the Nation, and the Proteſtant Religion. That as for 'his preſent Condition, he had no Repinings in his Heart at it; and that 'he freely forgave the World, and thoſe concern'd in taking away his 'Life, conjuring his Friends never to think of Revenge. He deny'd 'that he was privy to the Undertaking of ſeizing the Guards; but own'd 'that there was ſome Diſcourſe at Mr. Shepard's, about the Feaſibleneſs 'of it; and ſeveral Times by Accident, in general Diſcourſe elſewhere, 'he had heard it mention'd, as a Thing might eaſily be done, but never 'conſented to it as fit to be done; and particularly, at the Lord Shaftsbury's he flew out and exclaim'd againſt it. He further own'd, That at 'Mr. Shepard's there were ſome Things ſaid with more Heat than Judgment, which he did ſufficiently diſapprove, yet for theſe he ſtood condemn'd; but he thank'd God, his Part was ſincere and well meant. How 'much he was acquainted with theſe ill Deſigns, was but Miſpriſion at 'moſt; and ſo he dy'd Innocent of the Crime he ſtood condemn'd for. 'He thought it a ſtrange Fetch, That the Deſign of Seizing the Guards, 'ſhou'd be conſtru'd a Deſign of Killing the King. Towards the Concluſion, to ſum up all, he declar'd, as he never had any Deſign againſt 'the King's Life, or the Life of any Man whatſoever, ſo he never was 'in any Contrivance of Altering the Government; he cou'd not repreſs 'the Heats and Wickedneſſes of other Men, tho' he now ſuffer'd for them.

Cenſures upon it and Him.

This Paper had no ſooner appear'd in Publick, but it was follow'd by as many ſevere Animadverſions and uncharitable Reflections, as had formerly happen'd to the Speeches of the Five Jeſuits, and others that ſuffer'd in the Popiſh Plot; and moſt were ready to think it was drawn up with more Art than was agreeable to his Lordſhip's known Simplicity and Sincerity, therefore Others were ſuſpected to have the Wording of it. Dr. Sprat ſays, As to the whole Matter of it, Time had ſince ſhewn it to be full of Enormous Falſhoods; to maintain which he brings new Proofs from the private Confeſſions of the Duke of Monmouth and Caſtares to the King, both which made it appear his Lordſhip was more acquainted with theſe Tranſactions than he was willing to acknowledge. Others ſaid, he confeſs'd enough to ſhew his Crime, but not his Repentance; and condemn him for in effect acknowledging the Miſpriſion without teſtifying the leaſt Sorrow for that Crime. The moſt that was ſaid for his Lordſhip's Integrity was, That ſo far as he was concern'd, which was ſtill leſs than the reſt, he acted according to Principle, and did really believe, 'That it was lawful for Subjects to procure by Force from 'their Princes, whatſoever they judg'd neceſſary for the Preſervation of 'their Civil, or Religious Rights; provided they did not alter the Government, and in the doing thereof, their Parts were ſincere and well 'meant.' However it was, it cannot be deny'd but that he had hard Uſage, both at and after his Tryal; and that he did not die ſo much for his late Actions, as for thoſe of his Family, and his former Zeal for the Excluſion Bill, &c. which rais'd him to ſuch a Degree of Popularity as made him look'd upon as a dangerous Man. But the more we conſider his Hardſhips, the more we are to think upon the Judgements of Heaven: For whatever may be ſaid in Favour of his Standing up for the Liberties of his Country, he can hardly be clear'd from Thirſting after the Blood of others, eſpecially the Lord Stafford, againſt whom his Zeal tranſported him ſo far, that he was one of thoſe who with Bethel, Corniſh, &c. queſtion'd the King's Power in allowing that Lord to be only Beheaded.

III. 1. The ill Succeſs of the Whig Party, and the general Belief of the new Conſpiracy, made the Tories ride in Triumph this Year, and occaſion'd the Straining, and perhaps not Sufficiently Explaining the Points of Prerogative and Subjection: They now alledg'd 'That the Diſcovery 'of the Plot had decided the Argument, and had ſhewn the Neceſſity of 'Paſſive Obedience;' and accordingly it ſeem'd equally eſpous'd by the Court, the Pulpit, the Bench and the Bar; and, beſides the Arguments brought from the Laws of God, and thoſe of the Land, the Humour of the People carry'd it to that Height, that it was dangerous, or at leaſt unfaſhionable, to oppoſe it. Under the Impulſe of this Zeal, the Univerſity of Oxford made a ſolemn Decree, which paſs'd in the Convocation there, on the ſame Day of the Execution of the Lord Ruſſel, and preſented it to the King under this Title, The Judgment and Decree of the Univerſity of Oxford, Paſs'd in their Convocation, on July 21, 1683. againſt certain pernicious Books, and damnable Doctrines, deſtructive to the Sacred Perſons of Princes, their State and Government, and of all Human Society. In which Decree they formally condemn'd twenty ſeven Propoſitions, collected out of ſeveral Modern Authors, as Buchanan, Bellarmine, Milton, Dolman, Hobbs, Goodwin, Owen, Baxter, Jenkins, Goodman, Julian, Proteſtant Reconciler, &c. Which Propoſitions they declar'd to be 'Falſe, Seditious and Impious; and moſt of them Here-'tical and Blaſphemous, Infamous to Chriſtian Religion, and Deſtructive 'of all Government, both in Church and State.' And the Books from whence they were taken were at the ſame Time order'd to be burnt, in the publick Court of the Schools.

The Oxford Decree.

This was a very acceptable Preſent to the King, tho' it arriv'd at a Time when he was well nigh ſatiated with the Multitude of Addreſſes, which this Summer came crouding in upon him from all Parts of his Dominions. However, to add to the general Exultation, his Majeſty publiſh'd his Declaration to all his Loving Subjects, dated July 28th, whereby was ſet forth a ſmooth Narrative of the Treaſonable Conſpiracy, as it had been lately diſcover'd by the Oaths of ſome, and the Confeſſion of others of the Accomplices; for which happy Diſcovery, his Majeſty appointed by the ſaid Declaration a Solemn Day of Thankſgiving to Almighty God, to be Celebrated throughout the Kingdom, on Sunday the 9th Day of September next: And that the ſaid Declaration be publickly read in all Churches, as well on Sunday the 2d Day of September, as on the Day of Thankſgiving aforeſaid. This Day was ſolemniz'd after a moſt extraordinary Manner, and with mighty Pomp and Magnificence, in all Parts of the Nation; and there was hardly a little Pariſh in England that was not at a conſiderable Expence to teſtify their great Joy and Satisfaction. And it is obſervable what a Popiſh Writer ſays; Nor were thoſe of the Communion of the Church of Rome unmindful of this Deliverance, but did alſo concur with his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects in Expreſſing their Loyal Joy on the ſame Occaſion, and on the ſame 9th of September did Celebrate in all their publick Chappels at London an Extraordinary Service on that Account.

The King's Declaration.

Great Rejoycings.

To add further to the Joy of the Time, the King join'd in a popular Act, and highly acceptable to his Subjects, and that was the Marriage of his Neece the Lady Anne, ſecond Daughter of the Duke of York, to Prince George Brother to the King of Denmark; a Proteſtant Prince, who arriv'd at White-Hall about ten Days before the Match was determin'd. The Ceremony of it was perform'd upon Saturday the 28th of July, being St. Anne's Day, about Ten in the Evening, by the Biſhop of London, in the Preſence of King, Queen, Duke and Dutcheſs, and moſt of of the great Perſonages of the Court. All that Night, and the next, the Bells, Bonefires, &c. proclaim'd the Publick Joy. And immediately after the happy Pair receiv'd the Compliments and Congratulations of all the Foreign Ambaſſadors and Publick Miniſters then in Town; and alſo of the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen, in their greateſt Splendor. It is remarkable that the King, whoſe Heart in Point of Religion was more at Rome than any other Place, ſhou'd take Care that his two Neices ſhou'd be ſtrictly bred up in the Religion of the Church of England, and both marry'd into Proteſtant Families, even againſt the Inclination, and the Deſign and Intereſt of their own Father.

Election of Sheriffs, &c.

2. To proceed to the Affairs of the City of London, where the Struggles formerly had been greater than in any Parts of the Kingdom, the Day for Election of Sheriffs for that City and Middleſex, which of Courſe is on the 24th of June, was this Year adjourn'd to the 5th Day of September; on which Day the Livery-Men of the City being aſſembled at Guild-Hall, they confirmed the Lord Mayor's Choice of Peter Daniel Eſquire, and choſe Samuel Daſhwood Eſquire to ſerve with him, as Sheriff for the Year inſuing. At the ſame Time Mr. Deputy Ailworth was choſen into the Office of Chamberlain of the City of London in the Room of Sir Thomas Player, Remov'd. All which, with the other Elections of Bridge-Maſter, and Ale-Cunner, are obſerv'd to have been perform'd with the ancient Gravity and Moderation, and no ways with ſuch Riotous and Factious Heats and Animoſities as of late Years. Shortly after, on Michaelmas Day, the uſual Time for the Election of a new Lord Mayor, the Choice was adjourn'd over for Six Days longer; but before that Day came, the King, taking Advantage at the Delays of the City's not ſigning the Particulars, relating to the Charter, formerly yielded, caus'd the Attorney General to enter Judgment of Seizure in the Quo Warranto, which was actually done upon the 4th of October: And thereupon his Majeſty gave his Commiſſion to Sir William Prichard, the preſent Lord Mayor, to execute the ſaid Office during Pleaſure; and the ſame to the two new Sheriffs, Daniel and Daſhwood, who all took the uſual Oaths. At the ſame Time Mr. Jenner of the Inner-Temple was Knighted by the Name of Sir Thomas Jenner, and made the King's Recorder of London, in the Room of the noted Sir George Treby, now diſplac'd.

Changes in the City.

This Point being gain'd by the King, on Sunday the 7th of October, the continuing Lord Mayor and the two Sheriffs appear'd at Guild-Hall Chappel, as uſually in their Gowns and Chains; but ſeveral of the Loyal Aldermen attended in their ordinary Habits; ſixteen of them being made Juſtices of the Peace by the King's new Commiſſion, in which Eight Diſaffected Aldermen were left out, viz. Allen, Frederick, Laurence, Clayton, Ward, Shorter, Gold and Corniſh. But on the 13th of October, the King thought fit to ſend a new Commiſſion to the City, Impowering the aforeſaid ſixteen well affected Aldermen, together with Eight new Perſons, Sir Benjamin Newland, Sir Benjamin Bathurſt, Sir John Buckworth, Samuel Daſhwood, one of the preſent Sheriffs, Charles Duncomb, Jacob Lucy, Peter Palavazine, and Benjamin Thorogood, to act as Aldermen in their ſeveral Wards in the ſaid Commiſſion mention'd. And accordingly ſeveral of them attended on the Lord Mayor the Day following, being Sunday, at Guild-Hall Chappel, after the uſual Form and Manner, in Gowns and Chains, and the next they aſſembled in a Court of Aldermen, according to the ancient Cuſtom.

Sir Henry Tulſe, Lord Mayor.

Not long after, at St. Simon and Jude's Day, the annual Solemnity of ſwearing the Lord Mayor in the Exchequer, his Majeſty thought fit to give a further Inſtance of his Authority, by Appointing Sir Henry Tulſe by by his Commiſſion to execute that Office during his Pleaſure. Accordingly that Day he was after the uſual Manner attended to Weſtminſter by the ſeveral Companies, did the uſual Ceremonies in the Hall, made the uſual Cavalcade in London, but without Pageants, and din'd at Grocers-Hall; the other Companies dining without Noiſe at their ſeveral Halls as in former Years. So that now all Things in the City ſeem'd to be in a quiet and eaſy Condition; only about a Week after, on the 5th of November, ſome Tumults and Riotous Actions were committed by the Multitude in and about the City; eſpecially upon the Sieur Citters, Ambaſſador from the States of the United Provinces, by aſſaulting his Coach, and throwing into it ſeveral Squibs, Stones and Firebrands, whereby his Lady, who was then with him, was dangerouſly wounded. Complaint whereof being made to the King and Council, two Days after, his Majeſty was pleas'd to publiſh an Order for the future, 'That 'no Perſons whatſoever do preſume to throw any Squibs, or other Fire-'Works, in the Streets of London, or Weſtminſter, or other Place with-'in the Weekly Bills of Mortality, nor Aſſemble together for the Mak-'ing of Bone-Fires: And the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Juſtices of 'Peace in their reſpective Limits, are required to take due Care for 'the Performance of the ſaid Order of Council.

Bonefires, &c. forbid.

3. All this while the Proſecution of the late Conſpirators went forward with ſlow and regular Steps; and about the Beginning of Auguſt, in a Proclamation from the King, a Deſcription was given, and a particular Reward promis'd, for the Diſcovery of theſe Conſpirators that fled; 'Richard and Francis Goodenough, Richard Nelthorp, Nathaniel Wade, 'Joſeph Tyley, Stephen Lobb, Hugh Weſtlach, Edward Norton, John 'Row, John Ayloffe, and Robert Ferguſon;' of whom the laſt was thus remarkably deſcrib'd, 'A Tall Lean Man, Dark-brown-Hair, a great 'Roman-Noſe, Thin-Jaw'd, Heat in his Face, ſpeaks in the Scotch Tone, 'a Sharp Piercing Eye, Stoops a little in the Shoulders; he hath a ſhuf-'ling Gate that differs from all Men, wears his Perriwig down almoſt 'over his Eyes, about forty five Years of Age,' As to thoſe accus'd Perſons they had in Poſſeſſion, the Court ſeem'd very dilatory; and it was near four Months after the Execution of the Lord Ruſſel, before the Chief and the Oldeſt of them, Colonel Sidney, was brought to his Tryal. Before which Time, there happen'd a conſiderable Change in Weſtminſter-Hall: The celebrated Sir George Jeffreys was made Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, in the Room of Sir Edward Saunders, Deceaſed; and in the Common-Pleas, Sir Francis Pemberton being put out, Sir Thomas Jones was made Lord Chief Juſtice there in his Room; and Sir Richard Holloway was ſworn one of the Judges of the King's-Bench, in the Room of Judge Raymond, Deceas'd.

Proſecution of the Plot.

A Change in the Bench.

All Things being prepared, on the 21ſt of November came on the Tryal of the honourable Colonel Algernoon Sidney, Brother to the Earl of Leiceſter, a Perſon of excellent Parts, who had been deeply involv'd in the Grand Rebellion, as was formerly hinted, and nominated one of the late King's Judges: Upon the preſent King's Return, his fixt Averſion to the Reſtor'd Government was ſuch, that he wou'd not perſonally accept of the Oblivion and Indemnity then generally granted to the whole Nation; but he became a voluntary Exile for many Years, till about 1677 he came again into England, and by the King's ſpecial Grace obtain'd a particular Pardon, upon repeated Promiſes of conſtant Quiet and Obedience for the time to come. So that upon this new Accuſation againſt him, he was not to expect any Favour; nor indeed did he meet with any. He was brought before the Lord Chief Juſtice Jeffreys, and other Judges, at the King's-Bench Bar: The Indictment, at the Time he came to the Hall, was so far from being Found by the Grand Jury, that it was not so much as Presented to them; but the King's Council, who had packt that Jury, as Hawles tells us, knew it wou'd be Accepted and Found upon Sight, which was accordingly done, and the Colonel Arraign'd. He was Indicted 'for designing to depose the King, and being one of the Great 'Council of Six; for sending Aaron Smith into Scotland; and for Wri-'ting a most Treasonable Libel against the Government, which was 'found in his Closet, on the Table, when his Papers were seiz'd.' He struggled hard to quash this Indictment, as consisting of different and distinct Accusations; but he was told by the Court that he must Plead over or Demurr, which last was at his Peril, and upon no other Terms Exceptions cou'd, or ought to be Admitted; after which he Pleaded Not Guilty. His Arraignment was upon the 7th, but his Tryal did not come on till the foremention'd 21st of November; a critical Time, when the Duke of Monmouth was then making his Peace with the King.

His Tryal.

The Tryal began with the Evidences of West, Romsey and Keeling, who gave a particular Account of the Plot, but said nothing directly against the Prisoner himself, who complain'd of it as a great Hardship, as prepossessing the Jury: But the Court answer'd him with an unlucky Retort, That it had been practis'd in all the Tryals in the Popish Plot, and particularly by Sir William Jones, a Person unexceptionable to the Prisoner. The only direct and living Witness against him was the Lord Howard, who as to the Council of Six, and the Colonel's being one of them, depos'd to the same Sense as he had done at the Lord Russel's Tryal; adding now one Particular, which more especially affected him,

The Lord Howard's Evidence.

'That the said Colonel, the Duke of Monmouth, and the Deponent were 'the first Movers of Erecting that Council; the Duke of Monmouth 'ingaging to incline the Lord Russel to it, and Colonel Sidney promising 'for the Earl of Essex and Mr. Hambden. At their first Meeting at 'Mr. Hambden's in January, he said it was chiefly debated how to make 'a Coalition of Councils between them and Scotland; That it was pro-'pos'd that some fit Person shou'd be thought on to send thither to u-'nite them and the English Conspirators into one Sense and Care. At the 'next, which was at the Lord Russel's House, they determin'd that the 'Scotch Gentlemen to be sent to, shou'd be Melvin, Cockran and the 'Cambels; That Colonel Sidney offer'd he wou'd take Care of the Person 'to be sent, saying, He had one in his Thoughts whom he judg'd a fit Man 'to be trusted, naming Aaron Smith for the Man. The Company thought 'him a proper Person, and the Duke of Monmouth undertook to invite 'Melvin hither, and a Letter was to be sent to Cockran by Smith; That 'these Scotch Men were desired to come and acquaint their Council here, 'how they found Scotland temper'd, what Opportunities or Advantages 'there might be of putting that Kingdom into a Commotion, and how 'they might there keep Time and Place with the English. That shortly 'after, the Deponent went to Colonel Sidney's, and found him just going 'into London; and that he took out of a Cabinet several Guineas, say-'ing, They were to be given to Aaron Smith for his Expences: That he 'was sent accordingly, and the Colonel told the Deponent afterwards, 'He was gone, and was upon the Road, and that he had heard from him 'when he was about Newcastle.' Then as a considerable Circumstance, it was prov'd by others, That these Scotch Men did come up to London, soon after Aaron Smith arriv'd in their Counntry. It being demanded of the Colonel, Whether he wou'd ask the Lord Howard any Questions, he answer'd He had no Questions to ask him; whereupon the Attorney-General said, Silence——you know the Proverb.

The

The Treasonable Pamphlet in his Study

The next Head of the Accusation concern'd the Treasonable Pamphlet found in the Prisoner's Study, prov'd to be his own Hand-Writing, and charg'd not only to be against Monarchy in general, but the English Monarchy in particular. The Positions thought most culpable were: 'That Power is originally in the People of England, and delegated to 'the Parliament; and that the King is subject to the Law of God, as 'he is a Man, and to the People that make him, as he is a King; and 'the Parliament is Judge of the particular Cases thereupon arising: That 'the King must be content to submit his Interest to theirs, since he is 'no more than any of them in any other Respect, than that he is by Con-'sent of all rais'd above any other; and if he doth not like this Condi-'tion, he may renounce the Crown; but if he receive it upon this Con-'dition, and swear to perform it, he must expect the Performance will 'be exacted, or Revenge taken by those he hath betray'd. We may 'therefore change or take away Kings without breaking any Yoak, or 'that is made a Yoak which ought not to be made one; for the Injury 'is in Making, and Imposing, and there can be none in Breaking it. 'That the People must needs be the Judges of what happens between 'them and the King whom they did constitute; and that the Power of 'Calling and Dissolving of Parliaments is not in the King.

His Defence.

What the Colonel said for himself, in the several Parts of his Tryal, was long and notable, and shew'd that under these Difficulties he had been long accustom'd to the Art of Fencing. He argu'd the great Improbability of Erecting a Council of Six; and that Persons so little knowing one another, shou'd presently fall into so great and intimate Friendship. As to the Duke of Monmouth, added he, I never spoke with him above three Times in my Life, and one Time was when my Lord Howard brought him to my House, and cozen'd us both; for he told the Duke I invited him, and he told me the Duke had invited himself, and neither of them was true. So he took Occasion to strike several Ways at that Lord's Reputation, who was the only direct Witness against him. 'He insisted 'upon denying the Plot, and his varying his Evidence, with respect to the 'Lord Russel's and the present Tryal, together with some Additions and 'Deviations: He alledg'd his Lordship's Indigence, and his owing him 'Money, which Debt might probably be cancell'd by his Conviction: 'And more especially to invalidate his Credit, he laid open his Lord-'ship's further Difficulties, and particularly that he confess'd, That he 'cou'd not get his Pardon until he had done some other Jobbs, till he was 'past the Drudgery of Swearing. To prove these and the like Allega-'tions against this single Witness, he produc'd the Earl of Anglesey, the 'Earl of Clare, Mr. Philip Howard, Mr. Edward Howard, Dr. Burnet, 'Mr. Ducas and Mr. Blake; which last Witness testify'd his Lord-ship's Words concerning the Drudgery of Swearing. As to the Papers charg'd upon him, he wou'd not grant them to be his, or if they were found in his Study, he affirm'd, 'That they might have been written ma-'ny Years ago in Answer to Sir Robert Filmer's Book of Monarchy; 'and written with no Intention of Publishing them, but Disputandi gra-'tia, only for private Diversion, and the Exercise of his Pen.' After this he hung with his whole Weight upon the Necessity of two Witnesses to the same Fact, and argu'd, 'That for One to come and tell a Tale of 'an Imaginary Council, and Another of a Libel, a Paper writ no Body 'knows when, is a Thing never to be got over: But if the Law of God 'be, that there must be Two Witnesses to the same Fact, in the Case of 'Life and Death, there is an End of this Matter. Now, added he, there 'are but two Things, which if allow'd of, no Body will be safe from Per-'jury; the One is, to suffer Men to give their Testimony, One to one

1683. Car. 35 Ref. 24

'Thing, and another to Another, ſo that the Fraud cannot be diſcovered; and the Other is, to take away the Puniſhment: Now the Puniſhment is in ſome Meaſure taken away; and do but take away the other Point, whereby the Fraud cannot be diſcover'd, and then no Defence can be made. That both Witneſſes ſhould be to the ſame Point, ſee the Story of Suſanna: Two Elders teſtify'd they ſaw her in the Act of Adultery, and both of them ſaid the ſame Thing; but until they were taken aſunder and examin'd, the Fraud was not diſcover'd; and then one nam'd one Tree, and the other Another; ſo She eſcap'd, and they were puniſh'd.

The Court's Anſwer to it. In Anſwer to this Defence, the Court undertook to ſupport the Credit of the Lord Howard, who they ſaid 'could have no Advantage in Swearing againſt the Priſoner upon the Account of Debt, ſince the Eſtate that was to pay it would be forfeited to the Crown; and that as to the Drudgery of Swearing alledg'd againſt him, it might be ſo irkſome, when a Man accuſes himſelf, as to provoke a Man to give it ſuch an Epithet. As to Papers found in his Study, they told him that Scribere eſt agere; and that there was ſufficient in them to prove the Malice of his Heart, and his Treaſonable Deſigns.' As to the great Point of the Neceſſity of two Witneſſes, they firſt gave him a retaliating Stroke, the Caſe of the Lord Stafford, where before the two Houſes of Parliament it was Declared, 'That one Witneſs to a Conſpiracy in England, and another to a Conſpiracy in France, were held two Witneſſes ſufficient to convict him of High-Treaſon.' To unite theſe two different Teſtimonies, they refin'd upon the Argument, and brought two Inſtances; the Sollicitor-General ſaid, 'Suppoſe a Man was in a Room, and there were two Men, and he talks with both apart, and he comes to one and endeavours to perſuade him that it is lawful to riſe in Arms againſt the King, if ſo be he breaks his Truſt; and he ſhould go to another Man, and tell him the King hath broken his Truſt, and we muſt ſeek ſome Way to redreſs our ſelves; and perſuade the People to Riſe; theſe two Witneſſes do ſo Tack this Treaſon together, that they will be two Witneſſes to prove him Guilty of High-Treaſon. The other Inſtance was produced by the Lord Chief-Juſtice, as a Try'd Caſe not long ago, and was propos'd thus, 'If I buy a Knife of I. S. to kill the King, and it be prov'd by one Witneſs I bought a Knife for this Purpoſe, and another come and proves I bought ſuch a Knife of I. S. they are two Witneſſes ſufficient to prove a Man Guilty of High-Treaſon: And ſo it was held by all the Judges of England then preſent.' The whole ſumming up the Evidence was very ſevere, with a particular Inſinuation, 'that he was not only Guilty of the Practices charg'd upon him, but he could not have been otherwiſe, becauſe his Principles led him to it.' Hawles and others warmly reflect upon the Tryal, and the Verdict of the Jury Found Guilty. that found him Guilty; and the firſt tells us 'that this was the firſt Indictment of High-Treaſon, upon which any Man loſt his Life, for Writing any thing without Publiſhing it.

He was found Guilty upon the 21ſt of November, but did not receive Sentence till five Days after, when he was brought to the King's-Bench Bar in order to it. Here he had a new Struggle for his Life, but in vain, and in Concluſion he cry'd out, I muſt appeal to God and the World, I am not heard. When Sentence according to the uſual Form was paſs'd

His Speech at his Sentence. upon him by the Lord Chief Juſtice, he immediately ſaid, Then, O God, O God! I beſeech thee to ſanctify theſe Sufferings unto me, and impute not my Blood to the Country, nor the City through which I am to be drawn; Let no Inquiſition be made for it; but if any, and the ſhedding of Blood that is Innocent, muſt be reveng'd, Let the Weight of it fall only upon upon thoſe, that maliciouſly perſecute me for Righteouſneſs ſake. Whereupon the Chief-Juſtice ſaid, I pray God work in you a Temper fit to go into the other World, for I ſee you are not fit for this. Upon which the Colonel held up his Hand, and cry'd, My Lord, feel my Pulſe, and ſee if I am diſorder'd; I bleſs God, I never was in better Temper, than I am now. However, being return'd to the Tower, he ſent a long Petition to the King, in which he ſet forth with great Boldneſs the Injuſtice he had met with, the Violence of the Chief-Juſtice, and the Jury's being hurry'd into a Verdict they did not underſtand, deſiring to be admitted into his Majeſty's Preſence; and concluding, 'That if he did not ſhew 'it was for his Majeſty's Honour and Intereſt to preſerve him from this 'ſad Oppreſſion, he would not complain, tho' he were left to be de'ſtroyed. 1683. Car. 35 Reſ. 24

His Execution, in reſpect to his Quality, was alter'd from the uſual Puniſhment of High-Treaſon, to that of Beheading. Being brought upon a Scaffold on Tower-Hill, on the 7th of December, he deliver'd to the Sheriffs a written Paper; wherein, after having excus'd his not Speaking what he wrote, by alledging this Reaſon, That this was an Age, which makes Truth paſs for Treaſon; he objects againſt his Witneſſes, and particularly the infamous Life of the Lord Howard: And afterwards he falls ſeverely upon the Judges, ſaying, Leſt the Means of Deſtroying the beſt Proteſtants in England ſhould fail, the Bench was fill'd with ſuch as had been Blemiſhes to the Bar. As to his Papers found in his Cloſet, he rather ſtood up in Vindication of them, tho' he complain'd of the Want of Proof in that Matter; and again exclaim'd againſt a packt Jury, and other Hardſhips: Concluding all with a Prayer, in which he has theſe ſtrange Expreſſions: Tho' I fall a Sacrifice to Idols, ſuffer not Idolatry to be eſtabliſh'd in this Land: Bleſs thy People and ſave them. Defend thy own Cauſe; Defend thoſe that defend it: Stir up ſuch as are faint; Direct thoſe that are willing; Confirm thoſe that waver; Give Wiſdom and Integrity unto all. —— Grant that I may dye Glorifying thee for all thy Mercies; and that at the laſt thou haſt permitted me to be ſingled out as a Witneſs of thy Truth, and even by the Confeſſion of my Oppoſers, for that Old Cause in which I was from my Youth engag'd, and for which thou haſt often wonderfully declar'd thy Self. This laſt was thought ſo Enthuſiaſtical and Shocking, that his Death was much leſs pity'd and lamented than that of the Lord Ruſſel, tho' the Hardſhips he met withall were look'd upon to be greater than any before him. His Execution, and laſt Speech.

4. What ſeem'd to have forwarded this Gentleman's Fate was the private and unexpected Arrival of the Duke of Monmouth from his Retirement, before the Tryal began, and his Reception when it was in effect depending. That popular Nobleman had abſconded ever ſince the King's Proclamation for the Apprehending Him amongſt other Conſpirators; but now, in Confidence of his Father's old Tenderneſs and Affection, he reſolv'd to ſubmit and diſcover Himſelf. In order to which, he found Means to hold a ſecret Correſpondence with the King, and to convey the following remarkable Letter into his Hands: The Duke of Monmouth's private Return.

His Firſt Letter to the King.

'If I could write to your Majeſty ſooner, with any Safety to my ſelf, I 'would have done it, to have told you, That there is nothing under 'Heaven has ſtruck me ſo to the Heart, as to be put into a Proclama'tion For an Intention of Murdering of You, Sir, and the Duke. I do 'call God Almighty to Witneſs, and I wiſh I may dye this Moment I 'am Writing, if ever it enter'd into my Head, or ever I ſaid the leaſt 'Thing to any Body that could make them think I could wiſh ſuch a 'Thing; I am ſure there cannot be ſuch Villains upon Earth to ſay I 'ever did. But I am ſo innocent as to this Point, that I will ſay no more

‘ of it; for I know God Almighty is Juſt, and I do not doubt but he ‘ will put it into your Heart, that I am clear of this moſt horrid and ‘ baſe Accuſation. But, Sir, the chief Intent of this Letter is to beg Pardon ‘ both of You, Sir, and the Duke, for the many Things I have done, that ‘ have made you both angry with me; but more eſpecially of the Duke, ‘ tho' I might have ſome Juſtification for my ſelf, that many People made ‘ me believe he intended to deſtroy me: For to You, Sir, I do proteſt ‘ before God Almighty, and I wiſh I may never proſper more, that all I ‘ have done was only to ſave You; as I ſhall convince your Majeſty, if ‘ ever I am ſo happy to ſpeak to You; and I hope you will let me do ‘ it before it be long; for I have that to ſay to you, Sir, that will ever ‘ I hope ſettle you quiet in your Kingdom, and the Duke after You, ‘ whom I intend to ſerve to the utmoſt of my Power; and Sir, to con- ‘ vince him that I will do ſo, if your Majeſty will give me your Pardon, ‘ I will deliver my ſelf up into his Hands, that the Duke may bring me ‘ to You: Beſides, Sir, I ſhould be glad to have him by when I ſpeak to ‘ You, but no Body elſe; and by this Kindneſs of the Duke's, if ever I ‘ ſhould do any Thing afterwards againſt him, I muſt be thought the Un- ‘ gratefulleſt Man living. What Good can it do You, Sir, to take your ‘ own Child's Life away, that only erred and ventur'd his Life to ſave ‘ Yours? And beſides, Sir, I am ſure I can be ſerviceable to you; and, if ‘ I may ſay ſo, make the reſt of your Life happy, or at leaſt contribute a ‘ great deal towards it. You may believe me, Sir, for I do not tell you ‘ this out of Fear, but becauſe I do think my ſelf ſure of it. I do beg ‘ of you, Sir, if you have any Thoughts of Mercy of me, that you will ‘ let me know it ſoon, for the ſooner I ſpeak to you, the better. And ‘ now, Sir, I do ſwear to You, That from this Time, I will never diſ- ‘ pleaſe you in any Thing; but the whole Study of my Life ſhall be to ‘ ſhew how truly Penitent I am for having done it, and how well I will ‘ deſerve the Life you give me. And for the Duke, that he may have a ‘ more firm Confidence of the Service I intend to do to him, I do here ‘ Declare to your Majeſty, That I will never ask to ſee your Face more, ‘ if ever I do any Thing againſt him; which is the greateſt Curſe I can ‘ lay upon my Self.

The King's Anſwer.

Upon the Receipt of this Letter, the King, mov'd by an indearing Affection, could ſcarcely diſſemble his Joy and Satisfaction; and thereupon immediately return'd this Anſwer with his own Hand; If the Duke of Monmouth deſires to make himſelf capable of my Mercy, he muſt render himſelf to the Secretary, and reſolve to tell me all he knows, reſigning himſelf entirely to my Pleaſure. Which plain Declaration of his Majeſty's Will, drew from the Duke this Second Letter, no leſs to be remember'd than the Other.

The Duke's Second Letter.

‘ You muſt allow me, Sir, ſtill to importune you, not without Hopes ‘ of Prevailing at laſt upon your Genroſity, ſo as it may get the better of ‘ your Anger to me. I am half diſtracted, Sir, with the Thoughts of ‘ having offended You; and the Torment it gives me is perhaps greater ‘ than your forgiving Nature would know how to inflict upon the moſt ‘ Criminal Offenders. The Character I lye under is too heavy for me to ‘ bear; even Death itſelf would be a Relief to me, could I have it with- ‘ out the Aggravation of leaving the World under your Diſpleaſure: I ‘ muſt therefore throw my ſelf upon your Compaſſion, which being a ‘ Virtue ſo agreeable to your Nature, I hope your Child, Sir, will not be ‘ an unfortunate Inſtance of your denying it, when 'tis implor'd. I con- ‘ feſs, Sir, I have been in Fault, miſ-led, and inſenſibly engag'd in Things ‘ of which the Conſequence was not enough underſtood by me; yet I ‘ can ſay I never had a Criminal Thought towards your Majeſty, not pre-

‘ tending

'ment; and by ſeeing Things in a wrong Light, betray me into very Fa'tal Miſtakes: But now that I have had Time to recollect my ſelf, eve'ry Thing like a Fault towards your Majeſty appeareth to me in ſuch a
'reproaching terrifying Shape, that I have a Remorſe for it, which cou'd
'it be ſeen, I aſſure my Self it would move your Compaſſion to me. I hum-
'bly beg, Sir, to be admitted to your Feet, and to be diſpos'd of as you
'direct, not only now, but for the Remainder of my Life; And tho' my
'Reſignation is too full to admit any Reſerve, your Majeſty will permit
'me to offer to you, whether you will let paſs any Thing as a Penalty 'upon me, which may lay a Stain upon my Innocent Children? Whether 'you will make me undergo the Ignominy of a Tryal, before you give 'me your Pardon? And of what Uſe and Satisfaction it can be to you to 'forgive me, and yet give me the cruel Puniſhment of hearing my ſelf
'Arraign'd for Treaſon againſt ſuch a King, and ſuch a Father? And 'whether my being carry'd to the Tower, in Caſe you be pleas'd to ex-

'of One, who God knoweth is already enough afflicted, and ſome kind
'of Blemiſh too, to my Family, as well as an uſeleſs Limitation of your
'Majeſty's Mercy. Sir, I lay theſe Things before you in the moſt ſub-
'mitting Manner that is poſſible, with an intire Reſignation to what you
'ſhall determine. Neither do I imagine to receive your Pardon *other-
'wiſe than by the Interceſſion of the Duke*, whom I acknowledge to have 'offended, and am prepared to ſubmit my ſelf in the humbleſt Manner;
'and therefore beg your Majeſty would direct how I am to apply my
'ſelf to Him; and I ſhall do it, not as an outward Form, but with all 'the Sincerity in the World. If what I have ſaid can move you to for'get my paſt Faults, it will be a Grace I ſhall endeavour to deſerve by 'all the Actions of my Life: And I am ſo ſenſible how ill a Guide my 'own Will hath been to me, that I am reſolv'd for the future to put it
'entirely into your Majeſty's Hands, that I may by that Means never 'commit a Fault, but for want of your Directions, or your Commands.
'Dear Sir, be pleas'd to revive by a kind Anſwer *the moſt miſerable diſ-
'conſolate Creature now living*, Monmouth.

He is admitted to the King's Preſence.

Upon the Receipt of this ſecond Letter, his Majeſty could no longer doubt the Sincerity of the Duke of Monmouth, therefore on Sunday the 25th of November, he without Reſerve admitted him into his Preſence, being introduc'd by Mr. Secretary Jenkins. The Secretary being withdrawn, and the King and his Brother by themſelves, the Duke of Monmouth firſt threw himſelf at his Majeſty's Feet, acknowledging his Guilt, and ask'd his Pardon; then he confeſs'd himſelf faulty to the Duke of York, ask'd his Pardon alſo, and aſſur'd him, If he ſhould ſurvive his Majeſty, that he would pay him all the Duty that became a Loyal Subject, and be the firſt that ſhould draw his Sword for him, ſhould there be Occaſion. In making his Confeſſion, he deny'd he had any Knowledge or Thought of the Aſſaſſinating part of the Conſpiracy; but as to the Deſign of the Inſurrection, he made no ſcruple to own his Share; and to ſet it forth ſo largely, that there was little of the Conſpiracy before known, which the ſaid Duke did not confirm; and many Paſſages of it were before unknown, which he reveal'd. He confirm'd the Deſign of the Meeting at Mr. Shepard's Houſe, where the Lord Ruſſel was preſent and conſenting, and that of Colonel Sidney's being one of the Council of Six, which corroborated the Lord Howard's Evidence; and he further added that Dr. Owen, Mr. Mead, Mr. Griffith, and all the conſiderable Nonconformiſt Miniſters, knew of the Conſpiracy.

Being

He obtains his Pardon.

Being thus frank in his Confeſſion, his Majeſty made no Delay to give him all the Proofs of his entire Forgiveneſs, and of his renew'd Affections and Bounty to him; preſently cheriſhing him near his Perſon with his wonted Tenderneſs; declaring in Council the perfect Satisfaction he had receiv'd by his Submiſſion, and ordering his Pardon to be diſpatch'd with all Expedition: And over and above, at his very earneſt Intreaty, he granted him an uncommon Favour, namely, That he ſhou'd not be brought to be a Witneſs againſt any Man. Yet no ſooner was the Pardon compleated in due Form of Law, but the King and the whole Court was afreſh allarm'd with the continual Reſort to him of divers Perſons, whom his Majeſty knew to be engag'd, and had ſufficient Proof to convict them in Courſe of Law, if he wou'd have produc'd it all. To which at the ſame time were added many high and bold Speeches of his Accomplices and Dependents, ſaying, That the Duke of Monmouth had made no Confeſſion, but had aſſerted the Innocency of ſome that had ſuffer'd; Which manifeſtly tended to vilify the Truth of the whole Diſcovery.

Whereupon at laſt the King was awaken'd, and thought fit to put him gently in mind by what was ſo lately paſs'd, of his Danger of Relapſing into the ſame Miſchief, out of which nothing but his Royal Goodneſs had recover'd him. And for the better Security of the Duke himſelf, as well as the Kingdom, his Majeſty inſtantly demanded of him to give ſome ſuch Satisfaction to the whole Nation in Publick, as he had lately given to Himſelf and Brother. The Duke ſeem'd willing to comply with the King's reaſonable Deſires; and all that his Majeſty oblig'd him to do, was to write over, and ſubſcribe a Letter, which his Majeſty himſelf was pleas'd ſo to Word, as not only to conſult the Duke's Safety, but alſo his Credit, ſo much as it cou'd poſſibly ſtand with his own Safety or Credit.

He Signs a Paper.

The Letter was in theſe Words; 'I have heard of ſome Reports of me, 'as if I ſhou'd have leſſen'd the late Plot, and gone about to diſcredit the 'Evidence given againſt thoſe, who have dy'd by Juſtice. Your Ma'jeſty and the Duke know how Ingenuouſly I have own'd the late Conſpi'racy; and tho' I was not conſcious of any Deſign againſt your Majeſty's 'Life, yet I lament the having had ſo great a Share in the other Part of 'the ſaid Conſpiracy. Sir, I have taken the liberty to put this in Writing 'for my own Vindication; and I beſeech you to look forward, and en'deavour to forget the Faults you have forgiven me: I will take care ne'ver to commit any more againſt You, or come within the Danger of 'being again miſ-led from my Duty, but make it the Buſineſs of my Life 'to deſerve the Pardon your Majeſty hath granted to Your Dutiful Mon'mouth.' This was thought a very eaſy and moderate Penance from a Perſon whoſe Failures appear'd upon the Encreaſe, and as ſuch was ſeemingly accepted by the Duke, who without Heſitation wrote the Letter over, ſubſcrib'd it with his own Hand, and preſented it to his Majeſty.

After all which, his former Adherents and Flatterers ſtill flocking about him, and animating him to continue faithful to his old Friends, and aſſuring him, He cou'd not fail ſhortly to overbear all Oppoſers, by the Power of his recover'd and increas'd Favour; they ſo far prevail'd upon his unſtable Mind, as to overthrow all his new made Vows of Loyalty. Inſomuch that preſently after he came raſhly to the King, and earneſtly intreated, That the foreſaid Letter might be return'd to him again; alledging, That he fear'd ſome Opportunity might be taken from it by his Enemies to blaſt his Reputation, and perhaps to bring him in to give Evidence againſt others his Companions in the Conſpiracy. His Majeſty had often promis'd him enough to free his Mind from any ſuch Apprehenſions; but when all Proteſtations on his Part cou'd have no Effect, and the Duke

ſtill

ſtill vehemently inſiſted, That the Paper he had ſign'd might be deliver'd him back, the King told him once for all, He wou'd never keep it againſt his Will, that he might not have the leaſt Occaſion to ſay he was forc'd to write what he did: But withal he ſeriouſly warn'd him to conſider, What irreparable ill Conſequences on his Part, were like to follow upon his Obſtinacy; and therefore gave him Time till the next Morning to deliberate calmly with himſelf, what was to be his final Reſolution. The next Day the Duke of Monmouth appearing ſtill more fixt in his fatal Demand, his Majeſty freely put the Letter again into his Hands; but withal from that Moment baniſh'd him from his Preſence and the Court; being the 7th of December, and the ſame Day that Colonel Sidney was executed. 1683. Car. 25 Reſ. 34

And is baniſh'd from the Court.

The Duke of Monmouth ſoon after retired to Holland, and met with a very handſome Reception at the Hague: His Majeſty, retaining a ſecret Affection for him, it ſeems was well pleas'd with the Entertainment he found in another Court, tho' for Reaſons of State he was oblig'd to forbid him his own. And we are further told, that he privately ſupply'd him with Mony, and ſometimes writ to him with his own Hand; and cou'd not eaſily ſuffer thoſe Courtiers, who, by miſtake, thought it a Compliment to ſpeak ill of him, and to aggravate his Diſobedience, in his Preſence. However, the Troubles that were given for ſeveral late Years by this Son, and the Care and Anxiety ſuſtain'd by the Father, is one clear Inſtance, among many others that might be given, That the Criminal Pleaſures of Kings, Princes, and other great Men, as they can receive no Mitigation from their high Condition, ſo they can prove no Alleviation of the Troubles and Vexations of this World.

He goes to Holland.

5. To draw towards a Concluſion of this remarkable Year: about the Beginning of December there began an extraordinary and wonderful Froſt, which laſted without any Intermiſſion till the 5th of February; during which Time the Thames was frozen over with a ſolid and contiguous Ice in all Places above the Bridge, continually cover'd with Thouſands of People. On the firſt Day of Hilary Term, the Lawyers went over the Ice from the Temple to Weſtminſter-Hall, and back again, as familiarly as on the Land; ſome walk'd on foot, and others in Coaches, which carry'd People from Temple-Stairs to Weſtminſter for the ſame Fare as by Land, and ply'd between theſe two Places, as the Watermen do in Summer. Great Numbers of Booths were erected acroſs between the Temple and Southwark, in which Place an abſolute Fair was held, for above a Fortnight, of almoſt all ſorts of Trade, and Printing Preſſes erected both for Letters and Pictures; Bulls were baited, a whole Oxe roaſted, &c. Nor was the Froſt thus wonderful upon the Thames alone; but the Sea it ſelf was frozen for divers Miles from the Shore, on the Coaſts of England, France, and eſpecially Holland; inſomuch that for a conſiderable Space, no Packet Boat, or any other Veſſel of Intelligence, cou'd either come out of thoſe Parts, or go from hence. This Froſt was ſo memorable, that this Year hath often ſince been diſtinguiſh'd by the Name of the Great Froſt Year; in which Time all the Roads in England were as good as at Mid-Summer. In the Extremity of this Weather, the King granted his Letters Mandatory, dated the 4th of January, to the Biſhop of London, to make a Collection in all Pariſhes in London and the Suburbs of the ſame, for the Relief of the Poor; encouraging his Subjects to ſuch a needful Charity by his own Example, having order'd large Sums of Mony to be iſſu'd out of his Treaſury for that purpoſe; which Letters were read in all Churches the two following Sundays, and generous Collections made accordingly.

The Siege and Relief of Vienna.

Nor was this Year leſs remarkable abroad, partly for the Death of Anna Tereſia Queen of France, and Alphonſo King of Portugal; but above all for the furious and formidable Entrance of the Turks into Hungary and Auſtria; which ſtruck a Terror into all Chriſtendom. The Mahometan Army, conſiſting of above a Hundred and fifty Thouſand Men, Horſe and Foot, ſat down before Vienna, the Metropolis of the Empire, on the 9th of July, commanded by the Grand Viſier in Perſon. The Emperor had retired two Days before, and left the City under the Command of the noble Count Staremberg, who glorioufly defended it, notwithſtanding all the bloody Attacks, and indefatigable Endeavours of the Enemy; till on the 2d of September, when the Defendents were reduc'd to a deplorable Condition, the Siege was rais'd by the coming of the great King of Poland; who having joyn'd with the Imperial Forces, commanded by the brave Duke of Lorrain, not only beat off and routed the Turkiſh Army, with vaſt Slaughter, and no leſs Booty, but purſuing the Blow, took from them the Fort of Barkan, and the City of Gran, or Strigonium, after it had been poſſeſs'd by the Turks near fourſcore Years. To the Glory of the Engliſh Nation, ſeveral of the King's Subjects were preſent at the memorable Siege of Vienna, in Defence of which they ſignaliz'd their Valour; and in particular the Lord Landſdown, Eldeſt Son of the Earl of Bath, whom for his extraordinary Merits and Service the Emperor created a Count of the Sacred Empire.

One thing more, which renders this Year remarkable, was partly Domeſtick, and partly Foreign: Tangier in Africa, which came to the Crown of England by the preſent Queen Catharine, having coſt the King ſince he had it vaſt Sums of Mony, in defending of it againſt the Moors, and alſo in making an extraordinary Mole there, which not being found ſo feaſible as was expected, the Charges great and certain, the Expectation of any Advantage very uncertain; his Majeſty was pleas'd about the End of the laſt Summer to commiſſion the Lord Dartmouth, attended with about twenty Sail of Ships, to go and utterly demoliſh the ſaid Town, Caſtle and Mole at Tangier, to choke up the Haven, and to bring off the Ordnance, and Engliſh Inhabitants to England, ſending the Foreigners to their ſeveral Countries; but firſt compounding with every Man for his Ground, Eſtate, and Property in their ſeveral Houſes. All which was accordingly done in about ſix Months time; in which the King had a double End or Advantage this time, the Leſſening of a conſtant Charge, and a ſingular Opportunity of almoſt inſenſibly Encreaſing his Guards and Forces at home, by thoſe brought over from this Garriſon; which afterwards was the Subject of new Reflections.

The Deaths of Archbiſhop Sterne,

As to the Deaths of eminent Perſons this Year, we ſhall begin with two Reverend and Loyal Prelates, and firſt Dr. Richard Sterne Archbiſhop of York, educated in Corpus Chriſti Colledge in Cambridge, and afterwards Maſter of Jeſus, where he became very inſtrumental in ſending the Univerſity Plate to the late King in his Extremity; for which, and other Inſtances of Loyalty, he was ejected his Maſterſhip, ſtript of all, and us'd with great Barbarity beſides. After a Life of great Obſcurity, at the Reſtoration he was made Biſhop of Carliſle, and four Years after tranſlated to the See of York, where his Behaviour was worthy of that high Station: He diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his accurate Book of Logick, and had particularly the Honour to aſſiſt in the Noble Undertaking of the Polyglot Bible. The next was Dr. James Fleetwood, Biſhop of Worceſter, who was Educated in King's Colledge in the ſame Univerſity of Cambridge; and being afterwards forc'd for his Loyalty to forſake his Preferments, a Living and a Prebend of Litchfield, he betook himſelf to the Wars, and after that he became Tutor to ſeveral of the Loyal Nobility, with ſome of whom he had the Opportunity of Improving himſelf by Travels. For all his Learning and Pains, at his Majeſty's Return, he rewarded him with the Provoſtſhip of King's Colledge, and afterwards with the Biſhoprick of Worceſter, where he dy'd in Peace and Honour. 1683. Car. 35 Reſ 24

After theſe two Prelates, we ſhall mention four other Doctors of Divinity, of different Characters; and firſt Dr. John Durell, born in the Iſle of Jerſey, and educated in Merton Colledge in Oxford; and afterwards travelling, he became eminent abroad for his Learning and Skill in Theology; and after the King's Reſtoration, he obtain'd ſeveral Prebends, and laſt of all the Deanery of Windſor. He had ſignaliz'd himſelf in maintaining the Honour and Dignity of the Church of England, when in its loweſt and moſt deplorable Condition; and alſo ſhew'd himſelf admirably vers'd in all the Controverſies on Foot between the Church and the Diſciplinarian Party; and to the laſt defended the Eſtabliſh'd Conſtitution, with ſuch Succeſs as was admired in Foreign Countries. The next was Dr. John North, younger Son of Dudley Lord North of Kirtling, educated in Jeſus Colledge in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was Fellow; and afterwards, beſides Clerk of the Cloſet, and Prebendary of Weſtminſter, he was by the King made Maſter of Trinity Colledge, in the Room of the famous Dr. Barrow; where he well diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his good Literature, and his particular Skill in the Greek Language. The Third was Dr. Benjamin Whichcote, of the ſame Univerſity, and ſometime Provoſt of King's-Colledge, and then Rector of Milton, a Donative belonging to the ſaid Colledge, near Cambridge, and Vicar of St. Laurence Jury in London; where he was juſtly celebrated for his extenſive Knowledge, and his excellent Life and Converſation, but eſpecially for his beneficent Temper, having bequeath'd a Thouſand Pounds in pious and charitable Legacies. The laſt was Dr. John Owen, once a Church-Man, then a Presbyterian, and at laſt a profeſs'd Independent, one of the moſt conſiderable and learned of the whole Party: He was a particular Favourite of Oliver Cromwell, by whom he was made Dean of Chriſt-Church in Oxford, where he made a mighty Figure for ſeveral Years; but after the Reſtoration he liv'd in and about London, where he had a conſiderable Congregation, and was much admired by Men of Note and Eminency. Almoſt his whole Life was taken up with the indefatigable Labours of his Pen; he was well skill'd in Languages, Rabinical Learning, Jewiſh Rites and Cuſtoms, had a great Command of the Engliſh Tongue, and was one of the moſt gentile and faireſt Writers, who have appear'd againſt the Church of England; and likewiſe had ſo much Fame, that he was invited to be a Profeſſor of Divinity in the United Provinces, but he refus'd the Honour.

Dr. Durell,

Dr. North,

Dr. Whichcote

Dr. Owen,

After theſe, we ſhall take notice of four others, altogether different in their Characters and Profeſſions; and firſt, Sir William Scroggs, who through ſeveral Degrees in the Law came to be Lord Chief-Juſtice of England, in which Place he ſhow'd himſelf a Perſon of very excellent and quick Parts, a penetrating Judgement, good Orator, and a fluent Speaker; but his Utterance being accompany'd with ſome Heſitancy, his Speeches affected more in the Reading than in the Delivery. Having been Impeach'd by the Houſe of Commons, and turn'd out of his Poſt, as is formerly mention'd, he retired to his Eſtate at Weald-Hall near Burntwood in Eſſex, where he enjoy'd his laſt Years in a ſedate Repoſe. The next was Dr. Robert Moriſon, an eminent Doctor of Phyſick, and Fellow of the Colledge at London, but more eſpecially diſtinguiſh'd by being one of the moſt excellent Botaniſts of the Age; for which he was firſt incourag'd by the King, and then by the Univerſity of Oxford, where he was made Botanick Profeſſor, and read many curious Lectures in the Phyſick Garden there. Having increas'd his Knowledge by his Travels, and publiſh'd ſeveral valuable Books, in the midſt of his Labours, he came to a ſudden End by a Bruiſe on his Breaſt from a Coach Pole in the Streets of London; to the great Concern of all Lovers and Admirers of his Faculty. The Third was Mr. John Collins, a Perſon of ordinary Education, but of extraordinary Induſtry, by which he became one of the moſt uſeful and neceſſary Perſons of his Time, as to ſeveral Parts of the Mathematicks, viz. Arithmetick, Merchant's Accompts, Dialling, Navigation, &c. and ſo remarkable for his practical Projections, that he was made Fellow of the Royal Society, and encourag'd by the greateſt Men in the Nation. Having wrote ſeveral Pieces, and riding into the Weſt upon an uſeful Project, he got a Surfeit when heated with the Weather, which brought him to an End as untimely as the laſt. The Fourth was Mr. John Oldham, born in Gloceſterſhire, and for ſome Time educated in St. Edmund's-Hall in Oxford; from whence removing to London, he became intimately acquainted with the famous Earl of Rocheſter, and ſoon gain'd the Name of a ſublime Wit, and a Firſt-rate Poet. His Works manifeſt a prolifick and towering Genius, animated with Flame and Fury, Satyr and Hyperbole, and ſtrongly tinctur'd with the Viciouſneſs and Debauchery of the Times, which render'd them the more acceptable in this Age. After he had liv'd at large, he began to ſtudy Phyſick, and was taken into the Family of the munificent Earl of Kingſton; at whoſe Houſe in Nottinghamſhire he was ſnatch'd away in the Prime of his Years, the 30th of his Age.

Mr. Collins,

And Mr. Oldham.

IV. 1. We are now arriv'd at the 36th, and in effect the laſt Year of this King's Reign; a Year of Peace and Pleaſure to all that lov'd Eaſe and Quietneſs, of Joy and Triumph to the prevailing Party, and of no leſs Dejection and Mortification to the other, who were forc'd to ſubmit; and now their very Numbers daily decreas'd, as well as their Power and Popularity. The King and the Duke had now gain'd the Day, driven the Enemy out of the Field, and ſeem'd to have nothing more to do, but to purſue, take and puniſh. Accordingly we find the Chief Tranſactions of this Year, beſides Promotions and Inlargements on one Side, to conſiſt of Proſecutions, Puniſhments and Penalties, Fines and Damages, Surrenders of Charters, and new Modelling of Corporations. To begin with Honours and Promotions: On New-Years Day, Prince George of Denmark, who had marry'd the King's Neece, was elected a Knight Companion of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, in a Chapter held at White-Hall, being firſt Knighted by the Soveraign, and then ſolemnly Inveſted with the George and Garter: And about ten Days after, the two Dukes of Somerſet and Northumberland were Elected Knights Companions of the ſame glorious Order. About the Middle of January, his Majeſty was pleas'd to confer the Stile and Dignity of a Duke of this Kingdom, upon Charles Earl of Burford, his natural Son by Elianor Gwin, by creating him Duke of St. Albans. Soon after, on the firſt Day of Hilary Term, his Majeſty thought fit to make a particular Call of ſixteen Serjeants at Law, viz. Sir Thomas Jenner Knight, whom he had made Recorder of London, John Windham Eſquire, Edwin Wyat Eſquire, Edward Burch Eſquire, Henry Bedingfield Eſquire, Sir Edward Nevile Knight, Sir Paul Barret Knight, Anthony Farrington Eſquire, John Jefferſon Eſquire, Edward Lutwiche Eſquire, Richard Heath Eſquire, Henry Selby Eſquire, John Millington Eſquire, Thomas Powel Eſquire, Owen Wynne Eſquire, and Sir George Pudſey Knight. Theſe made a very pompous Proceſſion to Weſtminſter-Hall, where they perform'd the uſual Ceremonies, and preſented their Rings to the Lord Keeper, the Judges, &c. with a Poeſie or Motto agreeable to the Times, namely, A Deo Rex, à Rege Lex: Which ſome interpreted to be a Reſolving the Laws of England into the King's ſole Will and Pleaſure. 168¾. Car. 36 Reſ. 24

As to the Inlarging and Releaſing of State-Priſoners, the Lords in the Tower, upon a Parliamentary Impeachment, had often mov'd for Bail, which cou'd never be obtain'd till the Beginning of this Year. And the Earl of Danby more eſpecially had ſtruggled hard, and two or three Times argu'd with great ſtrength of Reaſoning before the Judges of the King's-Bench-Bar; but they durſt not venture to relieve him till this 12th of February, when they deliver'd their Opinions ſeverally, giving their Reaſons, and concluding all in one Judgment, That his Lordſhip ought to be Bail'd: And accordingly Bail was taken, the Earl being bound in a Recognizance of Ten Thouſand Pounds, and the Dukes of Somerſet and Albemarle, and the Earls of Oxford and Cheſterfield, his Sureties, in five Thouſand Pounds apiece, upon Condition, 'That the Earl of Danby do 'appear in the Houſe of Lords the next Seſſion of Parliament, and not 'depart without Leave of that Houſe.' This prov'd a good Precedent for the Liberty of the Popiſh Lords; and therefore on the ſame Day, the Earl of Powis, the Lord Arrundel of Wardour, and the Lord Bellaſis, were brought from the Tower, and the Earl of Tyrone from the Gate-Houſe, to the Court of King's-Bench, upon Writs of Habeas Corpus, praying by their Council to be admitted to Bail. Mr. Attorney-General declared, he had order from his Majeſty, to conſent to any Thing the Court ſhou'd think fit to be done: Upon which the Lord Chief-Juſtice, and the other Judges did agree, 'That for the ſame Reaſons they had given in 'the Earl of Danby's Caſe, Theſe Lords ought likewiſe to be Bail'd;' and accordingly Recognizances and Sureties were accepted. The ſeveral Bails were, For the Earl of Powis, the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Beaufort, the Earl of Pembroke, and the Earl of Peterborough: For the Lord Arrundel, the Earl of Dorſet, the Earl of Scarſdale, the Earl of Bath, and the Earl of Clarendon: For the Lord Bellaſis, the Earl of Aylesbury, the Earl of Weſtmoreland, the Lord Falconbridge, and Sir John Talbot; And for the Earl of Tyrone, the Earl of Roſcommon, the Earl of Mount-Alexander, the Earl of Carlingford, and the Lord Aneſley. As to the Lord Peters, the other Lord in the Tower, he dy'd in his Confinement a little above a Month before; and upon his Death-Bed he ſent a Letter to the King, wherein he wholly diſown'd in his laſt Words, and upon his Salvation, the Matters of which he there ſtood charg'd; Which ſeem'd to have been a fair Introduction towards Releaſing of all the reſt.

The Lords in the Tower, &c. Bail'd.

2. On the other Side, the Lord Brandon Gerard, Mr. Hambden, Mr. Booth, Mr. Trenchard, Mr. Charlton and Major Wildman (all accus'd of the laſt Plot, but not by two Witneſſes) having been formerly admitted to Bail, were on the 23d of January fully diſcharg'd, except Mr. Hambden, who was mark'd out and reſerv'd to be try'd for a High-Miſdemeanor, on the 6th Day of February. In this Tryal, the Lord Howard depos'd to the ſame Senſe as formerly 'touching the general Tranſacti-'ons of the Conſpiracy till the Earl of Shaftsbury's Death; and particu-'larly afterwards of the Meeting of the Council of Six at Mr. Hambden's 'own Houſe, where Mr. Hambden made an Introductory Speech to open 'the Aſſembly; and the Subject of the Debates was concerning the Time, 'Place, Men, Arms and Money to be provided towards a Riſing; and 'alſo

'also that then the sending a Messenger into Scotland was propos'd, and 'referr'd to be debated the next Meeting. Farther, That Mr. Hambden 'was present at that next Meeting at the Lord Russel's House; and 'amongst the rest deliberated of sending the Messenger into Scotland; 'when Aaron Smith was nam'd, and approv'd to be the Man.' In Defence of the Party accused, the Council struck very boldly at the Reputation of the Lord Howard, and wou'd have made him appear but a little better than an Atheist: And farther they brought Witnesses, as the Lord Paget, Mr. Pelham, and Sir Henry Hobart, to testify that Mr. Hambden was a prudent and virtuous Man, who follow'd a studious and contemplative Life, and therefore most unlikely to be engag'd in such an Affair. In Conclusion the Lord Chief-Justice Jeffreys made a long Speech; in which, speaking of Virtue and Religion, he cunningly turn'd it upon the Prisoner, by reflecting on a particular Transaction of his Grandfather Hambden in the late King's Reign. Said he, 'Was it not under the 'Shape of Religion, That that blessed Martyr came to the Block? Nay 'some Men in the late Times that were ingag'd on that Side, who find-'ing that the King prevail'd at the Beginning of the War, because he 'had Gentlemen of Quality and Courage to appear for him, were at a 'loss to know which way they shou'd put a Spirit into the common Peo-'ple to oppose the King; and some among them [Mr. Hambden the First] 'bid them be sure to put Religion to be the Pretence, and that wou'd He is cast and Fin'd. 'make them run headlong to what they wou'd have them.' At length the Jury brought Mr. Hambden in guilty of High Misdemeanor; for which he was fin'd forty Thousand Pounds, and oblig'd to find Sureties for his Good Behaviour during Life. This was look'd upon by many as a great Hardship: But the King in his large Declaration, assures us, 'That if he 'had not granted the Duke of Monmouth's Request That he wou'd not 'make him a Witness, neither Mr. Hambden, nor scarce any one Man 'of all those that were freed upon Bail, had escap'd Death.

The Tryal of Braddon and Speak.

Two Days after Mr. Hambden's Tryal, there came on one of a different Nature, namely that of Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speak Gentlemen, who were judg'd too officious and medling with relation to the late Plot: The Charge and Information against them sets forth, 'That where-'as the late Earl of Essex, committed to the Tower for High-Treason, 'had, on the 13th of July last, cut his own Throat, and was, by Inqui-'sition taken before the Coroner of the Liberty of the Tower, found 'Felo de se; the said Braddon and Speak, to defame the Government, 'had conspired together, by Writing and otherwise, to spread a false 'and scandalous Report, That the Inquisition was taken unduely, and 'irregularly obtain'd, and That the said Earl was murder'd by some Per-'sons about him; and had endeavour'd to suborn Witnesses to testify 'the same.' The Tryal lasted many Hours, with great Expectations; and over and above, the better to remove the Scandal, those on the King's Side brought Witnesses to prove, that the Earl of Essex did certainly murder himself, and had in effect a new Tryal about that Matter, more particular than what had been before the Coroner: And these Witnesses swore so plainly to the Fact and Circumstances, that there seem'd to remain no further Question. The Court rising late, left the Jury to give in a private Verdict to one of the Judges, which they deliver'd the next Morning, and it was, 'That the said Braddon was guilty of the whole 'Matter charg'd in the Information; and that Speak was guilty of all the Their Fines. 'Matter except the Subornation.' Upon which the former was fin'd two Thousand Pounds, and the latter one Thousand Pounds to the King, and both oblig'd to find Sureties for their good Behaviour during Life.

In

In this Hilary Term there were ſome other Puniſhments and Proſecutions; of which two were from Informations deliver'd and Convictions obtain'd in the laſt Term: The Firſt was of Mr. Samuel Johnſon, a Clergy-Man formerly mention'd, who for his Book call'd Julian the Apoſtate, which in the Information is term'd Scandalous and Seditious, was now thus Sentenc'd by the Court of King's-Bench; 'That he ſhou'd 'pay Five Hundred Marks for a Fine to the King; That he find Sure-'ties for his good Behaviour for a Year; That he ſhou'd be Committed 'to Priſon till this be paid and done; and that the Book be burnt by 'the Hands of the Common Hangman.' The other was John Darby, a Printer, who had been convicted of a Miſdemeanor, in Printing My Lord Ruſſel's Speech, which was term'd a Seditious Libel; and he was now brought to the Court of King's-Bench to receive his Judgment. He humbly ſubmitted himſelf to the Court, and begg'd Pardon, with a Promiſe never to commit the like Offence; and therefore the Court gave a milder Sentence, 'That he ſhou'd pay Twenty Marks for a Fine to the 'King, and find Sureties for his good Behaviour for a Twelve-Month; 'and be committed to Priſon till that is paid and done.

Proceedings againſt Mr. Johnſon,

Mr. Darby

The Deferring theſe Sentences and ſome Proſecutions, was by ſeveral Sanguine Men of their Party look'd upon as a Weakneſs in the Government, and was one great Cauſe of another Tryal at the End of this Term, which was that of Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, a Gentleman ſufficiently remember'd for being Head of the Earl of Shaftsbury's Ignoramus Jury. He was try'd at Guild-Hall for High Miſdemeanor, on the 14th of February; and the Information againſt him was For Scandalizing and Vilifying the Evidence in the laſt Horrid Plot; with which he was charg'd in ſeveral Letters ſent into the Country; wherein he related 'The great Favour into which the Duke of Monmouth was return'd; 'and rejoyc'd, That all the Priſoners that were in the late Sham Proteſtant Plot, were Diſcharg'd upon Bail; That Braddon and Speak were 'not proſecuted; That the paſſing Sentence upon the Author of Julian 'the Apoſtate, and the Printer of the Lord Ruſſel's Speech, were paſs'd 'over in Silence,' &c. To which were added theſe Expreſſions; 'Tis 'generally ſaid the Earl of Eſſex was Murder'd by other Hands: The 'brave Lord Ruſſel is afreſh lamented: The Plot is loſt here, unleſs you 'can find it in the Country among the Addreſſers and Abhorrers: The 'High Tories and Clergy are Mortify'd, and Sir George Jeffreys is grown 'humble.' The Deſign in Concluſion was, 'To deſire their Friends to 'beſtir themſelves, to get in Sober Men, and to be ſure to keep the 'Sober Party up.' Theſe and ſome other Particulars being prov'd againſt him, his Sentence was, 'That he ſhou'd pay to the King a Fine of 'Ten Thouſand Pounds, that he ſhou'd find Sureties for his good Beha-'viour during Life, and to be committed till the ſame be perform'd.' But rather than pay his Fine, he choſe to be a Priſoner, and continu'd ſuch all the reſt of this Reign, and a conſiderable Part of the next.

And Sir Samuel Barnardiſton.

The laſt Fin'd 10000 Pounds.

3. Several Acts of Hoſtility were this Spring fiercely purſu'd between the French and the Spaniards, both by Sea and Land, but ſtill without any formal Declaration of War: Upon which Account his Britannick Majeſty, being directly concern'd on neither ſide, but in Amity with both, was pleas'd to Iſſue out a particular Proclamation at Newmarket, Declaring, 'That the Peace ſhou'd be kept inviolably on both ſides, in all 'Roads, Creeks, and Ports of his Dominions; and that all his Command-'ers and Officers ſhou'd oppoſe themſelves againſt all that ſhou'd Aſſault 'any of the Ships of his Allies in any of his Roads, Creeks, or Places 'under A Proclamation as to Sea Affairs.

The D. of York re-eſtabliſh'd.

'under his Protection, &c.' And not long after, May 12th, under a Pretext of a better Management of the Sea Affairs, the King was pleas'd to Revoke and Determine the Commiſſion, formerly granted to ſeveral Perſons, For Executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of England, and to commit thoſe Affairs to the care of his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, tho' then diſabled by Law. And about a Fortnight after, as a further Favour his Majeſty thought fit to declare in Council at Hampton-Court, That he found it convenient for his Service, that his Royal Highneſs ſhou'd be preſent at the Meetings of the Council; and accordingly the Duke ſat that Day, and continu'd ſo to do. And now the Duke's Influence and Greatneſs began more manifeſtly to appear; and on the 26th of June, his Royal Highneſs, being Captain of the Artillery Company of London, in a particular Manner march'd at their Head through the City to the Artillery Ground, and attended with many of the Higheſt Rank, there led them up in Perſon, with extraordinary Joy and Acclamations.

He brings a Scandalum Magnatum againſt Dutton Colt.

In the Height of this Proſperity, two Perſons felt the Weight of the Duke's Greatneſs: The firſt was John Dutton Colt Eſquire, ſometime Bayliff of Leominſter in Herefordſhire, and Burgeſs of that Borough in the three laſt Parliaments, who was heard to ſpeak theſe Words: The Duke of York is a Papiſt, and before any ſuch Papiſt Dog ſhall be Succeſſor to the Crown of England, I'll be hang'd at my own Door. —— If the King had no worſe Bayliffs nor Mayors in all his Corporations, and no worſe Parliament Men than my ſelf, we ſhou'd ſoon rout the Duke of York, the Lord of Worceſter, the Lord Peterborough, and all ſuch Popiſh Dogs, out of the Kingdom. —— If any of the Members of Parliament come to an untimely End, it ſhall preſently be laid on the Papiſts; and from that Time I will begin to cut the Throat of the firſt Papiſt I meet, if it be the Duke of York himſelf. —— If the King follows the Advice of that damn'd Popiſh Dog his Brother, and ſuch like evil Counſellors, in ſo often Diſſolving the Parliament, it will in the End be worſe for him. —— I will be hang'd at my own Door, before ſuch a damn'd Popiſh Raſcal as the Duke of York, ſhall ever inherit the Crown of England.—Theſe and the like Words being fully prov'd againſt him at the King's Bench Bar, on the 3d of May the Jury brought in their Verdict for his Royal Highneſs, and gave him for Damages a Hundred Thouſand Pounds.

And againſt Titus Oates.

The other Sufferer was the fam'd Titus Oates, whoſe Proſperity was now expired: He was ſuddenly taken up on the 10th of May, at the Amſterdam Coffee-Houſe, in an Action of Scandalum Magnatum, at the Suit of the ſame Duke, for directly calling him Traytor, and uſing other Scandalous Words, which naturally flow'd from his Mouth. He was carry'd to Wood-Street Compter, where he lay two Days, and then remov'd by Habeas Corpus to the King's Bench Priſon. The next Term he let Judgment go by Default; whereupon a Writ of Enquiry of Damages was Executed at the King's Bench Bar, where the Jury upon Hearing of the Evidence, gave a Hundred Thouſand Pounds Damages. From this Time he never got out of the Priſon till after the Revolution; for he was not only detain'd by this Action, but the next Michaelmas Term he was Indicted for Perjury in the King's Bench Court, in relation to Father Ireland's being in London at the Time the ſaid Oates Swore to, at his Tryal; to which Indictment he pleaded Not guilty, the Tryal was appointed to be the next Term. Shortly after, at the Seſſions in the Old Bayley, he had another Indictment of Perjury preferr'd againſt him, in Relation to his being preſent at the ſuppos'd Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White Horſe Tavern in 1678; and upon pleading Not guilty, this Indictment was alſo appointed to be Try'd in the King's Bench Court the next

The laſt is further proſecued for Perjury.

next Term; and the Indictment was remov'd thither. But these Tryals did not come on till the Beginning of the next Reign; and it was look'd upon as unfortunate for the Popish Party, that he was not try'd in this. Then, for a further Disgrace to their Master, in the same Term, Dalby and Nicholson, two of Oates's Men, were convicted; the first at the Nisi Prius for the County of Middlesex; the other at the Nisi Prius held for the City of London, at Guild Hall, for speaking most Scandalous and Seditious Words against his present Majesty, and the Government, for which they both stood in the Pillory. 1684. Car. 36 Ref. 25

4. But to return a little back, we are next to take notice of the Proceedings against two Capital Offenders, and both outlaw'd upon the Account of the late Conspiracy, Mr. James Holloway, and Sir Thomas Armstrong. The First, having been deeply ingag'd, and finding his Name in the Gazette, fled to the West-Indies, where he was accidentally taken, after he had suffer'd an Outlawry for High-Treason, and brought Prisoner to London, and put into Newgate. While he was there, he wrote a Paper which he call'd, His Free Confession and Narrative, address'd to the King's Majesty, and deliver'd by himself to Mr. Secretary Jenkins. It confirm'd most of the Particulars that had been open'd and discover'd at the Tryals of the Persons executed before him; but there appear'd very little New in what was publish'd, besides what was to have been acted in Bristol; 'which Place was to have been surpriz'd by three hundred and 'fifty Men, of whom above half were to be rais'd in and about the City, 'and the rest to have been sent from Taunton.' But towards the Conclusion of it he tells the World, 'That he had given to his Majesty the 'Names of several other Persons, besides those already known, who were 'to have been concern'd in the Plot.' But all this did him no real Service; and being brought to the Bar, and demanded what he had to say, why Execution shou'd not be awarded against him, upon the Attainder of Outlawry for Treason? he answer'd, 'That he had made an ingenu-'ous Confession to his Majesty, and beg'd his Mercy.' Then the Court told him, 'That notwithstanding the Outlawry against him, he shou'd be 'indulg'd so far as to have a Tryal, if he thought he cou'd defend himself.' To which he reply'd 'That he cou'd not undertake to defend himself, 'for that he had confess'd before his Majesty, That he was guilty of many 'Things in the Indictment.' And so coming to the Place of his Execution, at Tyburn, he declared his Belief of the Plot, and that he was concern'd in it: but at the same Time he accus'd the Government of Managing several Things ill, and against the King and Kingdom's Interest; and that what he intended was only for the Good of Both: And as to his Religion, he profess'd himself neither a Dissenter from the Church of England, nor joyn'd with it altogether.

Holloway's Confession,

And Execution.

The other, Sir Thomas Armstrong, having been nam'd in the King's Proclamation, with a Reward equal to the Greatest, was apprehended at Leyden in Holland, by Order of the States; and being put on Board one of his Majesty's Yatchts at Roterdam, he was brought to London, and sent Prisoner to Newgate on the 11th of June. This ungovernable Gentleman had as many personal Obligations to the King as almost any Man living, and it is said that none had made more ungrateful Returns; so that he was to expect no Favour from the Court. Being shortly after his Commitment brought to the King's-Bench Bar, and ask'd what he cou'd say for himself, Why Execution shou'd not pass against him, he alledg'd He was beyond Sea at the Time of the Outlawry, and begg'd he might be Try'd.' It was answer'd, 'That after a Record of Outlawry, the Judges had Sir Thomas Armstrong taken.

His Plea.

'nothing to do but to appoint Execution.' Againſt which the Priſoner urg'd, 'That by the Statute of the 6th of Edward the Sixth, the Perſon 'outlaw'd had a Year's Time to reverſe the Outlawry, if he were be-'yond Sea.' The Bench reply'd, 'That by the plain Words of the Sta-'tute, none could have the Benefit of it, but ſuch as within one Year 'ſhould Yield Themſelves to the Chief-Juſtice of England, and offer to 'Traverſe the Indictment upon which the Outlawry was pronounc'd.' To this Armſtrong pleaded, 'that the Year not being yet out, he did now ren-'der himſelf to the Chief-Juſtice.' But that Plea not being admitted, becauſe he did not Yield himſelf, but was brought Priſoner, and could have no Advantage of the Statute; he then alledg'd, 'that the ſame had been 'lately granted to Holloway, who tho' in the ſame Condition, was offe-'red to take his Tryal, if he pleas'd.' It was anſwer'd, 'that was done 'out of meer Grace and Favour of the King, who, if his Majeſty thought 'good, might extend the like Favour to him alſo: But that was not the 'Buſineſs of a Court of Juſtice; they were only to take care to ſatisfy 'the Law.' Over and above, the Attorney-General acquainted the Court, 'that the Priſoner at the Bar deſerv'd no ſort of Indulgence or 'Mercy from the King; not only for that when he was ſeiz'd beyond 'Sea, Letters of freſh Communication with Foreign Miniſters, and other 'People, were taken from him, but alſo becauſe it appear'd to his Ma-'jeſty by full Evidence poſitively given, That after the Diſappointment 'of the Meeting at the Rye-Houſe, by God's Providence in the Fire at 'New-Market, Armſtrong was one of the Perſons that actually engag'd 'to go, upon the King's haſty coming to Town, and to deſtroy him by the 'Way as he return'd.

And Execution.

Being brought to the Place of Execution, he, as others had done, deliver'd to the Sheriffs a Paper, wherein 'he continu'd to object againſt the 'Legal Courſe of the Proceedings againſt him, complaining, that with 'an unordinary Roughneſs he had been condemn'd, and made a Precedent, 'tho' Holloway being alſo Outlaw'd, had his Tryal offer'd him a little be-fore.' As to the new Evidence againſt him, which the Attorney-General mention'd at the King's-Bench, he only anſwer'd it by a direct and flat Denyal; affirming upon his Death, He never had any Deſign againſt the King's Life, nor the Life of any Man; both which, as was then obſerv'd, might be eaſily allow'd to be equally true. Moſt People thought he had hard Meaſures in having his Tryal refus'd him, but he was the leſs pity'd, becauſe his Hands had been before defil'd with Blood. He was executed at Tyburn on Friday the 20th of June; which was obſerv'd by ſome to be the ſame Day of the ſame Month, and the ſame Day of the Week, on which the five Jeſuits were executed in the ſame Manner at the ſame Place, juſt five Years before. His Head was ſet up on Weſtminſter-Hall between thoſe of Cromwell and Bradſhaw; one of his Quarters upon Temple-Bar, two others at Alderſgate, and Aldgate, and the fourth was ſaid to be ſent down to Stafford, for which Town he had been a Burgeſs in Parliament. This Sir Thomas Armſtrong was the laſt Man that ſuffer'd Death upon the Account of the Plot, in this Reign.

Proceedings againſt inferior Offenders.

Several inferior Offenders were brought to Puniſhment in Eaſter and Trinity Terms; particularly, Langley Curtis and Francis Smith, both Bookſellers, and induſtrious Promoters of unlicens'd Pamphlets. The firſt was convicted 'for Printing a Scandalous and Seditious Pamphlet, 'call'd, The Lord Ruſſel's Ghoſt, or, The Night-Walker of Bloomsbury;' for which he was fin'd five Hundred Pounds, and order'd to ſtand in the Pillory in Bloomsbury-Market, and the ſaid Libel to be burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman. The other, Mr. Smith at the Elephant and Caſtle in Corn-Hill, was Try'd 'For Printing and Publiſhing

'a Scandalous and Seditious Libel, call'd, The Raree Show;' for which he was alſo fin'd five Hundred Pounds, and to ſtand Thrice in the Pillory, and to find Sureties of Good Behaviour during Life. Likewiſe Samuel Packer, Deputy to Richard Goodenough, when he was Under-Sheriff of London, was Convicted for Publiſhing another Scandalous and Seditious Libel; for which he was fin'd fifty Marks, and order'd to ſtand in the Pillory at three ſeveral Places in Weſtminſter. After him, George Cawdron, Steward to the Earl of Clare, was try'd upon an Information, 'for Speaking moſt Scandalous and Seditious Words againſt 'his Majeſty and the Government;' for which he was fin'd a Hundred Pounds, to ſtand in the Pillory in two ſeveral Places, and to find Sureties for his good Behaviour during Life. Beſides all theſe, the Town of Nottingham, having upon Michaelmas Day had a great Scuffle, upon an Election of a Mayor, and other Officers for that Corporation, ſome Claiming the ancient Cuſtom, and others inſiſting on the new Charter; for this Reaſon, thoſe that oppos'd the ſaid Charter, viz. William Sacheverel, George Gregory, and Charles Hutchinſon Eſquires, William Greeves, and Seventeen others, had an Information exhibited againſt them, 'For a 'great Riot by them committed, to the great Terror of many of his Maje-'ſty's Loyal Subjects;' and at a Tryal at the King's-Bench Bar, on May the 2d they were all, except one Barker, found Guilty of the ſaid Riot, and fin'd in Proportion. 1684. Car. 36 Ref. 25

5. And indeed, the greateſt Part of the Hiſtory of this peaceable Year, as formerly hinted, conſiſts of Proſecutions, Penalties and Puniſhments; and, what was in a great Meaſure the Effect of them, the Surrendry of Charters, and the Reforming, or rather Corrupting of Corporations: For many of the Cities, Towns, and Boroughs, conceiving their Priviledges could not long ſurvive thoſe of the great Metropolis, and finding the Court Reſolv'd in the Expectance and Demand of them, did generally agree to offer them up as a ſort of a Sacrifice to the King's Will and Pleaſure: And even many of the Courtiers were employ'd to make an Intereſt in thoſe Places where they were moſt concern'd, to obtain and extort the ſaid Surrendry. Particularly the Lord Chief-Juſtice Jeffreys, in the Northern Circuit, at the Summer Aſſizes, is charg'd with making it his great Buſineſs to terrify the People into this Compliance; and at his Return waited on his Majeſty at Wincheſter, and deliver'd up to him the Charters of the City of Lincoln, and of ſeveral other Corporations within his own Circuit, as an Oblation of his own Loyalty, and a Triumph over the Liberties of the ſaid Corporations. However, the King commanded his Lordſhip 'To let the ſeveral Corporations know 'his gracious Acceptance of the Surrender of their Charters, and the 'Senſe his Majeſty had of their Loyalty; and accordingly he would let 'them find the good Effects thereof, upon the Renewal of their Char-'ters. Surrendry of Charters.

By theſe Meaſures, the Aſcendency of the Duke of York began to be more and more believ'd; and it look'd as if both the Brothers had taken a Reſolution to deſtroy Faction, and all the Reſemblances of it, whether good or bad. The Advantages of Power receiv'd by the King were manifeſt, and not eaſy to be reſiſted in a Conqueſt after ſo many Struggles and Conflicts. This Power did ſeveral Ways increaſe, and particularly by a Military Force, which was almoſt inſenſibly augmented by the broken Garriſon of Tangier, which was brought over in the Beginning of this Year. The City of London ſeem'd in effect ſubdu'd, and was forc'd to ſubmit to ſuch Sheriffs, and a Lord Mayor, as the King was pleas'd to The King's own Forces.

appoint: The two former were Sir William Goſlin and Sir Peter Vandeput, and the Lord Mayor was Sir James Smith; all commiſſion'd under the Great Seal; and all very much to the Satisfaction of the Tory Party, whoſe Numbers and Strength daily encreas'd: So that whatever Appearances there might be of Arbitrary Power, yet ſtill there was a Majority in the City, and a much greater in the Country, that were pleas'd to ſee the Ruins of once a formidable Party, and to think this a Year of real Happineſs. As to the King's Forces by Land, which began to be call'd a Standing Army, a Muſter was made of them on the firſt of October at Putney Heath; which was accounted a moſt Gallant Military Appearance. The Horſe that Day conſiſted of the three Troops of Guards, and of their Three of Grenadiers, of the Earl of Oxford's Regiment of Horſe-Guards, and the Lord Churchill's Regiment of Dragoons. The Foot were two Battalions form'd from the Royal Regiment of Guards and their Grenadiers; One Battalion from the Cold-Stream Regiment of Guards and Grenadiers; One Battalion from the Earl of Dunbarton's Regiment and their Grenadiers, and One from the Admiral Regiment. The Total of Horſe and Foot which then Rendezvouz'd were above four thouſand, all compleatly Train'd and Effective Men; and all that Day commanded by the Earl of Craven. At which Muſter both their Majeſties, and both their Royal Highneſſes, were preſent with very great Satisfaction.

The Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion diſſolv'd.

In the ſame Month, the King, the more to bring Matters under his own Cognizance, thought fit to diſſolve the popular and acceptable Commiſſion granted in the Year 1681, to certain Commiſſioners to diſpoſe of all Eccleſiaſtical Preferments belonging to the Crown: So that the ſaid Preferments were now again in his Majeſty's immediate Diſpoſal. And the firſt worth the Remembering, was the Tranſlating Dr. Turner from the Biſhoprick of Rocheſter to that of Ely, and Raiſing the Eloquent Dr. Sprat, Dean of Weſtminſter, into the See of Rocheſter; which laſt had been employ'd by the King himſelf to write a full Account of the late Conſpiracy; which he did to the great Satisfaction of one Party.

A Statue erected to the King.

The King being at the Height of his Glory, moſt Men ſeem'd ready to fall down and worſhip him; and this Year a famous and Noble Statue was erected to his Honour, in the Middle or Centre of the Royal Exchange. It conſiſted of the exact Figure of his preſent Majeſty, done in Grey Marble, erected upon a curious Pedeſtal of the ſame; and the Statue was in the Garb and Habit of a Roman Cæſar. The Work-man that cut it was Mr. Grinling Gibbons, the moſt celebrated Statuary that ever England produc'd, and equal, if not ſuperior, to the beſt of Europe in this Age. This was perform'd at the Charge of the Hamborough Company, at five Hundred Pound Expence: The Inſcription on the Pedeſtal is as follows: CAROLO II. Cæſari Britannico, Patriæ Patri, Regum Optimo, Clementiſſimo, Auguſtiſſimo, Generis humani Deliciis, utriuſque Fortunæ Victori, Pacis Europæ Arbitro, Maris Domino & Vindici, Societas Mercatorum Adventur. Angliæ, quæ per CCCC jam prope Annos Regia Benignitate floret, Fidei intemeratæ, Gratitudinis Æternæ, hoc Teſtimonium Venerabunda poſuit. Anno Sal. Humanæ MDCLXXXIV. The King was ſo fully pleas'd with this Performance, that he gave ſpecial Orders that no Perſon ſhould ſo much as Copy it in any Print, without the particular Leave of the ſaid Mr. Grinling Gibbons.

6. During Michaelmas Term, there happen'd ſome further Tryals and Proſecutions, which ſhew'd the Humour and Temper of the Times: Particularly on the 6th of November, a Tryal was held at Guild-Hall, before fore the Lord Chief-Juſtice Jeffreys, upon an Action upon the Caſe brought by Sir William Prichard, formerly Lord Mayor of London, againſt Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, of which the latter was lately dead, for Maliciouſly cauſing him to be Arreſted, and falſly Impriſon'd, during his Mayoralty: The Fact was repreſented by the Council, 'as a very 'Evil Deſign, and Malicious Practice, contriv'd with ſeveral of the Traytors, 'lately fled from Juſtice, as well againſt his Majeſty's Government, and 'the Magiſtracy of the City, as againſt the Perſon of the ſaid Sir William 'Prichard.' Upon which, after a full Hearing of the Evidence, the Jury brought in their Verdict for Sir William, and gave him no leſs than ten Thouſand Pounds Damages. 1684. Car. 36 Reſ. 25

As to Proſecutions, beſides that of Titus Oates formerly mention'd, there are Three to be remember'd in this Term: The Firſt was of Elias Beſt, commonly call'd The Proteſtant Hop-Merchant, who was try'd at the King's-Bench Bar for ſpeaking Scandalous and Seditious Words againſt the Government; for which he was fin'd a Thouſand Pounds, and order'd to ſtand Thrice in the Pillory, as alſo to find Sureties for his good Behaviour during Life. The next was Mr. Butler of Northamptonſhire, who was convicted at the King's-Bench Bar upon an Information for preſenting and reading to the Knights of the Shire choſen for that County at the laſt Election, a Seditious Paper of Addreſs to them, from ſome factious Perſons, for which he was fin'd five Hundred Marks, and bound to good Behaviour during Life. The laſt was a Matter of a higher Conſequence, the Proſecution of Mr. Thomas Roſewell, a Diſſenting Teacher at Redriffe in Surrey, who was try'd at the ſame Bar for High-Treaſon; and particularly charg'd with ſpeaking theſe Words in a Sermon preach'd on September the 14th, That the People made a flocking to the King, upon pretence of Healing the King's Evil, which he could not do; but that we are they to whom they ought to flock, becauſe We are Prieſts and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Dolours and Griefs of the People: We have had two wicked Kings together, who have permitted Popery to enter in under their Noſes, whom we can reſemble to no other Perſon, but to the moſt wicked Jeroboam; and if they would ſtand to their Principles, he did not fear, but they would overcome their Enemies, as in former Times with Rams Horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. The Priſoner made a very handſome Defence, eſpecially as to the Infamy of the Witneſſes; but in Half an Hour's Time the Jury brought him in Guilty of High-Treaſon. But Sir John Talbot, who was preſent at the Tryal, was pleas'd of his own Accord to repreſent the Paſſages of it, with his Opinion, to the King; who thereupon gave Directions to the Lord Chief-Juſtice Jeffreys, that he ſhould have Council aſſign'd him, to plead to the Inſufficiency of the Indictment, in Arreſt of Judgment. Accordingly the Caſe was argu'd by Mr. Wallop, Mr. Pollexfen, and Mr. Bampfield, and the Court took till the next Term to conſider of Judgment; but in the mean Time the King graciouſly granted him a Pardon; a Favour we do not find he granted to any one Perſon Convicted of High-Treaſon, either Papiſt or Proteſtant, for the ſeven laſt Years.

The Proſecution of Mr. Beſt.

Mr. Butler.

And Mr. Roſewell.

The latter pardon'd.

The Roads being this Winter very much infeſted with Robbers, his Majeſty thought fit, on the 19th of December, to order in Council, and declare his Pleaſure for Redreſs, 'That all his Officers of Juſtice, 'and other his loving Subjects, do uſe their utmoſt Diligence and En- 'deavour for the Apprehending all Robbers and High-Way Men;' And for the Encouragement of ſuch as ſhall apprehend any ſuch Offender, it was further Order'd, 'that ſuch Perſons, who ſhall at any Time from 'the

'the preſent, till the 19th of December, 1685, and after that Day, till his 'Majeſty ſhall pleaſe to recall this Order, either by Proclamation or his 'Order in Council, apprehend any Robber or High-Way Man, and cauſe 'him to be brought into Cuſtody, ſhall within fifteen Days after his Con-'viction, have a Reward of Ten Pounds, for every ſuch Offender: And 'all Sheriffs of the Counties, where ſuch Conviction ſhall be had, are by 'the ſaid Order required, upon the Certificate of the Judge, or two Ju-'ſtices of the Peace, before whom ſuch Perſons ſhall be convicted, to 'pay to the Perſons who ſhall apprehend ſuch Offenders, the Reward 'aforeſaid, out of his Majeſty's Monies receiv'd by ſuch Sheriffs in that 'County, where ſuch Conviction ſhall be; which ſhall be allow'd to them 'upon their Accounts in the Exchequer: And all Lieutenants, Deputy-'Lieutenants, Juſtices of the Peace, &c. are required to be Aiding and 'Aſſiſting in all Things tending to the Execution of the ſame.

Honours and Promotions.

And now at laſt to come to Promotions, and Deaths of great Men, that happen'd this Year; we are firſt to remember that Leoline Jenkins, one of the King's principal Secretaries of State, having long pray'd his Majeſty to permit him, by reaſon of his Indiſpoſition, to reſign his Place; his Majeſty was at laſt pleas'd to grant it, tho' with much Unwillingneſs, becauſe of the great Satisfaction he always had in his Services: So on the 14th of April, at Windſor, he deliver'd up the Seals to the King; who was pleas'd to give them to the Honourable Sidney Godolphin Eſquire, one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, who was accordingly ſworn into the Secretary's Office ſhortly after, in a Council held at Hampton-Court. About the middle of July, the Earl of Murray, and the Earl of Middleton, the two Secretaries of State for the Kingdom of Scotland, were, by his Majeſty's Command, ſworn of his moſt honourable Privy-Council in England, and took their Places at the Board in Hampton-Court. Above a Month after, the King was pleas'd to declare in Council; 'That 'having given the Earl of Radnor, Lord Preſident of the Council, (with 'whoſe Services he was very well ſatisfy'd) Leave to retire, in Conſidera-'tion of his great Age; He had reſolv'd to make the Earl of Rocheſter Lord 'Preſident, Mr. Secretary Godolphin Firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, 'and the Earl of Middleton Secretary of State:' And accordingly the Earl of Rocheſter took his place at the Board, and the Earl of Middleton was ſworn one of the principal Secretaries of State: And ſhortly after, his Majeſty was pleas'd to add a new Favour to Mr. Godolphin, and to grant to him the Title and Dignity of a Baron of England, by the Name and Stile of Baron Godolphin of Rialton in the County of Cornwal. In this Michaelmas Term, his Majeſty thought fit, upon the Death of Mr. Juſtice Windham, to remove Mr. Baron Street to the Common-Pleas, and in his Place to conſtitute Sir Robert Wright, his Majeſty's Serjeant at Law, one of the Barons of the Exchequer.

The Deaths of Biſhop Gunning,

As to the Deaths of eminent Men, we ſhall begin with two great and learned Prelates, Dr. Peter Gunning, and Dr. George Morley, the one Biſhop of Ely, and the other of Wincheſter. The Firſt was a Kentiſh Man by Birth, and of Clare-Hall in Cambridge by Education, where he was for ſome Years a Fellow, and from whence he was ejected for his Loyalty, and refuſing the Covenant. After which he ſtrenuouſly ſupported the Honour and Credit of the Eſtabliſh'd Church of England in the moſt dangerous Times, and at London kept up a noble Congregation, daily oppoſing and ſtemming the Overflowings of Presbytery, Independency, Anabaptiſm, Socinianiſm, &c. with unuſual Vigour and Succeſs. Upon the Reſtoration, he was made Maſter of St. John's Colledge, and the King's Profeſſor of Divinity in Cambridge, where no Man more glorioufly adorn'd the the Chair; from whence he was ſucceſſively rais'd to the Biſhopricks of Chicheſter and Ely, and all without the leaſt Application. Here he was not only admired for his uncommon Learning, and his profound Skill in Theology, but belov'd for his exemplary Piety and diffuſive Charity to all Perſons in Diſtreſs; and being an incomparable Diſputant, without the Help of Pen and Ink, he was further diſtinguiſh'd for his Art, not only in bringing over Papiſts and other Diſſenters, but in converting a conſiderable Number of Jews. The other, Biſhop Morley, was a Londoner by Birth, and had his Education in Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and was afterwards taken into the particular Favour, and made Chaplain to the late King, to whom he was inviolably Loyal, and very Aſſiſting in ſome of his greateſt Difficulties. Being an Exile with his preſent Majeſty, he got into the great Acquaintance and Eſteem of ſeveral Learned Foreigners, as Rivet, Heinſius, Salmaſius, Bochart, &c. which made him fitter for the greateſt Employments at the Return of the King; who generouſly rewarded him firſt with the Biſhoprick of Worceſter, and then with the rich one of Wincheſter, telling him, That he knew he wou'd not be the richer for it; which in one Reſpect prov'd true, by reaſon of the vaſt Sums he laid out in repairing and rebuilding his Palaces, and his munificent Benefactions, as well as charitable Donations. He was a Perſon of extenſive Knowledge and Experience, and tho' he was a ſtrict Churchman, in Oppoſition to all Sorts of Diſſenters, yet he was a great Calviniſt, and eſteem'd one of the main Patrons of that Perſuaſion; and having led a pious and primitive Life, he dy'd full of Years and Honour, in the 97th of his Age. 1684. Car. 36 Reſ. 25 Biſhop Morley.

The reſt to be mention'd were Perſons of very different Characters and Employments, of which we ſhall begin with William Lord Brouncker, Viſcount of Caſtle-Lyons in Ireland, a celebrated Vertuoſo, who was much incourag'd in the Engliſh Court, where he had ſeveral Places; but principally addicting himſelf to Mathematicks, he became a great Artiſt in that and Philoſophy, and was not only Fellow of the Royal Society, but Preſident thereof for fifteen Years; which Society he did very much honour and advance by his great Labours, and long Experience. The next was Dr. Robert Wittie, a Doctor of Phyſick, educated in King's Colledge in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and Fellow of the Colledge of Phyſicians in London, a very ingenious and learned Man, who practis'd for ſeveral Years, and with great Succeſs at Kingſton upon Hull; and at length retiring to London, he dy'd in his old Age, having inrich'd the World with ſeveral Treatiſes in his own Faculty, and particularly a Deſcription of Scarborough Spaw in Yorkſhire. The third was Mr. William Walker, a Bachelor of Divinity, educated in Trinity Colledge in Cambridge Univerſity, from whence he became ſucceſſively School-Maſter in the Towns of Lowth and Grantham in Lincolnſhire; where he ſhew'd himſelf excellently qualify'd for the Education of Youth, and became a moſt uſeful Writer, both as to School Learning and Divinity; and for the firſt he was diſtinguiſh'd by his Treatiſe of Engliſh Particles, and for the Latter by his Modeſt Plea for Infant Baptiſm. The laſt to be mention'd is Wentworth Dillon Earl of Roſcommon, an Iriſh Nobleman, but principally reſiding in the Engliſh Court, where he was both encourag'd by the King, and admired by all for his great Wit and Parts, which he more particularly diſplay'd in his Poetical Compoſitions; in which there appears the utmoſt Strength and Energy, with the moſt labour'd and judicious Exactneſs; and that ſingle Poem call'd An Eſſay on Tranſlated Verſe, has in it ſo many juſt and maſterly Strokes, that, in its Kind, was perhaps The Lord Brouncker, Dr. Wittie, Mr. Walker, And the Earl of Roſcommon.

perhaps never exceeded in the Engliſh, or any other Language whatſoever.

Honours and Preferments.

V. I. The ſmall Remainder of this Reign was of a piece, and of the ſame Nature with the preceding Year, and chiefly taken up with Promotions, Proſecutions, and Modelling of Corporations; in all which the King and the Duke daily found the Advantage and Satisfaction. As to Promotions and Honours conferr'd, his Majeſty, having Knighted Captain John Clark, Citizen of London, and Edmund Warcup of Northmoor in Oxfordſhire, a little before, on the Firſt of January he conferr'd the ſame Honour of Knighthood upon William Creagh, of New-Caſtle upon Tyne, being preſented by his Royal Highneſs to his Brother; who did him this Honour, as a Mark of his gracious Acceptance of the Loyal Zeal he had on ſeveral Occaſions expreſs'd for his Majeſty's Service. A few Days after, John Drummond Eſquire, one of the King's Secretaries of State for the Kingdom of Scotland, was ſworn of his Majeſty's moſt honourable Privy-Council, and took his Place at the Board at White-Hall. About a Week after that, William Bridgeman, and Philip Muſgrave Eſquires, were ſworn Clerks of the Privy-Council, in the Room of Sir Thomas Dolman and Francis Gwynn Eſquire, to whom his Majeſty had given leave to reſign. Dr. Peter Mew having been tranſlated from the See of Bath and Wells to Wincheſter, Dr. Thomas Kenn, a Man eminent for a Pious and Devotional Life, was advanc'd to his Biſhoprick, and ſolemnly Conſecrated on the 25th of January. The laſt Honour his Majeſty beſtow'd was that of Knighthood, upon Henry Brabant, of Newcaſtle Eſquire, particularly for his many Loyal Services; and this was upon the 28th of January, five Days before the King's fatal Sickneſs.

Tho' the Court had ſo far cruſh'd the declining Party, as to prevent any great Damage from them, yet ſome Struggles remain'd; and in this Chriſtmas there appear'd a dangerous and Treaſonable Libel, as it was call'd, promoted by the Diſſenters, relating to the Death of the Earl of Eſſex: Upon a ſtrict Search and Enquiry after the Author, one Henry Danvers, commonly call'd Colonel Danvers, late of Newington in Middleſex, appear'd to be the Man; but being upon the Diſcovery fled, his Majeſty was pleas'd on the 4th of January to command publick Notice to be given, 'That whereas the ſaid Henry Danvers ſtands accus'd of ſeveral Treaſonable and Dangerous Practices, and is fled from Juſtice, 'Whoever ſhall apprehend him, and cauſe him to be deliver'd into ſafe 'Cuſtody, ſhall receive a Reward of a Hundred Pounds, to be forthwith 'paid by the Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury.' Shortly after, Sir Scroop How, one of the Knights of the Shire for the County of Nottingham in the late Parliaments, appear'd in the King's-Bench Court, to anſwer to an Information for Words ſpoken againſt the King and the Duke of York; which being read, he pleaded Guilty, confeſs'd his Offence with much Sorrow, and caſt himſelf upon the Mercy of his Majeſty and Royal Highneſs: And being the next day introduc'd to them both, he was upon his humble Submiſſion, receiv'd into Grace and Favour; upon which he acknowledg'd, That he ow'd his Life and Eſtate to his Majeſty's Goodneſs; and that he wou'd for the future dedicate both to the Service of his Majeſty, and the Royal Family.

A Search after Danvers.

Sir Scroop How proſecuted.

Surrendring of Charters.

As to the Buſineſs of Corporations, and ſurrendring of Charters, there were ſeveral about this time given up, and more new ones return'd, which were generally receiv'd with all the Marks of Joy and Exultation: Among which were Leiceſter, Lincoln, Kendal, Leeds, Carliſle, and many in Cornwall. Some of theſe, as Leiceſter in particular, had new Priviledges of Fairs

Fairs and other Advantages granted to them in their new Charters; ſo that whatever were the ſecret Deſigns of the Court, or the Incroachments upon the Liberties of the People, ſtill there was a general Satisfaction, and a ready Reliance upon the Goodneſs of the King; and the Complaints and Exclamations made upon theſe Occaſions, were infinitely greater afterwards, than any about this Time. 1684. Car. 37 Ref. 25

The King in the Height of his Power.

2. By theſe Means, and other concurring Circumſtances, the King's Power and Authority was brought to ſuch a Height as had not been known for many Years, and ſuch as might well prove formidable to a free and jealous People; but ſtill the King had this Advantage, that all that was gracious and popular was attributed to Himſelf, and what was harſh and ſevere, to the Duke his Brother, who at the ſame Time had both his Admirers and Fearers. The Whig Party was now broken and diminiſh'd, and all that look'd like Faction and Sedition was ſuppreſs'd, and in a great meaſure extinguiſh'd; and the Diſſenters, who had ſo much Cheriſh'd the Popiſh Plot and the Excluſion Bill, were reduc'd to the loweſt Ebb; inſomuch that in moſt great Towns and Corporations, except the City of London, the greateſt Part of them came regularly to Church, eſpecially the leſs rigid and younger Sort. So that this Reign, if it had continu'd a while longer in this Courſe, as it had been the Riſe, ſo probably it wou'd have been the Ruin of all Meeting-Houſes. The City of London, where the Oppoſition to the Court had been ſtrongeſt, was likewiſe reduc'd to a full Submiſſion and Subjection: So that the King, with his Revenues Increaſing, his Debts Diminiſhing, and his Religion not Threatning, had now Opportunity of effecting great Things, either Excellent or Terrible. But we do not find that his Will and Inclinations tended very much towards Either.

His particular Declaration.

However, as to the Felicity enjoy'd by the King at this preſent Time, his Majeſty has remarkably expreſs'd himſelf in his Large Declaration, relating to the late Conſpiracy drawn up by Dr. Sprat, and now ready for the Preſs; in which we are aſſur'd, 'That after the unvaluable Mercy of 'God to him and his Subjects, in his moſt happy Reſtoration, his Ma'jeſty cannot but eſteem This to have been equall'd by none but That; 'that in ſo dangerous a Juncture of Publick Affairs, he has met with ſo 'many unfeigned Teſtimonies of Love to his Perſon, and Zeal to his Go'vernment, from all Degrees of Men in the Nation. And if ſome have 'ſwerv'd from their Duty, yet his Majeſty's Indignations and Reſentments 'againſt them are overwhelm'd by the comfortable Remembrance of the 'far greater and better Number of thoſe who ſtood by him in the ſeve'reſt Tryals. So his Majeſty has juſt Reaſon to acknowledge, the main 'Body of the Nobility and Gentry has done; ſo has the whole ſound 'and honeſt Part of the Commonalty; ſo the great Fountains of Know'ledge and Civility, the Two Univerſities; ſo the wiſeſt and moſt Learn'ed in the Laws; ſo the whole Clergy, and all the Genuine Sons of the 'Church of England. ——His Majeſty cannot here forbear to let the 'World know, what entire Satisfaction he has taken in one ſpecial Te'ſtimony of his Subjects Affections; whence through God's gracious 'Providence the Monarchy has gain'd a moſt conſiderable Advantage; 'And it is, That ſo great a Number of the Cities and Corporations of 'this Kingdom, have ſince ſo freely reſign'd their Local Immunities and 'Charters into his Majeſty's Hands; leſt the Abuſe of any of them ſhou'd 'again hereafter prove hazardous to the Juſt Prerogatives of the Crown. 'This his Majeſty declares he eſteems as the Peculiar Honour of his 'Reign; being ſuch, as none of the moſt Popular of all his late Royal

1684. Car. 37 Ref. 25

'Predeceſſors cou'd have promis'd to themſelves, or hop'd for. Where-
'fore his Majeſty thinks himſelf more than ordinary oblig'd to continue,
'as he has hitherto begun, to ſhew the greateſt Moderation and Benigni-
'ty, in the Exerciſe of ſo great a Truſt: Reſolving upon this Occaſion,
'to convince the higheſt Pretenders to the Common-weal, That as the 'Crown was the firſt Original, ſo it is ſtill the ſureſt Guardian of all the 'People's Lawful Rights and Priviledges.

An intended Turn.

Notwithſtanding theſe, and ſome particular Expreſſions in it in favour of his Royal Brother, we are told by ſome, That the King had at this Time laid a Project for an extraordinary Change in the Affairs of England, which wou'd have been effected if he had liv'd a few Weeks longer; namely that the Duke of Monmouth wou'd have been recall'd to Court, the Duke of York ſent beyond Sea, and a new Parliament immediately conven'd. This ſeems to have been founded upon ſome Paſſages in the Duke of Monmouth's Pocket-Book, which not long after was ſeiz'd with his Perſon: Tho' they further tell us, That the King about this Time had in a Paſſion dropt ſome Expreſſions that intimated his being abus'd and deceiv'd, and That if he liv'd but a Month longer, he wou'd find a Way to make himſelf eaſy for the reſt of his Life. Of this we have no full Certainty; yet theſe and the like Intimations, or the Belief of them, have been the Occaſion of many ſtrange Conjectures that appear'd afterwards.

The King's ſudden Sickneſs.

3. In the Height of his Glory, on Monday Morning the 2d of February, the King was ſuddenly ſeiz'd with a violent Fit of an Apoplexy, which for a while made him look'd upon as a dead Man: But being immediately let Blood by a Phyſician that happen'd to be by, he was brought to his Senſes, and to a hopeful Way of Recovery; for which the ſaid Phyſician had a great Reward promis'd him, and his Pardon, as having acted without a Conſult and the Privy-Council. The very Noiſe of this was a dreadful Allarm to the whole Kingdom, and a Form of Prayer was immediately iſſu'd out to be us'd in all Churches to obtain his Majeſty's Recovery; and ſure never any Prayer was ſent up to Heaven with more Fervour and Earneſtneſs. But God did not think fit to anſwer ſo deſirable a Petition: So the King continu'd four Days in a weak and languiſhing Condition, but for the moſt part ſenſible of his approaching Fate.

Biſhop Ken's Attendance,

During this Time, the pious Biſhop Ken, lately preferr'd and moſt eſteem'd by the King, gave as cloſe Attendance as he was permitted by the Royal Bed, and without any Intermiſſion for three whole Days and Nights; watching at proper Intervals, to ſuggeſt ſeaſonable and pious Thoughts and Ejaculations, on ſo ſolemn an Occaſion: In which Time the favourite Miſtreſs, the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, coming into the Room, the Biſhop prevail'd with his Majeſty to have her remov'd; and likewiſe took that Occaſion of Repreſenting the great Injury and Injuſtice done to his Queen by Her and Others; which he did ſo effectually, that his Majeſty was induc'd to ſend for the Queen, and asking Pardon of her, he had the Satisfaction of her particular Forgiveneſs at this Time. The Biſhop having urg'd home the Neceſſity of a full, and prevail'd, as he hop'd, for a ſincere Repentance, ſeveral Times propos'd the Adminiſtration of the Holy Sacrament: But tho' it was not abſolutely rejected, it was yet delay'd from Time to Time, till by ſome new Authority the Biſhop and others were remov'd from his Preſence.

And Father Hudleſton's.

So immediately the Duke of York brought in Father Hudleſton, a Benedictine, who had ſo ſignally aſſiſted in ſaving the King's Life after the Battle of Worceſter. He appear'd on Thurſday the 5th of February about Eight Eight in the Evening, and his Majeſty readily accepted of his Service, which he perform'd in the Preſence of the Duke himſelf, the Earl of Bath, firſt Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber, and the Earl of Feverſham, Captain of the Guards. The Father went through ſome of the Romiſh Offices, and adminiſter'd to the King three of their Sacraments, as firſt that of Penance, next Extreme Unction, and laſtly that of the Euchariſt; of all which he has given us a particular and full Account. And ſo now being fully enter'd into the Boſom of the Church of Rome, and declaring himſelf a true Catholick, his Majeſty's Weakneſs increaſing, he expired the next Day about Noon, being Friday the 6th of February, to the unexpreſſible Sorrow and Affliction of all his Subjects. His Age was now fifty four Years, eight Months and ſix Days. His Reign, if reckon'd from the Death of his Father, was thirty ſix Years and ſeven Days; but if reckon'd from the Day of his Reſtoration, it was but twenty four Years, eight Months, and ſix Days.

The King's Death.

As to the Character of this Prince, we have already twice drawn his Picture, in two different Poſtures and Ages; the Firſt at the Reſtoration, chiefly from Dr. Charlton, and the Second in the Middle of his Reign from Sir William Temple, which the Reader is deſir'd to remember. And now a third Time we ſhall expoſe it to him in full Length, as it is drawn by the ingenious Pen of the Earl of Mulgrave, a Perſon of ſufficient Skill and Acquaintance, tho' perhaps not ſo perfectly let into the Secret of his Religion, of which however he gives a handſome Account. It was writ ſome Time after the great Revolution, and begins with this Preface: 'I have pitch'd on this Character of King Charles the 'Second, not for his being a King, nor my having had the Honour to ſerve 'him; the Firſt of theſe would be too Vulgar a Conſideration, and the 'Other too Particular: But I think it a Theme of great Variety; and 'whatever is wanting in the Writer, may, I hope, be recompenced in 'the Agreeableneſs of the Subject, which is ſometimes enough to re-'commend a Picture, tho' ill drawn; and to make a Face one likes, oft-'ner look'd on, than the beſt Piece of Raphael.' As to the King's Religion, his Lordſhip thinks it to be more Deiſm than Popery; which he ſays, 'He ow'd more to the Livelineſs of his Parts, and Careleſneſs of 'his Temper, than either to Reading, or much Conſideration; for his 'Quickneſs of Apprehenſion, at firſt View, could diſcern through the ſe-'veral Cheats of pious Pretences; and his natural Lazineſs confirm'd him 'in an equal Miſtruſt of them all, for fear he ſhould be troubled with Ex-'amining which was beſt.' But then his Lordſhip obſerves, 'If in his 'early Travels, and late Deſigns, he ſeem'd a little biaſs'd to one Sort of 'Religion; the Firſt is only to be imputed to a certain Eaſineſs of Tem-'per, and a Complaiſance for that Company he then was forc'd to keep; 'and the Laſt was no more than his being Tired, which he ſoon was 'in any Difficulty, with thoſe bold Oppoſitions in Parliament, which 'made him almoſt throw himſelf into the Arms of a Roman-Catholick 'Party, ſo remarkable of late for their Loyalty; who embrac'd him glad-'ly, and lull'd him aſleep with thoſe Enchanting Songs of Sovereignty 'and Prerogative, which the beſt and wiſeſt Princes are often unable to 'reſiſt. And tho' he engag'd himſelf on that Side more fully, at a Sea-'ſon when 'tis in vain, and too late to diſſemble, we ought leſs to won-'der at it, than to conſider that our very Judgments are apt to grow in 'Time as partial as our Affections: And thus, by Accident only, he be-'came of their Opinion in his Weakneſſes, who had ſo much endea-'vour'd always to contribute to his Power.

A third Character of him by the Earl of Mulgrave.

1684/5. Car. 37 Ref. 25

Then his Lordship proceeds in these Words: 'He lov'd Ease and 'Quiet; to which his Unnecessary Wars are so far from being a Contradiction, that they are rather a Proof of it; since they were made 'only to comply with those Persons, whose Dissatisfaction would have 'prov'd more uneasy to one of his Humour, than all that distant Noise 'of Cannon, which he would often listen to with a great deal of Tranquillity. Besides, the great and almost only Pleasure of Mind he seem'd 'addicted to, was Shipping and Sea-Affairs; which seem'd to be so 'much his Talent for Knowledge, as well as Inclination, that a War of that 'Kind, was rather an Entertainment, than any Disturbance to his 'Thoughts. If he did not go himself at the Head of so Magnificent a 'Fleet, 'tis only to be imputed to that Eagerness of Military Glory in 'his Brother; which under a Shew of a decent Care for Preserving the 'Royal Person from Danger, engross'd all that Sort of Honour to Himself, with as much Jealousy of any other's Interposing in it, as a King of 'another Temper, would have had of His. 'Tis certain, no Prince was 'ever more fitted by Nature for his Country's Interest, than his was in 'all his Maritime Inclinations; which might have prov'd of sufficient 'Advantage to the Nation, if he had been as careful of Depressing all such 'Improvements in France, as of Advancing and Encouraging our Own: 'But it seems he wanted Jealousy in all his Inclinations, which leads us 'to consider him in his Pleasures: Where he was rather Abandon'd, than 'Luxurious; and like our Female Libertines, apter to be persuaded into 'Debauches for the Satisfaction of Others, than to seek, with Choice, 'where most to please Himself. I am of Opinion also, that in his Latter 'Time, there was as much of Laziness, as of Love, in all those Hours 'he pass'd among his Mistresses; who, after all, only serv'd to fill up his 'Seraglio, while a bewitching kind of Pleasure, call'd Santring, and Talking without Constraint, was the true Sultana Queen he delighted in.

'He was surely inclin'd to Justice; for nothing else cou'd have retain'd 'him so fast in the Succession of a Brother, against a Son he was so fond 'of, and the Humour of a Party which he so much fear'd. I am willing also to impute to his Justice, whatever seems in some Measure to 'contradict the general Opinion of his Clemency; as his Suffering always 'the Rigour of the Law to proceed, not only against all High-Way-Men, 'but also several Others, in whose Cases the Lawyers, according to their 'wonted Custom, had sometimes us'd a great deal of Hardship and Severity. His Understanding was quick and lively in Little Things, and 'sometimes wou'd soar high enough in Great Ones, but unable to keep it 'up with any any Long Attention or Application. Witty in all sorts of 'Conversation; and telling a Story so well, that, not out of Flattery, 'but the Pleasure of hearing it, we seem'd ignorant of what he had repeated 'to us Ten Times before, as a good Comedy will bear the being often 'seen. Of a wonderful Mixture; losing all his Time, and setting his 'whole Heart on the Fair Sex, yet neither angry with Rivals, nor the 'least nice as to their being Belov'd; and while he Sacrific'd all things 'to his Mistresses, he wou'd use to Grudge and be uneasy at their losing 'a little of it again at Play, tho' never so necessary for their Diversion: 'Nor wou'd he venture five Pounds at Tennis to those Servants, who 'might obtain as many Thousands, either before he came thither, or as 'soon as he left off. Full of Dissimulation, and very dextrous at it, yet 'no Man easier to be impos'd on; for his great Dexterity was in Cousening himself, by gaining a Little one Way, while he lost Ten Times as 'much another; and by caressing those Persons most, who had deluded 'him the oftenest; and yet the quickest in the World at spying such a Ridicule

'dicule in another. Eaſy and Good-natur'd to all People in Trifles; but 168 4/5

'Thing. In the midſt of all his Remiſſneſs, ſo induſtrious and indefati'gable on ſome Particular Occaſions, that no Man wou'd either toil
'Longer, or be able to manage it Better.

'He was ſo Liberal, as to ruin his Affairs by it; for Want in a King
'of England, turns things juſt upſide down, and expoſes a Prince to his 'Peoples Mercy: It did yet worſe in him, for it forc'd him alſo to de'pend on his great Neighbour of France; who play'd the Broker with 'him ſufficiently in all thoſe Times of Extremity. Yet this Profuſeneſs
'of his, did not ſo much proceed from his Over-valuing thoſe he favour'd,
'as from his Under-valuing any Sums of Money which he did not ſee;
'tho' he found his Error in this, but I confeſs a little of the lateſt. He 'had ſo natural Averſion to all Formality, that with as much Wit as moſt
'Men ever had, and as Majeſtick a Mein, yet he cou'd not on Premedi'tation act the Part of a King for a Moment, either at Parliament, or at 'Council, either in Words or Geſture; which carry'd him into the other
'Extream, more inconvenient of the two for a Prince, of letting all Di-
'ſtinction and Ceremony fall to the Ground as Uſeleſs and Foppiſh. His 'Temper, both of Body and Mind, was admirable, which made him an
'Eaſy Generous Lover, a Civil Obliging Husband, a Friendly Brother, an 'Indulgent Father, and a Good-Natur'd Maſter. If he had been as 'ſolicitous about Improving the Faculties of his Mind, as he was in the 'Management of his Bodily Health; tho', alas! This prov'd unable to make 'his Life Long, That had not fail'd to make it Famous. He was an illu-
'ſtrious Exception to all the common Rules of Phyſiognomy; for with a
'moſt Saturnine harſh ſort of Countenance, he was both of a Merry and 'Merciful Diſpoſition; and in the laſt Thirty years of his Life, as For- 'tunate, as thoſe of his Father had been Diſmal and Tumultuous.

'If his Death had ſome Appearance of being Untimely, it may be part'ly imputed to his extream Healthy Conſtitution, which made the World
'as much ſurpriz'd at his Dying before Threeſcore, as if nothing but an 'ill Accident cou'd kill him. I wou'd not ſay any Thing on ſo ſad a Sub'ject, if I did not think that Silence it ſelf wou'd in ſuch a Caſe ſignify
'too much; and therefore, as an Impartial Writer, I am oblig'd to ob-
'ſerve, That the moſt knowing, and the moſt deſerving of his Phyſici-
'ans [Dr. Short] did not only believe him Poyſon'd, but thought himſelf
'ſo too, not long after, for having declared his Opinion a little too Bold-
'ly. But here I muſt needs take notice of an unuſual piece of Juſtice,
'which yet all the World has almoſt unanimouſly agreed in; I mean, in
'not ſuſpecting the Succeſſor of the leaſt Connivance at ſo horrid a Vil-
'lany; and perhaps there is hardly a more remarkable Inſtance of that
'invincible Power of Truth and Innocence: For it's next to a Miracle,
'that ſo Unfortunate a Prince, in the midſt of all thoſe Diſadvantages he 'lies under, ſhou'd be yet clear'd of this, even by his greateſt Enemies;
'notwithſtanding all thoſe Circumſtances that us'd to give a Suſpicion,
'and that Extream Malice which has of late attended him in all his Other 'Actions.

The Concluſion of the whole.

Thus far the noble Author; of whoſe Suggeſtion concerning the King's Death, ſomething may probably be expected in this Hiſtory, ſince the Matter has been believ'd by ſo many. But after the beſt and ſtricteſt Enquiries, we never cou'd enter far enough into thoſe dark Receſſes, as to make any juſt and clear Diſcovery: We have indeed found ſome unlucky and ſuſpicious Circumſtances, which may naturally give Riſe to ſuch a Belief;

1684. Car. 37 Ref. 25

Belief; concerning which the Reader is referr'd to Dr. Welwood, who ſeems to have labour'd the Point, and ingeniouſly laid down the Arguments on both Sides. He juſtly obſerves, That few Princes come to die a ſudden Death, but the World is apt to attribute it to Foul Play, eſpecially if it be attended with unuſual Circumſtances in the Time and Manner of it; in Expatiating upon which, he is forc'd to leave the Matter at laſt in manifeſt Doubt and Uncertainty; ſo that it may ſtill remain a Problem to Poſterity, whether he dy'd a natural Death, or was haſtned to his Grave by Treachery. However it was, we ſhall conclude his Reign and Character according to the Doctor's Opinion; That this Prince was ſo dextrous in the general Arts of Inſinuation, and had acquired ſo great an Aſcendent over the Affections of the People, in ſpite of all the unhappy Meaſures he had taken, that it may in ſome Senſe be ſaid, He dy'd opportunely for the Engliſh Nation; ſince if he had liv'd, it's probable in Compliance to his appearing Goodneſs, they might have complimented themſelves out of their main and principal Liberties, if he had had but an Inclination to be Maſter of them; which 'tis but Charity to believe he had not, at leaſt immediately before his Death. Sure it is, that, ſince the Murder of his Father, there never was a deeper Sorrow, nor more Tears ſhed in England, than appear'd upon the firſt News of the Death of this Beloved Monarch; which was look'd upon as the greateſt Misfortune and Calamity that cou'd befall the Nation.

I. 1. IN the midſt of the greateſt Calm that had been known in England ſince the Reſtoration, began the wonderful Reign of King James the Second, who from the Moment of his Brother's Death found himſelf in actual and peaceable Poſſeſſion of all his Rights, Powers and Dominions. As he enter'd without the leaſt Oppoſition, ſo without any Murmurs or Complaints; all Heats and Animoſities againſt him were forgotten and bury'd; and He, who but a few Years ſince was not only to be Excluded from the Crown, but proſcrib'd and baniſh'd from his his Native Land, immediately found himself a Monarch of as much Authority and Revenue as any that had before ascended the Throne. All the adverse Party were broken and dispers'd, and the other most ready to embrace him; so that the Morning of his Reign discover'd no Prognosticks of the Storms and Tempests that follow'd, but seem'd every Way to promise a Serene and happy Season. This Prince was past the Meridian of his Age, being now above fifty one Years old; in the former Part of which, as he had too early Occasions to look into the Genius of Foreign Courts, so his riper Years afforded him sufficient Opportunities of Understanding that of the People he was to govern, and particularly taught him how hard it was to overturn the Establish'd Religion, or to introduce a new One, since he had wrestled through a great many Difficulties upon the Account of his Own. Indeed he had so many Years Experience before he mounted the Throne, that few of his Predecessors cou'd boast of the like Advantages. What he wanted of his Brother's Parts and Capacity, was amply made up by Application and Industry; and of late Years he had forsaken those Pleasures, in which in former Times his Brother cou'd not exceed him, and shew'd a more grave, austere and haughty Demeanour. He was of a Martial Temper, and had given many Proofs of his Courage and Abilities that Way, both by Sea and Land; and perfectly understood the Affairs of the Navy, the Strength and Glory of the three Kingdoms. He was Temperate and Frugal, a very prudent Manager of his Treasure, a kind Husband, and an indulgent Father; and, till after he came to the Crown, esteem'd an inviolable Observer of his Word: From which if he had never deviated, his Reign might have been as happy as any of his Predecessors; or if he cou'd have held to his Brother's Opinion upon his Death-Bed, who delivering to him the Key of his Strong-Box, particularly advis'd him Not to think of Introducing the Romish Religion into England, it being a Thing both Dangerous and Impracticable.

To proceed in Order of Time: Immediately after the Death of King Charles the Second, such of the Lords of the Privy Council, together with such other of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal as were in Town, overwhelm'd with Grief, assembled together, to the Number of above Forty; and without Hesitation sign'd an Instrument for Proclaiming the Duke of York and Albany King, by the Name of James the Second. In which they had these Words; 'We, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, 'assisted with those of his late Majesty's Privy Council, with Numbers 'of other Principal Gentlemen of Quality, with the Lord Mayor, Alder- 'men and Citizens of London, do now hereby with one full Voice and 'Consent of Tongue and Heart, Publish and Proclaim, That the high and 'mighty Prince James the Second, is now by the Death of our late Sove- 'raign of happy Memory, become our Lawful, Lineal, and Rightful 'Liege Lord, &c. To whom we do acknowledge all Faith and constant 'Obedience, with all hearty and humble Affection; Beseeching God, 'by whom Kings do Reign, to bless the Royal King James the Second 'with long and happy Years to reign over us.' And such Celerity was us'd in getting all Things ready that were proper for the Ceremony, that on the Afternoon of the same Day the King dy'd, the Proclamation was read and solemniz'd in all the most usual Places in the City. All People now began to wipe their Eyes, and to dry up those Tears they had so plentifully shed, and all Heats and Prejudices against the late Duke of York seem'd to have been lost and swallow'd up amidst the loud Acclamations of the People.

He is proclaim'd KING.

But

But what gave infinite Eaſe to the afflicted Mind of the Nation, was a moſt acceptable Speech ſpoken by the new King to his Privy Council now ſworn a ſecond Time, and publiſhed the ſame Day in theſe Words: My Lords, Before I enter upon any other Buſineſs, I think fit to ſay ſomething to you. Since it hath pleaſed Almighty God to place Me in this Station, and I am now to ſucceed ſo good and gracious a King, as well as ſo kind a Brother, I think it fit to declare to you, that I will endeavour to follow his Example, and moſt eſpecially in that of his great Clemency and Tenderneſs to his People. I have been reported to be a Man for Arbitrary Power, but that is not the only Story that has been made of Me; and I ſhall make it my Endeavour to preſerve this Government both in Church and State, as it is now by Law Eſtabliſh'd. I know the Principles of the Church of England are for Monarchy, and the Members of it have ſhewed themſelves good and loyal Subjects; therefore I ſhall always take care to defend and ſupport It. I know too, that the Laws of England are ſufficient to make the King as Great a Monarch as I can wiſh; and as I ſhall never depart from the juſt Rights and Prerogative of the Crown, ſo I ſhall never invade any Man's Property. I have often heretofore ventured my Life in Defence of the Nation, and I ſhall ſtill go as far as any Man in preſerving it in all its juſt Rights and Liberties. Upon delivering this Speech, the Lords became humble Suitors to his Majeſty, that theſe his gracious Expreſſions might be made publick, which was immediately done, to the mighty Satisfaction of the People, who ſoon began to have all the imaginable Hopes of Happineſs; and even thoſe who had before appeared againſt him with the greateſt Warmth, were willing now to own themſelves miſtaken, and were ready to expreſs their Repentance for what was paſt. And what ſtill farther ſupported theſe Hopes, was a general Belief of the King's ſtrict Obſervance of his Word and Faith, which was ſo induſtriouſly propagated, that he in a little time came to be call'd JAMES THE JUST.

His Speech and Declaration to the Council.

Which gave great Satisfaction.

And as his preſent Majeſty ſo peaceably enter'd upon the Throne of England, ſo with the ſame Eaſe and Satisfaction, he was ſoon after proclaim'd at Edinburgh in Scotland, by the Name of James the Seventh, where the Ceremony was perform'd with as much Joy and Solemnity as cou'd well be imagin'd. And ſhortly after that, he was with equal Pomp and Splendor proclaim'd at Dublin in Ireland, by the Lord Lieutenant, the Duke of Ormond, who in a little Time came over into England loaden with innumerable Addreſſes from that Kingdom.

Proclaim'd in Scotland and Ireland.

2. The firſt Days of this new King's Reign, were ſpent in writing Letters, and ſending Diſpatches to other Princes, in receiving the Complements both of Condolence and Congratulation of thoſe foreign Embaſſadors and Miniſters who happened to be then in London; in the interring the late King his Brother, and in ſettling the Officers of the Houſhold, and beſtowing Civil and Military Employments. But becauſe the late King's Death had in courſe vacated all the chief Places of Truſt, the firſt publick Act that appear'd, beſides his Speech to the Privy Council, was a Proclamation, which declared, 'That all Perſons, who at the Deceaſe of the late King, 'were lawfully poſſeſs'd of any Office, whether Civil or Military, within the 'Realms of England and Ireland, or any other of his Dominions thereto 'belonging, particularly all Preſidents, Lieutenants, Vice-Preſidents, Ju'ſtices of the Peace, Sheriffs, &c. ſhould be continu'd in the ſaid Places 'and Offices, as formerly they held and enjoy'd the ſame, until the King's 'Pleaſure ſhall be farther known.' And farther, for the Preſervation of the Peace, he declared, 'That all Perſons then in Offices, of whatſoever Degree 'or Condition, ſhall not fail, every one according to his Place, Office, or 'Charge, to proceed in the Performance and Execution of all Duties there-

'to belonging, as formerly appertained to them while the late King was living; 'and that all the King's Subjects ſhould be aiding and aſſiſting to the Com- 'mand of the ſaid Officers and Miniſters in the Performance of their reſpective 'Offices and Places, upon pain of the King's Diſpleaſure. Laſtly, That all 'Orders and Directions made or given by the Lords of the Privy Council of 'the late King in his Life-time, ſhould be obey'd and perform'd by all and 'every Perſon, as it ſhould or had been obey'd in the Life of the late King.

The Funeral of the late King.

The Interment of the late King, which follow'd ſoon after, was look'd upon as too private and parſimonious, for the Honour of his preſent Majeſty, of which the following Account was given by Authority. On the 14th of February at Night, was ſolemniz'd the Funeral of his late Majeſty King Charles the Second, from the Painted Chamber in the Palace at Weſtminſter, to the Abby-Church there. The Body was carry'd under a Velvet Canopy, born by the Gentlemen of the Privy Chamber, ſix Earls ſupporting the Pall. The Proceeding began with Servants to the Nobility, their Royal Highneſſes, their preſent Majeſties, the Queen Dowager, and the late King's Servants, &c. After whom follow'd Barons, Biſhops, and others of the Nobility, according to their reſpective Degrees, together with the great Officers, and the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury. His Royal Highneſs the Prince of Denmark, was Chief Mourner, his Train was born by the Lord Cornbury: The Supporters to the Chief Mourner, were the Dukes of Somerſet and Beaufort, wearing the Collars of their Order, as the other Knights of the Garter then preſent did, and the Aſſiſtants to the Chief Mourner, were ſixteen Earls. One of the Kings of Arms carry'd the Crown and Cuſhion, the reſt of the Officers of Arms attending and directing the Ceremony, which was clos'd with his Majeſty's Band of Gentlemen Penſioners, and the Yeomen of the Guard. At the entrance into the Church, the Dean and Prebendaries of Weſtminſter, attended with the Choir, met the Body, and proceeded to King Henry the Seventh's Chapel, where it was interr'd in a Vault under the Eaſt-end of the South-Iſle. Service being ended, and the Officers of his Majeſty's Houſhold having broken their Staffs, the Royal Style was proclaimed by another of the Kings of Arms, according to Cuſtom. Afterwards was erected in the Place, a beautiful Effigies of Wax exactly reſembling his Perſon, and plac'd among thoſe of many of his Predeceſſors.

In ſettling the Officers of the Houſhold, and beſtowing publick Employments, the King took the firſt Notice of His Royal Highneſs Prince George, who three Days after the late King's Deceaſe, was ſolemnly call'd into the Council-Chamber, and accordingly took his Place at the Board. Within a few Days after, his Majeſty was graciouſly pleas'd to make his Grace the Duke of Ormond, Lord Steward, the Earl of Arlington Lord Chamberlain, the Lord Viſcount Newport, Treaſurer; the Lord Maynard Comptroller, and Henry Savil, Eſq; Vice-Chamberlain of his Houſhold, in which Offices they had all ſerv'd the late King. And ſoon after that his Majeſty appointed Henry Bulkley, Eſq; to be Maſter of his Houſhold, Sir Stephen Fox eldeſt Clerk of the Greencloth, Sir William Boreman ſecond Clerk of the ſame, Sir Winſton Churchill eldeſt Clerk-Comptroller, and Sir Richard Maſon youngeſt Clerk-Comptroller, in which Places they had likewiſe ſerv'd his late Majeſty. Moreover, Lawrence, Earl of Rocheſter, Lord Preſident of the Council, and Brother-in-law to the King, was now conſtituted Lord High-Treaſurer of England, and accordingly receiv'd the White-Staff on the 16th of February, an Office that had not been held by any ſingle Perſon ſince the Earl of Danby's Impeachment in the Year 1679. The other Brother-in-law, the Earl of Clarendon, was made Lord Privy-Seal, the Marquis of Hallifax Lord Preſident of the Privy-Council, the Duke of Beaufort Lord Preſident of Wales, and the Lord Godolphin Lord Chamberlain to the Queen. His Majeſty was likewiſe pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon ſeveral Perſons that had been ſerviceable to the Crown; particularly upon Thomas Vernon of London, Eſq; as a Mark of his Royal Favour, for his ſtedfaſt Loyalty. Next upon William Hamon, Eſq; Mayor of Briſtol, then on Marmaduke Dayrel, Eſq; Son of Sir Thomas Dayrel, late of Camps-Caſtle in the County of Cambridge; and laſtly, upon Roger L'Eſtrange, Eſq; with this additional Declaration in Publick: 'In conſideration of his eminent and unſhaken Loyalty to the 'Crown in all Extremities, and as a Mark of ſingular Satisfaction his Ma-'jeſty has in his preſent, as well as paſt Services, with repeated Declara-'tions of his Royal Grace and Bounty towards him. 1684. 3. But to return once more to the Beginning of this Reign; the firſt Sunday, which was but two Days after the late King's Death, his preſent Majeſty went publickly to Maſs in St. James's Chapel, and openly declar'd and profeſs'd himſelf a Papiſt; tho' in the former Reign, ſome Perſons had ſeverely ſuffered for barely ſaying he was of that Perſuaſion. This was a ſurprizing Stroke, eſpecially to ſeveral who did not believe it, and caus'd variety of Diſcourſes about it; ſome commended him for his 'Honeſty and 'Fair-dealing, in not diſſembling his Religion;' and others ſaid, 'It was 'impolitickly done, and that if he intended to countenance Popery, and 'overturn the Eſtabliſh'd Religion, it wou'd certainly terminate in his own 'Ruine.' This, and the manifeſt Zeal of the King, was ſoon obſerv'd by Don Pedro Ronquillor, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, who, as Puffendorf informs us, at his firſt Audience after the Death of King Charles, firſt ask'd leave to ſpeak his Mind freely upon that Occaſion, and then made bold to tell his Majeſty, 'That he ſaw ſeveral Prieſts about him, that he knew 'wou'd importune him to alter the Eſtabliſh'd Religion in England, but he 'wiſh'd his Majeſty wou'd not give Ear to their Advice; for if he did, he 'was aſſur'd his Majeſty wou'd have Reaſon to repent of it when it was too 'late.' This Author tells us, that King James took ill the Freedom of this foreign Miniſter, and ask'd him in a Paſſion, Whether in Spain, they adviſ'd with their Confeſſors? Yes, Sir, anſwer'd the Ambaſſador, we do, and that's the Reaſon our Affairs go ſo ill. The ſame Hiſtorian does likewiſe inform us, that the Pope himſelf, Innocent the Eleventh, writ a Letter to the King upon his Acceſſion to the Crown, to this Effect, 'That he 'was highly pleas'd with his Majeſty's Zeal for the Catholick Religion, but 'he was afraid his Majeſty might puſh it too far, and inſtead of contributing 'to his own Greatneſs, and to the Advancement of the Catholick Church, 'he might come to do both it and himſelf, the greateſt Prejudice, by at-'tempting that which his Holineſs was well aſſured from long Experience, 'cou'd not ſucceed. The King appears at Maſs. Cenſures upon it.

The next Step the King made, after his publick Appearance at Maſs, moſt plainly ſhew'd whither he was going, and that he expected to be follow'd by all that intended to ſhare his Favours: For before his Brother cou'd be ſaid to be cold in his Grave, he caus'd it to be publiſh'd and atteſted by Father Hudleſton, 'That the late King dy'd in the Communion of the Church of 'Rome, and all the Particulars were inſerted of his giving him Extreme 'Unction, the Euchariſt, &c. This was publiſh'd together with a little Treatiſe call'd, A ſhort and plain Way to the Faith and Church; which Treatiſe Father Hudleſton tells us, had formerly made great Impreſſions upon the Mind of King Charles in the Year 1651, in his Retirement ſoon after the Battel of Worceſter, when he himſelf was ſo great an Inſtrument of his Eſcape; and that upon Peruſal of it, his then Majeſty declar'd, That he had not ſeen any thing more plain and clear upon the Subject; and the Arguments drawn from Succeſſion, were ſo concluſive, he did not conceive how they cou'd be deny'd. Beſides theſe, there were likewiſe publiſh'd with them He declares the late King a Papiſt, &c.

two remarkable Papers, written, as it was declar'd, by the late King himſelf, and found in his ſtrong Box; both endeavouring to prove the Neceſſity of a viſible Church and Guide, which cou'd be no other than the Church of Rome. Concerning which Papers, beſides the Atteſtation of the preſent King, the Duke of Ormond afterwards declar'd, That they both were certainly written by King Charles's own Hand. However, the Deſign of the whole Publication was to ſhew, 'That tho' that King had outwardly pre-'tended otherwiſe in his Life, yet in his Heart he was truly a Roman Ca-'tholick.' So that now it became in ſome degree meritorious to ſay that King Charles was a Papiſt, whereas in his own Reign the hinting of it was attended with ſome of the higheſt Penalties and Puniſhments. And farther to confirm that he was really ſo, Mr. William Chaffinch, Keeper of the King's Cloſet, ſoon after his Death, was pleas'd to ſhew to ſome ſelect Friends a ſmall and moſt private Chapel in Whitehall, annex'd to the Cloſet, to which, as he declar'd, that King, in his latter Years, was wont to go regularly, tho' ſecretly, to Maſs.

Proclamation for levying the Cuſtoms, &c.

4. As the preſent King's Proceedings on Religion cou'd not eaſily be interpreted, Maintaining the Church of England, ſo his publiſhing a Proclamation for levying that Part of the Cuſtoms that had been granted to King Charles only for Life, was thought as hard an Argument to prove, He wou'd never invade any Man's Property. The Proclamation, which came out three Days after his Brother's Death, was however plauſible, and not diſputed: It declar'd, 'That his Majeſty had thought fit to call a Par-'liament ſpeedily to be aſſembled, in which he made no doubt but care 'wou'd be taken for ſettling a ſufficient Revenue upon the Crown, for the 'Support of the Government; the Neceſſities of which, in the mean time, 'required that the Cuſtoms and Subſidies, and other Duties upon Mer-'chandizes, ſhou'd be continu'd to be collected, as in the time of his deareſt 'Brother lately deceas'd.' Tho' neither this, nor the King's religious Steps were much ſuſpected at this time, all Men gladly relying upon his Royal Word; yet it was thought by ſome wiſe Perſons to be a ſtrong Inclination of breaking through the Laws of the Land, and the Liberties of the Subject: And it fell under the greater Suſpicion, when not long after it the famous Addreſs of the Barriſters and Students of the Middle-Temple came to be preſented to the King in great Solemnity; which Addreſs is ſo ſpecious and remarkable, that it ought to have a place in this Hiſtory, and is as follows:

The Middle-Temple Addreſs upon it.

'Moſt dread Sovereign, We your Majeſty's moſt Loyal Subjects, with 'all Humility congratulate the legal and peaceable Deſcent of this Imperial 'Crown upon your Majeſty, the only Remedy for our unſpeakable Sorrow, 'for the Death of our moſt Gracious Sovereign of ever glorious and bleſſed 'Memory.— Your Majeſty's unparallel'd Juſtice, Courage and Conduct, 'ſignaliz'd to the World before they became Ornaments to the Crown, 'give a perfect Aſſurance of Happineſs to theſe Nations under your Go-'vernment. his Grace the Duke of Beaufort.

Many other Addreſſes.

All this while Addreſſes flow'd in like an Inundation from all Parts of the King's Dominions, from Counties, Corporations, Univerſities and Inns of Court; all appearing eager to expreſs their Loyalty and Congratulations of his Majeſty's happy Acceſſion to the Throne. Many of them were fill'd with high Strains of Rhetorick and Complement, and moſt of them took notice of the King's excellent Declaration formerly recited, and ſhew'd the moſt ſincere Marks of Gratitude for his Promiſes therein, upon which they rely'd and acquieſc'd; their greateſt Happineſs depending upon the Aſſurance of his inviolable Faith and Veracity. Upon which account, the Addreſs from the County of Suffolk has theſe following Words; 'In duti-
'ful Return to this, we ſhall make your Majeſty's Grandeur and Honour
'our firſt Aim, and are every Day making Steps towards it, by our Care
'for ſending fit Repreſentatives to a Parliament that we hope will no more 'endure Excluders, than a late one did Abhorrers.' In theſe forward Times, the very Quakers, tho' a People profeſſing an Abhorrence for Com- plementing, waited on the King with an Addreſs, which was ſo artfully worded, that it is ſaid to have confirm'd the Opinion that the Jeſuits were the Ringleaders of that Sect, and which was to this Purpoſe: 'We are come 'to teſtify our Sorrow for the Death of our good Friend Charles, and our 'Joy for thy being made our Governor. We are told thou art not of the 'Perſuaſion of the Church of England, no more than We; therefore we 'hope that thou wilt grant us the ſame Liberty which thou alloweſt thy
'ſelf: Which doing we wiſh you all manner of Happineſs.

'ditaments, many of his loving Subjects did Claim, and were bound to perform ſeveral Services on that Day, and at the Time of the Coronation, as in former Times, their Anceſtors, and they from them claim'd, had done, at the Coronation of his Predeceſſors: Therefore for the Preſervation of the Rights of his Loving Subjects, whom it might concern, he thought it fit to ſignify, that he had authoriz'd and appointed, under the Great Seal, Francis, Lord Guilford, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; Laurence, Earl of Rocheſter, Lord High-Treaſurer; George, Marquis of Hallifax, Preſident of the Council; Henry, Earl of Clarendon, Lord Privy Seal; Henry, Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marſhal; James, Duke of Ormond; Henry, Duke of Beaufort, Lord Preſident of Wales; Robert, Earl of Lindſey, Lord Great Chamberlain of England; Henry, Earl of Arlington, Lord Chamberlain of the Houſehold; Aubrey, Earl of Oxford; Theophilus, Earl of Huntington; Robert, Earl of Sunderland; Robert, Earl of Aliſbury; John, Earl of Radnor; George, Lord Dartmouth; Sidney, Lord Godolphin; Sir George Jeffreys, Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench; and Sir Thomas Jones, Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas; or any three or more of them, to receive hear and determine the Petitions and Claims which wou'd be exhibited to them, concerning the Services to be by them perform'd at the ſaid Coronation; ſtreightly charging and commanding all Perſons, of what Rank or Quality ſoever they were, to give their Attendance, according to the Summons to them directed.

Preparations towards

The CORONATION.

On the foremention'd 23d of April, St. George's Day, began the Solemnity of the Coronation, which was celebrated with the uſual Ceremony and Splendor, and with great Joy and Triumph. Yet, with reſpect to the Preparations, and previous Ceremonies, the whole wanted much of the Grandeur and Magnificence of that of the late King in 1661. There were no Knights of the Bath created, as at that time, no Triumphal Arches erected by the City, nor none of that expenſive Cavalcade from the Tower to Weſtminſter, which had been anciently perform'd the Day before the Coronation, and only diſus'd by the preſent King's Grand-father and Father, both in a peſtilential Seaſon. But his Majeſty being very frugal and cautious, and no great Admirer of outward Pomp and Popularity, thought it beſt to ſave a Charge of at leaſt Threeſcore Thouſand Pounds. Yet ſtill the preſent Solemnity had one particular Advantage, which added exceedingly to the Beauty of the Spectacle, and that was the Coronation of a beautiful Queen, which in courſe produc'd a glorious Shew of the moſt illuſtrious Ladies, both for Preſence and Quality in the Kingdom. This Coronation cou'd not paſs without a Medal, and therefore the following one was ſtruck, of the King's Effigies in Buſt, after the Roman manner, with a Laurel-wreath about his Head, and theſe Words round it, JACOBUS II. D. G. ANG. SCO. FR. ET HIB. REX. The Reverſe was alſo a Branch of Laurel upon a Cuſhion, with an arm'd Hand out of the Clouds holding a Crown; the Inſcription thus, A MILITARI AD REGIAM EXURG. And ſoon after, the following Medalion was ſtruck, tho' almoſt the ſame that was formerly remember'd in 1665, when Lord High-Admiral and Victor; the Difference being only in the Style, and the Effigies of his Majeſty in longer Hair, inſcrib'd JACOBUS II. DEI GRA. ANG. SCOT. FRANC. ET HIB. REX. The Reverſe as formerly, was a Trophy and Ships in Fight, with theſe Words, GENUS ANTIQUUM.

This Coronation afforded Occaſion for ſeveral uncommon and ominous Obſervations, which were ready to take with the Humours of the People, as particularly the King that Day cou'd hardly keep the Crown ſteady upon his Head, but was often obſerv'd to be in a tottering Condition, and that once the honourable Henry Sidney, afterwards Earl of Romney, kept it from falling off, pleaſantly telling his Majeſty, This is not the firſt Time that our Family have ſupported the Crown. It was farther obſerv'd, that the King's King's-Arms finely painted in a Glaſs-Window in one of the Churches in London, on the ſame Day, ſuddenly fell down, while the reſt was ſtanding, and broke in pieces after an unheard of manner. Theſe and ſome other foreboding Circumſtances was for ſome time the great Subject of Diſcourſe among many ſorts of People. However, there's one thing ſaid about this and another Coronation that has been too often quoted and believ'd of late, and now not to be forgotten; and this was in a Speech ſpoken by the Lord Chief Baron Atkins to Sir William Aſhurſt, when he was ſworn Lord Mayor in 1693, giving ſeveral Inſtances of the arbitrary Deſigns of the late Kings of England, he brings this for one, 'The ſtriking out of that 'part of the ancient Oath in King Charles the Firſt's Time, at his Corona-'tion by Archbiſhop Laud, (That the King ſhould conſent to ſuch Laws 'as the People ſhou'd chuſe) and inſtead of that another very unuſual One 'inſerted, ſaving the King's Royal Prerogative.' After which, he goes on and ſays, 'I cou'd tell you ſomething more of that kind done ſince, at the 'Time of the Coronation of the late King James, when there was much 'more ſtruck out of the Coronation-Oath, which might be well worth the 'Enquiring how it came about.' Now the former is nothing but an old Calumny reviv'd, which has been totally refuted and diſprov'd both by the ſaid King himſelf in his Declarations, and by many other Writers: But for the latter, we have not had an Opportunity to examine into the Bottom of it, but look upon it as a deſign'd Aſperſion upon Archbiſhop Sancroft: Only we may ſay thus much, that when a known Falſity is join'd with a great Improbability, the latter may as well be ſuppos'd to be a Miſtake, as the former is ſo without Doubt and Queſtion.

A Reflection conſider'd.

2. In the mean time the Parliament in Scotland was more haſten'd than that in England, and began on the ſame Day of the Coronation. It was open'd with a Letter from his Majeſty, bearing Date the 28th of March, and ſetting forth, 'That the many Experiences he had of the Loyalty and 'exemplary Forwardneſs of that ancient Kingdom, by their Repreſentatives 'aſſembled in Parliament in the Reign of his Brother, made him deſirous 'to call them together in the Beginning of his Reign, to give them an Op-'portunity not only of ſhewing their Duty, but alſo to be exemplary to 'others in their Demonſtrations of their Affection to his Perſon, and Com-'pliance to his Deſires. But that which he had to propoſe to them at this 'Time, was this, which was both neceſſary as well for his Safety and Ser-'vice, and had a greater Tendency towards ſecuring their own Privileges 'and Properties, than the aggrandizing his Power, which however he was 'reſolv'd to maintain in its greateſt Luſtre, that he might be the better 'enabled to protect and defend their Religion eſtabliſh'd by Law, their 'Rights and Properties, againſt Phanatical Contrivances, Murtherers and 'Aſſaſſins, which had brought them into ſuch Difficulties which only the 'ſteady Reſolutions of his Brother, and thoſe employ'd by him, cou'd have 'ſav'd them from. That nothing had been left undone by thoſe inhuman 'Traytors to overturn their Peace; and therefore he hop'd they wou'd be 'wanting in nothing to ſecure themſelves and Him. Which Things being 'of ſuch Importance, he was reſolv'd in Perſon to have propos'd to them 'the needful Remedies; but that being now impoſſible, he had ſent among 'them the Duke of Queensbery, whom he had inſtructed in all Things re-'lating to his Service and their own Proſperity; not doubting of their 'Compliance and Aſſiſtance in thoſe Matters wherein the ſaid Duke was 'inſtructed.

The Scotch Parliament with the King's Letter.

Upon the Reading the Letter, of which we have given the Subſtance, the Lord High-Commiſſioner ſpoke to this Effect: 'In the firſt place, that 'the King's ſending ſo ſoon to them for their Advice, was an evident Token

'not

'not only of the great Confidence he had in their Loyalty, and their good 'Example to his own Dominions, but alſo a Proof of his Intention to fol- 'low the Example of his Brother's great and peaceable Reign. Secondly, 'he gave them Aſſurance of his Princely Reſolutions to maintain and pro- 'tect the Government of the Church as by Law Eſtabliſh'd, and alſo that 'he wou'd take Care of the Perſons and Concerns of the Regular Clergy; 'and that he wou'd maintain their Rights and Properties, according to the 'Eſtabliſh'd Law of the Kingdom, and that they ſhou'd not be injur'd by 'any Arbitrary Oppreſſions of Soldiers or others; that he wou'd conde- 'ſcend as much in the Buſineſs of the Exciſe and Militia, as cou'd be juſtly 'expected: And on the other ſide his Majeſty expected from them to aſſert 'the Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown, and to eſtabliſh the Revenues 'as amply upon him and his lawful Succeſſors, as it was enjoy'd by his 'Royal Brother. In the laſt place he deſir'd that effectual Means might be 'fallen upon, for deſtroying that deſperate Phanatical and irreclaimable 'Party, who had brought them to the Brink of Ruin and Diſgrace, and 'were no more Rebels againſt the King, than Enemies of Mankind; 'Wretches of ſuch monſtrous Principles and Practices as paſt Ages never 'heard, nor thoſe to come will hardly believe, &c.

The Lord Chancellor's Speech.

After this the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Perth, to ſecond and ſup- port what the other had ſaid, enumerated the many Diſorders and Animo- ſities that had been among them before the King, when the Duke of York, was ſent into that Kingdom, and by what eaſie Means he had brought about the Unity, which they almoſt deſpaired of: Therefore he de- ſired them 'To promote his Majeſty's Intereſt, by deſtroying a Baſtardly 'Brood of villanous Men, whoſe maintain'd Principles authoriz'd the Per- 'petration of Things not to be nam'd among them who had ever heard of 'Government, much leſs of Religion.' Then farther to encourage them in their Duty, he added the Character of his preſent Majeſty in theſe Words; 'Let us conſider him in all his Perſonal Advantages, whether in what re- 'lates to War or Peace, where has the World afforded ſuch another? One 'whoſe natural Endowments have been improv'd by his great Experience, 'at Home and Abroad, in Armies and Courts, by the greateſt Trials of 'the moſt differing Kinds; thoſe of Proſperity and Succeſs, and of Ad- 'verſity and Oppoſition, of Hazards and Toil, and of Authority and Com- 'mand. Did ever Man ſhew ſo exact an Honeſty, in the ſtricteſt adhering 'to his Word; ſuch Temperance and Sobriety, ſo indefatigable a Diligence 'in Affairs, ſo undaunted a Courage upon all Occaſions, and ſo unweary'd 'a Clemency towards the moſt obſtinate malicious Offenders? Did ever 'Hero compleat the Character ſo fully, in overcoming bravely, and 'ſhewing Gentleneſs to the vanquiſh'd.' And I muſt ſay, the Tri- 'umphs of his Patience are not his obſcureſt Glories; nor is the Forgiving 'of thoſe whoſe virulent Tongues, wou'd have tainted his Fame, if their 'Malice cou'd have reach'd it, what is leaſt to be admired in him: What 'Reputation other Princes have labour'd for, at the vaſt Expence of Blood 'and Treaſure, and the putting of a conſtant Reſtraint upon themſelves, 'ſits ſo eaſy upon him, that what they wou'd have, he forces from the 'Conſciences of his very Enemies by his Merit, and it coſts him no more 'than to be HIMSELF.

The Parliament's Addreſs to the King.

Shortly after, the Parliament, in Anſwer to the King's Letter, addreſs'd themſelves after the following manner: 'That his Majeſty's gracious and 'kind Remembrance of the Services done by his ancient Kingdom to his Bro- 'ther, of ever glorious Memory, ſhou'd rather raiſe in them ardent Deſires 'to exceed whatſoever they had formerly done, than look upon them de- 'ſerving the Eſteem he was pleas'd to expreſs of them. That the Death 'of their excellent Monarch was lamented by them to all the Degrees of 'Grief,

'Grief, which were conſiſtent with their great Joy for the Succeſſion of 1685.
'his moſt Sacred Majeſty, who had not only continu'd, but ſecured the 'Happineſs which his Royal Brother's Wiſdom, Juſtice and Clemency had Jac. I.
'procured them; that being the firſt Parliament which met by his Autho- Ref. 26
'rity, he might be confident they wou'd offer ſuch Laws as might beſt ſe-
'cure his Perſon, the Royal Family and Government; and that they wou'd
'be ſo exemplary Loyal, as to raiſe his Honour and Greatneſs to the ut-
'moſt of their Power. And furthermore they promis'd, that they wou'd
'not leave any thing undone for extirpating all Fanaticiſm, but eſpecially
'thoſe Fanatical Murtherers and Aſſaſſins; and for Detecting and Puniſh-
'ing the late Conſpirators, whoſe pernicious and execrable Deſigns did ſo
'much tend to ſubvert his Majeſty's Government, and to ruin them and
'all his Majeſty's faithful Subjects.

Having thus addreſs'd themſelves to his Majeſty in Words, they proceed- Their Acts.
ed to the making of Acts agreeable thereto: And firſt they paſs'd an Act, wherein the King was declar'd, 'To aſſent with his Eſtates in Parliament 'conven'd, to ratify and confirm all Acts and Statutes formerly paſs'd, for 'the Security, Liberty and Freedom of the True Church of God, and the 'Proteſtant Religion at preſent profeſs'd within the Kingdom, in their 'whole Strength and Tenor, as if they were particularly ſet down and ex-'preſs'd in the ſaid Act.' By a ſecond Act they 'annex'd and united the 'Exciſe of Foreign and Inland Commodities to the Crown of Scotland for 'ever.' By a Third, they ordain'd, 'That all ſuch Perſons as being cited 'in Caſe of High-Treaſon, Field or Houſe Conventicles, or Church Irre-'gularities, ſhou'd refuſe to give Teſtimony, ſhou'd be liable to be puniſh'd 'as guilty of thoſe Crimes reſpectively, in which they refus'd to be Wit-'neſſes.' Thus all Things appear'd quiet and calm in Scotland, without any Forebodings of the ſudden Storm in that Kingdom, of which we ſhall ſhortly have Occaſion to take notice.

3. To return to England, before the much expected Meeting of the Parliament there, a remarkable Proſecution was compleated, which had a great Influence upon the People; namely, that againſt the fam'd Titus Oates, which begun, and was near being finiſh'd in the late Reign, as is already remember'd. This Man, who had been call'd a Doctor of Divinity, and accounted the Saviour of the Nation, was now look'd upon as a vile wretched Cheat, and as ſuch was Indicted at the King's-Bench Bar on the 8th of May, with great Formality, Expectation and Concourſe. It was an Indictment of Perjury, 'For his former ſwearing, That there was a Trea-'ſonous Conſult of Jeſuits at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand, on 'the 24th of April 1678, Old Style; and that there were Whitebread, 'Fenwick, Ireland, and ſeveral others preſent, together with the ſaid Oates: 'That the ſaid Jeſuits ſeparated themſelves into ſeveral leſſer Clubs, and 'came to a Reſolution to murder the King; and that He himſelf carry'd the 'ſaid Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw it Sign'd by the ſaid 'Jeſuits: Whereas in reality, he was not at any Conſult at all, nor ſo 'much as in England at that Time; and conſequently cou'd carry no Re-'ſolution from Chamber to Chamber, nor ſee any ſuch Sign'd.' At the opening of the Indictment, a remarkable Speech was made by the Attorney-General, who in Concluſion declared, He had been one of the greateſt Impoſtors that ever did appear upon the Stage, either in this Kingdom, or any other Nation. To prove this Perjury, there were produc'd for the King, above twenty ſeveral Witneſſes, almoſt all Papiſts, but moſt of them Men of eminent Quality and Fortunes, and not one but of a clear Life and Converſation; who by a concurrent Teſtimony, prov'd that Oates came to St. Omers a little before Chriſtmas, 1677, and continu'd there till about Mid- Oates try'd for Perjury.

1685. Jac. 1. Ref. 26

ſummer, 1678, without ever lodging out of the College, ſaving one Night in the Month of January; and their Recollections were generally accompany'd with memorable Tokens and Circumſtances, ſome ſerious, and ſome ridiculous; as has been confirm'd, his being at an Action, his ſitting at a Table by himſelf; his quarrelſom Behaviour, his canting Tone, his ſpeaking falſe Latine, &c. More particularly they prov'd, That from the Beginning of April, to his Departure in June; that Oates read every Sunday and Holy-Day in the Place call'd the Sodality, and was never once miſs'd. His being in the College preciſely on the grand Day, the 24th of April, Old Style, was expreſſly prov'd by three Gentlemen, whereof one of them, Mr. Morgan, was a Miniſter of the Church of England.

His Defence. Oates, after theſe home Proofs, made his Defence with greater Acuteneſs and Preſence of Mind than was expected in this Exigency; but with ſuch an Aſſurance, grounded upon his former Succeſs, that nothing but the greateſt Innocence cou'd excuſe. Amongſt many Things, he alledg'd, 'That it 'was a great Hardſhip to be try'd for Perjury in an Evidence given ſix 'Years ago, and formerly unſucceſsfully endeavour'd to be falſify'd by ſix-'teen St. Omer's Youths, produc'd and examin'd before all the Judges in the 'Kingdom, not only once at Whitebread's Tryal, but a ſecond Time at 'Langhorn's Tryal, in neither of which wou'd the Jury believe them, be-'cauſe of their Religion and Education. But, added he, this is not the 'firſt Attempt that has been made to diſcredit the Teſtimony of the Popiſh 'Plot.' Then he deſir'd the Jury to obſerve, 'That tho' the King's Council 'was now againſt Him, yet they were alſo againſt themſelves; for both 'Mr. Sollicitor and Mr. Attorney-General, were Council on his ſide in 'thoſe Tryals.' Then he exclaim'd, 'Can any thing more plainly tend to 'deſtroy and ſubvert the Methods of Juſtice, to frighten all Witneſſes from 'henceforth from ever appearing to diſcover any Conſpiracies? And does 'it not tend to expoſe and vilify the known Underſtanding and Juſtice of 'the late King of ever bleſſed Memory, to arraign the Wiſdom of his Privy-'Council, his great and noble Peers, his loyal Commons in four ſucceſſive 'Parliaments, his Twelve Judges, and all thoſe ſeveral Juries that were 'upon thoſe Tryals? Had not thoſe Juries Senſe? Had they not Honeſty? 'Had they no Conſciences? And the Judges before whom thoſe Conſpi-'rators were try'd, were they Men of no Juſtice, nor Honour, nor Inte-'grity nor Conſcience, nor Underſtanding? Shall thoſe Juries be ſaid to 'have drawn the innocent Blood of theſe Men upon their own Heads and 'the Nation?' Beſides theſe, he particularly appeal'd to the preſent Lord Chief Juſtice, who, when he was Council for the King, had appear'd on his ſide, and had eſpecially declar'd, That the Verdict againſt the five Je-

Anſwers. ſuits, was a juſt Verdict. But becauſe he ſo much rely'd upon the Verdicts obtain'd upon his Evidence, it was reply'd, That thoſe had been disbeliev'd ſeveral times too as well as believ'd: And two Records of the Acquittals of Sir George Wakeman and the Earl of Caſtlemain were produc'd; and they themſelves in Perſon ſworn upon the ſubject Matter of Oates's Depoſitions, atteſting with the moſt ſolemn Imprecations, That there was not a true Word in the whole Accuſation.

His Witneſſes. After his Harangues, Oates produc'd three or four Witneſſes to prove himſelf in England at the Time of the ſuppos'd Conſult; but either they faulter'd as to the Month or the Year, or elſe they claſh'd among themſelves, and palpably diſagreed in the Teſtimony they gave for him. And it was likewiſe prov'd from his own Narrative, that he had ſworn himſelf back again, from England to St. Omers, ſeveral Days before the Time they ſwore they ſaw him at London: So manifeſtly did Oates and his Witneſſes contradict one another. It was further prov'd by the King's Council, 'That 'Oates had formerly ſuborn'd one Clay, a Prieſt, to ſwear at the Tryal of

' of the Five Jeſuits, in Oppoſition to the Youths that came from St. Omers, 1685.
' That he was in England, at Mr. Howard's Houſe at Dinner, at the latter ' End of April, or the Beginning of May, 1678; and threatned to hang Jac. 1.
' him for a Prieſt, if he wou'd not ſwear as he wou'd have him: And Clay,
' partly for Fear, and partly to recover the Money that Sir William Waller Ref. 25
' had taken from him, was at laſt prevail'd upon to ſwear, according to
' his Directions.' Being driven out of this Hold, Oates call'd for ſeveral Perſons of Quality to ſpeak to his former Succeſs and Credit, as the Earl of Devonſhire, the Earl of Clare, the Earl of Huntington, the Biſhop of London, Sir William Dolben, Sir George Treby, the Lord Chief-Baron, Mr. Baron Gregory, Mr. Williams, and ſeveral others: But in this he was as unfortunate as before, eſpecially from the Teſtimony of the Earl of Huntington, who ſaid theſe remarkable Words; I do believe Mr. Oates's Diſcovery found a good Reception in the Houſe of Lords; but it was grounded upon the Opinion, That what he ſaid was true, and that he was an honeſt Man:— But ſince that Time it being apparent there were ſo many and great Contradictions, Falſities, and Perjuries in his Evidence, upon which ſo much innocent Blood hath been ſhed, I believe a great many Perſons who were concern'd in the Tryals of thoſe unfortunate Men, are heartily afflicted and ſorry for their Share in it: And I do believe moſt of the Houſe of Peers have alter'd their Opinion, as to this Man's Credit, and look upon his Evidence as I do, to be very falſe.

Upon this Diſappointment Oates flew to the Law Part, and appeal'd to His Law. the Court ' Whether a Papiſt, in Caſe of Religion, might be believ'd and ' receiv'd as a good Witneſs;' to which he was anſwer'd, He might, and was ask'd, Whether he thought he came there to preach? He farther inſiſted upon the Queſtion, and demanded it as a Right to be heard by Counſel, but was ſtill over-rul'd by the Chief-Juſtice; upon which he appeal'd to all the Hearers, Whether he had Juſtice done him, or not; for which he was ſharply reprimanded by his Lordſhip. The Storm being allay'd, he cited the Practice of the Lord Coke, who wou'd not allow of a Popiſh Recuſant for a Witneſs, not ſo much as between Party and Party; but was anſwer'd That that Practice was againſt Law. He further urg'd ' That ' the Witneſſes were brought up in a Seminary againſt Law, for which ' their Friends were to be puniſh'd;' to which the Chief-Juſtice reply'd, So was a Diſſenter. He next urg'd the Statute of the 27th of Elizabeth, againſt Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and other ſuch like diſobedient Perſons; the Chief-Juſtice ask'd him, ' Whether the Witneſſes own'd themſelves to be Prieſts and Jeſuits?' Then Oates wou'd have offer'd the Statute of the 3d of King Charles the Firſt; but was told That it was nothing to the Purpoſe: Whereupon he pleaded the Caſe of the Earl of Shaftsbury, when charg'd with High Treaſon and committed to the Tower; who upon his acquittal moving, ' That he might have liberty to bring an Indictment of Per-' jury againſt the Witneſſes that accus'd him, the Court over-rul'd the Mo-' tion, becauſe they wou'd not have the King's Evidence indicted of Per-' jury, nor the Popiſh Plot call'd in Queſtion:' But this was alſo look'd upon as nothing to the Purpoſe. Finding his Arguments little heeded, Oates concluded his Defence in theſe amazing Words, I appeal to the great God of Heaven and Earth, the Judge of all; and once more in his Preſence, and before all this Auditory, I avow my Evidence of the Popiſh Plot, all and every Part of it, to be nothing but true, and will expect from the Almighty God, the Vindication of my Integrity and Innocence: And ſo deſir'd leave to retire. This was exceeding ſhocking to many who knew the Man and the Subject; and the Lord Chief-Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, concluded in theſe Words, There does not remain the leaſt Doubt but that Oates is the blackeſt, and moſt perjur'd Villain that ever ap- pear'd upon the Face of the Earth. Accordingly the Jury, in a Quarter of an Hours time, brought him in Guilty of the Indictment. We have been the more particular in this Tryal which laſted eleven Hours, becauſe his Conviction did ſo eſſentially ſtrike at the Credit of the Popiſh Plot, which had formerly rais'd ſuch innumerable Troubles in the Nation.

On the next Day a ſecond Indictment of Perjury was brought againſt the ſame Perſon, 'For Swearing at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, That 'Mr. Ireland took leave of Him and others, in London betwixt the 8th 'and the 12th of Auguſt, 1678; and likewiſe for Swearing at Ireland's 'Tryal, That the ſaid Ireland was in London the 1ſt or 2d of September '1678; whereas in Truth, Mr. Ireland was, at both the aforeſaid Times, 'and for ſeveral Days before, and after, in Staffordſhire, or in the Parts 'adjacent.' To prove all which now above forty Witneſſes were produc'd, who teſtify'd That Mr. Ireland was never at all in London from the 3d of Auguſt, in the ſame Year, to the 14th of the following September, and ſpecify'd every Thing according to Time and Place, with the Exactneſs of a Journal, accompany'd with all proper Tokens and Circumſtances; and what ſtill bore harder upon him than the former Tryal, was, that no leſs than Nine of theſe Witneſſes were Proteſtants and of the Church of England, againſt whom he cou'd raiſe no Exception. His Defence was much to the ſame Effect that it was the Day before, appeals to Parliaments and Verdicts, inſiſting upon his Reputation, clamours againſt the Papiſts, and Outcries, as if the Proteſtant Intereſt and his Credit were to ſtand and fall together: Only beſides, he produc'd the Proteſtation of dying Bedloe; 'That all he had ſworn concerning the Plot was true, and that he was 'one who ſwore that Mr. Ireland was in Town either the Beginning of 'September, or the latter End of Auguſt.' In ſumming up the Evidence, the Lord Chief-Juſtice Jeffreys, ſpeaking of the Mercy of the late King Charles the Second, has this remarkable Paſſage; 'It is well known to thoſe who 'had the Happineſs to be near his Perſon, how oft he expreſs'd his Concern, 'for having conſented to Mr. Ireland's Execution; and this continu'd 'with him to his dying Day, as the Buſineſs of my Lord of Strafford did 'with his Royal Father.' Then exclaiming againſt the Horridneſs of 'Oates and Bedloe's Perjury, he thus concludes; 'God forbid but we 'ſhou'd uſe our utmoſt Endeavours, to inflict the greateſt Vengeance, that 'the Juſtice of the Nation can permit upon ſuch Villains as theſe are, that 'have contracted ſo much Miſchief and Reproach upon us, and ſo much 'Guilt upon themſelves.

The Sentence againſt him.

Accordingly, Oates being found guilty of this Indictment, above a Fortnight after, and a Conſultation had with all the Judges of England, Mr. Juſtice Within on Saturday the 26th of May, pronounc'd the following Sentence againſt him, after an Harangue upon the Heinouſneſs of his Crimes: 'Firſt, the Court does order for a Fine, That you pay a Thouſand Marks 'upon each Indictment. Secondly, That you be ſtript of all your Canonical Habits. Thirdly, the Court does award, That you ſtand upon and in 'the Pillory, here before Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, upon Monday next, for 'an Hours Time, with a Paper over your Head (which you muſt firſt walk 'with round about to all the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall) declaring your 'Crime; and that upon the firſt Indictment. Fourthly, on the ſecond Indictment, upon Tueſday, you ſhall ſtand upon and in the Pillory at the 'Royal-Exchange, for the Space of an Hour, with the ſame Inſcription. 'Fifthly, You ſhall upon the next Wedneſday, be whipt from Algate to Newgate; And upon Friday, you ſhall be whipt from Newgate to Tyburn, 'by the Hands of the Common Hang-man.' After which the ſame Judge proceeded in theſe Words; 'But Mr. Oates, we cannot but remember, there 'were ſeveral particular Times you ſwore falſe about; and therefore, as

'Annual

'Annual Commemorations, that it may be known to all People, as long as 'you live, we have taken care of you for an Annual Puniſhment. Upon 'the 24th of April, every Year as long as you live, you are to ſtand upon 'and in the Pillory at Tyburn, juſt oppoſite to the Gallows. You are 'next to ſtand upon and in the Pillory, here at Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, 'every 9th of Auguſt as long as you live: And that it may be known what 'we mean by it, 'tis to remember that you ſwore about Mr. Ireland's be-'ing in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt. You are to ſtand upon 'and in the Pillory, at Charing-Croſs, on the 10th of Auguſt, every Year, 'during your Life; the like over-againſt the Temple-Gate, upon the 11th: 'And upon the 2d of September (which is another notorious Time, which 'you cannot but remember) you are to ſtand upon and in the Pillory 'at the Royal-Exchange: And all this you are to do every Year, during 'your Life; and to be committed cloſe Priſoner, as long as you live. This 'I pronounce to be the Judgment of the Court upon you, for your Of-'fences: And I muſt tell you plainly, if it had been in my Power to have 'carry'd it further, I ſhou'd not have been unwilling to have given Judg-'ment of Death upon you; for I am ſure you deſerve it.

1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

Great Endeavours were us'd to beg off the Scourging Part of the Sentence, juſtly fore-ſeeing it wou'd prove intolerable, and ſome Applications were made to the Queen her ſelf for that purpoſe; but all in vain: And the Whipping was executed with the utmoſt Severity, ſuch as was unknown to the Engliſh Nation, and in the Preſence of innumerable Spectators, who had a more than ordinary Curioſity to ſee the Sight. The firſt Day he was ty'd to a Cart, where he made hideous Bellowings, and ſounded ſeveral Times with the greatneſs of the Anguiſh. The ſecond Day, he was not able to go or ſtand; but this, Leſtrange tells us was becauſe he had made himſelf ſcandalouſly drunk: However, he was then plac'd and dragg'd upon a Sledge, where he became a diſmal and piteous Spectacle to the People, who cou'd much better judge of his Puniſhment, than his Crimes. In ſum, as he himſelf ſays, he ſuſtain'd unexpreſſible Torments; and his eſcaping with Life was inſiſted on by his Friends as ſomething miraculous, and a ſignal Teſtimony of his Innocence. It certainly ſerv'd to imbitter Mens Minds againſt the Government, and wou'd have been much better for the King, if this Puniſhment had been inflicted in the late Reign, as was intended, or remitted and forgiven in this. Beſides his real Demerits, there ſeem'd to be ſomething Perſonal in his Puniſhment; all agree that his bruti'ſh Animoſity againſt the Duke of York made him break in upon the Reſpect that is ever due to Princes; but then again a Man whom the beſt of the Nation began to abhor and deſpiſe, was thought too poor a Victim for a Monarch, and that the King of England ſhou'd have diſregarded the Injuries that had been offer'd to the Duke of York. Thus the famous Dr. Oates, that had been applauded and careſs'd by the Leaders in both Houſes of Parliament, and by ſome ſtyl'd the Saviour of the Nation, was now treated as the moſt vile and profligate Impoſtor. And it is remarkable, that tho' he liv'd to a moſt favourable Conjuncture for reverſing his Judgments, and brought his Writ of Error for that Purpoſe in the Houſe of Peers; yet, after a full Debate upon the Cauſe, the Lords cou'd not be prevail'd upon to blanch his Reputation, or reſtore him to the Capacity of being an Evidence in any Court whatſoever.

The Severity of the Execution.

4. This laſt Sentence againſt Oates was executed a little after the Meeting of the Parliament; but before we begin to give any Account of that noble Aſſembly, it may be proper to take Notice of two other Proſecutions, that had at this Time a great Influence upon the Publick, and happen'd ſoon after the other. The firſt was that of Thomas Dangerfield, a remarkable remarkable Perſon formerly characteriz'd, and more than once taken notice of in the laſt Reign; who having formerly by his infamous Actions and ſurprizing Diſcoveries render'd himſelf obnoxious to the Government, he for a Time retir'd into Flanders: But returning back in an unlucky Seaſon, he was ſeiz'd and carry'd before the Council, where perſiſting before the King himſelf in his former Evidence, he was committed cloſe Priſoner to Newgate. On the 30th of May he was try'd at the King's-Bench Bar, upon an Information, For Writing and Publiſhing a villanous and ſcandalous Libel, call'd his Narrative, formerly remember'd; wherein, according to his Depoſitions before the Parliament in 1680, he teſtify'd, 'That he was 'employ'd by the Popiſh Party, and chiefly by the Popiſh Lords in the 'Tower, and the Counteſs of Powis, to invent the Meal Tub Plot, which 'was to have thrown the Popiſh Plot wholly upon the Presbyterians.' This Narrative was order'd to be printed by the Houſe of Commons, November 10th, 1680, in the hotteſt Time of their Sitting; but notwithſtanding that Order, their Speaker Mr. Williams was afterwards fin'd Ten Thouſand Pounds, for Licenſing it to be printed; and we are told he cou'd not eſcape without Paying the greateſt Part of it. And Mr. Dangerfield being now found Guilty, receiv'd Judgment at the King's-Bench Bar, 'That 'he ſhou'd ſtand twice in the Pillory; That he ſhou'd be Whipt from Aldgate to Newgate in one Day, and from Newgate to Tyburn on another, 'and ſhou'd pay a Fine of Five Hundred Pounds.

The Whipping was executed with very great, tho' ſtill with leſs Severity than that inflicted on Oates: In his Return the ſecond Day from Tyburn to Newgate, after his laſt Puniſhment, being in a Coach againſt Hatton Garden, a ſtrange Accident happen'd to him, that moſt violently affected the People. One Mr. Robert Frances, a Barreſter of Gray's-Inn, coming by Chance to the Coach Side, and looking on his Face, out of an intemperate Zeal, ſaid to him, How now, Friend, have you had your Heat this Morning? The other, with two or three Curſes call'd him Son of a Whore! Upon which Frances, with a ſmall Bambow Cane ſtruck him over, or into the Eye, which ſo affected his Brain, as it is ſaid, that he died within a few Hours after; tho' many have doubted whether his Death proceeded from the ſtroak or from the Torments of his Body, which was found to be exceedingly ſwell'd and inflam'd. However the Surgeons gave it againſt Mr. Frances, who thinking he had done no Hurt, had endeavour'd no Eſcape; but being taken and try'd, he met with the Extremity of the Law, and was condemn'd to die without Mercy.

He is killed, as is ſuppos'd, by Mr. Frances.

This fatal Accident had a furious Influence upon the Minds of the Multitude, who were ſufficiently exaſperated before; ſo that tho' great Applications were made to the Court, no Pardon cou'd be obtain'd for Mr. Frances. Many Stories were immediately invented and diſpers'd concerning him; particularly that he was a virulent Papiſt, if not a Jeſuit, and ſet on by ſome great Men; that the Cane had a Steel Dart in it, that was thruſt into the Priſoner's Eye upon deliberate Malice; and it was farther ſaid, it was alſo a particular Revenge upon a Jealouſie againſt Dangerfield for his Lady. All which were fully confuted in Mr. Frances's Speech at his Execution, and publiſh'd by Authority. He freely owns, 'That by this raſh and im-'prudent Act, he had not only offended againſt the Government and 'Courts of Juſtice, but againſt Chriſtianity, and even the Rules of Mora-'lity it ſelf; but ſolemnly declar'd that it was done without the leaſt Fore-'thought, Malice, or Jealouſy whatſoever, and that he had never ſeen the 'Man but once in the Pillory at a Diſtance: That he had led a quiet and 'inoffenſive Life for twelve Years in Gray's-Inn, without any Quarrel or 'Controverſy; and that his whole Life was without any violent Action, 'ſaving this ſingle Extravagance. As to his Religion, he prov'd himſelf 'to

'gretted on Earth, and cou'd freely part with every thing elſe below with'out Repining.' In ſum, he dy'd like a true Penitent and a good Chriſtian, with the infamous Load of a Crime, the Nature of which can hardly be parallel'd in Hiſtory.

Mr. Baxter's Tryal.

5. The other Proſecution, which happen'd about the ſame Time, was of a quite different Nature, and was that of Mr. Richard Baxter, a celebrated Divine, one of the Heads of the Presbyterian Party, a voluminous and polemical Writer, who had often ſignaliz'd himſelf, both before and ſince the Reſtoration. Some of his former Books, as well as Actions, were afreſh remember'd, particularly his Holy Common-Wealth, and his Saints Everlaſting Reſt, in which laſt he had in effect plac'd Pym, Hambden, and the Lord Brook, who dy'd in an actual State of Rebellion, among the Saints in Heaven; which was interpreted as a great Defect in his Judgment, or an unjuſtifiable Inclination to their Cauſe. Theſe were aggravated by the Obſervator and others, and now an Advantage was taken, and an Accuſation brought againſt him for ſeveral Paſſages in his late Book call'd a Paraphraſe upon the New Teſtament, which was call'd a ſcandalous Piece, highly reflecting upon the Prelates of the Church of England, and guilty of Sedition, for which being brought before the Lord Chief Juſtice Jeffreys at the King's-Bench Bar, he was treated with unuſual Scurrility, and far from what was due to the Gravity of his Perſon and Behaviour. Having pleaded not Guilty to the Information, and mov'd that farther Time might be allow'd him for his Tryal, the Chief Juſtice cry'd out, I will not give him a Minute's Time more to ſave his Life: We have had to do with other ſorts of Perſons, but now we have a Saint to deal with; and I know how to deal with Saints as well as Sinners. Yonder, ſays he, ſtands Oates in the Pillory, as he actually did at that very Time, and he ſays he ſuffers for the Truth, and ſo ſays Baxter; but if Baxter did but ſtand on the other ſide of the Pillory with him, I wou'd ſay there ſtood two of the greateſt Rogues and Raſcals in the Kingdom.

Upon the 30th of May, he was brought to his Tryal before the ſame Lord Chief Juſtice at Guild-Hall, where was a numerous Concourſe of his Friends and others; and his Counſel were Mr. Wallop, Mr. Williams, Mr. Rotheram, Mr. Atwood and Mr. Phipps, all retain'd by Sir Henry Aſhurſt, who ſhew'd a particular Reſpect both to Mr. Baxter's Perſon and his Cauſe. The Counſel urg'd, 'That the Paſſages mention'd in the Information, ought His Defence.
'not to be ſtrain'd to that Senſe which was put upon them by the Innu-
'endo's; nor cou'd any of them be apply'd to the Prelates of the Church
'of England, without a forc'd Conſtruction, but were deſign'd againſt thoſe
'of the Church of Rome: And they farther inſiſted, That Mr. Baxter had 'frequently attended Divine Service, went to the Sacrament, and perſuaded
'others to do the ſame; and had in the very Book ſo charg'd, ſpoken mo'derately and honourably of the Biſhops of the Church of England.' And Mr. Baxter himſelf alledg'd, 'That he had been ſo moderate with reſpect
'to the Church of England, that he had incurr'd the Cenſure of many of 'the Diſſenters upon that Account.' The Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, That Baxter was an Enemy to the Name and Thing, the Office and Perſons of Biſhops, and fell ſeverely both upon the Council and Defendant. As to the latter, he call'd out, Richard, thou art an old Fellow, an old Knave; His Treatment.
thou haſt written Books enough to load a Cart, every one as full of Sedition, I might ſay Treaſon, as an Egg is full of Meat. Hadſt thou been whipp'd out of thy Writing-Trade forty Years ago, it had been happy.

I know thou haſt a mighty Party, and I ſee a great many of the* Brotherhood in Corners, waiting to ſee what will become of their mighty Donn, and a Doctor of the Party [Dr. Bates] at your Elbow; but by the Grace of Almighty God, I'll cruſh you all. Beſides other Reproaches upon him and his Council, in ſumming up the Evidence he ſaid; 'Tis notoriouſly known, there has been a Deſign to ruin the King and the Nation; and this has been the main Incendiary: He is as modeſt now as can be; but Time was when no Man was ſo ready at Bind your Kings in Chains, and your Nobles in Fetters of Iron; and to your Tents, O *Iſrael! The Jury ſoon found him Guilty; and ſoon after he had Judgment given againſt him, 'To be fin'd five hundred 'Marks; to lye in Priſon till he paid it, and to be bound to his good Be-'haviour for ſeven Years.' Both the Uſage and Sentence was thought exorbitant by many; but the Reaſons and Provocations will appear more clear to the Reader when we come to relate the Tranſactions in, and at the ſitting of the Parliament; to enter upon which it ſeems more than Time to begin.

III. 1. From the Time that the King had declar'd his calling of a Parliament, the Peoples Minds were fill'd with Expectations and Longings for the Meeting of it; and the Fate of the Nation ſeem'd to depend upon that Aſſembly, which was to ſupport it in this difficult Juncture. In order to this grand Buſineſs, the Elections were generally carry'd on and compleated with the moſt uncommon Coolneſs, Diſcretion and Unanimity; and notwithſtanding the unjuſtifiable Modelling ſo many Corporations ſince the laſt Parliament, there never was a Houſe of Commons more able and more induſtrious in preſerving the Happineſs of the King, the Nation, and the Eſtabliſh'd Religion. It conſiſted for the moſt part of the late prevailing Party, but of the richeſt and wiſeſt Men of the Kingdom; among whom there were fifty five of Noble Families, ninety five Baronets, and ninety ſix Knights; and the reſt were commonly Gentlemen of the beſt Intereſt, Credit and Knowledge in their Countries, eſpecially thoſe that were elected for Counties. Thoſe for the City of London, and the two Univerſities, were all of the ſame Party; the former were Sir John Moor, Sir William Pritchard, Sir Samuel Daſhwood, and Sir Peter Rich; the Cantabrigians were Sir Thomas Exton, and Sir Robert Brady; the Oxonians were Sir Leoline Jenkins and Dr. Charles Perrot, Knight. And further to ſatisfy the Reader's Curioſity, we ſhall name forty or fifty, who ſeem'd to have had the greateſt Influence in the Houſe, without conſidering any Party at all; as Sir Richard Temple, Sir William Edgerton, Mr. Hambden, Sir Levinus Bennet, Sir John Cotton, Sir Robert Southwell, Mr. Sidney Godolphin, Mr. Edmund Waller, Sir William Trumbull, Lord Preſton, Sir John Lowther, Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, Sir Edward Seymour, Serjeant Maynard, Sir Winſton Churchill, Mr. Ralph Freeman, the honourable John Varney, Sir Thomas Meers, Lord Caſtleton, Sir Henry Munſon, the honourable Charles Bertie, Sir Jacob Aſhley, Sir Nevil Catiline, Sir William Cook, Sir Nicholas Leſtrange, Sir John Fenwick, Sir Roger Leſtrange, Sir William Blacket, Mr. Theophilus Oglethorp, Sir Robert Holmes, Sir Thomas Clarges, Mr. Henry

The PARLIAMENT.

The 19th of May was the firſt Day of their Meeting, when his Majeſty came from White-Hall by Water to the Houſe of Peers; where being ſeated on the Throne, adorn'd with his Royal Robes and Crown, and attended with his Officers of State, he commanded Sir Thomas Duppa, the Gentleman Uſher of the Black-Rod, to ſignify to the Commons, That it was his Majeſty's Pleaſure that they attend him immediately. Which being done, the Lord-Keeper North, by the King's Direction, made the following ſhort Speech: 'My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens, &c. I have it in Com'mand from his Majeſty, to let you know, That he will defer his ſpeaking
'to you until the Members of both Houſes have taken the Oaths appoint'ed at the Beginning of every Parliament; the doing whereof will require
'ſome Time: When that is over, his Majeſty will come again and declare 'his Mind to you concerning the Cauſes of calling this Parliament. And 'it being neceſſary there ſhou'd be firſt a Speaker of the Houſe of 'Commons, it is his Majeſty's Pleaſure that the Gentlemen of the Houſe
'of Commons go a-part to the uſual Place, and proceed to the Choice of 'a fit Perſon to be their Speaker. His Majeſty doth appoint Four of the 'Clock in the Afternoon, to have him preſented for his Royal Approba'tion.' The Commons being retired, no leſs than Twenty Lords were formally introduc'd into the Houſe, either upon the Account of new Creations, or Additional Titles ſince the laſt Parliament; and were as following: Francis Lord North, Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal, Laurence Earl of Rocheſter, George Marquis of Hallifax, James Duke of Ormond, Henry Duke of Beaufort, Edward Earl of Litchfield, Daniel Earl of Nottingham, James Earl of Abingdon, Edward Earl of Gainsborough, Thomas Earl of Plymouth, Horatio Viſcount Townſend, Thomas Viſcount Weymouth, Chriſtopher Viſcount Hatton, Richard Lord Lumley, John Lord Oſſulſton, George Lord Dartmouth, Ralph Lord Stawell, Sidney Lord Godolphin, George Lord Jeffreys, and John Lord Churchill; which two laſt were made Barons of England by his preſent Majeſty.

Sir John Trevor choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.

The Commons being return'd to their own Houſe, the Lord Middleton nam'd Sir John Trevor, as a fit Perſon for their Speaker, and one that wou'd be acceptable to his Majeſty; whereupon the Commons unanimouſly made Choice of that Gentleman, and preſented him to the King at the appointed time, who was again ſeated upon his Throne in his Royal Robes and Crown. Here Sir John Trevor acquainted his Majeſty, 'That the 'Choice of Speaker had fallen upon Him; and out of a deep Senſe of his 'own Infirmities and Diſability for the Diſcharge of ſo important a Ser'vice, and of a loyal and dutiful Regard to his Majeſty's Intereſt, he hum-
'bly beſeech'd his Majeſty to command the Commons to return and make
'a fitter Choice.' Whereupon the Lord Keeper, taking Directions from his Majeſty, ſpoke as follows; 'His Majeſty obſerves your great Modeſty,
'in declining this honourable and weighty Imployment; but the Argu'ments you have us'd to induce him to excuſe you from it, have not pre-
'vail'd. On the contrary, your Behaviour this Day hath recommended
'you to this Service: You have ſhewn that Duty and Experience in the 'Courſe of Parliaments, that demonſtrate you every Way fit for it; for 'you have now purſu'd the ancient and dutiful Method of Diſabling your 'ſelf before his Majeſty, with an intire Reſignation of his Pleaſure. His

1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

'Majeſty hath therefore commanded me to declare That he doth well approve the Choice the Commons have made, and admits you to be their Speaker.' Then the Speaker return'd his Majeſty Thanks for his gracious Approbation, and Acceptance of his Service, and humbly pray'd in the Name of the Commons, 'That his Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to allow 'and confirm all their ancient Privileges, and particularly that they might 'have Liberty of Free Speech in their Debates: That their Perſons and 'Servants might be free from Arreſts and Troubles: That they might have 'free Acceſs to his Royal Perſon with their Complaints, Petitions and Ad-'dreſſes: And that his Majeſty wou'd have a favourable Opinion of all 'their Actions. And concluded, That his Majeſty's gracious Allowance of 'theſe Petitions, wou'd encourage them to proceed chearfully in their Du-'ties, and did not doubt, but that from ſo good and gracious a Prince, and 'ſo loyal Subjects, this Seſſion wou'd have a happy Concluſion.' Hereupon the Lord-Keeper ſaid, The King takes well your Submiſſion to his Pleaſure, and promiſes to ſupport you in the Services you have undertaken; And for the Petitions you have made in behalf of the Commons, his Majeſty is pleaſed to grant them all as they are deſired.

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

It was the 22d of May before the King's much expected Speech was deliver'd from the Throne; in the Morning of which Day he had receiv'd Notice of a Storm ariſing in Scotland, by means of the Earl of Argyle, which gave him occaſion to add ſomething to his Speech, which was ſpoken in theſe Words: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, After it pleas'd Almighty God, to take 'to his Mercy the late King my deareſt Brother, and to bring Me to the peace-'able Poſſeſſion of the Throne of my Anceſtors; I immediately reſolv'd to 'call a Parliament, as the beſt Means to ſettle every thing upon thoſe Founda-'tions, as may make my Reign both Eaſy and Happy to you: Towards 'which, I am diſpos'd to contribute all that is fit for Me to do. What I ſaid to 'my Privy-Council, at my firſt coming there, I am deſirous to renew to you; 'wherein I fully declared my Opinion concerning the Principles of the Church of England, whoſe Members have ſhew'd themſelves ſo eminently 'Loyal in the worſt of Times, in Defence of my Father, and Support of my 'Brother, of Bleſſed Memory, That I will always take Care to defend and 'ſupport it: I will make it my Endeavour to preſerve the Government both in Church and State, as it is by Law Eſtabliſh'd; and as I will never depart from the juſt Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown, ſo I will never invade any Man's Property: And you may be ſure, that having hitherto ventur'd my Life in the Defence of this Nation, I will ſtill go as far as any Man in preſerving it in all its juſt Rights and Liberties.

'And having given this Aſſurance concerning the Care I will have of 'your Religion and Property, which I have choſen to do in the ſame Words which I us'd at my firſt coming to the Crown, the better to evi-'dence to you, That I ſpoke them not by chance, and conſequently, that 'you may firmly rely upon a Promiſe ſo ſolemnly made; I cannot doubt 'that I ſhall fail of ſuitable Returns from you, with all imaginable Duty 'and Kindneſs on your Part; and particularly, in what relates to the 'ſettling of my Revenue, and continuing it during my Life, as it was in 'the Time of the King my Brother. I might uſe many Arguments to en-'force this Demand, for the Benefit of Trade, the Support of the Navy, 'the Neceſſity of the Crown, and the Well-being of the Government it ſelf; 'which I muſt not ſuffer to be precarious: But I am confident, your own 'Conſideration of what is juſt and reaſonable, will ſuggeſt to you whatſo-'ever might be enlarg'd upon this Occaſion. There is yet one popular 'Argument which I foreſee may be us'd againſt what I ask of you, from 'the Inclination Men have for frequent Parliaments, which ſome may think 'wou'd be the beſt Security, by feeding me from Time to Time, by ſuch Propor-

'Proportions as they ſhall think convenient: And this Argument, it be- 1685.
'ing the firſt Time I ſpeak to you from the Throne, I will anſwer once for 'all, that this wou'd be a very improper Method to take with Me, and Jac. I.
'that the beſt Way to engage Me to meet you often, is always to uſe
'Me well. I expect therefore that you will comply with Me in what I Reſ. 26
'have deſir'd, and that you will do it ſpeedily; that this may be a ſhort
'Seſſion, and that we may meet again to all our Satisfactions.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I muſt acquaint you, that I have had
'News this Morning from Scotland, That Argyle is landed in the Weſt
'High-Lands, with the Men he brought with him from Holland: That 'there are two Declarations publiſh'd, One in the Name of all thoſe in 'Arms, the other in his own: It wou'd be too long for Me to repeat the 'Subſtance of them; it is ſufficient to tell you, I am charg'd with Uſurpa-
'tion and Tyranny: The ſhorter of them I have directed to be forthwith
'communicated to you. I will take the beſt care I can, that this Decla- 'ration of their own Faction and Rebellion may meet with the Reward it
'deſerves: And I will not doubt but you will be the more zealous to Sup'port the Government, and give me my Revenue as I have deſir'd it, with-
'out delay.

Upon hearing of this Speech, never any Parliament ſhew'd greater Unanimity; and both Houſes immediately reſolv'd to return their moſt humble and hearty Thanks to his Majeſty, for his moſt gracious Speech and Declaration; and for that End they waited on the King at Four in the Afternoon. To which they receiv'd this obliging Anſwer, That his Majeſty was very well pleas'd with their Thanks, and that he cou'd repeat no more than what he had ſaid in the Morning; and they ſhou'd find That he wou'd be as good as his Word. And as to the Houſe of Commons, they immediately went upon the Support of the Crown, and the ſame Day reſolv'd Nemine Contradicente, 'That all the Revenue given to his late 'Majeſty, and enjoy'd by him at his Death, be given and granted to his 'preſent Majeſty King James the Second, and ſettled upon him during 'Life.' And they order'd Mr. Solicitor Finch to bring in a Bill accordingly. All this, together with the Chimney-Money, and other hereditable Revenues, which were to continue for ever in the Crown, did now amount to above two Millions a Year.

The Commons ſettle the Revenue of the Crown.

The Houſe of Lords were on the ſame Day buſy employ'd about an Affair of another Nature, the Petitions of the Lords who had lain under an Impeachment ſeveral Years in the Tower, and admitted to Bail about a Year ago, viz. The Earl of Powis, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, the Lord Bellaſis, the Earl of Tyrone, and the Earl of Danby. Theſe Lords having made their Perſonal Appearances, in purſuance of their Bail, and deliver'd their Petitions, the Houſe enter'd into Conſideration of the Hardſhip of their Caſes, and came to this Queſtion, 'Whether the Order of the '19th of March 167⅘ be revers'd and annull'd as to their ſeveral Impeach-'ments;' which paſs'd in the Affirmative. Four Lords only enter'd their Diſſent, namely Radnor, Angleſey, Clare, and Stamford, with theſe following Reaſons: 1. 'Becauſe it doth, as we conceive, extrajudicially, and 'without a particular Cauſe before Us, endeavour an Alteration in a judi-'cial Rule and Order of the Houſe, in the higheſt Part of their Power and 'Judicature. 2. Becauſe it ſhakes and lays aſide an Order made and re-'new'd upon long Conſideration and Debate, Report of Committees of 'Precedents and former Reſolutions, without permitting the ſame to be 'read, tho' call'd for by many of the Peers, and againſt weighty Reaſons, 'as we conceive, appearing for the ſame, and contrary to the Practice of 'former Times. 3. Becauſe it is inherent in every Court of Judicature to 'aſſert and preſerve the former Rules of Proceedings before them, which

'therefore must be ſteady and certain, eſpecially in this High Court, that 'the Subject, and all Perſons concern'd may know how to apply them-'ſelves for Juſtice; the very Chancery, King's-Bench, &c. having their 'ſettled Rules, from which there is no Variation.' However, two Days after, the Matter was brought to a Concluſion by this following Order; 'Whereas ſeveral Indictments were found at the Seſſions held at Weſtmin-'ſter againſt William Earl of Powis, &c. which are ſince brought into 'this Houſe by Certiorari, purſuant to an Order of the 9th of April '1678; the Houſe being this Day inform'd by Mr. Attorney General, that 'his Majeſty hath ſent a Warrant to him directed to enter a Noli proſequi 'upon the ſaid Indictments: It is order'd that his Majeſty's Attorney Ge-'neral may have Recourſe to the ſaid Indictments in Order to enter a Noli 'proſequi thereupon, purſuant to his Majeſty's Warrant. And it is fur-'ther order'd, That the Bail given in the Court of King's-Bench for the 'Appearance of the ſaid William Earl of Powis, &c. be, and is hereby 'diſcharg'd.

The Impeached Lords diſcharg'd.

The Lord Stafford's Bill promoted.

Theſe Proceedings made way for the immediate Reception of a Bill in the ſame Houſe, For reverſing the Attainder of the Lord Viſcount Stafford, whoſe Tryal before the Lords, and Execution, is remember'd in the Year 1680. The Lords, in a grand Committee, made ſome Alterations in the Title, a conſiderable Amendment in the Preamble, and a ſmall Amendment in the enacting Clauſe, and then the Bill was Ingroſs'd: And the Reaſon of the Reverſal was in theſe Words; Whereas it is now manifeſt, That the ſaid William late Viſcount Stafford was Innocent of the Treaſon laid to his Charge, and the Teſtimony where he was found Guilty, was falſe; Be it Enacted, &c. But before the queſtion was put for ingroſſing the Bill, the Earls of Angleſey and Radnor, and two or three other Lords, deſir'd Leave to enter their Diſſents, for theſe Reaſons; 1. 'Becauſe the Aſſertion 'in the Bill, of its Being now manifeſt that the late Viſcount Stafford dy'd 'Innocent, and that the Teſtimony on which he was convicted was falſe, 'which are the ſole Grounds and Reaſons given to ſupport the Bill; were 'deſtitute of all Proof, Warrant, or Teſtimony, or Matter of Record be-'fore Us. 2. That the Record of the King's-Bench, read at the Committee, 'concerning the Conviction, laſt Term, of one of the Witneſſes for Per-'jury, in collateral Points of Proof, of no Affinity to the Lord Stafford's 'Tryal, and given ſeveral Years before, it's conceiv'd can be no Ground 'to invalidate the Teſtimony upon which the ſaid Viſcount was convicted, 'which cou'd never legally be by one Witneſs, and was in Fact by the 'Judgment of his Peers, on the Evidence of at leaſt Three. 3. It's con-'ceiv'd the ſaid Judgment in the King's-Bench was unprecedented illegal 'and unwarranted, and highly derogatory to the Honour, Judicature and 'Authority of this Court, who have Power to queſtion and puniſh Perju-'ries of Witneſſes before them, and ought not to be impos'd upon by the 'Judgments of inferiour Courts, or their Attainder of a Peer invalidated 'by Implication; and the Popiſh Plot, ſo condemn'd, purſu'd and puniſh-'ed by his late Majeſty and four Parliaments, after publick ſolemn Devo-'tion through the whole Kingdom, by Authority of Church and State, to 'be eluded, to the Arraignment and Scandal of the Government; and only 'for the reſtoring of the Family of one Popiſh Lord. And all this, being 'without any Matter judicially appearing before us to induce the ſame; 'and the Records of the Tryal not ſuffer'd to be read, for the Information 'of the Truth, before the paſſing of the Bill. 4. For many other weighty 'Reaſons offer'd and given by diverſe Peers in the two Days Debate of 'this Bill, both at the Committee, and in the Houſe.

The next Day the Bill was read a Third Time, and paſs'd in the Houſe of Peers; but the forementioned Lords repeated their Proteſtations againſt it, it, and were ſeconded by the Earls of Stamford and Clare, and the Lord Eure, 'Becauſe the Preamble of it was not amended, and no Defect in 'Point of Law alledg'd as a Reaſon for the Reverſal of the Attainder.' But to conclude the Fate of this Bill without Interruption, it was afterwards ſent down to the Houſe of Commons, and on the 5th of June read a firſt Time, and order'd a ſecond Reading; and was accordingly the next Day read a ſecond Time, and committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe. Notwithanding which, it was handſomely dropt, and never heard of more; the Commons, tho' very forward to aſſiſt the King in his Civil Intereſts, being extreamly cautious as to the Strengthening or Incouraging the Popiſh Party. But to return to the more immediate Buſineſs of both Houſes, which was the Conſideration of the latter Part of the King's Speech concerning the Earl of Argyle, whoſe Proceedings are next to be remember'd. 1685. Jac. 1. Ref. 26 The Fate of it.

2. The Earl of Argyle, as was formerly mention'd, in the Year 1681, had been try'd and found Guilty of High-Treaſon by his Peers iu Scotland; and tho' the Sentence of Death was reſpited, and deſign'd to have been remitted, he fled both from Juſtice and Mercy: Upon which the Parliament order'd the Sentence to be put in Execution whenever he ſhou'd be taken, and in the mean time declar'd all his Eſtate to be forfeited to the King. It was a long time a Secret to moſt of his Country, and almoſt unknown to what Part of the World the Earl had retir'd, till upon the Death of King Charles the Second, he was found at Amſterdam with the Duke of Monmouth, and other Malecontents, and Exiles upon the Account of the late Plot. Having concerted Matters with the ſaid Duke, who had agreed ſoon after to make a Deſcent into England, the Earl on the 2d of May ſet ſail with three ſmall Veſſels from the Ulye in Holland; and upon the 5th of the ſame Month he appear'd in the North of Scotland before Orkney, where ſending his Secretary and Surgeon on Shore, they were both ſeiz'd by the Inhabitants of the Iſland, and ſent up to the Privy Council at Edinburgh. Being diſappointed there as to his Reception, he ſail'd round to the Weſt High-lands, and on the 20th landed near a Place call'd Dunſtafnage, a ruinous Caſtle formerly belonging to himſelf, into which he put a Garriſon, from thence moving forwards he began to terrify the Country, and publiſh his Declarations. The late Earl of Argyle's Expedition.

The Parliament now ſitting at Edinburgh, had taken particular Care of the King, and beſides thoſe Acts formerly mention'd, they paſs'd one To make a dutiful Offer to the King of Two Hundred and Sixty Thouſand Pounds Yearly, during his Majeſty's Life: And likewiſe another, declaring, 'That the giving or taking the National Covenant, as explain'd in 'the Year 1638; or of the League and Covenant, ſo commonly call'd, or 'writing in Defence thereof, or owning of them as lawful or obligatory 'in themſelves or others, ſhall incur the Crime and Pains of Treaſon.' Beſides theſe, the King, as apprehenſive of an Inſurrection in Scotland, even before Argyle's landing, caus'd a Proclamation to be publiſh'd in Edinburgh, ſetting forth, 'That foraſmuch as thoſe traiterous Conſpirators, 'who deſign'd the horrid Murder of his deareſt Brother, and the Deſtruction 'of his ancient Monarchy, continuing ſtill in the ſame helliſh Project and 'Fury againſt him, are now again ſetting their Deſigns on work, to raiſe 'Commotions in this his ancient Kingdom, as being the laſt Strugglings of 'them and their execrable Party; for preventing thereof, the King does 'ſtrictly require and command all and every of the Subjects of this his 'Realm, that they be in a Readineſs with their beſt Arms to concur and 'aſſiſt him againſt any of the aforeſaid Commotions or Inſurrections, &c. 'As likewiſe he requires all his Lieges on or near the Sea-Coaſts of this 'Kingdom, ſo ſoon as they hear of any Veſſels arriving in any Place from 'abroad, The Care of the Scotch Parliament. And the King's Proclamation.

Argyle's Declaration. On the other ſide the Scotch Malecontents under Argyle emitted two Declarations, ſetting forth the Reaſons that oblig'd them to take up Arms againſt the King. The firſt was entituled, The Declaration and Apology of the Proteſtant People, that is, of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgeſſes and Commoners of all ſorts, within the Kingdom of Scotland, with the Concurrence of the true and faithful Paſtors, and of ſeveral Gentlemen of the Engliſh Nation join'd with them in the ſame Cauſe: By

The firſt. which they ſet forth ‘ The great Advantages the Proteſtant Religion, both ‘ at home and abroad, had receiv'd by the Succeſs of the War againſt King ‘ Charles the Firſt; which they aſcrib'd to the Bleſſing of God, and the ‘ Goodneſs of their Cauſe. They cry'd up the Loyalty of the Scotch Co- ‘ venanters, who had admitted his Son to reign upon certain Terms and ‘ Conditions, which he having broke, his Government was become illegal, ‘ arbitrary, tyrannical and a continu'd Apoſtaſy. In particular, they ac- ‘ cus'd the Government of putting Men to Death contrary to Law, of de- ‘ ſolating the Churches, changing the Ordinances of God to the Inventions ‘ of Men, conniving at Papiſts, and keeping up of ſtanding Forces, the ‘ Bane of Civil Government; but more eſpecially they complain'd, That ‘ by reſcinding the Solemn League and Covenant, all the Oaths ſince ‘ impos'd were horrid Perjury. They declared againſt the King's Supre- ‘ macy, and all the Wars againſt the United Provinces, the Forfei- ‘ ture of the late Earl of Argyle, the Torture of Spence and Caſtares, and ‘ againſt the Inquiries into the Inſurrection at Bothwell-Bridge, by the Cir- ‘ cuit-Courts, which they call'd Popery and Tyranny twiſted together. ‘ They declar'd againſt James Duke of York his Aſcenſion to the Throne, ‘ as being excluded from it by the Commons of England; and likewiſe a- ‘ gainſt the preſent Houſe of Commons of both Kingdoms, as pack'd, ca- ‘ ball'd, and return'd by Fraud and Injuſtice. For all which Reaſons they ‘ totally throw'd off all Bonds of Subjection, and took up Arms againſt ‘ James Duke of York, and all his Accomplices, their moſt unnatural Ene- ‘ mies, for theſe Ends: 1. The reſtoring and ſettling the Proteſtant Reli- ‘ gion. 2. The Suppreſſion and perpetual Excluſion of Popery, and its bit- ‘ ter Root and Spring, Prelacy. 3. The reſtoring of all who have been ‘ Sufferers for their Adherence to their Liberties and Religion. Then they ‘ declar'd, That they wou'd never enter into any Capitulation or Treaty ‘ with the ſaid Duke of York, but proſecute the War till all their Ends ſhall ‘ be obtain'd, and invited all their Brethren in England and Ireland to their ‘ Aſſiſtance. And laſtly, they promis'd Indemnity to thoſe who had been ‘ formerly their Enemies, upon their ſincere Repentance, joining with ‘ them, and vigorouſly aſſiſting them againſt a perſecuting Tyrant, and ‘ an apoſtate Party.

This was the Subſtance of the general Declaration publiſh'd by Argyle's Followers; and the other, which was in the Earl's own Name, and in re-

The ſecond. ference to himſelf; was to this effect, ‘ That as he had taken up Arms ‘ with thoſe who had appointed him to be their Leader, for no private ‘ nor perſonal Ends, but only for thoſe contain'd in the Declaration be- ‘ foremention'd; ſo he claim'd no Intereſt, but what he had before the ‘ pretended Forfeiture of his Family, and to which he had ſufficient Right. ‘ He freely remitted all perſonal Injuries againſt himſelf and Family to thoſe

'the Duke of York having taken off his Mask, and invaded the Religion

'to God and his Country, to oppoſe and repreſs his Tyrannies and Uſurpa-

'the ſaid Declaration.' But the Parliament at Edinburgh were not inſenſible of their Danger from ſuch Proceedings, therefore in Oppoſition to theſe Declarations, they paſs'd an Act, 'That all the Subjects of Scotland ſhou'd Countermin'd by the Scotch Parliament.
'take the Oath of Allegiance a-new, and aſſert the Royal Prerogatives
'whenever they ſhou'd be required by the Privy-Council, upon Pain of Ba-

'Parliament of England.

ment, both Houſes ſhew'd all the Marks of Indignation; and each of them came to this Reſolution, 'That they wou'd ſtand by and aſſiſt his Majeſty
'with their Lives and Fortunes, againſt the pretended Earl of Argyle and
'his Adherents, and all other Rebels and Traytors whatſoever.' And to each of theſe Votes the King gave particular Anſwers; and firſt to the Commons, he ſaid, Gentlemen, I cou'd expect no leſs from a Houſe of Commons ſo compos'd, as God be thanked, you are; I rely on the Aſſurances you have given me, which are the natural Effects of monarchical Church of England Men: I ſhall ſtand by all ſuch; and ſo ſupported, have no Reaſon to fear any Rebels or Enemies I have now, or may have. To the Lords he ſhew'd himſelf more particular, which he expreſs'd in theſe Words: My Lords, The Aſſurances you give me now of ſtanding by me, are not new to me; you did it before I came to the Crown, and withſtood the Violence of a Party which deſign'd the Overturning the Monarchy; of all which I am as ſenſible as you can deſire, which upon all Occaſions I ſhall let you ſee: As it is your Intereſt, as well as Inclination to ſupport the Crown, ſo it is mine to ſupport you in all your juſt Rights and Privileges, the better to enable you to do it.

The Indignation of the Houſe of Commons appear'd in a particular Man- The Diſſenters in Danger.
ner, and began to extend to the whole Body of Diſſenters; which probably was one Reaſon of the rough Uſage of Mr. Baxter, before remember'd. For on the 27th of May, a Report was made from the Committee of Religion that they had drawn up theſe two following Votes, viz. 1. 'That it 'is the Opinion of the Committee, that this Houſe will ſtand by his Ma-
'jeſty with their Lives and Fortunes, according to their bounden Duty and 'Allegiance, in Defence of the Reformed Religion of the Church of Eng- 'land, as it is now by Law Eſtabliſh'd. 2. That a humble Addreſs be preſent-
'ed to his Majeſty, to deſire him to iſſue forth his Royal Proclamation, to 'cauſe the Penal Laws to be put in Execution, againſt all Diſſenters from 'the Church of England, whatſoever.' Had the Houſe fell directly in with the latter Vote, it might in this Juncture have prov'd fatal to the Diſſenters, eſpecially upon the Account of the new Provocations that ſo ſoon after appear'd: But the previous Queſtion being, Whether the Queſtion ſhou'd be then put, for the Houſe to agree with the Committee? It was carry'd in the Negative; and the Houſe upon mature Conſideration came to this generous Reſolution, Nemine Contradicente, namely, 'That this 'Houſe doth Acquieſce, and entirely Rely, and reſt wholly Satisfy'd on 'his Majeſty's Gracious Word, and repeated Declaration to Support and 'Defend the Religion of the Church of England, as it is now by Law 'Eſtabliſh'd, which is dearer to us than our Lives.

to

The Commons confiding Vote.

Accordingly, three Days after, when the great Money-Bill, call'd the Revenue-Bill, was ready, and the Houſe of Commons appear'd before his Majeſty upon the Throne, with the utmoſt Formality and Grandeur, the Speaker in preſenting the Bill, made the following confiding Speech: 'Moſt 'gracious Sovereign, We the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Houſe 'of Commons aſſembled in Parliament, do preſent to your Majeſty the 'Revenue you was pleas'd to demand at the opening of this Parliament, 'wherein we proceeded with as much ſpeed, as the Forms of paſſing Bills 'of that Nature wou'd admit. We bring not with it any Bill for the Pre-'ſervation or Security of our Religion, which is dearer to us than our 'Lives. In that we Acquieſce intirely, and reſt wholly ſatisfy'd in your 'Majeſty's Gracious and Sacred Word, repeated Declarations, and Aſſu-'rance to Support and Defend the Religion of the Church of England, as 'it is now by Law Eſtabliſh'd. We preſent this Revenue to your Majeſty, 'without the Condition of any Additional, Appropriating, or Tacking 'Clauſes whatſoever. And we humbly beſeech your Majeſty to accept of 'it, and along with it our hearty Prayers, That God Almighty wou'd 'bleſs you with a long Life and happy Reign to enjoy it.

The Speaker's Speech to the King.

The King's ſecond Speech to both Houſes.

Upon the paſſing of this Bill, his Majeſty was pleas'd to make this following Speech to both Houſes; 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I thank you 'heartily for the Bill you have preſented me this Day; and I aſſure you, 'the Readineſs and Chearfulneſs that hath attended the Diſpatch of it, 'is as acceptable to me as the Bill it ſelf. After ſo happy a Beginning, 'you may Believe I wou'd not call upon you unneceſſarily for an Extraor-'dinary Supply: But when I tell you, That the Stores of the Navy and 'Ordnance are extreamly exhauſted; That the Anticipations upon ſeveral 'Branches of the Revenue are Great and Burthenſome; That the Debts of 'the King my Brother, to his Servants and Family, are ſuch as deſerve 'Compaſſion; That the Rebellion in Scotland, without putting more weight 'upon it than it really deſerves, muſt oblige me to a conſiderable Expence Ex-'traordinary: I am ſure ſuch Conſiderations will move you to give me an Aid 'to provide for thoſe Things, wherein the Security, the Eaſe and Happi-'neſs of my Government are ſo much concern'd. But above all, I muſt re-'commend to you the Care of the Navy, the Strength and Glory of the 'Nation, That you will put it into ſuch a Condition, as may make us con-'ſider'd and reſpected Abroad. I cannot expreſs my Concerns upon this 'Occaſion more ſuitable to my own Thoughts of it, than by aſſuring you 'I have a true Engliſh Heart, as jealous of the Honour of the Nation as 'you can be; and I pleaſe my ſelf with the Hopes, that by God's Bleſ-'ſing and your Aſſiſtance, I may carry its Reputation yet higher in the 'World, than ever it has been in the Time of my Anceſtors. And as I 'will not call upon you for Supplies, but when they are of publick Uſe 'and Advantage, ſo I promiſe you, that what you give me upon ſuch Oc-'caſions, ſhall be manag'd with good Husbandry; and I will take Care it 'ſhall be employ'd to the Uſes for which I ask them.

The Harmony between the King and the Commons.

Pleas'd and ſatisfy'd with this Speech, the Commons, without enquiring into the Levying the Revenues before granted, proceeded in a liberal manner to further Supplies, and unanimouſly Reſolv'd, 'That a Supply be gi-'ven to his Majeſty, for repair of the Navy, Ordnance and Stores, and 'in Defence of the ſame, and for all other Occaſions mention'd in his Ma-'jeſty's Speech.' And when they came to the Ways and Means, they agreed agreed upon an Additional Duty of Excise upon Wines and Vinegar, and a further Imposition upon Sugars and Tobacco. And shortly after, on the 10th of June, they receiv'd this obliging Message from the King, 'That 'his Majesty did heartily thank the House, for their readiness in his Sup- 'plies; That he desir'd no more this Session, than what they were about: 'That he wou'd make trial of the Impositions on Sugars and Tobacco; 'but if he shou'd find them Injurious to his Plantations, he wou'd not make 'use of them, but hop'd they wou'd supply them some other way.' In sum, never was greater Harmony between the King and the People; never were more fair Promises in one Side, nor greater Generosity on the other. 1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

4. During these Proceedings at Home, the late Earl of Argyle was trying his Fortunes in the Field Abroad, and in the Limits of his own Countrey, where his Cause and Interest was most prevalent. Having issu'd out his Declarations, as is remember'd, he sent Letters to several of his Friends and Acquaintance, to desire their speedy Assistance; and detach'd his two Sons to make Excursions about the Neighbourhood of Lorn, and oblige some by Menaces, and others by Promises, to join with him in his Cause; but all this without any great and answerable Success. For all the Men he could raise did not amount to above three or four Thousand, with whom having march'd to the Town of Rosa in the Isle of Boot, and encamp'd himself, he was soon after pursu'd, and almost surrounded by the Earl of Dumbarton, General of the King's Forces, and by several other Bodies commanded by the Duke of Gordon, the Marquis of Athol, the Earl of Arran, and other Lords, who hasten'd from all Parts to extinguish the Fire of Rebellion, before it cou'd be blown up into a dangerous Flame. These latter being superior, the Argylians were forc'd to shift from one Island to another to avoid them; which for a while they easily did, by the help of their Shipping and Boats, until the Arrival of some Vessels of War sent by the King, as the Faulcon and Meremaid, and some other Frigates, which shortly after happen'd. Argyle's Progress in Scotland.

Argyle having Intelligence of the Approach of his Majesty's Ships, at length found it necessary to quit the Isle of Boot, and went over to Cowell, one of the Divisions of Argyleshire, bringing his Vessels and Boats into Loch-Fine towards Inverary; where they were soon after block'd up by the King's Ships, lying in the Mouth of the said Loch. In the mean Time, Argyle having brought his Ships under the Castle of Ellengreg, gave out and made report, That he wou'd fight the Marquis of Athol, who then lay about Inverary, tho' his chief Design was to avoid him; his Men, not finding the People to come in so readily as was promis'd, daily deserting him. Nor cou'd his Ships, detain'd by contrary Winds, get into Loch-Fine, but were so discourag'd by the Advancement of the King's-Fisher and Faulcon to the Entrance of Loch-Rowan where they lay, that they began to fortify the said Castle of Ellengreg, and a Rock lying near to it in a little Island, for securing their Vessels. This done, Argyle, leaving his Cannon, Arms and Ammunition in the Castle, and a hundred and fifty Men for the Defence of it and his Ships, march'd away towards the Head of Loch-Fine; and, returning thence, after a rough Reception by the Marquis of Athol's Men, pass'd Loch-Ling, marching towards Lenox in Dumbarton-shire. The same Day the King's Ships came up to the Castle with a Resolution to batter it, and to destroy their Vessels; but upon the firing of the first Gun, two Men came off with a Boat with a White-Flag, and told them, 'They might 'save their Labour, for there were none to oppose them, all the Rebels be- 'ing fled.' Upon which they sent a Boat, and finding it to be true, took Possession of the Castle, Ships and Boats, besides five Thousand Arms, five hundred Barrels of Powder, which was sav'd from being blown up, with Ball and other Stores in Proportion. His March into the Countrey.

This was a fatal Loss to the Argylians, who were at the same time advancing by the Head of Gaviloch, towards the Fords of the River Levin, between Loch-Lomand and the Town of Dumbarton. The King's General, the Earl of Dumbarton, was then with the Army at Glaſcow; where having notice that the Enemy had paſs'd the River Levin, he march'd very early in the Morning after them, as they were making towards Sterling, and overtook them in the Pariſh of Killerne. The King's Horſe and Dragoons kept them in Play till the Foot arriv'd; but they were poſted in ſo ſtrong a Ground, that it being late in the Evening, it was not thought fit then to attack them: So they ſtood drawn up all Night, as well to prevent Surprizals, as to be ready to fall upon them, as ſoon as Day-light appear'd. But the Argylians with great Silence march'd off in the Night, undiſcern'd by the Royaliſts, towards the River Clyde, which they ſwam with their Horſes, wafting their Foot in Boats, and ſo without any conſiderable Oppoſition, got into Renfrew. The King's Army miſſing them in the Morning, march'd with all Diligence to Glaſcow, and thence the General with his Horſe and Dragoons haſtned after them, leaving the Foot to follow with what ſpeed they cou'd make. At Renfrew Sir John Cockran, a principal Man under Argyle, undertook to provide Guides to conduct his Friends ſafely into Galloway, but they miſtaking the Way, or deſignedly miſleading them, carry'd them into a Bogg, where having loſt their Horſes and Baggage, the Foot diſpers'd into ſmall Parties; upon which the King's General divided his Forces anſwerable to thoſe Parties, to purſue them. Argyle ſeeing all loſt, fled towards Clyde, and was ſet upon by two of Greenock's Servants, but ſcorning to yield, he fired upon them when they call'd out to him. He receiv'd a Wound in his Head; upon which, not truſting to his Horſe, he alighted and run into the Water. The Noiſe of the Buſtle brought out a Country-man, who ran into the Water after him, where he was almoſt up to the Neck. He preſented a Piſtol at the Country-man, but it miſs'd Fire; whereupon the other gave him a Wound in the Head, which ſo ſtunn'd him that he fell, and in his falling cry'd out, Unfortunate ARGYLE! Upon which Words they ſeiz'd him, and carry'd him to their Commander, who ſent him bound to Glaſcow, and ſo to Edinburgh. This happen'd on the 17th of June, twenty eight Days after his firſt Landing in Scotland.

His Forces diſpers'd,

And himſelf taken.

Never was a Priſoner of that Character us'd with more Ignominy in that Kingdom, except the famous Marquis of Montroſs, whoſe extraordinary Sufferings proceeded principally from the Father of this unfortunate Nobleman. Like the vileſt Malefactor he was brought from Glaſcow to Edinburgh, and enter'd the City with his Hands bound behind him, bare-headed, with the Hangman with an Ax before him, and became a piteous Spectacle to the People. Within a few Days after, he was brought forth to the Market-Croſs, near which he was beheaded, without any great Ceremony or Speech, and his Head ſet up upon the Toll-Booth of the City. The more to diſplay the retaliating Juſtice of Heaven, which is always moſt ſignal in the Caſe of Blood, the following Obſervation was made at this Time, viz. 'That the late Earl of Argyle was taken in the ſame Month of the 'Year, in the ſame Week of the Month, in the ſame Day of the Week, 'and in the ſame Hour of the Day, (to ſay nothing that he was carry'd 'through the ſame Gate) with that Marquis of Montroſs, whoſe Murder 'perhaps was one of the fouleſt Blots in the Hiſtory of that Nation.' With Argyle dy'd the Rebellion in the North, the reſt being ſoon defeated: Rumbald the Malſter, the Maſter of the Rye-Houſe, being a Principal, fought deſperately, and was taken; and Colonel Ayloff, after he was a Priſoner, rip'd up his own Belly with a Penknife, but recover'd to be hang'd in England, as the other had been in Scotland; his Wounds not permitting him to be tranſported into his own Countrey.

His Execution and End of that Rebellion.

The Steps towards

IV. 1. Argyle's Inſurrection was not fully ſuppreſs'd, when the King and the Nation were alarm'd with a greater Storm rais'd in the Weſt of

England

England by an Invaſion of the Duke of Monmouth and his Followers; concerning whom, and the bold Expedition undertaken, we have ſome conſiderable Light from a Manuſcript written by Mr. Ferguſon himſelf, but never yet publiſh'd. We have already remember'd the Duke's Diſgrace under the late King, and his Retreat to the Hague; where he met with ſuch a kind Reception, as made him almoſt forget he was an Exile. This Uſage, tho' in it ſelf not very ungrateful, ſo much rais'd the Jealouſy of that King, that he deſir'd the Prince of Orange to withdraw his Favour from the Duke of Monmouth. The Prince, looking upon him as an Object of Merit, was ſo far from complying, that he continu'd his former Kindneſs and Reſpect to the Duke, and order'd his Troops to ſalute him when he ſhou'd happen to be preſent at the Reviews. On the other hand, the King had order'd Mr. Chudley, his Miniſter at the Hague, to command his Troops in the Dutch Service, not to take any Notice of the Duke of Monmouth; which the Prince reſented ſo highly, that he plainly reprimanded Chudley for offering to deliver Orders to Officers under his Command, without communicating the ſame to him. Upon which the Engliſh Envoy complain'd to his Maſter, who thinking himſelf affronted, forbade him to ſee the Prince. 1685. Jac. 1. Ref. 26

The Duke of MONMOUTH'S Expedition.

This was the Poſture of Affairs with the Duke, when King Charles was ſucceeded in the Throne by his Brother, who retaining the ſtrongeſt Jealouſy againſt him, as having been ſo often his Rival, endeavour'd by his new Envoy Mr. Skelton, to get him ſecured, and ſent into England. But this Deſign cou'd not be ſo ſecretly carry'd on, as not to come within the Knowledge of the Prince of Orange, who having more Generoſity than to ſuffer an abandon'd Man to be deliver'd up to his Enemies, not only gave the Duke Notice of the Deſign againſt him, by Monſieur Bentinck, his Favourite, but ſupply'd him with Money to retire privately to Bruſſels, with a farther Encouragement to him to go into foreign Countries. One of the firſt Things King James did after his Acceſſion to the Throne, was to let the Prince of Orange know, how deſirous he was to maintain a perfect Amity with him, and to converſe with him rather as a Father, than as an Ally and a Neighbour; which was thought ſufficient to have caus'd a right Underſtanding between the Prince and the Court of England. But upon the Duke's Retreat to Bruſſels, ſome Papers were found in his Houſe by Skelton, which diſcover'd certain Proofs of the Correſpondence between Him and Bentinck, which gave the Envoy a new Jealouſy, and caus'd him to be more vigilant than ever. So that the Duke had not been long at Bruſſels, when at the Inſtance of King James, who thought him ſtill too near his Accomplices, the Marquis of Grana, Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands, oblig'd him to depart thoſe Dominions; from whence he return'd privately into Holland, and lay incognito at Amſterdam. Here he fell in with the Earl of Argyle, the Lord Gray, Sir John Cockran, Colonel Holins, Captain Matthews, Mr. Wade, Ferguſon, Rumbald, and ſeveral other Engliſh and Scotch Exiles, upon the Account of the late Plot, who being equally enrag'd againſt King James, cheriſh'd the Duke's Reſentments, and with him concerted Means to revenge themſelves of their common Enemy: All which was carry'd on with the moſt imaginable Secrecy; and we have good Reaſon to believe, without the Privity, much leſs the Approbation, of the Prince of Orange. The Manner and raſh Entrance upon the Expedition ſhall be deliver'd chiefly in the Words of the foremention'd Manuſcript; which, after a Declaration, 'That there ſtands nothing inſerted in it but what is exactly true' proceeds thus,

A particular Account from a Manuſcript by Ferguſon.

It is not without Cauſe that we have been reflected upon, both for having been precipitous in venturing into England, and for having adjuſted our going to the moſt unhappy Juncture, that cou'd have been pitch'd upon or imagin'd. For tho' it was a Matter of vaſt Importance, and wherein the Miſcarriage wou'd be accompany'd with fatal Conſequences to the Nation, as well as our ſelves; yet we neither took Time to concert it with Perſons of Integrity, Wiſdom and Intereſt; nor had we the Diſcretion to delay the Execution of what we were deſigning, till we had an Anſwer from thoſe we had ſent over to certify Friends of our Reſolution, and to beſpeak their Concurrence and Aid. Nor cou'd there have been a more unhappy Seaſon calculated for ſuch an Attempt, than during the Seſſion both of the Parliament, and of the Term; when moſt Gentlemen were oblig'd to be at London, and thereby not only out of Capacity of rendring that Service and Aſſiſtance, which we might have expected from them at another Time, but many of them under a Neceſſity, by reaſon of their Circumſtances, of joining in thoſe Votes and Counſels, by which we became branded for Traytors and Rebels; upon which they who had Eſtates to loſe, were much diſcourag'd from coming in to our Aſſiſtance. Neither was there a ſufficient Time between the firſt Meſſage ſent into England, to give Friends Intelligence of our Deſign, and our haſtening over to purſue it, as to allow them a competent Space, either to diſcourſe thoſe in whom they wou'd confide, or diſpoſe themſelves where their Preſence wou'd be moſt uſeful, nor to ſettle thoſe Correſpondencies, and make ſuch Preparations that we expected from them, and which were needful to put our Undertaking into a probable Way of ſucceeding.

All this the Duke of Monmouth was very ſenſible of, but ſuffer'd himſelf to be over-rul'd contrary both to the Dictates of his Judgment, and the Biaſs of his Inclination. For cou'd he have been allow'd to have purſu'd his own Sentiments and Reſolutions, he intended to have ſpent that Summer in the Court of Swedeland; where, out of the Reach, as well as Suſpicion of his Enemies, he wou'd have given Matters at Home time to ripen towards a Revolution; afforded his Friends Leiſure to have ſettled Correſpondencies in the ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom; to have remitted Money for providing a ſufficient Stock and Magazine of Ammunition and Arms; and have maturated all Things for a Conjunction with him upon his Arrival the following Spring. But from this he was diverted by the Importunity of the Earl of Argyle, and prevail'd upon by the Advice and Intreaty of my Lord Gray and Mr. Wade, contrary to the Deſires of Mr. Fletcher and Captain Matthews, to haſten into England. To which, I can ſay, That I had the leaſt Acceſſion of any who were then about him; tho' I have had the Unhappineſs to be repreſented as the chief Author and Promoter of it, as well as of many other Things whereof I am innocent.

The Earl of Argyle having made Preparations towards a Deſcent into Scotland, and having as he thought diſpos'd Things there for his Reception and Aſſiſtance, he was not willing to loſe the Opportunity; leſt beſides the Offending and Alienating thoſe whom he had drawn in and depended upon, the Enemies thro' Delay might come to underſtand what he and his Friends had been projecting. Nor will any Man think it ſtrange, that the Earl of Argyle, being inviolably fix'd in that Reſolution, ſhou'd be earneſt with the Duke of Monmouth to invade England at the ſame time; ſeeing it wou'd not only oblige the King to divide his Forces, and thereby leave the Earl to be withſtood only by a Part of the Army, but wou'd give Encouragement to many in Scotland, who wou'd have otherwiſe ſtood Neuter, to join with the ſaid Earl upon the Intelligence of the Duke of Monmouth having made a Deſcent into England, and that they two acted by Concert. And ſo unreaſonably forward was the Earl of Argyle of proſecuting what he had deſign'd in Scotland, that he wou'd not be prevail'd upon to delay ſo much as one Month, till the Duke cou'd make ſome Preparations, tho' far from proportionable to the Undertaking he was hurrying him upon; and

till he cou'd receive Anſwers from the Meſſengers he had diſpatch'd into England, whereby he might know what Aſſiſtance he was to expect from his Friends. Nor wou'd the Earl, after his own ominous Haſt, ſet ſail for Scotland, till he forc'd a Promiſe from the Duke of Embarking for England within ſo many Days after: Which the Duke, rather than ſuffer his Honour to be ſtain'd, comply'd with, as far as the Weather wou'd permit; tho' he found the Obſervation of his Word to interfere with his Intereſt, as well as all the Principles of Prudence and Diſcretion. And beſides the Impreſſion, which the Importunity of the Earl of Argyle, ſeconded by the Advice of ſeveral about the Duke, had upon him to haſten precipitouſly into England, before he had either made thoſe Preparations abroad, or ſettled thoſe Correſpondencies at home, which were neceſſary, he was ſenſible that to have declin'd engaging at that Conjuncture, wou'd have occaſion'd many of the Engliſh, who had fled into Holland, and were weary of continuing Exiles from their Country, not only to have abandon'd him and to have gone with Argyle, but in revenge for being hinder'd from returning Home, to have loaded him with all the Aſperſions that Perſons exaſperated cou'd have caſt upon him. Moreover he foreſaw what a Reflection it wou'd have been upon him, to remain idle and dormant beyond Sea, at a Seaſon when the Earl of Argyle was acting for his Country; and how it wou'd not only have been improv'd to his Prejudice, by ſuch whom the ſerving their own Ends had reconcil'd to him, but wou'd have greatly cool'd the Affections of thoſe who had lov'd his Perſon, and purſu'd his Intereſt in Conjunction with their own and that of the Kingdom. So that being brought under a neceſſity of venturing either his Life or his Honour, he choſe to hearken to the Dictates of Generoſity, rather than of Wiſdom, and thereupon to hazard into England, before Matters were ripe for the Attempt. Which as it was the firſt Source of the Miſcarriage of his Undertaking; ſo we may reſolve our Defeat at laſt into it, as a very natural, tho' ſeemingly, a remote Cauſe. Thus far the Manuſcript. 1685. Jac. 1. Reſ. 26

2. With theſe ill-boding Circumſtances the Duke of Monmouth reſolv'd upon his great Expedition; and with the utmoſt Secrecy he hired a Man of War of thirty two Guns at Amſterdam, and three other ſmall Veſſels, on which he loaded Arms for five Thouſand Men, of which moſt were defenſive, as Backs, Breaſts, &c. which prov'd of little Uſe afterwards. Skelton, the Engliſh Envoy had ſome private Notice of theſe Preparations; and us'd his utmoſt Endeavours to ſtop the Veſſels in the River: But all he cou'd really effect was to detain one of the ſmall Veſſels, and to extort an Order from the States to Arreſt the Duke of Monmouth, who therefore went the ſooner on Board, accompany'd by Ford Lord Gray, a German Count, Colonel Holms, Mr. Joſeph Tyley, Colonel Matthews, Major Perrot, Captain Anneſley, Captain Hewling, Mr. Wade, Dr. Temple, Mr. Ferguſon, &c. in all but Eighty two Perſons, with whom he was to perform ſuch wonderful Actions. On the 24th of May, about three Weeks after the Departure of the Earl of Argyle, the Duke ſail'd out of the Texell with his Man of War and two Tenders; and met with ſuch bad Weather, and croſs Accidents, that he was nineteen Days at Sea; and yet was never diſcover'd by the Engliſh Ships which lay in the Channel purpoſely to intercept him. During this tedious Voyage, Ferguſon, as he afterwards related to particular Friends, had a great Deſire to ſound the Duke's Inclinations, which were at preſent unknown to his Followers: And one Day ſitting by himſelf in a muſing Poſture, the Duke gave him an Opportunity, by asking him in a pleaſant way About what he was ſtudying and thinking.' The other reply'd, as it were between Jeſt and Earneſt, I am thinking to beg a particular Favour of you, when you are King of England, that I may be your prime prime Miniſter of State. His Grace, perhaps without much Thinking, made anſwer, I cannot do that; for I have deſign'd, or, I am under an Obligation to grant that to the Lord— by which Ferguſon, as he ſaid afterwards, made a double Diſcovery.

And lands at Lyme.

On Thurſday the 11th Day of June, the Duke appear'd off of Lyme, a Port and Borough in Dorſetſhire, and went on Shore that Afternoon. As ſoon as his Men were landed, he commanded Silence, and falling on his Knees, he implor'd the Protection of Heaven, in a ſhort Prayer: Then drawing his Sword, he led his Men a Back-way into the Town, and ſet up his Blue Standard in the Market-Place, without the leaſt Oppoſition. Then he muſter'd his little Company, which tho' well arm'd and in good Equipage too much diſcover'd his Weakneſs, at a Time when his Numbers ought to have been magnify'd; which might eaſily have been done, if he had landed in the Night-time. Being ask'd, Whom they were for: They declar'd, For the Proteſtant Religion; heartily inviting all Perſons to come and join with them. Captain Lark, and ſeveral of the Town's-Men immediately join'd them. After this, a long printed DECLARATION was read at the Market-Croſs, intituled, The Declaration of James Duke of Monmouth, and the Noblemen, Gentlemen and Others, now in Arms for the Defence and Vindication of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Laws, Rights and Privileges of England.

His Declaration.

The Preface to it was to this Effect, 'That Government was originally 'inſtituted by God, and this or that Form of it choſen and ſubmitted to by 'Men, for the Peace, Happineſs, and Security of the Governed, and not 'for the private Intereſt and perſonal Greatneſs of thoſe that rule. That 'the Government of England was, above all others, happy in its primi- 'tive Form; whereby the Prerogatives of the Crown, and the Privileges 'of the Subject, were ſo far from juſtling one another, that the Rights re- 'ſerv'd to the People, tended to render the King honourable and great; 'and the Prerogatives ſettled on the Prince, were in order to the Subjects 'Protection and Safety. But now they were compell'd to ſay, That all 'the Boundaries of the Government had of late been broken, and nothing 'left unattempted for turning the Limited Monarchy into an Abſolute 'Tyranny.' Then they proceed to charge upon the Duke of York, in his Brother's Reign, 'His contriving the burning of London; his inſtigating a 'Confederacy with France, and a War with Holland; his fomenting the 'Popiſh Plot, and encouraging the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; 'his charging Treaſon againſt Proteſtants, and ſuborning Witneſſes to ſwear 'the Patriots of our Religion and Liberties out of their Lives; his hiring 'execrable Villains to aſſaſſinate the late Earl of Eſſex, and cauſing others 'to be clandeſtinely cut off, in hopes to conceal it; his adviſing and procu- 'ring the Prorogation and Diſſolution of the Parliaments, in order to pre- 'vent the looking into his Crimes, and that he might eſcape the Juſtice of 'the Nation, &c.

They next proceeded to enumerate the 'Tyrannies which he had exer- 'cis'd ſince he ſnatch'd the Crown from his Brother's Head: For, in Defi- 'ance of all Laws and Statutes of the Realm, made for the ſecuring of the 'Proteſtant Religion, he not only began his Reign with a bare-fac'd avow- 'ing himſelf of the Romiſh Religion, but call'd in Multitudes of Prieſts 'and Jeſuits, for whom the Law makes it Treaſon to come into the King- 'dom, and hath impower'd them to exerciſe Idolatries: And beſides his be- 'ing daily preſent at the Worſhip of the Maſs, he hath publickly aſſiſted at 'the greateſt Fopperies of their Superſtition. Neither hath he been more 'tender in trampling upon the Laws which concern our Properties; ſeeing 'in two Proclamations, whereof the one requires the collecting of the Cu- 'ſtoms, and the other continuing that part of the Exciſe, which was to

'cial Opinion of ſeven or eight ſuborn'd and forſworn Judges, but rather
'declaring the Greatneſs and Extent of the Conſpiracy againſt our Rights;
'and that there is no Means left for our Relief, but by Force of Arms:
'For advancing thoſe to the Bench, that were the Scandal of the Bar, and
'conſtituting thoſe very Men to declare the Laws, who were accus'd and 'branded in Parliament for perverting them; we are precluded all Hopes 'of Juſtice in Weſtminſter-Hall: And by packing of Juries, falſe Returns,
'new illegal Charters, and other corrupt Means, he doth at once deprive 'us of all Expectations of Succour, where our Anceſtors were wont to find
'it; and hopes to render that which ought to be the Peoples Fence againſt
'Tyranny, and the Conſervator of their Liberties, the Means of ſubvert-
'ing all our Laws, and of eſtabliſhing his Arbitrarineſs, and confirming our
'Thraldom.'——Notwithſtanding all which, they declare to the World,
'It is not for any perſonal Injuries, or private Diſcontents, nor in Purſuance
'of any corrupt Intereſt, that we take our Swords in our Hands; but for
'vindicating our Religion and Laws, and reſcuing our Countrey from Ruin
'and Deſtruction, and for the preſerving our ſelves, Wives and Children,
'from Bondage and Idolatry. Wherefore, before God, Angels and Men,
'we ſtand acquitted from, and do Charge upon our Enemies all the Slaugh'ter and Devaſtations that unavoidably accompany inteſtine War.'

After this they laid down the Ways and Means of redreſſing all Grievances, and particularly the repealing the Penal Laws againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, the Corporation and Militia Acts, and promis'd to purſue thoſe Ends in a fair and effectual manner. And then that they might as fairly and effectually load the King, they proceeded thus: 'And whereas the ſaid
'Duke of York, in Order to the expediting his idolatrous nnd bloody De-
'ſigns of the Papiſts, the gratifying his own boundleſs Ambition after a 'Crown, and to hinder the Enquiry after the Aſſaſſination of the Earl of 'Eſſex, hath poiſon'd the late King, and thereby manifeſted his Ingrati-
'tude, as well as Cruelty to the World, in murdering a Brother, who had
'almoſt ruin'd himſelf, to preſerve and protect him from Puniſhment; We 'do therefore farther declare, that for the aforeſaid villanous and unnatural
'Crime, and other his Crimes beforemention'd, and in purſuance of the Re-
'ſolution of both Houſes of Parliament, who voted to revenge the King's
'Death in caſe he came to an untimely End, we will proſecute the ſaid
'James Duke of York, till we have brought him to ſuffer what the Law
'adjudg'd to be the Puniſhment of ſo execrable a Fact. And in a more par'ticular manner, his Grace the Duke of Monmouth, being ſenſible of the 'barbarous and horrid Parricide committed upon his Father, doth reſolve
'to purſue the ſaid James Duke of York as a mortal and bloody Enemy;
'and will endeavour, as well with his own Hand, as by the Aſſiſtance of 'his Friends, and the Law, to have Juſtice executed upon him. And the ſaid
'James Duke of Monmouth, the now Head and Captain-General of the 'Proteſtant Forces of this Kingdom, aſſembled for the End aforeſaid, from
'the Generouſneſs of his own Nature, and the Love he bears to theſe Na'tions, whoſe Welfare and Settlement he infinitely prefers to whatſoever
'concerns himſelf, doth not at preſent inſiſt upon his TITLE, but leaves
'the Determination thereof to the Wiſdom, Juſtice and Authority of a Par'liament legally choſen, and acting with Freedom: And the in mean time
'doth profeſs and declare, by all that's ſacred, that he will in Conjunction 'with the People of England, employ all his Abilities beſtow'd upon him
'by God and Nature, for the Re-eſtabliſhment and Preſervation of the Pro-
'teſtant Religion in theſe Kingdoms, and for reſtoring of the Subjects of the

'ſame to a free Exerciſe thereof, in oppoſition to Popery, and the Conſe'quences of it, Tyranny and Slavery. To the obtaining of which End, he 'doth hereby promiſe and oblige himſelf to the People of England, to 'promote the paſſing into Laws all the Methods aforeſaid, that it may ne'ver more be in the Power of any ſingle Perſon on the Throne to de'prive their Subjects of their Rights, and to ſubvert the fundamental Laws 'of the Government deſign'd for their Preſervation.' Then declaring for the Inſurrection in Scotland, and inviting all Proteſtant Kings, Princes, States and People to their Aſſiſtance, they conclude in theſe Words; 'And 'above all, our Dependance and Truſt is upon the Lord of Hoſts, in whoſe
'Name we go forth, and to whom we commit our Cauſe, and refer the 'Deciſion betwixt us in the Day of Battle. Now let us play the Men for 'our People, and for the Cities of our God; and the Lord do that which
'ſeemeth good unto him.

The Effect of it. This Declaration being read, and ſpread abroad, wrought ſo much upon the Minds of the common People, whoſe Affections to the Duke had been long pre-engag'd, that they ſoon flock'd to him in great Numbers, and gave no ſmall Hopes of Succeſs; tho' his Grace manifeſtly labour'd under great Difficulties, with reſpect to the Want of Arms, Horſes, and good Officers. But how this Declaration and Expedition was taken at Weſtminſter in the Houſes of Parliament, is now time to be remember'd.

The Proceedings of the Parliament. 3. As ſoon as the King had by Meſſage, let the Parliament know of the Arrival of the Duke of Monmouth, by Intelligence from the Mayor of Lyme, both Houſes expreſs'd their Thanks and their Indignation; and they immediately agreed, 'To wait on his Majeſty, and give their Thanks in an 'Humble Addreſs, for his Favour in imparting the ſaid Intelligence; and
'do humbly offer to aſſiſt and ſtand by his Majeſty, with their Lives and 'Fortunes, againſt James Duke of Monmouth, and all Rebels and Tray-
'tors, and all other his Majeſty's Enemies whatſoever.' Upon the Delivery of which Addreſs, his Majeſty return'd this obliging Anſwer: I thank you for your loyal Addreſs; and as you have offer'd to aſſiſt and ſtand by Me with your Lives and Fortunes, I do aſſure you, I will ſtand by You, and will at any Time venture my Life in Defence and Support of the Government, and for ſecuring the Peace of the Kingdom.

A Bill of Attainder againſt the Duke, paſſes, The Commons ſo much ſignaliz'd their Loyalty, that as ſoon as they had finiſh'd the Buſineſs of the Addreſs, they preſently reſolved, 'That a Bill
'be brought in for the Attainder of James Duke of Monmouth of High-
'Treaſon; praying his Majeſty to iſſue out his Royal Proclamation, pro-

'Body of the Duke of Monmouth dead or alive.' This Bill of Attainder was in leſs than two Days diſpatch'd by the Commons; and being ſent up to the Lords, it was read three Times in one Day, and compleated without any Alteration. In the mean time the King publiſh'd two Proclamations, the firſt againſt ſpreading a traiterous Declaration publiſh'd by James Duke of Monmouth; and the other for promiſing the aforeſaid Reward of Five Thouſand Pounds to any who ſhou'd bring him alive or dead. Then on the 16th of June he came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, he gave his Royal Aſſent from the Throne to theſe following Bills, 1. The King finding the Houſe of Commons ſo free and forward in their Service, two Days after ſent them this following Meſſage by the Earl of Middleton; 'That He judges it neceſſary for the Members, on whoſe Loy-'alty he depends, to be preſent in their reſpective Counties, and there-'fore deſigns there ſhall be a Receſs in a very few Days: But becauſe the 'Rebellion in the Weſt will occaſion an extraordinary Expence, his Ma-'jeſty deſires that there may be a good Fund for a preſent Sum of Money, 'to anſwer the immediate Charge his Majeſty muſt be at; and to the end 'the Bills now depending may not be prejudic'd, his Majeſty is pleas'd this 'Separation ſhall be an Adjournment, and for ſome ſhort Time only.' There never appear'd a greater Readineſs in the Commons, who without Heſitation Reſolved, 'That a Supply not exceeding Four Hundred Thou-'ſand Pounds, be given to his Majeſty, for his preſent extraordinary Occa-'ſions.' And both Houſes were ſo unanimous and expeditious, that on the 27th of June, his Majeſty had occaſion to come to the Houſe of Peers, and give his Royal Aſſent to theſe following Bills. 1. An Act for granting an Aid to his Majeſty, by an Impoſition on all French Linens, and all Eaſt-India Linen, and ſeveral other Manufactures of India, and on all French wrought Silks and Stuffs, and on all Brandy imported after the 1ſt Day of July 1685, and before the 1ſt Day of July 1690. 2. The King's Meſſage to the Commons.

A new Supply.

More Bills paſs'd.

The Houſes proceeded with ſuch Diſpatch and Readineſs, that within four Days after, on Thurſday the 2d of July, his Majeſty came again to the Houſe of Peers; and the Commons being ſent for to attend, he gave his Royal Aſſent to theſe other Bills. 1. An Act for reviving and Continuance of ſeveral Acts of Parliament therein mention'd. 2. An Act to encourage the building of Ships in England. 3. An additional Act for the Improvement of Tillage. 4. An Act for erecting a new Church, to be call'd the Pariſh of St. James, within the Liberty of Weſtminſter. 5. An Act for the Repair of the Cathedral Church of Bangor, and for the Maintenance of the Choir there, and for the Augmentation of the Biſhoprick of Bangor; and alſo, for an Augmentation of ſeveral Vicariges within the Comportions of Laudinum in the Dioceſs of Bangor aforeſaid. Upon paſſing of theſe Bills, the Lord-Keeper ſpoke thus to both Houſes: 'My Lords 'and Gentlemen, I am commanded to let you know, That it is his Maje-'ſty's Pleaſure, that both Houſes adjourn forthwith till Tueſday the 4th of 'Auguſt next. Not that his Majeſty intends that then there ſhall be a Seſ-

The Duke of Monmouth's Proceedings in the Weſt.

V. 1. All this Time, the Duke of Monmouth was purſuing his unfortunate Expedition, which was begun, as was before remember'd, with ſuch ſmall Numbers, and ſuch ſlender Preparations, that it is a Wonder he ſhou'd meet with ſo much Succeſs, and bid ſo fair for a Crown. Being attended with ſo ſmall a Force at his Landing, but eighty two in Number, and moſt of them unskilful in military Affairs, oblig'd his Grace to ſtay ſeveral Days at Lyme, before he cou'd gather Strength enough to begin his March; which furniſh'd the King's Party with ſeveral Advantages againſt him, in ſecuring many of his chief Friends, and diſcouraging and incommoding others that were flocking to him; yet ſtill his Numbers ſo encreas'd from the ordinary ſort, that he ſoon found that he was in greater Want of Arms and Officers, than of Common-Soldiers. His firſt Arrival was attended with ſome ominous Circumſtances, particularly a fatal Quarrel between two of his beſt Officers, of which, and the immediate Conſequences, we ſhall give an Account from the Manuſcript formerly mention'd.

MSS. Bloody Aſſizes. Orleans. Manley. Boyer. Welwood. B. Lloid.

Moreover, of the ſmall Number which accompany'd the Duke out of Holland, one was unfortunately kill'd ſoon after our Landing, and before we were in a Condition to march. Which was occaſion'd by his own intemperate and unruly Paſſion, and beyond the Intention of the Gentleman whoſe Misfortune it was to do it; who having ſnatch'd his Piſtol into his Hand for no other End, but to preſerve himſelf from the other's rude Aſſault with a Cane, had the Unhappineſs unawares to ſhoot him, contrary to his Thoughts and Inclinations, and to his unconcievable Grief. Nor was our Loſs hereby confin'd to him that fell, tho' therein we ſuſtain'd conſiderable Prejudice, by being depriv'd of a Perſon, whoſe Acquaintance and Eſteem in that Part of the Kingdom, render'd him uſeful to us above many others; but the Duke upon this deplorable Accident, thought it neceſſary, to prevent murmuring among ſome of our ſelves, as well as to remove Occaſion of Reſentment in the Inhabitants of Taunton, where he promis'd himſelf a hearty Welcome and conſiderable Supplies, to adviſe the other Gentleman for a Time to withdraw; but under a Deſire and Command to return and meet him at a Place which he nam'd, where alas! we never had the Happineſs to arrive. And tho' the Damage that befel us by the diſmiſſing of that Gentleman, cannot eaſily be imagin'd or expreſs'd; yet this I may ſay towards giving an Idea of it, That as he was a Perſon, who by his Courage, military Skill, civil Prudence, Application to Buſineſs, and the Intereſt he had in the Duke, wou'd have contributed much to the Conduct of our whole Affairs, and have promoted the embracing all Opportunities for Action, attended with any probable Succeſs; ſo he wou'd have done every thing that cou'd have been expected from a Perſon of Character and Worth, in a deciſive Engagement.

An Action at Bridport.

Accordingly the very next Morning after his withdrawing, we came to have a ſenſible Proof of the Injury that the Duke had done Himſelf and the Cauſe, in diſmiſſing him. For having been deſign'd to command the Horſe, that were to be ſent in Conjunction with a ſelect Party of Foot, to attack a Body of the Enemy that lay at Bridport, which was but ſix Miles from us, my Lord Gray, upon his Removal, came to have that Truſt devolv'd upon him, who inſtead of acquitting himſelf there as he ought to have done, not only forſook and abandon'd the Foot, but return'd with Tidings, That they

they were all cut off. Whereas they not only forc'd the Enemy for ſeveral Hours after the flight of the Horſe, but march'd back to the Camp with the Loſs of a very few Men; having taken ſeveral Priſoners, and left more of the Adverſary, and ſome of them Perſons of Quality, dead upon the Spot. The Ignominy and Guilt of this is here charg'd peculiarly upon the Lord Gray: Which occaſion'd that juſt tho' ſharp Reply of L. Collonel Matthews, who upon the Relation of that cowardly Behaviour, being ask'd by the Duke What he ſhould do with my Lord Gray? anſwer'd, That there was not a General in Europe that wou'd have ask'd ſuch a Queſtion, but himſelf. Intimating thereby, That the leaſt he deſerv'd, was to have had his Commiſſion taken from him, and to have remain'd branded for a Poltrone. However it was, our want of Succeſs at that time, when we made our firſt Attempt upon the Enemy, both ſerv'd to diſcourage many, and made the Duke afterwards unwilling to engage when he had the faireſt Advantages. Thus far Mr. Ferguſon's Manuſcript. 1685. Jac. I. Reſ. 16

2. On the 15th of June, in the Afternoon, the Duke of Monmouth march'd out of Lyme for Axminſter, a little Town four Miles diſtant; his Party being then about two thouſand Foot, and three hundred Horſe. About two Miles from Lyme, they diſcover'd the Duke of Albemarle, with four thouſand Men, deſigning that Night to quarter in the ſame Town, which they had News of in the Way; yet ſtill they march'd on in good Order, and enter'd the Town, lin'd all the Hedges, planted their Field Pieces, and expected nothing leſs than an Ingagement, the other being not a Mile from the Town. The Duke of Albemarle advanc'd within a Quarter of a Mile of them, but finding his Soldiers to be all Militia Men of Devonſhire, and that they had no Inclination to fight againſt Monmouth, thought it beſt to retreat. He came from Exeter with theſe Forces, intending to beſiege the Duke in Lyme, preſuming he cou'd not be ready in ſo ſhort time; but now finding him ſo well prepar'd to receive him, he retir'd in great Diſorder and Confuſion, ſuppoſing that the Enemy had purſu'd him. This Purſuit was debated in Monmouth's Army; but the Duke ſaid, It was not his Buſineſs to fight yet, till his Men had been a little diſciplin'd, but rather to make up into the Countrey as faſt as poſſible, to meet his Friends; not queſtioning but there wou'd be ſome Action in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, on the News of his Succeſs. But this was look'd upon as a falſe Step; for had they made the Purſuit, they had gain'd all their Arms, ſeveral more Men, and might have march'd in two Days, with little Oppoſition, to the very Gates of Exeter; the Countrey Troops reſolving not to fight them, ſeveral of whom came to them that Night with their Arms. But miſſing that Opportunity, they march'd in for Taunton, being receiv'd through all the little Towns in the Way with all poſſible Kindneſs, with loud Acclamations and Prayers to God to ſucceed their Arms. Monmouth advances towards Taunton.

On the 18th they arriv'd at the rich Town of Taunton, about twenty Miles from Lyme, where the Streets were ſo throng'd with People, that they cou'd ſcarce enter, all endeavouring to manifeſt their Joy at the Duke's coming; having their Houſes and Doors adorn'd with green Boughs, Herbs and Flowers, and all the Emblems of Proſperity. The next Day, twenty young Virgin Gentlewomen, with Colours ready made at the Charge of the Townſmen, preſented them to his Grace with particular Solemnity: The Captain of them went before with a naked Sword in one Hand, and a ſmall curious Bible in the other, which ſhe likewiſe preſented, with a ſhort acceptable Speech; at which, the Duke, in a manner tranſported, aſſur'd Her, He came now in the Field, with a Deſign to defend the Truths contain'd in that Book, and to ſeal it with his Blood, if there ſhou'd be any Occaſion for it. Here, elevated by the fair Proſpect of Succeſs, or overcome by the Importunities of thoſe about him, he was content to take upon him the Name and Title of KING. They alledg'd, 'That the Reaſon why 'the Gentry of England did not move, was becauſe he came upon Common-wealth Principles; and this being the Cry of the Army, on Saturday Morning, the 20th of June, he was ſolemnly proclaim'd King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, &c. which it ſeems was very ſurprizing and ſhocking to many of his Republican Friends. What the foremention'd Manuſcript ſays of it, may be worth the remembring; which, after particular Notice taken of the many Failures and Errors in this Expedition, proceeds in this manner:

And thus I have recounted whatſoever may be thought to have laid the Foundation of our Miſcarriage, or to have contributed towards it, except it be one Thing, wherein all are not of the ſame Opinion. And this is, 'That 'the Duke of Monmouth's aſſuming the Title of King, was not only a re-'ceding from his Declaration, but a means of Diſcouraging many from 'coming to his Aſſiſtance; and thereby an Occaſion both of his own Miſ-'fortune, and of the Ruin of the whole Undertaking.' In reference to which, I think my ſelf oblig'd to ſay, That it was not from Ambition that he choſe at that Juncture to take upon him the Royal Style, but that it proceeded from a Neceſſity he conceiv'd himſelf under, in order the better to purſue and attain thoſe Ends of his Declaration, wherein the Deliverance and Safety of the People were concern'd. He judg'd it to be the giving the Enemy too much Advantage, through the Duke of York's being in the Throne and de facto King, of Proclaiming us all to be Traytors, without putting himſelf into a Capacity by taking the Royal Title, of charging that upon his Party of which they accus'd and criminated Ours. For whatſoever Mens Inclinations were towards us, yet if they were any ways ſagacions, they cou'd not but ſee a vaſt difference between Adhering to to the Duke of York, which the Duke of Monmouth, without aſſuming the Name of King, cou'd not threaten to puniſh as a Crime, and the promoting his Graces's Intereſt, while it was branded with the Name, and ſtood liable to the Penalties of High Treaſon. Accordingly he had not only Meſſages from ſome Gentlemen, but was told by ſeveral Non-conforming Miniſters that came into the Camp, 'That unleſs he took the Style of King, 'none who had Eſtates to loſe, wou'd venture themſelves in his Quarrel. This I heard often ſaid by many, and particularly in a Meeting where ſeveral were aſſembled from different Parts of the Countrey to adviſe and perſuade him to aſſume the King-ſhip; and where, as Mr. Hook the Duke's Chaplain can witneſs, I diſputed againſt the Conveniency of it at that Juncture with all the Strength and Vigour of Mind that I cou'd; tho' I have had the Misfortune to be repreſented as the firſt Author, and chief Promoter of it, which I am willing at preſent to bear, and digeſt the Aſperſion with the ſame Patience that I do many worſe Calumnies.

Ferguſon's Obſervations upon it.

Nor, proceeds he, is it ſtrange that this ſhou'd be the Senſe of the moſt diſcreet and greateſt Part of the People, it being purſuant and conſonant to the Practices of their Anceſtors: For when Edward the Fourth, being attainted in Parliament, came with Force into the Kingdom againſt Henry the Sixth, pretending to challenge only his Inheritance of the Dutchy of York, the Lords told him, 'That they neither wou'd nor durſt join with 'him, unleſs he wou'd ſtyle himſelf King;' which he immediately did, notwithſtanding it was a departing from his firſt Pretence. And I cannot omit, that even Colonel Danvers, who hath ſo ſeverely cenſur'd that Action of the Duke, and made it his Plea for not Riſing and Heading a Party in London as he had promis'd, not only ſent to the Duke before he came over, adviſing him to take the Title of King, but ſaid, when he heard he had aſſum'd it, That it wou'd be of more Advantage and Importance to him, him, than twenty Thouſand Men. Nor cou'd the Duke's taking the Styl of King, be the Reaſon of that falſe and cowardly Man's not riſing in the City, as he had undertaken in his Meſſages to Us, and his Promiſes to Others, and as he was importun'd by many, whom by Aſſurances of it he had hinder'd and diverted from venturing to us into the Countrey; ſeeing after he knew of the Duke's being cloath'd with that Title, he diſpatch'd two Meſſengers to our Army to confirm his Preparations and Reſolution for ſtirring, and that he only waited to know the Time when be ſhou'd begin, and to receive the Duke's Commands for Authorizing of it. But the true Ground of that treacherous Man's falſifying his Ingagements to us, and diſappointing the Expectations of thoſe in and about the City that depended upon him, was want of Courage and Integrity. For Mr. Parrot, who intimately knew him, and had been a Witneſs of former Inſtances of his Cowardice and Deceit, told me, while we were flattering our ſelves with the Hopes of his ſtirring, That he had neither Truth nor Valour to render him worthy to be rely'd on; and that Fear wou'd prevail over him to the fruſtrating what he had the Confidence to undertake, and to the total Ruin of our Cauſe, if we truſted to him for its Support.

1685. Jac. 1. Ref. 26

Nor did it appear, as he goes on, that the Duke's aſſuming the Regal Title diſcourag'd Men from coming to our Aſſiſtance, ſince we not only enroll'd a whole Regiment of Foot, beſides Horſe, at Taunton, where he was firſt proclaimed; but greater Numbers preſented themſelves afterwards to offer their Service; than we had found and obſerv'd before. Tho' by reaſon of our wanting Arms wherewith to ſupply them, there was not that Proportion continu'd with us, as there did of thoſe who join'd us e're our Stores were empty; but they were forc'd to return home, and we neceſſitated to allow it, being deſtitute of Weapons to beſtow upon them. And tho' the Duke's taking the Regal Style, might ſeem a Departing from the Words of his Declaration, yet it was very conſonant to the Claim he made in it, and moſt agreeable to ſeveral Clauſes therein affirm'd and aſſerted. For as the Declaring againſt James Duke of York as an Uſurper, and the Publiſhing himſelf to be the lawful and legitimate Son of King Charles the Second, was a plain Claiming his being King de jure; ſo whether he ſhou'd aſſume the Name, (abſtracting from his Promiſe) Diſcretion and Modeſty, and not Right and Juſtice, were concern'd; and conſequently to be a King, provided all the other Parts of his Declaration ſtood ſecured, in which he might accommodate himſelf to the Neceſſity of his Affairs, and comply beſt with thoſe Meaſures that had the greateſt Tendency to his Succeſs; which he believ'd the aſſuming the Name of King wou'd do. And therefore, as he in a ſecond Declaration, after he had taken the Royal Title, confirm'd and ſecured all the other Parts, Promiſes and Ingagements of his firſt; ſo he ſignify'd the Grounds that had made him recede from the Clauſe in the firſt, that barr'd his claiming the Name of King, without the Concurrence of a Parliament, hoping that the Neceſſity which enforc'd him to it, wou'd have juſtify'd it. But to proceed in the Hiſtory.

3. The Duke of Monmouth, having proclaim'd himſelf King of all the Britiſh Dominions, began his Mock-Reign with three ſeveral Proclamations; One ſetting a Sum of Money upon King James's Head, as he had done before by the Duke. The ſecond, Declaring the Parliament of England a ſeditious Aſſembly; and if they did not ſeparate before the End of June, to give Power and Authority to any that wou'd attempt to lay hold of them as Rebels and Traytors. The third was directed againſt the Duke of Albemarle, who, having had time to rally his Men, now lay within ſix Miles of Taunton; and this declared him a Traytor, if he did not lay down his Arms immediately. In order to which, a Meſſage was ſent to command him him so to do; but he return'd answer, That he was a Subject to King James the Second, the late King's Brother, and that he knew no other Lord. We are farther told by the Secret History of Europe, that the Duke of Monmouth sent a Letter to the other to invite him to come over to him with his Forces, with particular Promises of Favour, and subscrib'd James Rex: And that he likewise sent a Summons to the Lord Churchill, who commanded a Dorsetshire Regiment, to attend him with his Forces, requiring him to do it upon his Allegiance, but both to no Effect. But of this, and the Letters said to have pass'd between Monmouth and Albemarle, we have not all the Certainty that is requisite to a History that is not secret.

He advances to Bridgewater, &c.

On the 21st of June the Duke march'd for Bridgewater, about seven Miles from Taunton, having now an Army of near five thousand Men, which might have been more than doubled, if they had not wanted Arms for their Accommodation. They were receiv'd there as at other Places, but did little more than read the general Declaration and Proclamation, which they did in all Towns, the Magistrates standing by in their Gowns, and so march'd forward for Glassenbury. From whence they resolv'd for Bristol, three Days March from that Town, a most important Place aim'd at before their first Landing, designing to attack it. Accordingly they advanc'd to Cansham Bridge, a little Town three Miles from that City, intending to enter the next Morning; the Duke of Beaufort being Commander there with a considerable Garrison. Being lodg'd in the Town, they were suddenly allarm'd with the Noise of the Approach of the King's Forces, being in no small Confusion on this unexpected News. This occasion'd a notable Skirmish for a while, which ended to the Disadvantage, but more to the Disgrace of the Duke's Party, whose Horse Officers were very negligent or unskilful in their Duty, and gave a great Damp and Discouragement to the Design upon Bristol.

Yet still some Gentlemen that came over with the Duke, being Bristol Men, and knowing the Hearts of the Townsmen, begg'd him heartily to proceed towards it, and offer'd themselves to go at the Head of them into the Town, by some private Ways well known to them, assuring him, They wou'd make no Resistance. This might have prov'd of vast Consequence, as to the gaining of Arms, Money, Ammunition, &c. but either infatuated, or too much dejected, the Duke march'd on to Bath, which he summon'd to surrender, but was refus'd Entrance, having a considerable Garrison. Not willing to spend time in Sieges, he march'd that Day to a little Town call'd Philip's-Norton, where by surprise he cut off the best part of a Troop of Horse of the King's Party; the Duke of Grafton narrowly escaping with his Life. From thence advancing to Frome, the Duke and his Forces were receiv'd with as much Chearfulness as at Taunton; but were disappointed of the Arms they expected, which were by a Stratagem taken from the Inhabitants a few Days before their Entrance. Here they met with the unexpected News of the Defeat of Argyle in Scotland, and of the Advance of the King's Forces from London, with considerable Baggage, and a Train of Artillery. Upon which Intelligence, and considering the Want of Arms and Money, they were so confounded, that it was once resolv'd, That all who came over with the Duke should that Night take Horse, and seize a Ship at Pool, and return to Holland; leaving the Infantry to the Mercy of the Countrey. But upon a farther Consideration, they resolv'd to return back to Bridgewater, where they were sure of a hearty Welcome, and there expect the King's Forces.

He is much discourag'd.

The Prince of Orange's Offers to the King.

4. During these Transactions, the Prince of Orange, having hear'd of the Duke's Landing, and the Strength he had gather'd, tho' he had generously protected him before, now thought himself so far concern'd, that he not not only dispatch'd over the six English Regiments recall'd from the Service of the States General, but he likewise sent over Monsieur Bentinck to King James, with Order to acquaint him, 'That tho' he look'd upon the Duke 'of Monmouth to be a Man of no great Depth; yet that he had a war- 'like Genius, and was better skill'd in the military Art than any the King 'was to employ against him; and therefore, if his Majesty pleas'd, he 'wou'd not only lend him his Troops, but come in Person to head his Ar- 'my." The same Offer had been before communicated to Mr. Skelton at the Hague; but he looking upon the Prince as one of those Politicians, whose Steps are always suspicious, he us'd such Diligence as to give the King notice of his Intention before Monsieur Bentinck cou'd arrive; and that with such unfavourable Interpretation upon the Prince's Offer, that the King put off that Minister, with telling him, he shou'd acquaint his Master, That their common Interest did require the Prince his staying in Holland: And farther open'd his Mind to him in such Terms, as sufficiently discover'd, he did not take his Highness's Zeal for his Service to be at that time seasonable. 1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

The King's Proceedings against the Duke.

However, the King proceeded happily at that Time without the Prince's Assistance, and was serv'd not only with Zeal, Fidelity and Affection, but also with Skill, Courage and Conduct by his own Troops and their Leaders. The first Forces which his Majesty sent down against the Duke of Monmouth, were some of the Earl of Oxford's Regiment, under the Command of the Lord Churchill, who attended the Motions of the Duke with great Conduct, and exact Management. The Duke of Albemarle headed the Militia of Devonshire; the Duke of Somerset the Militia of that County, at Bath; the Duke of Beaufort the Militia of Glocestershire, at Bristol; and the Earl of Pembroke the Militia of Wiltshire, at Chippenham. And the Militia of other Counties were rais'd, and began their March towards the West; tho' the King had no extraordinary Confidence in their Fidelity. And therefore his Majesty sent away all his regular Troops and Guards, to form an Army under the Command of a French General and Favourite, the Earl of Feversham; who in the Beginning of July encamp'd at a Place call'd Sedgmore near Bridgwater, where the Duke of Monmouth lay with his declining Forces. The Earl's Horse and Dragoons were lodg'd in the Town, and the Foot in the Field, cover'd towards the Enemy with a Parapet and Trench, formerly made by the Countrey-Men against Inundations; and their Rear was secured by the said Village behind them. Their Numbers, about 2000 Foot, and 700 Horse and Dragoons, were considerably less than those of the Enemy; and the chief Commanders under the Earl were the Duke of Grafton, the Lord Dunbarton; the Lord Churchill, Colonel Oglethorp, Sir Francis Compton, besides the Bishop of Winchester in Person, who was very serviceable upon this extraordinary Occasion.

The Duke of Monmouth, by their near Approach, thought himself in effect besieg'd; and finding his Men daily to desert, by reason of his last Retreat, he therefore resolv'd to make one desperate Push, either to vanquish, or die like a Man of Courage: And so in a Council of War, it was agreed to attack the Earl of Feversham on the very first Night of his Encampment. On Sunday the 5th of July, the Countrey People had given the Duke Intelligence, that the King's Forces were very remiss, the Troopers in Bed, and the Foot revelling in their Camp; so that the Duke thought and said, They shou'd have no more to do, than to lock up the Stable Doors, and seize the Troopers in their Beds. The Duke began his March about Eleven at Night, with all imaginable Silence, and with a particular Guide who was to lead them the most private Way, and about One they fell in with the Lord Dunbarton's Regiment, which allarm'd the whole Army. There was a Ditch between them, and the Guide had promis'd to conduct them over over an eaſy fordable Place; but Monmouth's Men ſeeing the Enemy juſt before them, ran furiouſly on, and loſt their Guide; ſo that while they endeavour'd to recover over that Place, the King's Forces got on their Legs, and put themſelves in Order; and ſo began as fierce a Battel as perhaps was ever fought in England for ſo ſhort a time. The Fight began with vaſt Shouts and Firings on Monmouth's Side, and continu'd obſtinate and dubious for a while: For tho' Colonel Oglethorp by his Activity had quickly broke the Rebel's Horſe, commanded by the Lord Grey, who made but a faint Reſiſtance with his undiſciplin'd Horſe; yet the Infantry fought with extraordinary Reſolution, being headed by the Duke of Monmouth, who, during the whole Action, maintain'd his former Reputation of Bravery and Gallantry; but by the plain Defects of the Horſe, he was at laſt compell'd to yield to the King's Forces, who got a compleat Victory. The Account given by Authority commends the Actions of the Commanders; particularly, that the Earl of Feverſham gave his neceſſary Orders with great Readineſs and Conduct; and that the Lord Churchill, who commanded next under him, perform'd his Part with all the Courage and Gallantry imaginable; beſides what was done by the Biſhop of Winchester, who perform'd ſingular Service in the managing of the great Guns.

Beſides this Account, it will be worth the Reader's Knowledge to have that of the foremention'd Manuſcript of Mr. Ferguſon's, who fully expoſes the Faults and Neglects of his Party, in this following Manner. But I need only relate the Behaviour of our Horſe at Sedgmore, as being more than enough to leave a perpetual Character of Reproach upon them, as it brought a total Ruin upon our whole Army. For the Officers that knew how to conduct Troops, being abſent on Services enjoin'd them by the Duke, the greateſt Part of thoſe upon whom the Command fell that fatal Morning, perform'd nothing of the Duty that ought to have been expected from them. The Experience we had before of my Lord Grey, was enough to have diſcourag'd the Duke from putting him at the Head of all the Troops; and it made Colonel Matthews adviſe him to divide his Cavalry, that ſo the Charge and Conduct of one Part might be devolv'd upon ſome Perſon of Courage, anſwerable to the Criticalneſs of the Seaſon, and Importance of the Action. But the Duke, by a ſtrange Fatality, declin'd following this Advice; ſaying, That he wou'd not affront my Lord, and that what he had given him in Charge was eaſy to be effected. So that Grey having all the Horſe committed to him, the firſt thing he did, after we were drawn up, and in view of the Enemy's Fires, was his diſmiſſing the Guide, who was to have directed him in the Ground where we were to march; and to have ſhewn him where, with no Inconveniency, we might have fallen upon the Enemy's Infantry. By which means ſome of our Troops, by reaſon of the Darkneſs of the Morning, and their Ignorance of the Ground, came to be imbogg'd in a Moraſs, which occaſion'd Delay as well as Confuſion. Nor was this the worſt, for the two Troops that were commanded to advance firſt, and to fall into the Enemy's Lines, found themſelves, after they had receiv'd their Fire, and thought there remain'd no more but boldly to attack them, fronted and hinder'd both by a Ditch and another Moraſs, that caus'd them to retreat diſorder'd and diſpers'd: Which wou'd have been eaſily avoided by the Help of a Guide, the Ditch and Moraſs being of no conſiderable Extent, and ſcarce covering any more of their Camp, than where it was our Misfortune to attempt an Impreſſion. Now beſides theſe two Troops, whoſe Officers, tho' they had no great Skill, yet had Courage enough to have done ſomething honourably, had they not, for want of a Guide, met with the foreſaid Obſtruction, there was no one of all the reſt of our Troops that ever advanc'd to Charge, or approach'd ſo near to the Enemy, as to give or receive a Wound. Mr. Hucker, one of our Captains, came no ſooner within within view of their Camp, than that he treacherouſly and villainouſly fired a Piſtol to give them notice of our Approach, and then forſook his Charge, and rode off with all the Speed he could, to take the Benefit of a Proclamation emitted by the King, offering Pardon to all ſuch as ſhou'd abandon us, and return home within ſuch a time. And this I have been told he pleaded at his Tryal, in order to ſave his Life; but was anſwer'd by Jeffreys, That he above all other Men deſerv'd to be hang'd, and that for his Treachery to Monmouth, as well as his Treaſon againſt the King. 1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

And tho', proceeds he, no other of our Officers acted ſo villainouſly, and with that Baſeneſs forſook the Field; yet they were uſeleſs and unſerviceable in it, as never once attempting to charge, nor ſo much as keeping their Men in a Body and Figure, to make a Shew. And I dare affirm, That if our Horſe had never fired a Piſtol, but only ſtood in a Poſture to have given Jealouſy and Apprehenſion to the Enemy, our Foot alone wou'd have carry'd the Day, and been triumphant. But our Horſe ſtanding ſcatter'd and diſunited, and flying upon every Approach of a Squadron of theirs commanded by Oglethorp, gave that Body of their Cavalry an Advantage, after they had hover'd up and down in the Field, without thinking it neceſſary to attack thoſe whom their own Fears had diſpers'd, to fall in at laſt in the Rear of our Batallions, and to wreſt that Victory out of their Hands which they were graſping at, and ſtood almoſt poſſeſs'd of. Nor was that Party of their Horſe above two hundred, or three at moſt, whereas we had more than enough, had they had any Courage, and been commanded by a gallant Man, to have attack'd them with Eaſe both in Front and Flank.

Theſe things I can declare with more Particularity and Certainty, becauſe I was a doleful Spectator and Obſerver of them: For, having contrary to my Cuſtom left attending upon the Duke, who advanc'd with the Foot, I betook my ſelf to the Horſe, becauſe the firſt and moſt conſiderable of that Morning's Action was expected from them, which was to break in and diſorder the Enemy's Camp, againſt the Time that our Batallions ſhould come up. I endeavour'd whatſoever I was capable of performing, or that lay within my Circle as a private Man; for I not only ſtruck at ſeveral Troopers, who had forſaken their Station, but upbraided divers of the Captains for being wanting in their Duty: But I ſpake with great Warmth to my Lord Grey, and conjur'd him to charge, and not to ſuffer the Victory, which our Foot had in a manner taken hold of, to be raviſh'd from us. But inſtead of hearkening and complying with any thing I ſaid, he not only, as an unworthy Man and a cowardly Poltrone, deſerted that Part of the Field and forſook his Command, but rode with the utmoſt Speed to the Duke, telling him, That all was loſt, and that it was more than Time to ſhift for himſelf. Whereby, as an Addition to all the Miſchief he had been the Occaſion of before, he drew the eaſy and unfortunate Gentleman to leave the Batallions, while they were couragiouſly diſputing on which Side the Victory ſhou'd fall. And this fell moſt unhappily out, while a certain Perſon was endeavouring to find out the Duke, to have begg'd of him to come and charge at the Head of his own Troops, which, tho' ſtanding ſcatter'd, had not yet abandon'd the Field. However, this I dare affirm, that if the Duke had been Maſter but of two hundred Horſe, well mounted, completely arm'd, perſonally valiant, and commanded by brave experienc'd Officers, they wou'd not only have ſignify'd more than all he had that Day in the Field, which amounted to near a thouſand, but he cou'd not have fail'd of being victorious. This is acknowledg'd by our Enemies, who have often confeſs'd that they were ready to fly through the Impreſſions made upon them by our Foot, and muſt unavoidably have been beaten, had our Horſe behav'd themſelves in any Meaſure as they ought, and not have tamely look'd on, till their Cavalry retriev'd the Day by falling into the Rear of our Batallions. Nor was the Fault in the private Men, who had Courage to have follow'd their Leaders; but it was in thoſe that commanded them, and particularly in my Lord Grey, in whom if Cowardice may be call'd Treachery, we may ſafely charge him with betraying of our Cauſe by his Behaviour at that Time. And then he concludes his Account of the Battel in theſe Words; 'If any of our Officers ſhall think themſelves reflected upon, I hope they will be as favourable to me, who have but truly and juſtly repreſented them, as they were that Morning to their Enemies, and that I ſhall receive no more Hurt from them upon the Account of this Narrative, than their Adverſaries did in the Engagement upon Sedgmore.' But to proceed.

On Monday Morning, July the 6th, the Duke of Monmouth's Army was intirely routed, three hundred kill'd on the Spot, a thouſand in the Purſuit, and as many taken Priſoners: Thoſe of Note were Colonel Holms and Major Perrot, both dangerouſly wounded; Captain Madder, the Conſtable of Crookborn, and one Williams, a Menial Servant of the Duke's, having two hundred Guineas of his Maſter's about him: The Coat alſo the Duke uſually wore was found amongſt the Booty, which occaſion'd a Report that he was kill'd; but that ſoon appear'd otherwiſe. As to the Duke himſelf, he had great Difficulty to preſerve fifty Horſe to ſecure his Retreat, and they were ſoon diſpers'd. He was adviſ'd by a particular Friend to make down to Uphill, a ſmall Creek in the Severn Sea, from whence he might get into Wales long before any News cou'd come of his Defeat, and meet with Friends that might eaſily conceal him: But the Duke was for poſting to Limington in Hampſhire, there to take ſhipping, flattering himſelf that all the Town were his Friends, becauſe Colonel Dore the preſent Mayor was ſo, who had been lately ſecured. The Lord Feverſham ſent out ſeveral Parties in queſt of him; and on Tueſday Morning, the Lord Grey was taken in the Diſguiſe of a Shepherd at Holtbridge in Dorſetſhire, by the Lord Lumley's Men; and putting off his Diſguiſe, he profeſs'd, That ſince his landing in England, he never had one good Night's Reſt, or eat one Meal in quiet; being perpetually agitated with the Cares that attend unfortunate Ambition. As to the Duke, the Immenſeneſs of the Reward rais'd the whole Countrey on the Search, ſo that the Ways and Roads were fill'd with their Numbers. The Lord Grey being taken, the ſame Men were inform'd by the Cottagers, That two Men went over a Hedge into an Encloſure overgrown with Fern; and ſo Guards were ſet on the Avenues, and about five in the Morning next Day, the German Count was taken, who confeſs'd that he parted with the Duke of Monmouth about four Hours before. This caus'd a more diligent Search to be made; and at laſt one Perkin diſcover'd the unhappieſt of Men hid in a Ditch cover'd with Fern, in the greateſt Diſtraction, with ſome green Peaſe in his Pocket. 'Tis ſaid he offer'd to make Reſiſtance, but the Fellow crying out for Help, and ſome Soldiers running in to his Aſſiſtance, the Duke was taken and ſecured by the Lord Lumley, who, under a ſtrong Guard, convey'd him, the Lord Grey, and the German Count, by eaſy Journies, to London. And thus ended the Rebellion, which from the Duke's firſt landing did not continue ſo long as the Space of a Month.

Monmouth's Flight.

He, with the Lord Grey, is taken.

5. It ſeems no difficult Matter to contract a Familiarity with Danger, when back'd with a whole Army to bear a Share in it, and when the eager Purſuit of Honour and Glory makes Men overlook the Horrors of approaching Death; but when Fate appears with the formal Solemnity of a Scaffold and an Axe, the greateſt Heros behold it like other Men, and with as great a Dejection of Mind. Thus the Duke of Monmouth, who no ſooner was taken, but imagining himſelf in the Hands of the Executioner, his his former Spirit ſunk into Puſillanimity, aud he meanly endeavour'd to ward off the impending Blow, by the following ſubmiſſive Letter to the King, much of the ſame Strain with thoſe written to his Father, formerly mention'd. 1685. Jac. I. Reſ. 26

His ſubmiſſive Letter to the King.

'Sir, your Majeſty may think it the Misfortune I now lie 'under, makes me make this Application to you; but I do aſſure your 'Majeſty, it is the Remorſe I now have in me, of the Wrong I have done 'you in ſeveral Things, and now in taking up Arms againſt you. For 'my taking up Arms, it was never in my Thoughts ſince the King dy'd: 'The Prince and Princeſs of Orange will be Witneſs for me of the Aſſu-'rance I gave them That I would never ſtir againſt you. But my Misfor-'tune was ſuch, as to meet with ſome horrid People, that made me believe 'Things of your Majeſty, and gave me ſo many falſe Arguments, that I 'was fully led away to believe, That it was a Shame, and a Sin before 'God, not to do it. But, Sir, I will not trouble your Majeſty at preſent 'with many Things I cou'd ſay for my ſelf, that I am ſure wou'd move 'your Compaſſion; the chief End of this Letter being only to beg of you, 'That I may have that Happineſs as to ſpeak to your Majeſty; for I have 'that to ſay to you, Sir, that I hope may give you a long and happy 'Reign. I am ſure, Sir, when you hear me, you will be convinc'd of the 'Zeal I have of your Preſervation, and how heartily I repent of what I have 'done. I can ſay no more to your Majeſty now, being this Letter muſt 'be ſeen by thoſe that keep me. Therefore, Sir, I ſhall make an End, 'in begging of your Majeſty to believe ſo well of me, that I would rather 'die a thouſand Deaths, than excuſe any thing I have done, if I did not 'really think my ſelf the moſt in the wrong that ever a Man was; and had 'not from the bottom of my Heart an Abhorrence for thoſe that put me 'upon it, and for the Action it ſelf. I hope, Sir, God Almighty will ſtrike 'your Heart with Mercy and Compaſſion for me, as he has done mine 'with the Abhorrence of what I have done; Wherefore, Sir, I hope I may 'live to ſhew you how zealous I ſhall ever be for your Service; and cou'd I 'ſay but ONE WORD in this Letter, you wou'd be conviuc'd of it; but it is 'of that CONSEQUENCE, that I dare not do it. Therefore, Sir, I do beg 'of you once more to let me ſpeak to you; for then you will be convinc'd 'how much I ſhall ever be, Your Majeſty's moſt Humble and Dutiful, 'MONMOUTH.

It ſeems this Letter had been little regarded, if at the ſame Time the Duke had not writ another, in very moving Terms to the Queen Dowager; who retaining her former Affection for him, and pitying his Misfortunes, prevail'd upon the King that he ſhou'd permit the Duke to ſpeak to him. The Duke being brought to the King's Preſence, immediately fell at his Feet, and having anſwer'd the ſeveral Queſtions the King ask'd him, and confeſs'd He deſerv'd to dye, he conjured him, with a Flood of Tears, not to uſe him with the Severity of Juſtice, and to grant him a Life, which he wou'd be ever ready to ſacrifice for his Service. He mention'd to him the Example of ſeveral great Princes, who had yielded to the Impreſſions of Clemency, on the like Occaſions, and who had never afterwards repented of thoſe Acts of Generoſity and Mercy; concluding, in a moſt pathetical Manner, Remember, Sir, I am your Brother's Son, and if you take my Life, it is your own Blood that you will ſhed. The King, after ſome Queſtions ask'd him, caus'd him to ſign a Declaration, 'That his Father 'told him, He was never marry'd to his Mother,' and then ſaid, He was ſorry indeed for his Misfortune, but his Crime was of too great a Conſequence to be left unpuniſh'd, and he muſt of Neceſſity ſuffer for it. The Queen is ſaid to have inſulted him in a very arrogant and unmerciful manner. So that when the Duke ſaw that no Favour was deſign'd him by this Interview, he roſe from his Majeſty's Feet with a new Air of Bravery, and was carry'd back to the Tower, in Order to his Execution.

He prepares for Death.

His following Behaviour is chiefly taken from a Manuſcript written by Dr. Lloyd Biſhop of St. Aſaph, ſince of Worceſter, who ſays That on the 14th of July the Biſhop of Ely was appointed by his Majeſty to attend the Duke of Monmouth, and to prepare him to dye the next Day. The Duke wrote [again] to his Majeſty repreſenting how uſeful he might and wou'd be, if his Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to grant him his Life: But if that might not be, he begg'd for a longer Time, and to have another Divine to aſſiſt him, Dr. Teniſon, or whom elſe his Majeſty ſhou'd appoint. The King ſent him the Biſhop of Bath and Wells to attend, and tell him he muſt dye the next Morning. The two Biſhops ſate up in his Chamber all Night, and watch'd while he ſlept. In the Morning, by his Majeſty's Order, the Lords Privy Seal and Dartmouth brought him alſo Dr. Teniſon and Dr. Hooper. All theſe were with him till the laſt Hour of his Life.

His Diſcourſe with ſome Divines.

They got him to own the King's Title to the Crown, and to declare in Writing, 'That the laſt King told him he was never marry'd to his Mo-'ther,' and by Word of Mouth to acknowledge 'his Invaſion was Sin,' but cou'd never get him to confeſs it a Rebellion. They got him likewiſe to own 'That He and the Lady Herriot Wentworth had liv'd in all Points like Man and Wife,' but they cou'd not make him confeſs it was Adultery. He acknowledg'd 'That He and his Dutcheſs were marry'd by 'the Law of the Land, and therefore his Children might inherit, if the 'King pleas'd; but he did not conſider what he did when he marry'd her.' He confeſs'd That he had liv'd many Years in all ſorts of Debauchery, but ſaid he had repented of it, and doubted not but that God had forgiven him. He ſaid, That ſince that Time, he had an Affection for the Lady Herriot, and pray'd, That if it were pleaſing to God, it might continue; otherwiſe, that it might ceaſe; and God heard his Prayer: The Affection did continue, therefore he doubted not but it was pleaſing to God; and that this was a Marriage, their Choice of one another being guided not by Luſt, but by Judgment upon due Conſideration. They endeavour'd to ſhew him the Falſhood and Miſchievouſneſs of this Enthuſiaſtical Principle, the Bane of ſo many Souls in the late Times of Confuſion. But he told them, That it was his Opinion, and he was fully ſatisfy'd in it. After all, he deſir'd them to give him the Sacrament the next Morning; but they told him They cou'd not do it, while he perſiſted in that Error and Sin. His Anſwer was, He was ſorry for it. And likewiſe the next Morning; he told them, He had pray'd, That if he was in an Error in the Matter, God wou'd convince him of it; but God had not convinc'd him, and therefore he believ'd it was no Error.

He is brought to the Scaffold.

About Ten in the Morning, July 15th he was led out of the Tower, attended by a ſtrong Guard, who were ready to have ſhot him dead, if any Reſcue had been attempted; and to prevent which, all the chief Avenues to Tower-Hill were ſecured by Soldiers that Morning. Notwithſtanding which, innumerable Multitudes of People were gather'd together to behold the melancholy Sight. Having mounted the Scaffold, and view'd the Executioner, he began with declaring That he dy'd a Proteſtant of the Church of England. The Divines attending told him, That he cou'd not be ſo, if he did not own the Doctrine of the Church of England in that Point of Non-Reſiſtance; and if he perſiſted in his former Enthuſiaſtick Perſuaſion; which they thought neceſſary in this extraordinary Juncture. He ſaid, He cou'd not help it, yet he approv'd the Doctrine of the Church in all other Things. He then ſpoke to the People, in Vindication of the Lady Herriot Wentworth, declaring, She was a Woman of great Honour and Virtue, a Religious Godly Lady. Upon which they told him of his living in Adultery with with her. He ſaid No; for theſe two Years laſt paſt he had not liv'd in any Sin that he knew of; and that he had never wrong'd any Perſon; and that he was ſure when he dy'd to go to God, and therefore he did not fear Death, which, he ſaid, they might ſee in his Face. Then they pray'd for him, and he kneel'd down, and join'd with them; and in concluſion they had a ſhort Prayer for the King; at which he paus'd, but at laſt ſaid Amen. Riſing up, he ſpoke to the Head's-man, to ſee he did his Buſineſs well; and not to uſe him as he did the Lord Ruſſel, to give him two or three Strokes; for if he did he ſhou'd not be able to lye ſtill without turning. Then he gave the Executioner ſix Guineas, aud four to one Marſhall, a Servant of Sir Thomas Armſtrong's, that attended him with the King's leave; deſiring Marſhall to give them to the Executioner, if he did his Work well, and not otherwiſe. He had given to this Marſhall over Night his Ring and Watch, and now he gave him his Caſe of Pick-Teeth, and all for the Lady Herriot; in which were afterwards found ſome Scripture Expreſſions in the Nature of Charms or Amulets. Then undreſſing, and preparing himſelf for the Block, the Divines in the mean time us'd theſe and the like Ejaculations, God accept your Repentance! God accept your Imperfect Repentance! God accept your General Repentance! Having laid himſelf down a ſecond Time, and the Sign given, the Executioner gave a light Stroke, at which he look'd him in the Face; and then he laid him down again, when the Executioner gave him two Strokes more, and then threw down his Axe, crying he cou'd not finiſh his Work! till being threatned by the Sheriff, and others there preſent, he took up the Axe again, and at two Strokes more cut off his Head. 1685. Jac. 1. Reſ. 26

His Execution.

Thus dy'd the fam'd and admir'd Duke of Monmouth, in a little above the thirty ſixth Year of his Age. We have more than once touch'd upon the Character of this extraordinary Man, who had met with the brighteſt Sun-ſhine, as well as the darkeſt Clouds of Fortune; and have taken ſome Notice of the Bravery, Generoſity and Affability of his Nature, as well as the Beauty and Gracefulneſs of his Perſon. Therefore now we ſhall only remember that theſe made him ſo much the Idol of the People, and caus'd ſuch ſtrong Impreſſions, or rather Inchantments, on their Minds and Affections, that many Thouſands of them cou'd hardly ever be made to believe he was really dead; but continu'd long in Hopes of ſeeing him again in a triumphant Manner. A ſtrange Variety of wild and extravagant Stories were told and believ'd upon this Occaſion. But that which went the fartheſt, and appear'd moſt plauſible to the Vulgar, was a ſtrong Report ſpread abroad, That there were five ſelect Perſons, ſo like the Duke of Monmouth, and habited ſo alike; that they cou'd very hardly be diſtinguiſh'd, from one another; and that they were all bound under a moſt ſolemn Oath, in caſe any of them ſhou'd be taken and put to Death, not to diſown his being the real Duke of Monmouth. One of theſe Five had the Fortune to be taken, upon the general Defeat, and put to Death upon Tower-Hill; ſo that the Government was put upon by a Perſonated Duke. Accordingly it was given out both in Print and Writing, 'That the Duke of Monmouth 'is not really dead, but only withdrawn, till the Harveſt be over; and 'then his Friends ſhall ſee him again in a much better Condition than ever 'they did yet.

His Character and Popularity.

We ſhall conclude this Period with remembering that after the Victory at Sedgmore, two fine Medals were ſtruck upon the Occaſion of theſe Rebellions in both the Kingdoms: The firſt was the King in Buſt, crown'd with Laurel, plac'd upon a large Baſis or Altar; on the Front of which are the Arms of England, &c. with the Garter, and over it the Crown, with theſe Words, Exurge Aras & Sceptra Tuemur. Upon the Altar lye four Scepters, bearing on their Tops the Roſe, Lilly, Thiſtle and Harp; upon each each ſide is repreſented the Ocean, with Neptune holding the Trident, drawn in a Chariot by Maritime Horſes, with two Veſſels under Sail on the other ſide. The Inſcription is JACOBUS II. D. G. MAG. BRI. ET. HIB. REX. MDCLXXXV. The Reverſe is Juſtice with a Sword and Balance, upon whoſe Head the Sun darts his Beams, and the Lightning iſſues out of a dark Cloud: She holds in one Scale Mural Crowns, which preponderate the other; in which there is a Scimitar, a Proteſtant Flail (as then call'd) with a Serpent, while ſhe tramples on another Serpent near two headleſs Bodies; their Heads lying on two ſquare Blocks, on each ſide of Juſtice: On that of the Right-hand is JACOBUS DE MONMOUT. On the Left-hand ARCHIBALD D. ARGYL. Upon one ſide of the Carcaſſes are repreſented Soldiers routed and flying away; on the other, a Caſtle, with two Heads fix'd on Spikes over the Gate; and on the Pedeſtal, theſe Words, Ambitio, Maleſuada, Ruit. The ſecond Medal is the Effigie and Buſt of the Duke of Monmouth himſelf, without any Inſcription at all. The Reverſe repreſents a Young-man precipitating from a ſteep Rock into the midſt of the Sea, upon which are plac'd three Crowns amongſt Brambles and Shrubs, the Words Superi Riſere, July 6th, 1685.

Proceedings againſt the Rebels, by Jeffreys.

I. 1. THE King having gain'd his Point againſt all Rebels and Rivals, and quite driven the Enemy out of the Field, had now nothing to do but to purſue and take Revenge. He had indeed a noble Opportunity of diſplaying his Mercy and Benignity, but Fear and Terror were thought and judg'd more conducing to his preſent Security, and his future Deſigns. Accordingly the Lord Chief Juſtice Jeffreys, with four other Judges his Aſſiſtants, and a conſiderable Body of Troops commanded by Colonel Kirk, was ſent into the Weſt of England, with a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, to try the poor Wretches that had been in the Rebellion. They began at Wincheſter, with Mrs. Alicia Liſle, a Gentlewoman of extream old Age, who was try'd for harbouring and concealing Mr. Hicks, a Nonconformiſt Preacher, and Mr. Richard Nelthorp, tho' the latter was a Stranger, and the former in no Proclamation. No doubt but they remember'd the Crimes of her Husband John Liſle, who had been one of the Judges of King Charles the Firſt, Preſident of the High-Court of Juſtice that condemn'd the Duke of Hamilton, Earl of Holland, and Lord Capel, and alſo on the Trials of Sir Henry Slingesby, Dr. Hewet, &c. For tho' the Jury brought her Not Guilty three ſeveral Times, yet Judge Jeffreys Threats ſo far prevail'd, that at laſt ſhe was found Guilty of High-Treaſon, and beheaded; a hard Judgment, that was afterwards revers'd by the Convention call'd by the Prince of Orange.

Bloody Aſſizes. Orleans. Boyer. Tryals. Hawles. &c.

At Wincheſter,

And at other Places.

The Judges went next to Dorcheſter, where Judge Jeffreys finding thirty Perſons return'd by the Grand-Inqueſt, as Aſſiſtants to the late Duke of Monmouth he contriv'd this Stratagem of taking the ſhorteſt Way with them:

them: When they came upon their Trials he told them, that whoſoever pleaded Not Guilty, and was found ſo, ſhou'd have but little Time to live, but if any expected Favour, they muſt plead Guilty. But the Priſoners wou'd not truſt him; and of thirty pleading Not Guilty, twenty nine were found Guilty, and ſoon after executed; as were fourſcore more, in another Place, out of two hundred, who were deluded to plead Guilty to their Indictments, by a Promiſe of Pardon. The ſame was done at Exeter to near as many, who were alike deluded; as alſo at Taunton and Wells, where the Lord Jeffreys finiſh'd his Bloody Aſſize: In all which Places he condemn'd above five hundred Perſons, whereof two hundred and thirty were executed, and had their Quarters ſet up in the principal Places and Roads of thoſe Countries, to the Terror of Paſſengers, and the great Annoyance of thoſe Parts. After this bloody Expedition, it is ſaid that the Chief Juſtice was heard to boaſt, That he had hang'd more Men, than all the Judges of England, ſince William the Conqueror. And yet the Cruelty of the Judge often yielded to the Avarice of the Man, who was not more haſty to hang up thoſe who had no Money, than he was forward to procure Pardons for thoſe who cou'd pay well for them; and he had the Conſcience to take above Fourteen Thouſand Pounds from one Mr. Prideaux, to ſave his Life. And many of thoſe poor Wretches who cou'd not purchaſe Pardons at his Lordſhip's Rate, were ſold for Slaves into the American Plantations. Others met with different Puniſhments, as Pillories, cruel Scourgings, and the like Severities. 1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

Nor was Judge Jeffreys the only ſevere Perſon upon this Occaſion; but Colonel Kirk, his Warlike Aſſiſtant, a bold and looſe Soldier of Fortune, is charg'd with acting a principal Part in theſe unhappy Tragedies; of which ſome Particulars are almoſt incredible: Particularly, that after Monmouth's Defeat, he caus'd nineteen wounded Men to be hang'd at Taunton, not only without permitting their Relations to ſpeak with them, but with Pipes playing, Drums beating, and all other Military Pomp and Exultation. And that at another Town he invited his Officers to Dinner, near the Place where ſome of the condemn'd Rebels were to be executed, and order'd Ten of them to be turn'd off with a Health to the King, Ten in a Health to the Queen, and Ten more in a Health to the Lord Jeffreys. And he is farther charg'd with one Action that cou'd proceed only from a moſt brutal Inclination to Luſt and Blood, and that was, the drawing in a poor Maiden to proſtitute herſelf to him, with the Promiſe of ſaving her Brother's Life, and nevertheleſs cauſing him to be hang'd on the Sign-Poſt of the ſame Houſe, and out of the Window preſenting the credulous abus'd Girl with that barbarous Spectacle of his Treachery and Cruelty; which is ſaid to have ſo deeply affected her, as to make her irrecoverably diſtracted. Kirk's Cruelties.

On the contrary ſide, the Behaviour of moſt of the Sufferers was ſtrange and ſurprizing, as repreſented by their own Friends; ſuch as was more like to provoke the Severity, than engage the Mercy of the Judges. Their Carriages at their Trials, and their Words in their dying Speeches, ſtill preſerv'd by their Friends, were ſometimes not a little ſhocking to the King's Party. They tell us, that Colonel Kirk hang'd one at Taunton on the White-Hart Sign-Poſt three Times, to try if he wou'd own he had done amiſs; but he affirm'd, That if it was to do again, he wou'd engage in the ſame Cauſe. They further tell us of one Edward Jervaiſe, a Hatter of Milbourn-Port, who was order'd to be hang'd by Kirk; but being a brave ſtout Man, ſome of his Officers interceded for his Life, which Kirk was willing to grant, provided he wou'd acknowledge his Rebellion; which he refus'd to do: At length they offer'd to releaſe him, if he wou'd ſay God bleſs King James; which he alſo refus'd, and ſo ſuffer'd. According to this Opinion, Captain Anſley, when he came to die at Taunton, he declared in his The Behaviour of the Sufferers.

his laſt Speech, That if he had a thouſand Lives, they ſhou'd all have been engag'd in the ſame Cauſe. The Reſurrection of their Cauſe was often hinted at in their Speeches, which by ſome weak Perſons have been ſince apply'd and attributed to a Prophetick Spirit. But what was thought moſt rational, and free from Enthuſiaſm, was the Speech of the foremention'd Mr. Hicks, one of the moſt conſiderable of the Nonconformiſt Preachers, out of which we may properly take the following Paragraph: 'I did 'approve of the ancient and preſent Form of Civil Government, Engliſh 'Monarchy I am fully ſatisfy'd with, and do alſo declare, That it is not 'warrantable for any Subject to take up Arms againſt, and reſiſt their lawful Sovereigns and rightful Princes: And therefore had I not been convinc'd by ſeveral Things I have read and heard, to believe that the late 'Duke of Monmouth was the legitimate Son of his Father Charles the Second, I had never gone into his Army, judging that without this, I cou'd 'not be freed from the Guilt of Rebellion, which I always reſolv'd to keep 'my ſelf clear from. And tho' his Father deny'd he was marry'd to his 'Mother, I thought it might be anſwer'd with this; That Kings and Princes 'for State Reaſons, often cannot be fathom'd by their Subjects, affirming 'and denying Things which otherwiſe they wou'd not do, and make even 'their natural Affections to truckle and ſtoop thereto. I exhort all to abhor all treaſonable Plots, and Pretences of all Rebellion, with the high'eſt Deteſtation, and to take the plain Text of ſacred Scripture to walk by, 'in honouring and obeying, and living in Subjection to rightful Kings, and 'not readily to receive, or ſuddenly to be impreſs'd with evil Reports and 'Defamations of them, alſo not raſhly to be Propagators of the ſame.

However theſe Severities were encourag'd and carry'd on, Father Orleans, who receiv'd many Particulars from King James's Mouth, tells us, That his Majeſty was inform'd of thoſe Diſorders too late, but as ſoon as it came to his Ears, he expreſs'd his Diſpleaſure. Yet he intimates, that the Services perform'd by thoſe that were accus'd, prevail'd with him to ſpare them. But before the Services were finiſh'd, much leſs the Accuſation cou'd arrive, the King met with an extraordinary Opportunity of rewarding the Lord Chief Juſtice Jeffreys, by the Death of the Lord-Keeper North, in the Beginning of September. Upon which Vacancy his Majeſty writ him a Letter in his Circuit, in which he order'd him 'To diſpatch the Buſineſs before 'him, and come and take the Seals, for he was forc'd, in the mean time, 'to be Chancellor Himſelf.' Accordingly, upon his Return in all haſte, he was made Lord Chancellor on the 28th of September, 'in conſideration, 'as it was declared by Authority, of the many eminent and faithful Ser'vices he had render'd the Crown, as well in the late King's Time as ſince 'his Majeſty's Acceſſion to the Throne.' And upon his Advancement, his Majeſty was pleas'd to make Choice of Sir Edward Herbert, Chief Juſtice of Cheſter, to be Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench; and of Sir Edward Luitwich, one of his Majeſty's Serjeant's at Law, to ſucceed him in the Place of Chief Juſtice of Cheſter. As to the Names of thoſe that ſuffer'd in the Weſt, the Principal, beſides the Lady Liſle and Mr Hicks, were the two Brothers, Mr. Benjamin Hewlin, and Mr. William Hewling; Mr. William Jenkins, Colonel Holms, Mr. Chriſtopher Battiſcomb, Dr. Temple, Colonel Matthews, Captain Madder, Captain Anſley, Mr. Matthew Bragg, Mr. Sampſon Lark, Mr. John Hacker, &c.

Jeffreys preferr'd to be Lord Chancellor.

2. Beſides theſe great Numbers in the Weſt, there were ſome others try'd and condemn'd in the City of London; both upon the Account of this laſt Rebellion, and of the famous Plot in 1683, which was now thought fit to be examin'd and canvaſs'd a ſecond Time. In purſuance of which, the noted Alderman Corniſh, formerly mention'd, was ſingled out, to be made

The Proceedings againſt Alderman Corniſh.

made a Sacrifice to former Reſentments, in which we ought to be a little particular. This Gentleman having been Sheriff of London with Bethel, had ſhewn himſelf very active in the Caſe of the Popiſh Plot, and with his Under-Sheriff Goodenough, was look'd upon as too buſie in packing of Ignoramus Juries; and had been no leſs active in enquiring into the Myſtery of Fitz-Harris's Treaſon: And farther, having been particularly acquainted with the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, &c. and ſhew'd himſelf a Favourer of their Cauſe, or their Perſons, it was now thought a proper Seaſon to take Revenge. Accordingly, on Tueſday the 13th of October, while he was freely and fearleſly following his Profeſſion, he was ſuddenly clap'd up cloſe Priſoner in Newgate, without the Uſe of Pen, Ink, or Paper, till Saturday Noon, when he had Notice of an Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt him, and his Tryal to be on Munday following. The next Day Mr. Corniſh's Children petition'd the King for a longer Time to prepare himſelf, which was referr'd to the Judges, who deny'd the Favour, tho' he knew not whether his Tryal was for Treaſon againſt this or the late King, and his moſt material Witneſs was above a hundred and forty Miles off; and the Attorney General particularly told him, That he had not ſo well deſerv'd of the Government, as to have his Tryal delay'd; and ſo he was compell'd immediately to plead to the Indictment. Tho' his Name had hardly been mention'd in the late Plot, yet now he was charg'd with 'Conſpiring againſt King Charles the Second in the 'Year 1682; and that knowing the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, 'and Sir Thomas Armſtrong to be Rebels and Traytors, he had promis'd 'to be aſſiſting to them in their Treaſons. 1685. Jac. 1. Ref. 26

To prove which Charge, Colonel Ramſey, formerly mention'd, was the only Witneſs; who ſwore, 'That about the latter End of October, or Be- 'ginning of November aforeſaid, the Earl of Shaftsbury deſir'd him to go 'to Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where was a Meeting of the Duke of Mon- 'mouth, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Mr. Ferguſon, 'and Mr. Sheppard himſelf: He came late, and as they were juſt going 'away, he deliver'd his Meſſage, and they told him Mr. Trenchard had 'diſappointed them: He had not been there above a Quarter of an Hour, 'but Mr. Sheppard was call'd down, and brought up Mr. Corniſh, who 'preſently excus'd himſelf for not coming ſooner, alledging, That he cou'd 'not ſtay, for he was to meet about the City Charter; whereupon Mr. Fer- 'guſon open'd his Boſom, and pull'd out a Paper, which they told Mr. Cor- 'niſh had been read, and deſir'd to read it to him: Mr. Ferguſon read it, 'and Mr. Sheppard held the Candle while it was reading, and afterwards 'they ask'd Mr. Corniſh How he lik'd it? who ſaid, He lik'd it very well; 'He remember'd two Points in it very well; one was for Liberty of Con- 'ſcience, the other was, That all who wou'd aſſiſt in that Inſurrection, 'who had Church or King's Lands in the late War, ſhou'd have them 'reſtor'd to them. The Colonel did not hear all the Paper, but obſerv'd 'only theſe two Points; It was a Declaration on a Riſing, and when the 'Riſing was to have been, it was to have been diſpers'd abroad: There 'was a Riſing intended at that Time, and Mr. Corniſh ſaid, He lik'd the 'Declaration, and what poor Intereſt he had he wou'd join in it.' The Colonel being ask'd how he came not to mention this in the Lord Ruſſel's and other Tryals, he anſwer'd, 'That he had had great Dealings with Mr. 'Corniſh, and it was out of Compaſſion that he had not accus'd him be- 'fore.' And he further acknowledg'd, 'That notwithſtanding his long 'Acquaintance of fourteen Years, he never heard him ſpeak any Thing of 'thoſe Matters before or after that Time. Ramſey's Evidence.

Not to help out this Evidence, but to accumulate the Guilt, Mr. Richard Goodenough appear'd as a ſecond Witneſs, who having been outlaw'd in the And that of Goodenough highest Degree, was now pardon'd, and his Testimony made legal. He swore 'That there was a Design to rise in London, to divide the City into 'twenty Parts, and to raise five hundred Men out of each Part,' as has been formerly remember'd: 'But before that was agreed on, he being by 'chance at Mr. Cornish's House, said, The Law will not defend us, some 'other way was to be thought on; Mr. Cornish said, He wonder'd that 'the City was so unready, and the Country so ready: Mr. Goodenough 'reply'd, There is something thought of to be done here, but in the first 'Place, the Tower must be seiz'd, where the Magazine is; Mr. Cornish 'paus'd a little, and said, I will do what Good I can, or what I can, or 'to that purpose. About some Time after, he met him upon the Ex-'change, and ask'd him How Affairs went? which Mr. Goodenough un-'derstood to be relating to what they had discours'd about.

The Prisoner's Defence.

The Prisoner in his Defence, frequently insisted upon the Improbability of Ramsey's Deposition, which so nearly affected him; and particularly us'd these Words; 'He does declare here, he never said a Word to me, never 'spoke to me any Thing of it but there. My Lord, it is a very strange 'Thing, that there shou'd be such a Contrivance to ruin the King and 'Kingdom, and that I shou'd be one in the Business, this Villany, and not 'be consulted how to carry it on; it is very strange, they shou'd see me, 'and never say a Word of it afterwards to me. My Lord, I hope, and 'you Gentlemen of the Jury, that you will consider the Improbability of 'it; it is as improbable as any Thing in the World. I hope it doth ap-'pear to your Lordship and this Bench, That there is no Probabality in 'it. He owns we had a great deal of Freedom; he owns we were ac-'quainted for fourteen Years together, and that I shou'd be at such a wick-'ed villainous Meeting once, and see him so often afterwards, and never 'speak of it, and never say any Thing of it; the Great God of Heaven and 'Earth, before whom I stand, knows that I know nothing of all that he 'hath sworn against me. He must swear these Things to save his own 'Life; if he will take away my Life, he will take away many others, 'without Question, if he can save his own.' As to the Evidence of Good-enough, which less affected him, he brought Witnesses to prove, That he had oppos'd his being Under-Sheriff, and said he wou'd not Trust his Estate and Reputation in the Hands of such an Under-Sheriff, who was obnoxious to the Government, and had done ill Things; and they two not being reconcil'd, it must proceed all from Malice. His Witnesses spoke very advantagiously as to his Behaviour; and one of them, Mr. Lane by Name, insisted upon the Inconsistency of Ramsey's Evidence with what he had gi-ven at the Lord Russel's Tryal, where he had said, That he did not hear the Declaration read, for it was read before he came in. All this time the Court, and the Lord Chief Justice Jones at the Head, us'd Mr. Cornish very roughly, and made the worst Interpretation of his Words, and so pro-ceeded to sum up the Evidence against him; all which, as it is believ'd, wou'd not have cast him, if, besides his frequent insisting upon his never being at any Consult at Mr. Sheppard's House, he had not been so urgent to have Mr. Sheppard appear himself. This, after summing up the Evi-dence, was call'd a great Indulgence, which the Attorney General was the more ready to admit of, because He as well as the Prisoner had subpœna'd him. Mr. Sheppard deny'd that ever he held the Candle to the reading of a Declaration; or that Mr. Cornish was there at the reading of it; but declar'd that at one of those Meetings at his House, Mr. Cornish came to speak a few Words there with the Duke of Monmouth, or some other; which, tho' a very imperfect Proof, was look'd upon so contradictory to what Cornish had so often protested, that the Court declar'd it to be a clear-ing and a corroborating Evidence: So that the Prisoner having in Effect put

put his Fate upon a wrong Iſſue, the Court triumph'd, and the Jury found him guilty of High-Treaſon. 1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

It is not to be doubted but this Gentleman had great Hardſhip, and unworthy Uſage in his Impriſonment, Tryal and Condemnation, and that he ſuffer'd upon wretched Evidence: But at the ſame Time it is not to be forgotten what Encouragement he gave to ſuch ſort of Evidence in the Popiſh Plot, and how active he appear'd towards the ſhedding of the Blood of the Lord Stafford; in whoſe Caſe he was ſo zealous, that, being Sheriff at that time, he was unwilling to allow him the common Favour ſhewn to the Nobility of being Beheaded. He now met with a full Retaliation; perhaps more from Heaven than from Men; and he cou'd not ſo much as obtain the ſame Favour himſelf; but on the 23d of October he was hang'd and quarter'd in Cheapſide, the Heart of the City, and his Head fix'd upon Guild-Hall. At his Execution, he ſhew'd all the Marks of a pious Chriſtian prepar'd for Death, and did ſeveral times aſſert and proteſt his Innocency as to thoſe Crimes for which he ſtood condemn'd: And it is ſaid that King James himſelf not long after expreſs'd ſome Regret, as if he believ'd he had hard Meaſure; however, his Quarters were order'd to be taken down, and deliver'd to his Relations to be decently enterr'd, as they were in St. Laurence Church by Guild-Hall: And the Parliament in 1688 had ſo great a Senſe of his Hardſhips that they thought fit to reverſe the Attainder by a particular Act for that Purpoſe. And Execution.

3. Beſides Mr. Corniſh, there were ſeveral others condemn'd, either for the Plot or the Rebellion, ſome with and ſome without Tryal. Particularly William King was try'd for harbouring and concealing Joſeph Kelloway, and Henry Laurence, who had both taken part with the Duke of Monmouth in the Weſt. One John Fernly was then alſo try'd for harbouring and concealing James Burton, a Perſon outlaw'd for Treaſon; and likewiſe Elizabeth Gaunt, for ſuccouring the ſaid Burton with Money, and helping him to a Paſſage, in order to his Eſcape beyond the Seas. They were all three found guilty of High Treaſon, and executed as Traytors; and particularly Mrs. Gaunt was burnt at Tyburn. The Hardſhips againſt theſe were judg'd the greater, becauſe the very Perſons harbour'd and ſuccour'd became Witneſſes againſt them. They ſuffer'd about the ſame time with Mr. Corniſh; and ſhortly after Mr. Richard Nelthorp, for harbouring of whom the Lady Liſle had ſuffer'd, together with Mr. John Ayloff, were brought from Newgate to the King's-Bench Bar; where being ask'd, 'Why Execution ſhou'd not be awarded againſt them, in regard they ſtood attainted by Outlawry of High-Treaſon, for conſpiring the Death of King Charles the Second;' and having nothing to ſay, that cou'd avail them, the Court made a Rule, That they ſhou'd both be executed on the Friday following; and accordingly they were then hang'd, Mr. Nelthorp before Gray's-Inn in Holborn, and Mr. Ayloff before the Temple-Gate in Fleet-Street. The Execution of ſeveral others.

The King had before iſſu'd out a Proclamation againſt George Speak, Francis Charlton, John Wildman Eſquires, Colonel Danvers, and John Trenchard Eſquires, by which they were ſummon'd to appear on a certain Day, as being ſuſpected of fomenting and carrying on traiterous Deſigns againſt the King; but they all abſconded. However other ſuſpicious Perſons, as the Earl of Stamford, the Lord Brandon Gerrard, and the Lord Delamere, were taken up and committed to the Tower. In November, the Lord Brandon, by the Name of Charles Gerrard Eſq; was brought to his Tryal at the King's-Bench Bar, upon an Indictment of High Treaſon, 'For conſpiring to raiſe a Rebellion, and depoſe the late King of bleſſed Memory;' of which he was found guilty: And being then remanded to the Tower, The Lord Brandon and Mr. Hamden pardon'd.

1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

he was ſoon after brought again to the King's-Bench Bar, where Sentence of Death paſs'd upon him, as in Caſes of High-Treaſon: But he afterwards found Means to procure his Pardon. In like manner, ſoon after, John Hambden Eſq; formerly mention'd, was arraign'd at the Old-Baily upon an Indictment of High Treaſon, 'For Conſpiring to raiſe a Rebellion againſt 'the late King, &c.' Expecting no Favour, eſpecially as being a former Delinquent, he pleaded Guilty, and caſt himſelf upon the King's Mercy. He was condemn'd to dye, as uſual, with the Remembrance of the Offences of his Family; but either the King's Mercy, or his Friends Interceſſion was ſo great, that he obtain'd a Pardon.

Bateman's Sufferings.

The laſt that was condemn'd and ſuffer'd Death for the ſame Conſpiracy in the late Reign, was Mr. Charles Bateman a Chyrurgeon of conſiderable Repute and Practice in his Calling. This Man having been a ſort of a Favourite to the laſt Earl of Shaftsbury, and particular Aſſiſtant to Titus Oates after his ſevere Whipping, was mark'd out as a factious Perſon, and try'd for High-Treaſon, and charg'd with holding ſeveral Diſcourſes about ſeizing the Tower, the City, the Savoy, &c. His Caſe was extraordinary; for by reaſon of his cloſe Impriſonment, and other Accidents, he appear'd perfectly diſtracted in the Court; inſomuch that his Son, after an unknown Method, was allow'd and appointed to make his Defence for him. The Witneſſes againſt him were Keeling, Lee and Goodenough, of whom the firſt was general, and the other two more particular, eſpecially the laſt, who was a new Evidence in this Reign. In the End he was condemn'd as a Traytor, tho' in that ſtrange Condition; but his Friends ſay, he was much recover'd before his Execution. For a Concluſion of theſe tragical Aſſizes, about three Months after there came out a Proclamation of General Pardon; of which more in its proper Place.

The King's happy Condition.

II. 1. Towards the latter end of this Year King James's Affairs ſeem'd in the greateſt Height and Splendor, and to promiſe a firm and ſettled Felicity: The late dangerous Storms were happily appeas'd, his greateſt apparent Enemies deſtroy'd, the Parliament and the reſt of his Subjects were vying in their Loyalty, his Revenue ſettled to a high Degree, himſelf at Peace with his Neighbours, courted by them all, and holding the Balance of Europe in his Hand; ſo that if he had obſerv'd what he had promis'd in his Declaration, and firſt Speech to his Parliament, in all Appearance he might not only have reign'd happy and belov'd at home, but have effected what he told the Parliament in his ſecond Speech, viz. To carry the Kingdom's Reputation yet higher in the World, than ever it had been in the Time of his Anceſtors. Nor, humanly ſpeaking, could it have been otherwiſe, if he had ſtood firm to his firſt Maxim deliver'd in publick, That the Laws of England were ſufficient to make the King as great a Monarch as he cou'd wiſh; or had he rembember'd the repeated Inſtructions of his Father, or conſider'd the dying Advice of his Brother, formerly mention'd concerning the Danger of Introducing the Romiſh Religion. But deaf to all faithful and ſalutary Counſels, former or latter, and forgetful of ſolemn Promiſes, he became blind to his true Intereſt; and this ill adviſ'd Prince was perſuaded, that now his Enemies were thus humbled, and his Parliament in ſo good a Humour, he had an unqueſtionable Opportunity of exerting his Prerogative, and advancing the Glory of his own Religion.

The ſecond MEETING of the Parliament, with the King's Speech.

Under theſe Circumſtances, he a ſecond Time met his Parliament on the 9th Day of November, when both Houſes, and the City, being fill'd with Expectation, he deliver'd his Mind in this following Speech from the Throne: 'My Lords and Gentlemen; After the Storm that ſeem'd to be coming 'upon Us when We parted laſt, I am glad to meet you all again in ſo great 'Peace and Quietneſs; God Almighty be prais'd, by whoſe Bleſſing that

'Rebel-

'tion, I hope every body will be convinc'd, That the Militia, which have Reſ. 26
'hitherto been ſo much depended on, is not ſufficient for ſuch Occaſions;
'and That there is nothing but a good Force of well-diſciplin'd Troops in
'conſtant Pay that can defend Us, from ſuch as, either at Home or Abroad,
'are diſpos'd to diſturb Us. And in truth, My Concern for the Peace and 'Quiet of My Subjects, as well as for the Safety of the Government, made 'Me think it neceſſary to encreaſe the Number [of fifteen thouſand Men]
'to the Proportion I have done: That I ow'd as well to the Honour as the 'Security of the Nation, whoſe Reputation was ſo infinitely expos'd to all
'our Neighbours, by having lain open to the late wretched Attempt, that 'it is not to be repaired without keeping ſuch a Body of Men on foot, that 'none may ever have a Thought of finding Us again ſo miſerably unpro-'vided. It is for the Support of this great Charge, which is now more 'than double to what it was, that I ask your Aſſiſtance, in giving Me a 'Supply anſwerable to the Expences it brings along with it; and I cannot 'doubt, but that what I have begun, ſo much to the Honour and De'fence of the Government, will be continu'd by you with all Chearful-
'neſs and Readineſs, that is requiſite for a Work of ſo great Importance.

'Let no Man take Exception, that there are ſome Officers in the Army
'not Qualify'd, according to the late Teſts, for their Employments: The 'Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, are moſt of them known to Me; and ha'ving formerly ſerv'd Me on ſeveral Occaſions, and alway approv'd the 'Loyalty of their Principles by their Practices, I think them now fit to 'be employ'd under Me; and I will deal plainly with you, That after ha'ving had the Benefit of their Services in ſuch Time of Need and Danger,
'I will neither expoſe them to Diſgrace, nor My Self to the Want of 'them, if there ſhou'd be another Rebellion to make them neceſſary
'to Me.

'I am afraid ſome Men may be ſo wicked, to hope and expect, That a 'Difference may happen between you and Me upon this Occaſion: But 'when you conſider what Advantages have riſen to Us in a few Months,
'by the good Underſtanding We have hitherto had; what wonderful Ef'fects it hath already produc'd in the Change of the whole Scene of Affairs
'Abroad, ſo much more to the Honour of the Nation, and the Figure it 'ought to make in the World; and that nothing can hinder a farther Pro-
'greſs in this Way to all Our Satisfactions, but Fears and Jealouſies a'mongſt Our Selves: I will not apprehend that ſuch a Misfortune can be'fall Us, as a Diviſion, or but a Coldneſs between you and Us; nor that 'any Man can ſhake you, in your Steadineſs and Loyalty to Me, who, by 'God's Bleſſing, will ever make you Returns of Kindneſs and Protecti'on, with a Reſolution to venture even My Own Life in the Defence of 'the true Intereſt of this Kingdom.

A great Weight has always been reaſonably laid upon the Words deliver'd by a Britiſh Monarch from his Throne, being preſum'd to be the Reſult of mature Deliberation; ſo that it is no wonder that this Speech ſurpriz'd a People, who had often ventur'd ſo boldly for the Preſervation of their Laws and Liberties, and thought themſelves ſecure of them, both from the Conſtitution of the Government, and the ſolemn repeated Promiſes of their Prince. They now began to believe, that the Jealouſies in the late Reign, tho' factious in themſelves, were well grounded, and remotely to diſcover, that the Government of a Roman Catholick King was inconſiſtent with a Proteſtant Kingdom. Indeed the Houſe of Lords thought fit to debate, Whether they ſhou'd give the King Thanks for his Speech or not? Some of that Auguſt Aſſembly were for it, while others as warmly oppos'd it; but but the Marquiſs of Hallifax, a Man of a ſharp ſatyrical Wit, ſaid, by way of Irony, They had now more Reaſon than ever to give Thanks to his Majeſty, ſince he had dealt ſo plainly with them, and diſcover'd what he wou'd be at. What he meant for a Jeſt, was ſuddenly laid hold on by the Courtiers for Earneſt, ſo the Affirmative carry'd it, and an Addreſs of Thanks was preſented: To which his Majeſty return'd this Anſwer, That he was very well ſatisfy'd that their Lordſhips were well pleas'd with what he ſaid; and that he wou'd never offer any thing to their Houſe, that he ſhou'd not be convinc'd was for the Good and true Intereſt of the Kingdom: Nevertheleſs, the Biſhop of London couragiouſly mov'd, in the Name of himſelf and all his Brethren, that the Houſe wou'd particularly debate the King's Speech, and the 23d of this Month was accordingly appointed; which, as it was extraordinary and unuſual in the Houſe, ſo it was not leſs ſurprizing to the King and Court, who ſoon ſhew'd a Jealouſy of theſe Proceedings.

And how by the Commons.

2. In the Houſe of Commons the Speech occaſion'd a longer and warmer Debate, where it was preſently underſtood, to be the Declaring for a Standing Army, and by degrees to be commanded by Popiſh Officers. The Thought was ſhocking and formidable, and produc'd a total Silence for a conſiderable time after the Reading of the Speech. And therefore, tho' the King's Secretary, the Earl of Middleton mov'd, 'That the Houſe wou'd 'immediately return their Thanks to his Majeſty, for his moſt gracious 'Speech, and alſo proceed to the Conſideration of anſwering the Ends 'therein mention'd; they ſeem'd wholly at a Stand, till they were in a manner reliev'd by the Courage and Steadineſs of the Lord Caſtleton, who ventur'd to open the Way by his declar'd Diſlike; and ſo the Debate was adjourn'd, and left with a Committee of the whole Houſe, to be determin'd three Days after, on Thurſday the 12th of November.

A long Debate upon it.

On that Day the Earl of Middleton, a Member of the Commons and prepared, mov'd to have his Majeſty's Speech conſider'd by Paragraphs: The ſaid Lord, and the reſt of the Courtiers, repreſented, 'How little the 'Militia was to be depended upon; that France was formidable; that the 'Forces of Holland were greatly encreas'd; and therefore they ought to 'approve of his Majeſty's Increaſing his Forces in Proportion, and vote him a Supply to anſwer his preſent Occaſions.' Thoſe of the Countrey Party ſtood up in 'Vindication of the Militia, which, they ſaid, in the 'late Rebellion had kept Monmouth from Briſtol and Exeter; and which 'might be of ſingular Uſe, if new modell'd.' They particularly expreſs'd their Jealouſies of Standing Forces, by alledging, 'That the Kingdom was 'guarded by Law; that they were in perfect Peace, the King both fear'd 'and lov'd, an Army little needed, Enemies juſtly intimidated: That what 'made the Rebellion grow to a Height, was, becauſe the Man that headed 'it was a Favourite of the Faction; and tho' he had got ſuch a Number, 'yet he was beaten by two thouſand Men only. That the preſent Army 'conſiſted of fourteen or fifteen thouſand Men, whereas the laſt Force, tho' 'not above half in Number, preſerv'd the Peace, and was ſufficient to do 'it in the late King's time; That all the Profit and Security of this Nation 'was in the Navy, and had there been the leaſt Ship in the Channel, it 'wou'd have diſappointed Monmouth's Attempt: That ſupporting an Army, 'was maintaining ſo many idle Perſons to Lord it over the reſt of the Subjects: That Standing Armies debauch'd the Manners of all People, their 'Wives and Daughters: That Plow-men and Servants quit all Country 'Employments, to turn Soldiers; and that a Court-Martial in time of 'Peace was moſt terrible: That they had rather pay double to the Militia, 'from whom they fear'd nothing, than half ſo much to thoſe, of whom 'they muſt ever be afraid. Then as for Officers employ'd, not taking the

'Teſt, it was Diſpenſing with all the Laws at once: That if thoſe Men were Good or Kind, they knew not whether it proceeded from their Generoſity or Principles. That they muſt remember it is Treaſon for any Man to be reconcil'd to the Church of Rome, ſince the Pope by Law was declar'd an Enemy to this Kingdom. That a Supply given, as mov'd for, was a kind of Eſtabliſhing an Army by Act of Parliament; who when they had got the Power into their Hands, they themſelves muſt then derive it from their Courteſy. And therefore they urg'd to have the Reſolution, That the Safety of the Kingdom does not conſiſt with a Standing Force. 1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

To all which the Courtiers reply'd, 'That his Majeſty in his Speech only ſaid, That the Militia was not ſufficient: That the laſt long Parliament always own'd ſome Forces neceſſary; but that they were not to name the Number. That the King was the beſt Judge of that, being a great Soldier, and a good Prince. That there was a bitter Spirit in the three laſt preceding Parliaments, not yet well allay'd; ſo that a conſiderable Force was needful, beſides the Militia. That the Principles of the Rebel Party was never to Repent; That an Iſland may be attack'd, notwithſtanding any Fleet; That new Troops are not ſo good as old, and more ſubject to commit Diſorders; Therefore they inſiſted upon a Supply.' On the other Side it was anſwer'd, 'That there was already a Law, That no Man ſhall on any Pretence whatſoever riſe againſt the King; That Lords and Deputy-Lieutenants have Power to diſarm the Diſaffected: That if they gave thus a Supply, it was for an Army; and then might not that Army be made of thoſe that wou'd not take the Teſt; which Act was not deſign'd as a Puniſhment for the Papiſts, but a Protection for Proteſtants: That they were for mending the Militia, and make it ſuch as the King and Kingdom might confide in it; and that to truſt to Mercenary Force alone, was to give up all their Liberties at once. That it was for Kings to come to that Houſe from time to time, on extraordinary Occaſions, which they wou'd not do any more, if an Army was provided for by Law: That Armies were uſeful, when Occaſion was for them; but if they eſtabliſh'd them, it wou'd be no more in their Power to Disband them: That there was not a Company form'd till 1588, and as ſoon as Queen Elizabeth had done with her Army, ſhe disbanded it: That Armies had often been fatal to Princes; and that the Army in the late King's time often turn'd out their Leaders.

Then as to the Supply that was mov'd, ſome were for giving it 'Only for the extraordinary Charge paſt;' others, 'To reward the Officers not qualify'd, or to take them off ſome other way:' Others alledg'd, 'That the King's Revenue was ſufficient to maintain the Force on foot.' However, the Queſtion being put, That a Supply be given to his Majeſty, it was carry'd in the affirmative; but theſe Words, towards the Support of the additional Forces, which was mov'd by one of the Members to be added, were rejected; and inſtead of them, it paſt, That the Houſe be mov'd to bring in a Bill to make the Militia uſeful. The Sum demanded by the King's Agents, was Twelve Hundred Thouſand Pounds; which the reſt thinking exorbitant, ſaid, 'That the Meaſure of their Supply was their Security; that the Uſe was to direct the Quantum; that therefore Four Hundred Thouſand Pounds was enough to maintain the additional Forces two Years, till the Militia be made uſeful; and that they ought to leave the Door open for coming thither another time.' Others ſaid, 'That they had, that Seſſion, already given Cuſtoms and Exciſes for his Majeſty's Life, which amounted to Six Millions of Money: That they ought to give little now, to have Opportunity to give more another time; for if they gave ſo much then, they ſhou'd have nothing left to give; and if they proceed- A Supply voted.

'proceeded thus, what they had wou'd be taken from them.' But nevertheleſs, after a long Debate, they were ſo generous, that the Queſtion being put for a Supply of Seven Hundred Thouſand Pounds to be given to his Majeſty, it paſs'd in the affirmative.

As to the Roman Catholicks in the Army, beſides what is already mention'd, it was repreſented by one of the Members, 'That his Majeſty on his firſt Acceſſion to the Crown told them, He had been miſrepreſented, and that he wou'd preſerve the Government in Church and State now Eſtabliſh'd by Law, and maintain them in all their juſt Rights and Privileges: That overjoy'd at this, they ran haſtily to him, and were ſo forward to give, that the King's Miniſters put their Stop to it: That they ought not to forget that there was a Bill of Excluſion debated in that Houſe; and that the Arguments for it were, That they ſhou'd in caſe of a Popiſh Succeſſor, have a Popiſh Army: That they ſaw the Act of the Teſt already broken; but pray'd them to remember what the late Lord Chancellor told them when King Charles paſs'd that Act; By this Act, ſaid he, you are provided againſt Popery, that no Papiſt can poſſibly creep into any Employment. That he was greatly afflicted at the Breach of their Liberties, and ſeeing ſo great a Difference between his laſt Speech, and thoſe heretofore made, he cou'd not believe but this was made by ſome other Advice: That what the Thing ſtruck at there was their All; and that he wonder'd there had been any Men ſo deſperate, as to take any Employment without being qualify'd for it; and concluded to have a Standing Army voted deſtructive to the Country.' In the middle of theſe warm Debates, one mov'd for an Addreſs to his Majeſty; but others mov'd the Inconveniency of it, if not granted; others to have the Catholicks, who had been ſo uſeful and well known to his Majeſty, nam'd and compenſated. Some ſeem'd to doubt his Majeſty's Compliance; others inſiſted, that it was not to be doubted, when addreſs'd by ſuch a Houſe. The Reſult of the Debate, was, the appointing a Committee to draw up an Addreſs to his Majeſty, which on Monday the 16th of November, was read and agreed to, in this Form:

The Commons Addreſs to the King.

'Moſt Gracious Sovereign, We your Majeſty's moſt loyal and faithful Subjects, the Commons in Parliament Aſſembled, do, in the firſt Place, as in Duty bound, return your Majeſty our moſt humble and hearty Thanks for your great Care and Conduct in ſuppreſſing the late Rebellion, which threatned the Overthrow of this Government, both in Church and State, to the Extirpation of our Religion as by Law Eſtabliſh'd, which is moſt dear to us, and which your Majeſty hath been pleas'd to give us REPEATED ASSURANCES you will always defend and maintain; which, with all grateful Hearts, we ſhall ever acknowledge. We further crave leave to acquaint your Majeſty, that we have with all Duty and Readineſs taken into our Conſideration your Majeſty's Gracious Speech to us: And as to that Part of it, relating to the Officers in the Army, not qualify'd for their Employments, according to an Act of Parliament made in the 25th Year of the Reign of your Royal Brother, entituled, An Act for preventing Dangers which may happen from Popiſh Recuſants; We do out of our bounden Duty, humbly repreſent unto your Majeſty, that theſe Officers cannot by Law be capable of their Employments; and that the Incapacities they bring upon themſelves that Way, can no way be taken off but by an Act of Parliament: Therefore, out of that great Reverence and Duty we owe unto your Majeſty, who have been graciouſly pleas'd to take Notice of their Services to your Majeſty, we are preparing a Bill to paſs both Houſes, for your Royal Aſſent, to indemnify them from the Penalties they have now incurr'd: And becauſe the continuing them in their Employments, may be taken to be a Diſpenſing with that Law,

'without

'without an Act of Parliament, the Conſequence of which is of the great-
'eſt Concern to the Rights of all your Majeſty's Subjects, and to all the 1685.
'Laws made for the Security of their Religion: We therefore, the Knights, Jac. 1.
'Citizens and Burgeſſes of your Majeſty's Houſe of Commons, do moſt
'humbly beſeech your Majeſty, that you wou'd be moſt graciouſly pleas'd Reſ. 26
'to give ſuch Directions therein, that no Apprehenſions or Jealouſies may 'remain in the Hearts of your Majeſty's moſt loyal Subjects.

After the Reading of this Addreſs, a Motion was made for going to the Lords for their Concurrence; and it was by ſome alledg'd 'That it wou'd 'carry with it the greater Weight, and be more likely to have good Effect; 'and if the Concurrence of the Lords were ask'd, the Judges in the Lords 'Houſe wou'd have an Opportunity of ſpeaking their Opinion to it.' Others oppos'd it, 'For the Lords having already given their Thanks to the King for 'his Speech, as being contented therewith; and therefore declar'd, that it 'wou'd be more for the Honour of the Houſe of Commons, in this Exigency, 'to addreſs alone.' So upon a Diviſion of the Houſe it was carry'd by a ſmall Majority, for addreſſing alone; and on the 17th of November the Addreſs was preſented by the Speaker, attended by the Houſe, to the King in the Banquetting-Houſe; when his Majeſty gave them this ſurprizing Anſwer: GENTLEMEN, I did not expect ſuch an Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons: For having ſo lately recommended to your Conſideration the great Advantages a good Underſtanding between Us had produc'd in a very ſhort Time, and given you Warning of Fears and Jealouſies amongſt our ſelves; I had Reaſon to hope, That the Reputation God had bleſs'd me with in the World, wou'd have ſeal'd and confirm'd a good Confidence to you for Me, and of all that I ſay to you. But however you proceed on your Part, I will be ſteady in all my PROMISES I have made to you, and be juſt to my Word in this, and all my other Speeches. The King's Anſwer to it.

This Anſwer was read the next Day, the 18th of November, with all due Reverence and Reſpect; but was ſucceeded by a profound Silence in the Houſe for a conſiderable Time: At laſt a Member mov'd 'That a par-'ticular Day might be appointed to conſider of this Anſwer.' Mr. Coke ſeconded the Motion, but added with an unexpected Boldneſs, He hop'd they were all true Engliſh Men, and not to be frighted out of their Duty by a few hard Words. Tho' this Speech was thought to be no more than what was conſiſtent with the Freedom of an Engliſh Houſe of Commons, and the Character of a Patriot, yet the Majority ſo far reſented it, as to look upon him as an Incendiary, and order'd him to be ſent to the Tower, particularly for his indecent Speech. And further, to ſhew their Affection as well as Duty, they readily proceeded to Ways and Means, towards the raiſing of the Seven Hundred Thouſand Pounds before voted. Over and above, to make the King eaſie in his Roman Catholick Officers in the Army, they not only offer'd a Bill to indemnify them from the Penalties they had already incurr'd, but they were willing to capacitate, by Act of Parliament, ſuch a Number of thoſe Officers as his Majeſty ſhould give a Liſt of. But ſtill the Country Party inſiſted to have a Day appointed to conſider of his Majeſty's Anſwer to their Addreſs, which to them ſeem'd not ſatisfactory; which, notwithſtanding all their loyal and pecuniary Compliances, made the King uneaſy, and unwilling to continue them in that Diſpoſition. Mr. Coke ſent to the Tower.

3. In the mean time the Houſe of Lords ſhew'd ſuch a Diſpoſition as was not very pleaſing to the Court. Beſides their intended Debate of the King's Speech, after Thanks return'd, they thought fit to take Notice of the violent and arbitrary Proſecution of two of their Body, the Lord Delamere and the Earl of Stamford, wherein they judg'd the Privileges of Peerage to be invaded. On the firſt Day of the Seſſion, the Lord Delamere, in a The Lords Proceedings.

The Lord Delamere's Petition to them.

humble Petition represented to their Lordships, 'That his Majesty, by his 'Proclamation, dated the 19th of July last, did require the Petitioner to 'appear before him in Council within ten Days, not for any manner of 'Treason, but for other less Matters therein contain'd. That accordingly 'within seven Days he did render himself to my Lord Sunderland: And 'that after being brought before his Majesty, then sitting in Council, he 'was neither confronted by any Person that accus'd him, nor otherwise 'charg'd with any manner of Treason, but only ask'd some Questions re-'lating to Matters of a lesser Nature: And had he been guilty of them, 'yet, by Law, he might and ought to have been bail'd. Notwithstanding 'the Lord Sunderland, by Warrant bearing Date the 26th of July last, did 'commit the Petitioner to the Tower of London, for High-Treason in 'levying War against the King, where he had remain'd ever since, under 'a very close Restraint. And as he avow'd himself to be altogether Inno-'cent of any evil Practice against the King or the Government, and had in 'all Things behav'd himself as became a good Subject; so he humbly pray'd 'their Lordships to take his Case into their serious Consideration, and to 'do therein what shou'd seem meet to their Lordships.' After some De-bate, the Question was put, Whether the Lords with White Staffs shou'd wait on his Majesty, to know the Reason why the Lord Delamere, a Member of their House, was absent from his Attendance there. Which being carry'd in the Affirmative, the Earl of Rochester, Lord-Treasurer, re-ported the next Day, 'That he, with the other Lords, having waited on 'his Majesty with their Message, his Majesty was pleas'd to answer, That 'the Lord Delamere stood committed for High-Treason, testified upon Oath; 'and that his Majesty had already given Directions, that he shou'd be 'proceeded against according to Law.' The Lords resum'd this Debate a few Days after, when the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, by his Majesty's Command, gave this Account to their Lordships, of the Proceedings had and intended to be had against the Lord Delamere, in these Words; 'To 'shew your Lordships that the King has given Orders for a speedy Prosecu-'tion of him, the Treason whereof he is accus'd, was committed in Che-'shire, and that being a County Palatine, the Prosecution must be there, 'and not in the Court of King's-Bench, as it might be, if the Treason had 'been committed in any other County: And therefore his Majesty had gi-'ven Orders for a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, in order to the find-'ing an Indictment against him. Which Commission is already pass'd; and 'if the Indictment be not found before the End of the Term, the Lord 'Dalamere's Prayer being enter'd in the King's-Bench, he may be bail'd.

The Earl of Stamford's Petition to them.

The other Case was that of the Earl of Stamford, who on the 11th of November put up a Petition to the Lords, importing, 'That in July last he 'was taken in Custody at his own House in Leicestershire; and being 'brought to London, was, by the Earl of Sunderland's Warrant, commit-'ted to the Tower, for High-Treason, in conspiring the Death of the late 'King, where he remain'd ever since, and was now a close Prisoner, and 'had not had the Use of Pen, Ink or Paper, except to sign Petitions, in 'the Gentleman Porter's or Warder's Presence: That he took Leave and 'Assent, That he was Innocent of the Crime laid to his Charge, and had 'endeavour'd to behave himself with all Duty and Loyalty to the King, and 'his Royal Brother of Glorious Memory: That nevertheless, he heard 'there was an Indictment of High-Treason found against him; but Where, 'When, or How, or upon What Evidence, or upon What Matter, he knew 'not. Wherefore, he humbly pray'd, that their Lordships, according to 'the ancient Course of Proceedings of this most honourable House, wou'd 'be pleas'd to order him to be brought before them in their House of Par-'liament, there to hear the Matter charg'd against him: And that there-

1685. Jac. I. Ref. 26

'upon ſuch farther Proceedings might be had, as are agreeable to Juſtice, and 'the uſual Courſe of Parliamentary Proceedings in Caſes of the like Nature.' Upon Reading this Petition, the Houſe of Peers immediately order'd the Lord Mayor, and the reſt of the Juſtices of the City of London, forthwith to return in their Houſe, by Virtue of his Majeſty's Writ of Certiorari, the Indictment found before them againſt the Earl of Stamford. On the 17th of November, the ſaid Earl, purſuant to their Lordſhip's Order, was brought to the Bar, and the Indictment found againſt him. And his Petition being read, the Lord Chancellor ask'd him, What he had to ſay to the Houſe? His Lordſhip reply'd, That he had been ſtrictly confin'd by ſixteen Weeks Impriſonment, and not allow'd the Liberty of Pen, Ink and Paper, or Friends to come to him; and therefore he cou'd ſay no more till he knew his Charge. Whereupon the Houſe order'd the Earl of Stamford's Tryal 'ſhould be in Weſtminſter-Hall, on the firſt Day of December next: 'That in the mean time, he ſhou'd be allow'd the Liberty of Pen, Ink and 'Paper, and Friends to come to him, in Order for his Tryal; and that the 'Lords with White Staffs ſhou'd attend the King, to deſire his Majeſty, 'in Behalf of this Houſe, that a Place may be appointed in Weſtminſter-'Hall, and that his Majeſty wou'd give Order for a Commiſſion to appoint 'a Lord High-Steward, in Order to the ſaid Tryal.' On the next Day the Lords were made acquainted, 'That the King had comply'd with their 'Deſire.'

But in the mean time, the King, finding the Temper of both Houſes not exactly agreeable to his own, thought fit to put an End to the Seſſion, tho' with the Loſs of ſeven hundred thouſand Pounds voted by the Commons: And accordingly on the 20th of November, his Majeſty order'd a Commiſſion to the Houſe of Peers, who ſending for the Commons, the Lord Chancellor let both Houſes know, 'That it was his Majeſty's Pleaſure, for ma- The Parliament ſudenly prorogu'd and ended.
'ny weighty Reaſons, that this Parliament be Prorogu'd till the 10th of Fe- 'bruary next.' And thus ended the ſecond Meeting of this Parliament, after it had ſate but eleven Days; and tho' prorogu'd from time to time, it never met to do Buſineſs after; it being diſſolv'd in leſs than two Years time, and no other call'd during this Reign. And here we may wonder, that after ſuch ſolemn Promiſes on the King's Side, and ſuch large Compliances on the other, there ſhou'd be ſo little Union between them: If either of them had been leſs, the King's future Actions had then been much more excuſable, and leſs liable to the Cenſure of an Hiſtorian, who eſpecially is to take notice of open Ingratitude, and publick Breach of Faith.

4. After the breaking up of the Parliament, two Lord's Tryals were expected, namely of the Earl of Stamford and the Lord Delamere. The firſt never came on, but the latter did, in a little above a Month's time, with the uſual Solemnity of a Lord High-Steward, and a ſelect Number of about thirty Lords. After ſome Formalities, and ſpecial Pleas offer'd by the Lord Delamere, the firſt Witneſs produc'd againſt him was the Lord Howard, who had not yet done with the Drudgery of Swearing, as it was call'd, but was forc'd again to do Penance for his former Crimes, which he introduc'd in theſe Words; I am call'd, not to be an Evidence againſt my Lord Delamere, but againſt my ſelf; that is, to repeat what I have often deliver'd at ſeveral Tryals, in the Courts of Juſtice; and which I muſt always repeat with Shame and Confuſion for my Guilt, as I cannot but always reflect upon it with Sorrow and Horror. After a very long Story that had no Relation to the preſent Cauſe, it preſently appear'd to the World that the Lord Grey was in Favour, or at leaſt pardon'd, by being brought in as a ſecond Witneſs; more, to prove the Truth and Deſign of Monmouth's Rebellion, than the real Guilt of the Perſon accus'd. Others The Tryal of the Lord Delamere.

also appear'd, as Wade, Jones, and Goodenough; but none came fully to the Point, which was the Lord's Correſpondence with the Duke of Monmouth, but one Saxon: But he being prov'd to be a Perſon of very little or bad Reputation, the whole Body of the Peers acquitted his Lordſhip, and ſo he came off with Triumph; but, perhaps, with ſuch juſt Reſentment, that he afterwards prov'd a prime Inſtrument in removing thoſe that had ſo much endanger'd him.

A general Pardon.

The other Lord, the Earl of Stamford, came off with leſs Difficulty; for ſoon after, upon bringing his Habeas Corpus, he was admitted to Bail; and in the Beginning of the next Year, tho' Innocent as to any Proof, thought fit to lay hold on the Proclamation of Pardon, which was iſſu'd out after all the Tryals were over. This was call'd by the Name of General, but clogg'd with ſuch Number of Exceptions as to Perſons, and ſome of thoſe Perſons ſo inconſiderable, that it was thought of very little Uſe, or at leaſt met with no conſiderable Thanks.

Promotions and Preferments.

And now we may conclude the Year 1685 with the Accounts of ſome Promotions and Preferments, and the Deaths of ſome conſiderable Perſons. As to the Former, beſides thoſe already mention'd, as the Lord Jeffreys, the Lord Churchill, &c. his Majeſty was pleas'd to beſtow ſeveral other Honours, and more particularly the Honour of the Garter upon four Perſons, at ſeveral Times; as firſt the Duke of Norfolk on the 6th of May; next, the Earl of Peterborough, on June the 18th; thirdly, the Lord Treaſurer Rocheſter, on the 29th of June; and laſtly, the Earl of Feverſham, on the 31ſt of July. His Majeſty being deſirous to beſtow a Mark of his Royal Favour upon Henry Jermyn of Chevely in the County of Cambridge, Eſq; for the conſtant Loyalty of himſelf and his Family, was pleas'd to grant him the Title and Dignity of Baron of Dover in the County of Kent, on the 15th of May. The Earl of Arlington, ſo often mention'd, dying this Year in July, his Majeſty was pleas'd to conſtitute the Earl of Ailesbury Lord Chamberlain in his Place: And he dying in leſs than three Months Time, his Majeſty was pleas'd to give his White Staff to the Earl of Mulgrave, who became a conſiderable Favourite in this Reign. The Earl of Peterborough, beſides the Honour of the Garter, had the Golden Key given him as Groom of the Stole. The Duke of Queenborough, the Earl of Perth, the Lord Preſton, and the Earl of Plymouth, were, at ſeveral Times this Year, made Privy Counſellors. In December, his Majeſty appointed the Earl of Clarendon to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in the room of the Duke of Ormond. And about the ſame Time, the King was pleas'd in Council to declare the Earl of Sunderland, his principal Secretary, to be Lord Preſident of his Council; who from that Time became prime Miniſter of State, and by his Addreſs upon all Occaſions, gain'd a ſpecial Influence upon the King's Affairs and Actions, during the greateſt Part of his Reign.

The Deaths of Biſhop Sparrow,

For the Deaths of conſiderable Men this Year, beſide the Lord Keeper North, the Earl of Arlington, and the Earl of Alesbury already mention'd, we ſhall begin with three Learned Divines; and firſt Dr. Anthony Sparrow, Maſter of Queen's College in Cambridge, and ſucceſſively Biſhop of Exeter and Norwich, after he had been a conſiderable Sufferer in the Times of Confuſion: He left behind him the Character of a pious, induſtrious and paſtoral Man, and in his Labours was diſtinguiſh'd by his judicious Rationale upon the Book of Common Prayer, &c. The ſecond was Dr. Lawrence Womack, likewiſe educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and no leſs a Sufferer in the late Times, who at the Reſtauration was made Archdeacon of Suffolk, and laſt of all Biſhop of St. Davids: He was much noted for his polemical Writings, particularly againſt the Diſſenters, from whom he had receiv'd ſuch Hardſhips, and dy'd poſſeſs'd of a very famous and ſelect Library.

Biſhop Womack.

Library. The third was Dr. Thomas Marſhall, Dean of Gloceſter, another Loyaliſt of the Univerſity of Oxford, and a great Follower of the famous Archbiſhop Uſher, who being forc'd to travel, afterwards ſhew'd himſelf to be very well vers'd in Books as well as Men, and to be a noted Critick, eſpecially in the Gothick and Engliſh Saxon Tongues, a painful Preacher, a good Man and Governor, and a Perſon worthy of his Station in the Church. To theſe three we may add a fourth Divine, Dr. John Pell, Rector of Laindon and Bartleſdon in Kent, a Perſon educated in Trinity College in Cambridge, and of an extraordinary Genius, being a mighty Linguiſt, and a celebrated Mathematician, even in the moſt difficult Parts of Algebra, &c. a Perſon who had been us'd, and conſulted upon many publick Occaſions, yet following his Books only, and being a ſhiftleſs Man as to worldly Affairs, he ſuffer'd himſelf to be cozen'd of his Revenues, and dy'd in Obſcurity. 1685. Jac. 1. Reſ. 26 Dr. Marſhall, Dr. Pell.

After theſe Divines, we ſhall mention three others of various Note and Character, and firſt Sir William Dugdale Knight, and Garter Principal King of Arms, a Warwickſhire Gentleman by Birth, but of no Academical Education, who falling into the Acquaintance of Mr. Burton, Sir Henry Spelman, Mr. Dodſworth, and other famous Antiquaries, follow'd and purſu'd that ſort of Studies with ſuch an indefatigable Labour and Pains, that he became himſelf the moſt celebrated Antiquary in the Kingdom: His Monaſticon, his Baronage, his Antiquities of Warwickſhire, and other of his Works, are wonderful Inſtances of Induſtry. Wood intimates that the Diſtractions of his Worldly Affairs made his Works not altogether ſo accurate as they might have been; however, adds he, what he has done is prodigious, conſidering the great Troubles he had endured for his Loyalty, and the Cumberances of this World he had run through; and therefore his Memory ought to be venerated and perpetuated, for preſerving ſo many things from periſhing, which otherwiſe wou'd have been eternally bury'd in Oblivion. The next was Sir John Marſham Baroner, a Gentleman of London by Birth, educated in St. John's College in Oxford, and farther improv'd by his Travels into ſeveral Countries; after which he ſtudy'd the Law in the Middle-Temple, and became one of the Six Clerks in Chancery. In the troubleſome Times that ſucceeded, he became a great Sufferer, and at laſt a Compounder for his Eſtate; notwithſtanding which he purſu'd his Studies with that Succeſs, that he became famous both at Home and Abroad for his nice and exact Skill in Hiſtory, Chronology and Languages; inſomuch that Father Simon, in one of his Books, calls him 'The great Marſham 'of England,' and the moſt learned Men in Europe have made very honourable mention of him, upon the account of his accurate and excellent Writings. After a Life of great Labour, and ſeveral Honours receiv'd from King Charles the Second, he left the World in the eighty third Year of his Age. The laſt to be mention'd is Mr. Thomas Otway, the Son of a Clergy-man in Suſſex, who had a ſhort Education in Chriſt-Church in Oxford, from whence repairing to London, he became a moſt celebrated Dramatick Poet; his Plays being as much heard and read as any that appear'd upon the Stage. He was a Man of excellent and improving Parts, and of a luxuriant Imagination, and had an admirable Talent of moving and raiſing the Paſſions in his Tragedies; but in his Comedies he had ſo much Lewdneſs with his Wit, that he ſeem'd to outdo his Contemporaries in debauching the City, as well as the Stage: And, leading a Life of full Liberty, he met with the natural Effects of it, to die very poor and young, in the thirty third Year of his Age. Sir William Dugdale, Sir John Marſham, And Mr. Thomas Otway.

III. 1. The King being now, in effect, got to the Height of his Power, his Parliament not ſitting, his ſtanding Forces encreaſing, and his Revenues ſufficient to maintain them, he began more openly to ſhew his Reſo-

Reſolutions of encouraging and eſtabliſhing his own Religion; and, in order to ſo great a Work, to aſſume a more arbitrary Power than had been known or charg'd upon any of his Family. In both theſe he is ſaid to have been hurry'd on more by the treacherous Advice of others, than by his private Inclination, which was of it ſelf unqueſtionably ſtrong, and conſequently yielding to all ſuch Impreſſions.

Proceedings in Scotland.

Whatſoever were his Incouragements or Inducements, the King to feel the Pulſe of his Engliſh Subjects, began to raiſe the Superſtructure of his Arbitrary Power in Scotland and Ireland; in the former of which he had laid the Foundation by his Popularity and politick Diſſembling his religious Deſigns, when he was made Lord Commiſſioner for his Brother. Before that Parliament had broke up the laſt Summer, beſides other Acts formerly mention'd, one paſs'd Containing a Tender of Duty, and Offer of the Exciſe to his Majeſty; in the Preamble of which they Declare, 'That they owe 'all their Bleſſings to the Sacred Race of their glorious Kings, and to the 'Solid, Abſolute Authority wherewith they were Inveſted by the firſt and 'Fundamental Laws of their Monarchy:——And therefore they again declare to the World, 'That they Abhorr and Deteſt, not only the Authors 'and Actors of all preceding Rebellions againſt their Sovereign, but alſo 'all Principles and Poſitions which are contrary or derogatory to the 'King's Sacred, Supreme, Sovereign, Abſolute Power and Authority, which 'none, whether particular Perſons or collective Bodies, can participate of any 'manner of Way, or upon any Pretext, but in Dependence on him, and 'by Commiſſion from him, &c.' And as it were intentionally to introduce a Deſpotick Power, they paſs'd another Act, 'To confirm and ap'prove whatever had been done by his Majeſty's Privy-Council, Juſtice-'Court, and thoſe Commiſſionated by them, in Baniſhing, Impriſoning or 'Fining ſuch as refus'd to Take and Swear the Oath of Allegiance; and 'to Aſſert the Royal Prerogative in the utmoſt Extent of them.

The King's Letter to the Parliament there.

Theſe Advances gave great Incouragement to the King, who had a hopeful Proſpect of the Scots compliance in all Things; therefore amongſt them he firſt attempted to repeal the Penal Laws and Teſts enacted againſt Papiſts. Accordingly, having ſummon'd the Parliament of that Kingdom to Re-aſſemble on the 29th of April this preſent Year, he wrote an earneſt Letter to them, wherein, 'He recommends to their ſpecial Care, his Inno'cent Roman Catholick Subjects, who had always been Aſſiſtant to the 'Crown in the worſt of Rebellions and Uſurpations, tho' they lay under 'Diſcouragements hardly to be nam'd: Theſe he moſt heartily recommend'ed to them; to the End, That as they had given good Experience of 'their true Loyalty and peaceable Behaviour, ſo, by their Aſſiſtance, they 'might have the Protection of his Laws, not ſuffering them to lye under 'Obligations, which their Religion cou'd not admit of; by doing of which, 'they wou'd give a Demonſtration of the Duty and Affection they had to 'him, and do him moſt acceptable Service. And this Love he expected 'they ſhou'd ſhew to their Brethren, as they ſaw him an Indulgent Fa'ther to his People.

After the reading of this Letter, to engage the Parliament to a Compliance with his Majeſty's Deſire, the Earl of Murray, who was appointed Lord High-Commiſſioner upon this Occaſion, made them a plauſible Speech, in which he promis'd them, 'That his Majeſty wou'd open a free Inter'courſe of Trade with his Kingdom of England; and had fully inſtructed 'his Envoy at the Court of France, to recover the Poſſeſſion of the ſeve'ral Privileges of the Scotch Merchants Trading with that Kingdom. And 'that his Majeſty wou'd redreſs the Trouble that the Scotch Merchants 'met with in the matter of the Staple and Trade with the Netherlands; 'and that he wou'd remove the Prejudice which the Kingdom ſuffer'd,

'by

'by the Importation of Iriſh Horſes, Cattel and Victuals. And that his 1686.
'Majeſty was willing to grant them an open Mint, the want of which, Jac. 2.
'was a terrible Prejudice to the Traffick of the Kingdom: And that he
'wou'd not at this time demand any more Supplies or Impoſitions of any Reſ. 27
'kind; notwithſtanding his great Charges in ſuppreſſing the late horrid
'Rebellion: And that he wou'd give his Royal Conſent to all ſuch Laws
'and Regulations, as might ſecure exact Payment to the Countrey from all 'his Officers and Soldiers in their Quarters. And laſtly, That he wou'd
'graciouſly paſs his full and ample Indemnity, with ſome needful and ne-
'ceſſary Exceptions, for all paſt Crimes and Miſdemeanours whatſoever.'
Having expatiated upon all theſe Heads, he concluded his Speech in theſe Words; 'And now, my Lords and Gentlemen, after ſo great and excellent
'Deſigns for promoting the Honour, the Eaſe and Wealth of this King'dom; After his Reſolution to pardon ſo many Enemies, and to free ſo
'many of the Guilty from further ſevere, but juſt Proſecutions; his Ma-
'jeſty believeth that none will wonder, if he deſire, by the Advice and 'Conſent of this Great Council, to give Eaſe and Security to ſome of his 'good Subjects of the Roman Catholick Religion, who have been at all 'Times firm to the Monarchy, and ready to ſacrifice their Lives and For'tunes for the Service and Security of the Crown. So that his Majeſty,
'who ſo perfectly underſtands the Loyal and Dutiful Temper and Genius
'of Scotland, reſts fully perſuaded of your ready and chearful Compliance
'with his Royal Deſire and Inclinations, tending ſo much to your own
'Security, and his Satisfaction; and that you will ſend me back to my 'Great and Royal Maſter, with the good Tydings of the continu'd and du'tiful Loyalty of this his ancient Kingdom: By which you will ſhew
'your ſelves the beſt and moſt affectionate Subjects, to the Beſt, the In'comparable, and moſt Heroick Prince in the World.

When this Speech came to be conſider'd, the Creatures of the Court ſhew'd a preſent Inclination for paſſing an Act in Favour of the Papiſts, without looking further than his Majeſty's Deſire. But the more conſiderate Party mov'd and prevail'd to have a Committee appointed to inſpect the Statutes provided againſt the Roman Catholicks. After a full Examination of thoſe Laws, the Committee drew up a Bill whereby, 'Papiſts were 'to be allow'd the Exerciſe of their Religion in private, without repealing
'thoſe former Acts which made them liable to Penalties for publickly Aſ-
'ſembling together.' The King ſeem'd to have been contented with this Step at preſent, hoping to have gain'd more in a proper Seaſon. But however, this Bill being preſented to the Parliament for their Approbation, they divided upon it, and many warm Speeches were made againſt it. The King being inform'd of their Debates, and apprehending the Miſcarriage of his Deſigns, he diſpatch'd an Expreſs to the Earl of Murray, his Commiſſioner, with Orders to Diſſolve, or at leaſt Prorogue that Parliament that had done ſo much in Favour of his Prerogative. And about ten Months after, he did that by his ſole Power and Authority, which he cou'd not effect with the Conſent of the Nation, as will be remember'd in its proper Place.

The Parliament not complying.

2. To proceed to the other more remote Kingdom, it was principally in Ireland, where the King's Deſigns of eſtabliſhing Popery and Arbitrary Power to Support it, appear'd without Diſguiſe, from the very Beginning of his Reign; a Kingdom whoſe diſtance from England, as well as the Number of Papiſts contain'd in it, gave him great Opportunities and Incouragement to execute his Projects. The famous Duke of Ormond was Lord Lieutenant of that Kingdom, a Perſon of unblemiſh'd Honour, and inviolable Fidelity to the Proteſtant Religion, and the Engliſh as well as the Proceedings in Ireland.

The Duke of Ormond remov'd.

the Iriſh Intereſt; and therefore he was thought an improper Perſon to ſerve the preſent Government: Accordingly, within two Months after the King's Acceſſion to the Crown, he receiv'd an Order from the Court, to deliver the Sword of State to the Lord Primate of Ireland and to the Earl of Granard, appointed by the King to be Lords Juſtices. But before his Grace's Departure, he labour'd with a noble Diligence to eſtabliſh Matters on ſuch a Foundation, as it ſhou'd not be eaſy for the Papiſts to make a preſent Change, without a manifeſt Violation of the Laws and Conſtitutions of the Kingdom. One particular Paſſage muſt not be paſs'd in Silence, as expreſſing the brave Spirit of that excellent Patriot: He appointed a Dinner at the New Hoſpital, a ſtately Fabrick by him erected near Dublin for poor Soldiers, where were invited the Officers of the ſaid Hoſpital, and thoſe of the Army then in Dublin; which being over, he took a large Glaſs of Wine in his Hand, bid them fill it to the Brim, then ſtood up and call'd thus to the Company; Look here, Gentlemen, they ſay at Court I am now become an old doating Fool; you ſee my Hand does not ſhake, nor does my Heart fail; nor do I doubt that I ſhall make ſome of my Enemies ſee their Miſtake; and ſo drank the King's Health. But the Duke at his Arrival at the Engliſh Court, found himſelf in Diſpleaſure with the King, who really ow'd him the higheſt Obligations; and had ſuch diſmal Apprehenſions of the Poſture of Affairs in Ireland, that it is thought to have ſhortned his Days: For tho' he dy'd in a good old Age, yet till this Turn he enjoy'd ſuch Health of Body, and Chearfulneſs of Mind, that in the Courſe of Nature he might have liv'd many Years longer.

Before the Duke left the Government of Ireland, an Order came, for regulating the Council, the finiſhing of which was left to the Lord Juſtices. Upon his Departure the Privy-Council was immediately diſſolv'd, and moſt of the Engliſh that were active in the Proteſtant Cauſe, were remov'd; and tho' no Papiſts were immediately put in their Places, yet it was not long before they made up the major Part; and thoſe few Proteſtants that were left, ſeldom appear'd at the Board, as being unable to ſtand againſt the ſtrongeſt Side. The Iriſh fell immediately to their ordinary Practice of making Plots, but with this Difference; That whereas they had formerly been the Actors themſelves, they now father'd them upon the Engliſh, whom they daily impeach'd againſt the King and the Government. They were countenanc'd by the Privy Council, who preſs'd the Lords Juſtices for Orders to impower Iriſh Papiſts and mungrel Proteſtants to commit, without Bail, any Perſon Impeach'd. Theſe ſtrange Proceedings ſoon made the Lords Juſtices weary of their Government, and the Lord Granard wrote to England to be diſmiſs'd: But the Papiſts repreſented him as a Man fit to be kept in his Majeſty's Intereſt, being very prevalent in the North, among the Scotch Presbyterians, his Lady being of that Perſuaſion. So that King James wrote him a Letter with his own Hand, giving him Aſſurance, That nothing ſhou'd be acted prejudicial to the Proteſtant Intereſt, for which his Lordſhip was then reputed to be zealous. And as to Plots, Monmouth's Rebellion gave the Iriſh a fair Opportunity of contriving them, and to faſten them upon the Proteſtants; which made the King ſo jealous of them, or ſo ready to take Advantage, that he reſolv'd to keep a Standing Army of Iriſh Papiſts. This cou'd not be effected without calling in all the Arms from the Hands of Proteſtants. To carry on which Deſign, the King and Council wrote over to the Lords Juſtices,

The Proteſtants there diſarm'd.

'That there was reaſon to believe that the Rebellion of Monmouth had 'been of the ſpreading Contagion, as to Infect many, and Delude more: 'It was not therefore ſafe for the Kingdom, to have the Arms of the Mi- 'litia diſpers'd abroad; but they wou'd be in greater Readineſs, for the 'Uſe of the Militia, and the Defence of the Countrey, to have them de-

'poſited

'posited in the ſeveral Stores of each County.' Upon theſe plauſible Inſtructions, a Proclamation was iſſu'd out; and the City of Dublin being prevail'd with to bring in their Arms, that Precedent was ſoon after unhappily follow'd by all the Countrey. 1686. Jac. 2. Reſ. 27

The Proteſtants being by this Contrivance diſarm'd, the next Deſign was to new-model the Army, which at that Time conſiſted of about ſeven Thouſand, all Proteſtants, zealous and faithful to the King's Service. For which Purpoſe they made choice of Colonel Richard Talbot, a Man, of all others, moſt odious and formidable to the Engliſh Proteſtants, and one who had been nam'd by Oates in his Narrative, ſome Years before, as deſign'd for this very Service; ſo that many, who before believ'd nothing of the Popiſh Plot, gave Credit to it now, ſaying, That if Oates were an ill Evidence, he was certainly a good Prophet. Talbot with great Inſolence began to purſue a Method, which was ſaid to have been deſign'd immediately before the Death of King Charles the Second, which was to diſplace all Officers that had been in the Parliament or Cromwell's Army, and the very Sons of all ſuch. In this Deſign the Duke of Ormond had Directions to proceed; but he made no Progreſs in it, under Pretence of gaining Time to find them out, but in reality, becauſe he foreſaw it was only to make room for the Papiſts. Talbot having with a high Hand caſhier'd a great many of the Officers, came over into England, and brought with him one Neagle, a ſubtle Iriſh Lawyer, and a moſt inveterate Papiſt; who, tho' not immediately countenanc'd by the King, was conſtantly with his Confeſſor Father Petre, and the reſt of the Popiſh Cabal. The Queen is ſaid to be much for their furious Counſels, but the King appear'd not ſo violently inclin'd, being daily adviſ'd by all the Popiſh Peers, 'Not to proceed too faſt in the 'Alterations in Ireland; leſt he ſhou'd by that Means ruin the general In-'tereſt of the Catholicks.' However, Colonel Talbot was made Earl of Tyrconnel, with the deſign of his immediate Return into Ireland, in Quality Lord Lieutenant; to which Office he had been recommended by Biſhop Tyrrill, tho' with ſome Reſerve, as being a Perſon confeſs'd to be odious to the Engliſh Nation, and therefore not proper to appear upon the Stage till Matters were come to a greater Maturity. Therefore the Lord Bellaſis was propos'd, but he was infirm, and excus'd himſelf from what he thought wou'd be a difficult Work. At length, to carry on their Deſign with Succeſs, and not altogether to diſguſt the Engliſh, it was reſolv'd that Tyrconnel ſhou'd return Lieutenant General of the Army, and the Earl of Clarendon Lord Lieutenant of the Kingdom, as was formerly hinted: All which was compleated on the latter End of the laſt Year, 1685.

3. In the mean Time the Iriſh Papiſts in all Parts of the Kingdom proceeded in their former Stratagems of Impeaching the Proteſtants for trayterous Deſigns; but theſe were generally ſo weakly contriv'd, and compos'd of ſuch palpable Inconſiſtencies, that they ſerv'd only to demonſtrate the Innocence of the Proteſtants, and the inveterate Malice of the Informers. But when theſe Impeachments were found to be ſo unskillfully manag'd, as to miſs of their wicked Intents, they then apply'd themſelves to other Courſes: In particular, many went out Torys, and committed ſo many Robberies and Outrages upon the Engliſh, that Thouſands left and deſerted the Kingdom. At the ſame time Tyrconnel drove on with greater Fury than before; not only diſplacing the Officers of the Army, but alſo turning out the private Soldiers, and to both preferring which of the Iriſh he thought fit: His Will was his Law, and his Actions purely Arbitrary; for he brought over Blank Commiſſions ſign'd by the King, for ſuch as he was willing to put in. This Part he acted in a moſt inſulting barbarous Manner; turning looſe ſome Soldiers, ſtripp'd to their Shirts; ſeizing the Horſes of ſome Officers and Troopers, giving them Notes not amounting to the fourth Part of the juſt Values; and to others, giving nothing but ill Words, and vile Reproaches. The moſt noted Officers, who were turn'd out of their Commiſſions, were the Lord Shannon, Captain Fitz-Gerald, Captain Coote, and Sir George Saint George; in whoſe Places were put in the moſt virulent Papiſts, and the worſt of Men. In ſum, two or three hundred Gentlemen, who had laid out all, or the greateſt Part of their Portions, to purchaſe or follow theſe Military Employments, were arbitrarily Disbanded, and five or ſix thouſand private Soldiers ſent a Begging.

Clarendon's Care.

Notwithſtanding theſe Outrages, the Diſcouragements of the Engliſh were in ſome meaſure alleviated, when they found that the Lord Lieutenant, tho' a near Relation to the King, acted as a Perſon of inviolable Integrity to the Proteſtants; for which they look'd upon him as a Man that wou'd ſtem the impetuous Torrent of the Popiſh Faction. And indeed his very firſt Action gave no ſmall Proof of it, which was to revive the fainting Spirits of the Proteſtants, by telling them, of the great Aſſurance the King had given him of protecting their Religion. But in reality, that noble Earl ſoon found himſelf but half a Governor, for Tyrconnell aſſum'd more than a Share in the Adminiſtration of all Affairs; of which we have this particular Inſtance. Upon a Sunday Morning the Earl going to Church, he perceiv'd an Iriſh Officer he never ſaw before, commanding his own Guard of Battel-Axes, which very much ſurpriz'd him; whereupon he made a Stop, demanding, Who he was? and, Who put him there? The Iriſhman, as much frighted, as the Lord Lieutenant was diſturb'd, in broken Expreſſions told his Excellency, He was a Captain put in by the Lord Tyrconnel. His Excellency demanding of him, When? he reply'd, That Morning. His Excellency bid them call the former Captain, and diſmiſs this of Tyrconnel's. The next Day the Lord Lieutenant queſtion'd Tyrconnel for this Action, who reply'd, He did nothing but by the King's Orders: To which the Earl bravely return'd, That while his Majeſty entruſted him with the Government, he wou'd not be determin'd by his Lieutenant General. Complaints on both ſides were made to the King, and the mutual Diſcontents every Day encreas'd; the Lord Lieutenant knowing himſelf to be Supreme, and the Lieutenant General daring to be Superior.

But in vain.

The Latter therefore, having compleated his Deſign in Modelling the Army, went over into England, and conſulted with his Party, how to obtain the ſole Government of Ireland. We are told, That the Queen, Father Petre, and the Earl of Sunderland, very much importun'd the King in his Favour; but the Popiſh Lords, who had a wiſer Foreſight, appear'd againſt it, and believ'd that his Furiouſneſs wou'd ruin all; notwithſtanding they were extremely deſirous to have Ireland in the abſolute Diſpoſal of the Papiſts: For, after divers Projects, when the moſt conſiderable of them, upon an Apprehenſion of a Storm falling upon them in England, were for Addreſſing the King, 'To have liberty to ſell their Eſtates, and that his 'Majeſty wou'd intercede with the King of France to provide for them in 'his Dominions;' the King took an Occaſion to tell them, That before their Deſires came to Him, he had often thought of Them; and had provided a ſure Sanctuary and Retreat for them in Ireland, if all thoſe Endeavours ſhou'd be blaſted in England, which he had made for their Security; and of the Succeſs of which he had not yet Reaſon to deſpair. By which it was ſoon gueſs'd, that the Earl of Clarendon was to be recall'd; and his Brother the Lord Treaſurer, having accidentally heard what was then in Agitation, immediately acquainted the King with it; who abſolutely deny'd, That there was any Intention of removing his Brother from the Government of Ireland; but, on the contrary, aſſur'd him, He was very well well ſatisfy'd with his Conduct there. Shortly after, the Treaſurer receiv'd from his Brother, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the ſame Intimations about his Removal. Upon which he again apply'd to his Majeſty; who as poſitively deny'd the whole Matter as he had done before: And to remove the Jealouſies of the Lord Lieutenant, he wrote a Letter to him, as was ſaid, with his own Hand, aſſuring him, 'He had yet no Thoughts, and he 'believ'd never ſhou'd have, whilſt both of them liv'd, to call him away 'from the Government of Ireland. 1686. Jac. 2. Ref. 27

Notwithſtanding which, in the latter End of this Year, the King thought fit to ask the Advice of his Council, who was the moſt proper Perſon to be plac'd in the Government of Ireland? Several were propos'd, but none approv'd of; but after the Inclination of the Board had been ſufficiently ſifted, the King again brought on Tyrconnel, which was withſtood by all but the Lord Preſident; and in Oppoſition to which the Popiſh Party contended vigorouſly. The Lord Powis was particularly conſider'd as a Perſon whoſe moderate Carriage had entitul'd him to a tolerable good Character among the Proteſtants, and therefore the moſt proper to be plac'd in this Station, the better to amuſe them. This Lord was naturally covetous, and the Government of Ireland being a Poſt of great Profit, his Friends adviſ'd him to agree with the Lord Preſident, and become Tenant for Life: In order to which, we are told, that Powis came to Terms, and agreed for four thouſand Pounds per Annum; but whatever the Bottom of the Deſign was, we are told, the Lord Preſident never forſook Tyrconnel at the Council-Board, and carry'd it for him againſt all Oppoſition. Some conjectur'd, that he acquainted the King with the Bargain of Powis, and that the King made Tyrconnel agree to the ſame Terms; but it is more certain that Tyrconnel, who ſeldom conſider'd what he ſpoke, wou'd ſwear, He got not ſo much by the Government as ſerv'd to maintain him; notwithſtanding it was ſuppos'd to be worth to him eighteen thouſand Pounds per Annum. However the Bargain was, the Confirmation of this diſmal News ſtruck the Proteſtants in Ireland with the greateſt Damp and Terror: Many of them that had Patent Employments, obtain'd Licence under the Broad-Seal, to come away; and many of the Merchants call'd in their Effects, and left the Kingdom. His Excellency the Earl of Clarendon did all he cou'd to aſſiſt the poor Proteſtants, in ſheltering them from the impending Storm; and it was by many interpreted as a Signal Act of Providence, that after Tyrconnel was come to Holy-Head, he was there detain'd full ſixteen Days, by contrary Winds. But he at laſt arriv'd at Dublin in the Beginning of February $168\frac{4}{7}$. and tho' his Appearance was with a ſad Conſternation to the Proteſtants, yet care was taken to publiſh in the Gazette, 'That there 'never was ſeen ſo great a Concourſe of People at any Chief-Governor's 'Landing, as at his; expreſſing their general Satisfaction by loud Acclama'tions as he paſs'd through the Streets, by Ringing of Bells, and by Bone'Fires at Night throughout the City, together with all other Publik De'monſtrations of Joy. Tyrconnel made Lord Lieutenant.

Upon Tyrconnel's Arrival, the Earl of Clarendon caus'd the Privy-Council to meet at the Palace of the Lord Archbiſhop of Dublin, and there formally deliver'd the Sword of State to the new Lord Lieutenant, with a memorable Speech, in which he told his Excellency, 'That the Miſunder'ſtandings and Feuds in that Kingdom, were Things much to be lamented, 'and he cou'd wiſh the Occaſion of them were remov'd, which was this, 'viz. That the Engliſh of that Kingdom had been repreſented as a Com'pany of diſaffected and fanatical People: That this was a hard Charge, 'if it were true; but from what he had learn'd, both by his own Obſer'vation, and the Information of others, he believ'd them to be as Loyal 'Subjects, and generally as True Sons of the Church of England, as any Clarendon's Speech at his leaving Ireland.

1686. Jac. 2. Ref. 27

'it has. That it is a Church that can make it her Brags, that in all the 'Conſpiracies, Plots and Rebellions that ever have been againſt the King, 'not one orthodox Member of her Communion has been any way in them: 'That he profeſs'd himſelf to be of that Church, and accounted it his 'greateſt Happineſs that he was ſo. That as for the Proteſtants of that 'Kingdom in particular, he cou'd ſay in their Favour, that when the Re-'ſtoration of King Charles was oppos'd in England, they were the Men 'who us'd their indefatigable Induſtry to effect it. That he deſign'd to tell 'this to the King, and hop'd, by his Lordſhip's Prudence, theſe Calumnies 'and Aſperſions that had lain upon them, wou'd be remov'd; and that as 'they and the Roman Catholicks were the Subjects of one Prince, they 'wou'd unanimouſly agree, in their Love of one another, and in promo-'ting his Honour and Happineſs.' He clos'd his Speech with telling him, That as he receiv'd the Sword in Peace, ſo he deliver'd it up in Peace.

Tyrconnel's Anſwer,

The new Lieutenant's Anſwer was to this Effect: 'That it was the 'King's Deſign, and conſequently his Command to him, to Govern that 'Kingdom according to the Law, without any Partiality; and therefore he 'declar'd, That all Men ſhou'd enjoy the Exerciſe of their Religion and 'Properties, according to Law. That he knew that there were great 'Fears in the Kingdom; ſome removing their Goods and Plate, others 'calling in their Money: What the Reaſon of it was, he cou'd not imagine; 'but for his own Part, he wou'd not have any diſtruſt his Majeſty's Prote-'ction. That the Lord Clarendon had hinted, That he wou'd have no 'Diſtinction of Names, or any thing elſe that might breed Jealouſies a-'mong the People; which he wou'd make his whole Buſineſs to bring a-'bout; for this was the Command of the King, who was both the Greateſt 'and Juſteſt Prince that ever rul'd theſe Kingdoms, &c.' And farther, to ſuppreſs, if poſſible, the general Fears and Diſcontents of the Engliſh Proteſtants, the new Lord Deputy ſoon after publiſh'd a Proclamation, importing that, 'Whereas We are inform'd, That ſeveral diſaffected Perſons with-'in this his Majeſty's Kingdom, have been of late very induſtrious, by falſe 'Reports and malicious Inſinuations, to ſuggeſt to many of his Majeſty's 'Loyal Subjects, as if we his Majeſty's chief Governor intended to govern 'under his Majeſty, here, otherwiſe than by the known Laws of this Land 'of Ireland; and as if ſome of his Majeſty's Loyal Subjects ſhou'd ſtand in 'hazard of being diſturb'd and diſquieted in their juſt Liberties, and Proper-'ties, and other Rights due to them by Law: Which Calumnies have been 'heighten'd and encourag'd by ſome few fiery Spirits in the Pulpits, by ta-'king upon them to treat of Matters that do not lie within their Pro-'vince, &c. We therefore Publiſh and Declare, That we will, by the 'Grace of God, apply all our Care and Induſtry to yield and exact a per-'fect Obedience to his Majeſty's Commands; and to take diligent Care 'that all his Majeſty's Subjects within this Kingdom, of what Perſuaſion or 'Religion ſoever they be, ſhall be protected in their juſt Rights and Pro-'perties, due to them by Law, and in the free Exerciſe of their Religion; 'Provided they perſevere in their Duty and Allegiance to his Majeſty, 'without giving any Occaſion of Diſturbances to the Peace of the King-'dom, &c.' But theſe fair Pretenſions prov'd too much like the Promiſes of his Maſter; and they were not only leſs believ'd, but they were very ſhortly confuted by his own Practices, to the unexpreſſible Terror and Miſchief of the poor Proteſtants in that Kingdom. It is now time to return more immediately to England.

King James's Proceedings in England.

IV. 1. While things were thus prepared and diſpos'd in the diſtant Kingdoms of Scotland and Ireland, the like Meaſures, tho' with greater Cautions, were concerted to introduce the Romiſh Religion, and as a Sup port port of it, Arbitrary Power, in England it ſelf. It was natural to believe, that the vigorous Oppoſition the King had met the laſt Seſſions of Parliament, in his Deſign of ſetting up a Diſpenſing Power, and favouring Popery, wou'd have been ſufficient to deter him from that dangerous, if not chimerical Attempt. And indeed it is not eaſy to imagine, that a Prince rather gracious and good-natur'd, than either haughty or cruel, cou'd have fallen into the Deſire and Exerciſe of a Deſpotick Power, and ſo ſoon forgot what he had declar'd in his firſt Speech to his Council, That the Laws of England were able to make a King as Great and Happy as he cou'd deſire to be, if he had not been ſooth'd and elevated by Flatterers and Time-Servers; and perhaps over and above puſh'd on by treacherous and deſigning Men, who cou'd afterwards eaſily alledge, That what they did, was for the Good of the Nation. However, the King met with great Encouragement from ſome Men of all Profeſſions, whoſe Numbers were magnify'd upon all Occaſions. The Pulpits, tho' now more ſparing than ever, were not exempt from Time-Servers; particularly that of Rippon, where Dr. Cartwright the Dean, a Man puritanically educated, took the Liberty to give a right Notion of King James Promiſes, and in effect tells the World, 'That 'the King's Promiſes were free Donatives, and ought not be too ſtrictly 'examin'd or urg'd; and that they muſt leave his Majeſty to explain his 'own Meaning in them.' This Gloſs, as Dr. King tells us, ſo pleas'd his Majeſty, that he ſoon after rewarded the Author with the Biſhoprick of Cheſter, tho' very unfit for that Character; and ſhew'd in all his Actions, that he deſign'd to proceed accordingly: And this plauſible Humour ſoon run through the whole Party; whenever they were pinch'd, and under a Neceſſity of ſerving themſelves by the Aſſiſtance or Credulity of Proteſtants, they promis'd them fair, and declin'd no Terms with them; but when their Turn was ſerv'd, they would not allow them to mention any Promiſe, much leſs to challenge the Performance. 1686. Jac. 2. Ref. 27

In the firſt Place the King reſolv'd to have no other Sitting Parliament, till he cou'd manage and form this or a new one to his own Mind and Pleaſure; therefore he kept it on Foot by ſeveral Prorogations, for near two Years, as it were to try Experiments, and at length diſſolv'd it, as will be remember'd afterwards. In the mean time he likewiſe reſolv'd to have Weſtminſter-Hall entirely at his own Command, and fill'd only with thoſe Judges who ſhou'd aſſert his Diſpenſing Power, or in effect ſhou'd execute or break the Laws, when and how his Majeſty thought fit. To this End the King began a new Cuſtom call'd Cloſeting, which he practis'd with the old Judges, and ſeveral Members of Parliament, by which the Virtues, as well as the Frailties, of many Men were in Time ſufficiently diſcover'd: And before he wou'd make any new Judges, he enter'd into a profeſs'd Bargain with them, That they ſhou'd maintain his Prerogative of Diſpenſing with the Penal Laws and Teſt. The firſt Man the King attempted to perſuade, was Sir Thomas Jones, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, a Perſon who had been too obſequious to him in the Tryal of Mr. Corniſh, but now ſhew'd a great Steadineſs and Averſeneſs to his Majeſty's Inclination, and at laſt plainly told him, He cou'd not do it. The King anſwer'd, He wou'd have twelve Judges of his own Opinion. To which Sir Thomas briskly reply'd, That poſſibly he might find twelve Judges of his Opinion, but he cou'd ſcarce find twelve Lawyers of that Mind. Upon this and the like Backwardneſs in the Judges, on the 21ſt of April, Sir Thomas Jones, now mention'd, William Montague, Eſq; Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, Sir Job Charlton, one of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas, and Sir Edward Nevill, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, had all their Quietus: And in their Places, Sir Henry Bedingfield, one of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas, was ſworn Lord Chief Juſtice of the ſame Court; Sir Edward Atkyns, Removals among the Judges.

1686. Jac. 2. Reſ. 27

Atkyns, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, was ſworn Lord Chief Baron; Sir Edward Luitwich, Chief-Juſtice of Cheſter, was ſworn one of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas; and Richard Heath, Eſq; Serjeant at Law, and a Papiſt, was made one of the Barons of the Exchequer. Yet, upon the humble Petition of Sir Job Charlton, ſo diſplac'd, his Majeſty was pleas'd to conſtitute him Chief Juſtice of Cheſter.

About the ſame Time his Majeſty thought fit to make a Call of Serjeants at Law, among whom there was a Mixture: Sir John Holt Recorder of the City of London, Sir Ambroſe Philips, Chriſtopher Milton, Eſq; John Powell, Eſq; John Tate, Eſq; William Rawlinſon, Eſq; William Killingworth, Eſq; John Hodges, Eſq; Thomas Geers, Eſq; and George Hutchins, Eſq; who gave their Rings with this particular Motto, Deus, Rex, Lex. Farther Alterations. And the better to give the Reputation of Law to the Court, Sir John Holt and Sir Ambroſe Philips were made the King's Serjeants: But within a few Days, Chriſtopher Milton, a profeſs'd Papiſt, was Knighted and made one of the Barons of the Exchequer; Sir John Powell, one of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas, and Sir Thomas Powis Solicitor-General, in the Room of Mr. Heneage Finch, who had ſerv'd the Crown ſo faithfully. Not long after, his Majeſty was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon another Popiſh Lawyer, Richard Allibone of Gray's-Inn, Eſq; and to make him one of his Council at Law, and ſoon after a Judge. About the ſame Time, and in much the ſame Manner, his Majeſty was pleas'd to model his Privy-Council; for this Summer, the Earl of Powis, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, the Lord Bellaſis, and the Lord Dover, all known and zealous Romon Catholicks, were at once ſworn of his Majeſty's honourable Privy-Council; and ſoon after the new Earl of Tyrconnel was admitted to the ſame Honour. Two remarkable Biſhops were likewiſe made about the ſame Time, Dr. Thomas Cartwright beforemention'd, of Cheſter, and Dr. Samuel Parker of Oxford. From whence the Reader will eaſily form to himſelf proper Sentiments both of the Temper of the Court, and the Diſpoſition of the King.

King James's Court.

2. Surrounded with ſuch Courtiers, the King proceeded with all Vigour towards the Propagation and Eſtabliſhment of his own Religion, notwithſtanding his repeated and ſolemn Promiſes to ſupport the Church of England. His firſt Step was a general Toleration to all his Subjects, of which the Papiſts were chiefly to reap the Benefit; but this Toleration, being contrary to the eſtabliſh'd Laws of the Realm, cou'd not ſubſiſt, unleſs a more illegal Innovation was introduc'd to ſupport it under the Name of a diſpenſing Power, by the virtue of which every Thing might be effected. The diſpenſing Power ſet on foot. King Charles the Second was the firſt Engliſh Prince, perhaps, that ever aim'd at any Thing like a diſpenſing Power; firſt in the Year 1662, and again in 1672, when he endeavour'd for an Indulgence to the Diſſenters; but at both Times he was ſo handſomely and ſeaſonably check'd by his loyal Parliament, that he fairly and totally deſiſted, as has been formerly remember'd. Such a diſpenſing Power King James arrogated to himſelf, tho' of a far larger Extent: And how the firſt Steps towards it were reliſh'd by the Houſe of Commons, appears by their foremention'd Addreſs againſt the Popiſh Officers. Neither was it ſufficient for this Prince to aſſume the Right and Exerciſe of this Power; but ſuch was the Misfortune of England, that the Party about him wou'd have the Nation made to believe, That a Power in the King to diſpenſe with Law, was Law. To maintain which ſtrange Poſition, ſeveral Writers were employ'd; and the Obſervator, who had triumph'd in ſeveral Arguments, now wrote below himſelf. Theſe not being ſufficient, the new Judges, all but one, were prevail'd upon to give their Opinions directly for it, and in the military and mock Caſe of Sir

Edward Hale, to make it a general Rule in Law; 'First, That the Laws 'of England are the King's Laws. Secondly, That therefore it is an in- 'cident, inſeparable Prerogative of the King's of England, as of all other 'Sovereign Princes, to diſpenſe with all Penal Laws in particular Caſes, 'and upon particular neceſſary Reaſons. Thirdly, That of theſe Reaſons 'and Neceſſities the King is the ſole Judge:' And which is a Conſequence thereupon. 'Fourthly, That this is not a Truſt inveſted in, and granted to 'the King, but the ancient Remains of the Sovereign Power of the Kings 'of England, which never was yet taken from them, nor can be.' Thus by the Breath of a few mercenary Judges, in effect, the Laws, of England were baſely given up at once into the Power and Will of the King. 1686. Jac. 2. Reſ. 27 The Judges Opinion for it.

This mighty Point being in appearance gain'd, tho' not ſo ſatisfactorily as was deſired, the Roman Catholicks were not wanting in improving it to the utmoſt Advantage. The free and open Exerciſe of their Religion was ſet up every where; and Jeſuits Schools and Seminaries erected not only in London, but alſo in the moſt conſiderable Towns in the Nation. The Church of England had now but a precarious Title to the National Church, and began to ſee the impending Dangers, which, being encreas'd by the ſlaviſh Compliance of ſome few of her Members, now threatned the whole Body. Romiſh Candidates had already ſwallow'd up Eccleſiaſtical Preferments and Dignities in their Hopes and Expectations: Four Roman Catholick Biſhops were publickly conſecrated in the Royal Chapel, and diſpatch'd down, under the Title of Vicars Apoſtolical, to exerciſe their Epiſcopal Functions in their reſpective Dioceſes; and their Paſtoral Letters, directed to the Lay-Catholicks of England, were diſpers'd about the Countrey, and printed by the King's own Printer, with publick Licenſe: Their Regular Clergy appear'd in their Habits at Whitehall and St. James's, and made no Scruple to tell the Proteſtants, That they hop'd in a little time to walk in Proceſſion through Cheapſide. The Building of St. Paul's Cathedral was carry'd on with greater Vigor than before, in expectation that it wou'd in Time turn to the Benefit of the Papiſts. A mighty Harveſt of new Converts was now expected; and that Labourers might not be wanting, whole Flocks of Prieſts and Regulars were ſent from beyond Sea to reap it: In ſum, the only Step to Preferment was to be of the King's Religion, or a Promoter of it, ſince all important Affairs were manag'd in the Privy-Council by Catholicks, and ſome few others, whoſe Actions were more difficult to excuſe, or extenuate. The Increaſe of Popery.

Beſides the diſpenſing Power, another Project was ſet on foot to advance the Romiſh Cauſe, which was an Order by way of Letter, directed to the Proteſtant Biſhops, 'Prohibiting all the inferior Clergy from Preaching up- 'on controverted Points in Divinity;' which was look'd upon as forbidding them to defend their Religion in the Pulpit, when it was openly attack'd by the Romiſh Prieſts in their Sermons, and other Diſcourſes printed by Authority. This Order was taken from a Precedent in the Reign of Queen Mary, whoſe firſt Step ſhe made towards Popery, was to iſſue out a Proclamation, forbidding the Preaching upon controverted Points of Religion; for fear, as it was alledg'd, of raiſing Animoſities among the People. And as the Clergy were prohibited on one ſide, ſo they were threatned on the other with exacting upon them the full Value of their Firſt Fruits and Tenths, and bringing them into farther Miſchiefs and Inconveniencies. But this enſnaring Letter, and the attending Menaces, were ſo far from being regarded, that the Chief of the Clergy did more to vindicate the Doctrine of their own Church, and expoſe the Errors of that of Rome, both in their Sermons and Writings than ever had been done, either at Home or Abroad, ſince the Reformation; and in ſuch a Style, and with ſuch a mighty Force of Reaſon, as will be the Standard of Writing to ſucceeding Ages. And now the A Letter ſent to the Clergy. Their glorious Writings.

the Church of England Heroes, Stillingfleet, Tillotſon, Tenniſon, Wake, Patrick, Sharp, Sherlock, and ſeveral others, gain'd immortal Honour by their Pens, while the Proteſtant Diſſenters of all kinds, appear'd to the World almoſt like unconcern'd Spectators.

An Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion erected.

3. To check theſe and the like Champions, and to awe the whole Body of the Church of England, the King erected a new Court of Inquiſition, under the Name of a Commiſſion for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs: And, to blind the People, there were ſome Biſhops of the Church of England nominated as Commiſſioners; of whom one refus'd to act from the Beginning, and another excus'd himſelf, after he came to ſee where the Deſign of it was levell'd. This Commiſſion, as it appear'd, was a manifeſt Violation of the Laws of the Land; and, as if that had not been enough to mortify the Clergy of the Nation, there were ſome Roman Catholicks appointed Commiſſioners; and conſequently the Enemies of the Proteſtant Religion were become the Judges and Directors of a Proteſtant Church, both in its Doctrine and Diſcipline. At firſt the Commiſſion was directed to the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Jeffreys, Lord Chancellor of England, the Earl of Rocheſter, Lord High-Treaſurer, the Earl of Sunderland, Lord Preſident of the Council, the Biſhops of Durham and Rocheſter, and the Lord Chief Juſtice Herbert, or any Three of them, whereof the Lord Chancellor was always to be one; devolving the whole Care of Spiritual Affairs upon them, in the largeſt Extent that ever had been known in England.

The Subſtance of the Commiſſion.

The Tenor and Subſtance of this extraordinary Commiſſion was, 'That 'theſe Perſons were to exerciſe and execute, under the King, all manner 'of Juriſdictions and Pre-eminencies, touching or concerning any Spiritual 'or Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdictions within the Realm of England and Dominion 'of Wales, to viſit, reform, redreſs and amend all Abuſes, Offences, Con'tempts and Enormities whatever; which by the Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical 'Laws of this Realm might be lawfully corrected, redreſs'd and amended; 'empowering, authorizing and appointing them by virtue of his Prerogative Royal, to execute the Premiſes according to the Effect and Tenor 'of the Commiſſion. As alſo to enquire of all Offences, Contempts and 'Miſdemeanours, committed, or hereafter to be committed in any Coun'ty, City, Borough, or other Place exempt or not exempted, and the 'Offences to correct and puniſh by Cenſure of the Church. Alſo to 'ſearch for, and call before them, all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, of what Degree 'or Dignity ſoever; and to puniſh the Offenders, by depriving and ſuſpend'ing them from all Promotions Eccleſiaſtical, and all Functions in the 'Church. And for ſuch as ſhou'd be obſtinate and diſobedient, to puniſh 'them by Excommunication, Suſpenſion, Deprivation, or other Eccleſia'ſtical Cenſure. And farther, to ſend for all Statutes, Rules, Ordinances, 'Letters Patent, and Writings belonging to the Univerſities, Cathedrals, 'Collegiate-Churches, Colleges and Grammar-Schools, and all other Eccle'ſiaſtical Corporations, concerning their Erections and Foundations; and 'upon Examination of the ſaid Statutes, the ſame to correct, amend, and 'alter, and to devize and ſet down ſuch Orders and Statutes as they ſhall 'think meet and convenient, to be ratify'd and confirm'd by the King. 'And laſtly, to execute the Commiſſion, and every Branch and Part of it, 'notwithſtanding any Appellation, Provocation, Privilege or Exemption 'whatſoever.' And to all their Acts, Orders, Proceſſes, Decrees and Judgments, they were to affix a Seal, engraven with the Roſe and Crown, and the Letters J. II. R. and a Ring about it, containing theſe Words, Sigillum Commiſſariorum Regiæ Majeſtatis ad Cauſas Eccleſiaſticas; to be kept in the Cuſtody of Mr. Bridgeman their Secretary.

The Nature and Deſign of it.

The better to underſtand the Nature of this Commiſſion, and the pretended Legality thereof, it is to be obſerv'd, That King Henry the Eighth, by virtue of a full Supremacy, was enabled by Parliament not only to delegate Commiſſioners, but to appoint a Vicar-General to act in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, after a very abſolute manner. And by virtue of a Branch of an Act in the Firſt of Elizabeth, the Queen and her Succeſſors, were again empower'd to exerciſe the Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy, and ſhe accordingly erected a High-Commiſſion Court, both to reſtrain the Growth of Popery, and to ſupport the Eſtabliſh'd Church of England; which continu'd to the Beginning of the Long-Parliament in the Reign of King Charles the Firſt. Now becauſe the Commiſſioners did proceed in uſual Caſes to Fine, Impriſon, and Oppreſs, not only Popiſh Recuſants, but alſo other Diſſenters; therefore, 'For Repreſſing and Preventing of the aforeſaid Abuſes, Miſchiefs 'and Inconveniences,' the Parliament in the 17th Year of King Charles the Firſt, 'Repeal'd the ſaid Branch of the Firſt of Elizabeth, command-'ing, That no new Court ſhou'd be erected with the like Power, Juriſdi-'ction or Authority; and forbidding all Eccleſiaſtical Judges to proceed to 'Fine or Impriſon the King's Subjects, or tender the Oath Ex Officio.' The High-Commiſſion Court being thus put down, ſome Papiſts and ſome Diſſenters wou'd have wholly deny'd, that there was any Power remaining in the Church; and particularly alledg'd, 'That all manner of coercive Juriſ-'diction was taken from the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and other Ordina-'ries.' To obviate this Objection, there was another Act made in the 13th of Charles the Second, Intituled, An Act for Explanation of a Clauſe contain'd in an Act of Parliament made in the 17th Year of the late King Charles, &c. Reciting, 'That upon the ſaid Statute, ſome Doubt had been 'made, That all ordinary Power of Coercion and Proceedings in Cauſes 'Eccleſiaſtical were taken away, whereby the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice in 'Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical had been obſtructed;' it was therefore Enacted, 'That 'neither the ſaid Act, nor any thing therein contain'd, doth or ſhall take 'away any ordinary Power or Authority from any of the ſaid Archbiſhops, 'Biſhops, &c.' And farther Enacted, 'That the afore-recited Act of the '17th of Charles, and all the Matters and Clauſes therein contain'd (ex-'cepting what concerns the High Commiſſion Court, and the Erection of 'ſome ſuch-like new Court by Commiſſion) ſhall be, and is hereby repeal'd— 'Provided always, That neither this Act, nor any thing therein contain'd, 'ſhall extend or be conſtrued to revive or give Force to the ſaid Branch of 'the Statute in the firſt of Elizabeth, and mention'd in the 17th of Charles, 'but that the ſaid Branch of the Statute in the firſt of Elizabeth, ſhall 'ſtand and be repeal'd in ſuch ſort as if this Act had never been made.

Papiſt Pretences.

From this Act of the 13th of Charles the Second, the Popiſh Party now began to infer, 'That there was no other Power taken from the Eccleſia-'ſtical Commiſſioners, than that of Fining, Impriſoning, or tendering the 'Oath Ex Officio; That ſo much was ſuppreſs'd by the 17th of Charles the 'Firſt, and no more: That an Eccleſiaſtical Court exerciſing this Power, 'was put down, and the erecting the like for the Time to come ſtrictly 'forbidden; but that the Court now ſet up by King James, was not like 'to that, ſince it pretended not to Fine, or Impriſon, or tender the Oath 'Ex Officio, but kept within the Bounds of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures.' And farther, they boldly averr'd, 'That the Court held by his Majeſty's Eccle-'ſiaſtical Commiſſioners, was more legal than Doctors-Commons, and the 'Biſhops-Courts; the firſt being in the King's Name, and the other only 'in the Name of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops.' And thus the Papiſts ſupported by a King of their own Religion, worſted the Proteſtants with their own Weapons, and made uſe of thoſe very Statutes againſt them, which were chiefly deſign'd to diſcountenance Popery. But the Matter was ſo palpable, that the very granting of this new Commiſſion, was by many of the beſt Lawyers thought Illegal; and even the Creatures of the Court ſeem'd to be conſcious of it: For tho' it was granted in the Beginning of April, yet it was not open'd till four Months after, the Beginning of Auguſt following; and then it appear'd very ſtrange, that the Power of Excommunication, a pure Spiritual Act, ſhou'd be granted to mere Lay-Men; for the Quorum in the Commiſſion, as before hinted, were the Chancellor and any other Two. For theſe Reaſons, the cautious Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who was firſt nominated, totally refus'd to act in it; and the new Biſhop of Cheſter was put in, as a fitter Inſtrument for the common Deſign.

1686. Jac. 2. Ref. 27

The Biſhop of London order'd to ſuſpend Doctor Sharp.

4. The new Commiſſion being once open'd, and ſet on foot, the Commiſſioners ſoon ſhew'd the Extent of their Power, in the Suſpenſion of Dr. Compton, Biſhop of London. This active Prelate, by a Conduct worthy of his noble Birth, and his high Station in the Church, had acquired the Love and Eſteem of all the Proteſtant Churches at Home and Abroad; and therefore was more immediately the Mark of the Envy and Hatred of the Romiſh Party at Court. He had farther provok'd them by his brave Examination of the King's laſt Speech in Parliament; ſo that they ſeem'd to wait for an Occaſion to enoble the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion with ſuch an illuſtrious Sacrifice; and when ſuch an Occaſion was rather taken than given, in the Buſineſs of Dr. Sharp, at that time Rector of St. Giles, and Dean of Norwich, and afterwards Archbiſhop of York. This worthy Divine, admired for his great Talents in the Pulpit, taking Occaſion in ſome of his Sermons to vindicate the Church of England, in Oppoſition to the Errors of Popery; this, by the Court Emiſſaries was interpreted to be, 'The endeavouring to beget in the Minds of his Hearers an ill Opinion of 'the King and his Government, by inſinuating Fears and Jealouſies to diſ-'poſe them to Diſcontent, and to lead them into Diſobedience and Rebellion; 'and particularly, a Contempt of the Order about Preachers.' Upon which the King ſent a Letter to the Biſhop of London, expreſly Requiring and Commmanding him 'Forthwith to ſuſpend Dr. Sharp from farther 'Preaching in any Pariſh-Church or Chapel in his Dioceſe, until he had 'given him Satisfaction, and his farther Pleaſure be known herein.

This Letter was very ſhocking to the Biſhop of London, who perceiv'd that the Deſign was to forbid all Preaching againſt Popery, and the Effect of it might be to ſuſpend all the eminent Preachers in England: However, his Lordſhip endeavour'd to divert the Storm that threatned the Church and Clergy, and therefore he wrote a ſubmiſſive Letter to the Earl of Sunderland, to be communicated to the King, and made Dr. Sharp himſelf the Bearer of it to Hampton-Court; in which Letter he ſet forth, 'That he 'thought it his Duty to obey his Majeſty in whatſoever Commands he 'laid upon him, that he cou'd perform with a ſafe Conſcience: But in this 'he was to proceed according to Law, and as a Judge; and by the Law, 'no Judge condemns a Man before he has Knowlege of the Cauſe, and has 'cited the Party. However he had acquainted Dr. Sharp with his Maje-'ſty's Diſpleaſure, whom he found ſo ready to give all reaſonable Satisfa-'ction, that he had made him the Bearer of that Letter.' No Anſwer cou'd be obtain'd to this Letter of the Biſhop; and therefore two Days after Dr. Sharp carry'd his Petition to Windſor in his own Name, humbly repreſenting to the King, 'That ever ſince his Majeſty was pleas'd to give 'Notice of his Diſpleaſure againſt him, he had forborn the publick Ex-'ercile of his Function. And as he had endeavour'd to do the beſt Service 'he cou'd to his Majeſty, and his late Brother, in his Station; ſo he had 'not vented now in the Pulpit any Thing tending to Faction or Schiſm; 'and therefore pray'd that his Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to lay aſide his 'Diſpleaſure

His Letter to the King.

Dr. Sharpe's Petition.

'Diſpleaſure conceiv'd againſt him, and reſtore him to that Favour which 'the reſt of the Clergy enjoy'd under his gracious Goverment.' Yet ſtill his Petition had no Effect, and nothing cou'd ſatisfy the Popiſh Cabal but a Revenge upon the Biſhop of London, tho' he and his Family had been the moſt noted Loyaliſts in the Nation; and this Affair of Dr. Sharp was made uſe of as a plauſible Pretence to mortify him, and in his Perſon the whole Body of the Clergy. 1686. The Commiſſioners Proceedings againſt the Biſhop of London.

So when the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion was open'd, the Biſhop was cited to appear before the Commiſſioners ſitting in the Council-Chamber at White-Hall, which he did on the 4th of Auguſt, where he was treated in a manner unworthy of his Quality and high Station, without the Allowance of a Chair to ſit on. Chancellor Jeffreys directing his Speech to him, inform'd his Lordſhip, 'That the Lords there preſent had receiv'd Orders to inſpect 'all Eccleſiaſtical Affairs and Perſons, and had commanded him to call 'his Lordſhip before them, and therefore deſir'd his Lordſhip to give a di-'rect and poſitive Anſwer to his Queſtion, What the Reaſon was he did 'not ſuſpend Dr. Sharp when the King had ſent him expreſs Orders ſo to 'do, and had told him it was for Preaching ſeditiouſly and againſt the Go-'vernment.' To which the Biſhop reply'd, That it was true, he had receiv'd ſuch an Order, and that if he had done contrary to his Duty, it was his Ignorance, and not a wilfull Neglect; that he had been always ready to ſerve his Majeſty; but if in this Affair he had not comply'd, it was becauſe he was told he cou'd not legally do it. The Lord Chancellor anſwer'd, That his Lordſhip ought to know the Law, and that it was a Wonder he did not; however, that the King was to be obey'd, and therefore if his Lordſhip had any Thing to ſay, the Court was ready to hear him. Upon which the Biſhop deſir'd a Copy of the Commiſſion, and of his Charge, and an allowance of Time to make his Defence; for he was ignorant then of his Charge, and of conſequence unprovided for his Defence. To this the Chancellor reply'd, That if by deſiring a Copy of the Commiſſion his Lordſhip deſign'd to Quarrel with the Juriſdiction of the Court, he knew what further to ſay; otherwiſe, that as no Copy cou'd be granted, ſo it was unreaſonable for him to deſire it, ſince it might be had in every Coffee-Houſe for a Penny; and made no Queſtion but his Lordſhip had ſeen it. Here the Biſhop proteſted he had not ſeen it, or deſired it with any Intent to diſpute the Legality of the Court, but becauſe it was altogether new to him; and therefore he hop'd that ſomething might be found therein that might be advantagious or inſtructive to him, in order for his Anſwer: And then he deſir'd he might have the Privilege to read the Commiſſion himſelf, or at leaſt to hear it read. The Chancellor ſaid, It did not lye in his Power to grant that Requeſt of himſelf; and thereupon the Biſhop and all his Company had Orders to withdraw for a Quarter of an Hour. Returning again the Chancellor acquainted his Lordſhip, That the Commiſſioners were of Opinion, That his Requeſt was unreaſonable, ſince if every one that appear'd before them, ſhou'd challenge a Sight of their Commiſſion, it wou'd be too great a waſte of their Time, and they were Men of Buſineſs; and ſo he put the Queſtion again to the Biſhop, Why he did not obey the King? Here his Lordſhip alledg'd, That tho' it was but a ſhort Queſtion, it yet required more Words to anſwer; deſiring the Court withal to conſider, That he was a Peer, a Biſhop, and one that had a publick Truſt, and therefore was willing to behave himſelf as became a Perſon in thoſe Capacities. After which his Lordſhip inſiſting upon more Time, deſir'd till the firſt Day of the next Term; but that was judg'd unreaſonable, in regard the King's Buſineſs wou'd not admit of ſuch Delays; but at laſt they granted his Lordſhip only five Days, to the 9th of Auguſt.

His ſecond Hearing.

On which Day the Biſhop came to White-Hall with a noble Appearance; his Nephew the Earl of Northampton, his Brother Sir Francis Compton, his Brother-in-law Sir John Nicholas, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, who were deſirous to ſhew Honour to his Lordſhip's Perſon and Cauſe. He told the Chancellor, who was the Mouth of the Court, That he cou'd not meet with the Commiſſion, which had been told him was upon Record, and in every Coffee-Houſe, till laſt Night. The Chancellor was quick with him, and told his Lordſhip, That the Court wou'd admit no quarrelling with their Commiſſion; not being ſuch Fools to ſit there, if they were not well aſſur'd of the Legality of it. The Biſhop anſwer'd, That he had other Reaſons to deſire a Sight of the Commiſſion; for that, perhaps, it might not reach him as a Peer and a Biſhop, or, perhaps, not reach the particular Caſe; and therefore he inſiſted upon a longer Time to anſwer. This Demand was ſupported by Sir Thomas Clarges, who happening to be there preſent, ſaid loudly, Well put; The Biſhop ask'd nothing but what was reaſonable. The Commiſſioners, after a ſhort Conſultation, granted him a Fortnight longer; and at parting, the Chancellor made a ſort of an Excuſe to the Biſhop for what he had told him before, That the Commiſſion was to be ſeen in every Coffee-Houſe; alledging, He did not mean it, as if he thought his Lordſhip frequented ſuch Places, but intended it only to expreſs that the Commiſſion was publickly ſeen all the Town over. Beſides Sir Thomas Clarges, there was another Gentleman, ſuppos'd to be Sir J. Lowther of Lancaſhire, who as he was coming away in the Crowd ſaid, There are ſome who repreſent me as a Papiſt, but the contrary ſhall appear; I will not be aſham'd or afraid to vindicate my Lord Biſhop's Cauſe againſt the Commiſſioners themſelves.

His third Hearing.

At the Expiration of the Fortnight granted him, the Biſhop made his third Appearance with a great Attendance and Expectation; and after he had made a previous Apology, that no Miſinterpretations might be put upon his Words, he gave the Court to underſtand, that his Counſel had inform'd him, That their Proceedings were directly contrary to the Statute Law, which they were ready to make out. At which the Chancellor cry'd out with ſome Paſſion, We will not hear your Lordſhip, nor your Counſel neither in this Matter. The undaunted Prelate reply'd, That he was a Biſhop of the Church of England, and by all the Laws of the Chriſtian Churches in all Ages, and by the particular Laws of this Land, he was to be try'd by his Metropolitan and Suffragans; and therefore hop'd his Lordſhip wou'd not deny him the Right and Privilege of Chriſtian Biſhops: To which he was anſwer'd, That they had an original Juriſdiction, and this was queſtioning their Commiſſion. Then the Biſhop proceeded to his Plea, 'That what he was accus'd of, was before the Date of the 'Commiſſion, and they were only to cenſure Faults committed afterwards.' In anſwer to which, the Chancellor granted the Clauſe, but curſorily told his Lordſhip, 'There were general Clauſes that took in things paſt, as well 'as thoſe that were to come.' Then the Biſhop inſiſting again upon his own Right, as a Subject to the Laws of the Realm, and as a Biſhop to the Rights and Privileges of the Church, he gave in his Anſwer in Writing, and as he withdrew, left upon the Table Dr. Sharp's Petition, which the King had refus'd to accept. After ſome Time ſpent in Debate, the Biſhop return'd, and the Chancellor told them, 'They were not concern'd in Dr. 'Sharp's Petition; but if he deſir'd it, his own Anſwer ſhou'd be read:' The Biſhop anſwer'd in the Affirmative, and farther added, 'That what he 'did in this Matter was Juris peritorum Concilio; and the Law ſaid, That 'what was done by Advice of Council, ſhou'd not be interpreted to be 'done Maliciouſly or Obſtinately: That if a Prince required a Judge to 'execute a Command not agreeable to Law, it was his Duty Reſcribere &

'Reclamare Principi, which he had done in writing back to the Lord 'Preſident.' And in the next Place, 'That he had done in effect what 'the King commanded; for that he adviſ'd Dr. Sharp to forbear Preaching 'in his Dioceſe, which he had done accordingly. 1686. Jac. 2. Ref. 27

The Biſhops Anſwer being read, and he ask'd what he had more to ſay, he deſir'd that his Council might be heard. The Conſideration of which took up half an Hours Debate; after which, his Lordſhip being call'd in, his Counſel were admitted, which were four eminent Civilians, Dr. Oldiſh, Dr. Brice, Dr. Hedges, and Dr. Newton. They all made learned and fine Speeches, but chiefly inſiſted upon the Nature of Suſpenſion, 'Which they 'ſaid was a Judicial Act, in the Caſe of which Citation was required, Form 'of Proceeding, Judgment and Decree:' And Dr. Oldiſh took the Liberty to declare, 'That to act otherwiſe was contrary to the Law of God, 'the Law of Nature, the Laws of all Nations, in all Ages, and was ne'ver known in the World.' And Dr. Newton poſitively affirm'd, 'That 'the Biſhop was ſo far from being Diſobedient, that he was moſt Obedient 'to the King; for ſeeing he did Reſcribere, and did not hear of the farther 'Pleaſure of the King return'd, he ought to conclude, that the King was ſa'tisfy'd with what he had written, according to his Duty; and that the 'King had alter'd his Commands.' All this Time, Dr. Pinfold the King's Advocate ſtood at the Chancellor's Elbow, and took Notes; by which it was by all expected, that he ſhou'd make a Reply; but he was totally ſilent. After the Biſhop's Counſel had ended, his Lordſhip offer'd to the Court, That if through Miſtake he had err'd in any Circumſtances, he was ready to beg his Majeſty's Pardon, and ſhou'd be ready to make any Reparation. His Counſel pleads.

Notwithſtanding all Arguments, the Biſhop was order'd to make his fourth Appearance before them, ſix Days after, and to hear his Sentence, which was in theſe Words: 'Whereas Henry Lord Biſhop of London, has been 'conven'd before Us, for his Diſobedience and other Contempts mention'd 'in the Proceedings of this Cauſe; and the ſaid Biſhop being fully hear'd 'thereupon, We have thought fit, upon due Conſideration of the Matter, 'to proceed to this our definitive Sentence, Declaring, Decreeing and Pro'nouncing, That the ſaid Lord Biſhop of London, ſhall, for his ſaid Diſo'bedience and Contempt, be ſuſpended during his Majeſty's Pleaſure. And 'accordingly, We do, by theſe Preſents, Suſpend him the ſaid Lord Biſhop 'of London; Peremptorily Admoniſhing him, and Requiring him hereby, 'to abſtain from the Function and Execution of his Epiſcopal Office, and 'from all Epiſcopal and other Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, during the ſaid Su'ſpenſion, upon Pain of Deprivation and Removal from his Biſhoprick.' In purſuance of the full Execution of which Sentence, an Order was ſent to the Dean of St. Paul's, enjoining him to cauſe the ſaid Sentence to be affix'd upon the Door of the Chapter-Houſe, and the South Door of the ſame Cathedral. And immediately after, the Biſhops of Durham, Rocheſter and Peterborough were appointed Commiſſioners to exerciſe all manner of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction within the Dioceſe of London, during the Suſpenſion of the Biſhop. We know not who of this new Court voted for or againſt this Suſpenſion; only we are aſſured from the Biſhop of Rocheſter, in his Letter to the Earl of Dorſet, that he himſelf twice gave his poſitive Vote for the Biſhop's Acquittal. As to Dr. Sharp, the firſt Cauſe of this Proſecution, he was likewiſe by theſe Commiſſioners formally Suſpended; but, in pretended Mercy, was ſhortly after reſtored to the Exercile of his Function. His fourth Appearance, and Suſpenſion. Dr. Sharp ſuſpended.

King James's Standing Army.

eſtabliſhing Popery, as we are told, were continually repreſenting to his Majeſty the great Progreſs the French King had lately made in the Converſion of his Proteſtant Subjects, by the ſhort Arguments of his Military Miſſionaries, and made him ſenſible, how precarious his Diſpenſing Power wou'd be, unleſs he had a ſtronger Support than the Opinion of his Judges in Weſtminſter-Hall. The King, who was eaſily led into any Project that promis'd the Security and Advancement of his Religion, aſſembled all his Forces, to the Number of about fifteen thouſand Men, on Hounſlow-Heath, between London and Windſor, and caus'd a Chapel to be erected at his Head Quarters, where Maſs was publickly ſaid every Day. Here his Majeſty entertain'd himſelf ſeveral Days in this Summer, and took great Delight in his Regular Camp, which daily brought great Numbers from all Parts to view and viſit the ſame, which next the King was under the Command of the Earl of Feverſham, who had the Title of Lieutenant General. Tho' at firſt this ſmall Army conſiſted chiefly of Proteſtants, having but few Popiſh Officers of Diſtinction, ſuch as the Duke of Berwick, the Earl of Dumbarton, the Lords Dover and Mongomery, Colonel Richard Hamilton, Lieutenant Colonel Sackvile, &c. Nevertheleſs it began to create a Jealouſy in a People who were never us'd to ſee Encampments in Time of Peace; and they were particularly apprehenſive that the Proteſtants in this Army might join with the Romaniſts in advancing the King's Cauſe; it being the Belief and Duty of Soldiers, blindly to execute the Commands of their Leaders.

Mr. Johnſon's Addreſs to the Proteſtant Soldiers.

To obviate which Danger, Mr. Samuel Johnſon, a notable Clergy-Man more than once mention'd, notwithſtanding his former Sufferings, took the Courage to write An Addreſs to the Engliſh Proteſtants in King James's Army, in theſe Words, 'Gentlemen, next to the Duty we owe to God, 'which ought to be the principal Care of Men of your Profeſſion, who 'carry your Lives in your Hands, and often look Death in the Face, in the 'Service of your Native Countrey, wherein you drew your firſt Breaths, 'and breath a free Engliſh Air: Now I deſire you to conſider how you 'will comply with theſe two main Points, by engaging in the preſent Ser-'vice. Is it in the Name of God for his Service, that you have join'd 'your ſelves with Papiſts? Who indeed muſt fight for the Maſs-Book, 'but will burn the Bible, and who ſeek to extirpate the Proteſtant Reli-'gion with Your Swords, becauſe they cannot do it with their Own: And 'will you be Aiding and Aſſiſting to ſet up Maſs-Houſes, to erect that 'Kingdom of Darkneſs and Deſolation amongſt us, and train up all our 'Children to Popery? How can you do theſe things, and call your ſelves 'Proteſtants? What Service can you do your Countrey, by being under 'the Command of French and Iriſh Papiſts, and by bringing your Nation 'under a Foreign Yoke? Will you help them to make forcible Entry into 'the Houſes of your Countrey-Men, under the Name of Quartering, con-'trary to Magna Charta, and Petition of Right? Will you be aiding and 'aſſiſting to all the Murders and Outrages which they ſhall commit by 'their void Commiſſions, which were declared Illegal, and ſufficiently blaſt-'ed by both Houſes of Parliament; if there had been any Need of it? For 'it was very well known before, That a Papiſt cannot have a Commiſſi-'on, but by Law is utterly diſabled and diſarm'd. Will you exchange your 'Birth-Right of Engliſh Laws and Liberties, for Martial and Club-Law; 'and help to deſtroy all others, only at laſt to be eaten up your ſelves? If I 'know you well, as you are Engliſh Men, you hate and ſcorn theſe things. 'Therefore be not unequally yok'd with idolatrous and bloody Papiſts: 'Be valiant for the Truth, and ſhew your ſelves Men. The ſame Con-'ſiderations are humbly offer'd to all Engliſh Sea-Men, who have been the 'Bulwark of this Nation, againſt Popery and Slavery, ever ſince 1588.

The

The Tendency of this Addreſs was too fatal to the King's Deſigns to be left unpuniſh'd; therefore Mr. Johnſon being try'd in Trinity Term at the King's Bench before the Lord Chief Juſtice Herbert, &c. For publiſhing two moſt ſcandalous and ſeditious Libels, to ſtir up his Majeſty's Subjects to Rebellion, he receiv'd this Sentence the next Term; 'That he ſtand in 'the Pillory three ſeveral Times; firſt in Weſtminſter, next at Charing-Croſs, and laſtly at the Royal-Exchange; That he pay a Fine of five hun-'dred Marks; and that he be whipt from Newgate to Tyburn.' There is no Doubt but his Julian, and his former Practices were remember'd before this ignominious Sentence paſs'd againſt him: But being a Clergy-Man, out of a real or pretended Reſpect to the Gown, he was order'd to be Degraded before theſe Puniſhments were to be inflicted upon him. Of which Affair, we have this Account from Authority; 'November the 20th, This Day 'Samuel Johnſon Clerk, lately convicted of high Miſdemeanours in the 'Court of King's Bench, and adjudg'd for the ſame to ſtand in the Pillory, 'and to be whipt from Newgate to Tyburn, was brought before the Right 'Reverend Fathers in God the Lord Biſhop of Durham, the Lord Biſhop 'of Rocheſter, and the Lord Biſhop of Peterborough, Commiſſioners ap-'pointed by his Majeſty, to exerciſe all manner of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction 'within the Dioceſe of London, during the Suſpenſion of the Lord Biſhop 'of London, who were met, with ſeveral of the moſt eminent Divines of 'the City, in the Chapter-Houſe of St. Paul's; where the ſaid Johnſon, ac-'cording to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, in a full Court, receiv'd Sentence of 'Degradation; and was Degraded and Deveſted accordingly, and deliver'd 'over as a mere Lay-Perſon, into the Hands of the Secular Officer, to un-'dergo the Puniſhments above mention'd.' As to the Whipping, contrary to the Account in his Life, the cruel part of it was conſiderably mitigated by the private Aſſiſtance of his Friends, who by Money and good Management got him reliev'd as much as cou'd be expected in theſe ſevere Times. However, it made a ſtrong and unuſual Impreſſion upon the Minds of the People, and the Seeds ſown in the Addreſs to the Soldiers took deeper Root, and very much promoted that great Defection which happen'd two Years after in the King's Army.

His ſevere Puniſhment for it.

2. Beſides Mr. Johnſon's, there were ſeveral other Proſecutions this Year, and firſt that of the famous Miles Prance, ſo often mention'd in the laſt Book, who this Summer was brought to the King's Bench to be try'd upon an Information exhibited againſt him, 'For Wilful and Malicious 'Perjury, in the Evidence he gave at the Tryals of Green, Bury and Hill, 'relating to the Murther of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey;' to which the Priſoner, without Heſitation, pleaded Guilty. About a Month after he was again brought to the King's Bench, where he declares his hearty Sorrow and Repentance for his heinous Offence, and then receiv'd this Sentence, 'That 'he pay a Fine of an hundred Pounds; That he be brought to all the Courts 'of Weſtminſter with a Paper on his Head declaring his Offence; and that 'he ſtand three times in the Pillory, firſt before Weſtminſter-Hall, next 'at the Royal Exchange, and laſtly at Charing-Croſs; and that he alſo be 'whipt from Newgate to Tyburn, and be committed in Execution till he 'paid his Fine.' Only the Whipping Part of his Puniſhment was, for his Confeſſion and Submiſſion, remitted. It has been believ'd and aſſerted that his owning himſelf guilty was only to mitigate his Puniſhment; but however it was, a conſiderable Time after, without any appearing Inducement, he made a voluntary and large Confeſſion of his Crimes in Writing, and in expreſs Terms declar'd all the material Parts of his Narrative and Depoſitions to be abſolutely falſe, and chiefly the Effects of Fear and Cowardice.

The Proſecution of Miles Prance.

Of Mr. Whitaker.

Beſides this Proſecution, we ſhall juſt mention two more, before we proceed to other Matters; and firſt, Mr. Edward Whitaker had been convicted in Eaſter-Term four Years before, for juſtifying the Rebellion of Forty One, and the Murther of King Charles the Firſt, and flying for the ſame, and abſconding ever ſince. Whereupon Mr. Attorney-General, in this Michaelmas-Term, mov'd for Judgment againſt him; and the Court adjudg'd him, 'To pay a Fine of a Thouſand Marks, and remain in Priſon (when 'taken) till the ſame be paid.' Soon after Mr. Attorney-General mov'd the Court of King's-Bench for Judgment againſt George Speake Eſq; convicted For a Riot, and for Reſcuing John Trenchard Eſq; from his Majeſty's Meſſengers, who had a Warrant to apprehend him for High Treaſon. Upon which the Court adjudg'd him, 'To pay a Fine of two thou-'ſand Marks.

And Mr. Speake.

The King's Management of his Courtiers.

3. Towards the latter End of this Year, it more plainly appear'd how zealous the King was in bringing over Proteſtants to his own Religion. He had not only cloſeted his Judges and chief Officers, upon the Queſtion of the Penal Laws and Teſt, but now he more warmly ſolicited his prime Miniſters to be reconcil'd to the Church of Rome. He firſt undertook to manage the Earl of Sunderland, who was look'd upon then to be more than ordinary obſequious to his Majeſty's Deſire, and to make his loweſt Obeyſance at the Popiſh Altar, tho' he did not ſeem willing to be formally Reconcil'd, as the Term was, to the Catholick Church. What the Tenor of that Diſcourſe was which the King had with him was never publickly known; but however Father Petre, the King's Confeſſor, thought fit to magnify the Earl's Obedience, at a Meeting with the Jeſuits; particularly adding, That it was neceſſary for him as yet to appear a Proteſtant, for weighty Reaſons of State.

Over and above the Tye of Affinity, and the grateful Remembrance of paſt Services, the King had a particular Affection and Eſteem for the Earl of Rocheſter his Brother in-law, on whom therefore he had beſtow'd that noble Place of Lord High Treaſurer of England, upon his firſt Advancement to the Throne: Yet it ſeems, nothing cou'd maintain the Earl in this Poſt, but the changing his Religion, and embracing that of the King's, which, by this time, was become the main if not only ſtep to Preferment. His Lordſhip being preſs'd and tir'd out by the King's Solicitations, at length told his Majeſty, That to let him ſee it was not through any Prejudice of Education or Obſtinacy that he perſevered in his Religion, he conſented to hear ſome Proteſtant Divines diſpute with his Popiſh Prieſts, and wou'd ſide with the Conquerors. Upon which the King readily appointed a Conference to be held at White-Hall, at which his Majeſty himſelf, and ſeveral Perſons of Honour were preſent with the Earl of Rocheſter. The Proteſtant Champions were Dr. Simon Patrick, a Perſon of a clear Head and great Reading, and Dr. William Jane, a Man of deep Learning, and famous for Polemick Divinity. Thoſe on the Popiſh ſide, were one Gifford, a Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Mr. Tilden, who having turn'd Roman Catholick at Lisbone, went under the Name of Dr. Godden: And the Subject of their Diſpute was, The Rule of Faith, and The proper Judge in Controverſy. The Conference was very long; and at laſt the Romiſh Doctors were preſs'd with ſo much Strength of Reaſon and Authority, that they were forc'd to quit the Field to their Antagoniſts. Whereupon the Earl of Rocheſter openly declar'd, That the Victory that the Proteſtant Divines had gain'd, made no Alterations in his Mind, being before-hand convinc'd of the Truth of his Religion, and firmly reſolv'd never to forſake it. His Majeſty going off abruptly and diſcontented, was heard to ſay, He never ſaw a Bad Cauſe ſo Well, or a Good One ſo Ill maintain'd.

A Conference held about Religion.

I have been further aſſur'd by a private Hand, that in the latter end of the Diſpute, the Romiſh Prieſts being nonpluſs'd by a particular hard Queſtion put by the contary Side, deſir'd firſt an Hour's, and then a Week's time to conſider for an Anſwer; upon which the King in a Paſſion ſhou'd bid them go home, and conſider their whole Lives. 1686. Jac. 2. Reſ. 27

Tho' this Conference prov'd triumphant on the Proteſtant Side, it ſoon turn'd to the Prejudice of the Proteſtant Intereſt: For the Jeſuits were ſo exaſperated againſt the Lord Treaſurer for his ſteadineſs in this Caſe, that one of them ſaid, That Lord muſt be Anathematiz'd; and that the King cou'd never proſper while ſuch an Heretick was near him. So within a few Days after, about the end of December, the King ſent to the Earl for his White-Staff, his Commiſſion of High-Treaſurer; which he immediately reſign'd: And ſoon after, his Majeſty was pleas'd to conſtitute John Lord Bellaſis, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Henry Lord Dover, Sir John Ernley, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Sir Stephen Fox, Commiſſioners for Executing the Office of Lord High-Treaſurer of England. But to alleviate the Loſs of the Treaſury, his Majeſty thought fit to aſſign to the Earl of Rocheſter an Annuity of five thouſand Pounds per Annum, upon the Poſt-Office: Which Bounty ſo engag'd his Lordſhip, that he afterwards went over to Holland to ſupport the King's Intereſt there, and to do him what reaſonable Service he cou'd. But there was leſs Care taken of the Elder Brother, the Earl of Clarendon, who not only loſt his Government in Ireland, as is already remember'd, but his Privy Seal in England; in whoſe laſt Place his Majeſty was pleas'd to conſtitute Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour to be Lord Privy-Seal. Beſides the diſplacing of the two Brothers, ſeveral other Proteſtants of Diſtinction were cloſſeted and remov'd from their Employments, either for their Religion, or their Non-Compliance with his Majeſty's Deſires. In ſum, the King drove on his Religious Deſigns with ſo rapid a Courſe, that ſeveral of the Roman Catholicks complain'd of the violent Methods, and the impolitick Conduct of the leading Men of their Party: And it was obſerv'd, as the ſtill Sea is often fore-runner of a Storm, ſo the moſt diſcerning amongſt them began to ſuſpect a ſudden Change from the quiet and calm Behaviour of the Proteſtants, in general.

The Earls of Rocheſter and Clarendon both diſplac'd.

4. The governing Party about the King was ſo fond of making a Shew of their imaginary Trophies, that towards the End of this Year, the Earl of Caſtlemain, formerly try'd for his Life, was diſpatch'd to Rome in Quality of Extraordinary Ambaſſador, where he made his Publick Entry with a magnificent Train, and moſt ſplendid Equipage. His Deſign and Inſtructions were, 'To reconcile the three Kingdoms of England, Scotland 'and Ireland, to the Holy See, from which, for more than an Age, they 'had fallen off by the Northern Hereſy.' Pope Innocent the Eleventh receiv'd his Embaſſy as a Perſon who ſaw further than thoſe who ſent it. For the Ambaſſador had but a cold Reception from his Holineſs; and none of the Cardinals, but thoſe of a particular Faction, took any farther Notice of him, than what they were oblig'd by Form and good Manners. The Court of Rome conſiſted of too refin'd Politicians to be impos'd upon by Shew and Noiſe, and were too well acquainted with England to expect great Advantages from ſuch haſty ill-tim'd Advances as were made to them. Beſides this Pope being not only ſtrongly prepoſſeſs'd in Favour of the Houſe of Auſtria; but having an old Averſion to the French, and a freſh Reſentment againſt them, on the Account of the Regale and the Bombarding of Genoa, he was not over-fond of an Embaſſy from a Prince who he thought was in an Intereſt he wiſh'd to ſee humbled. Caſtlemain had ſeveral Audiences of the Pope, but to little effect; for whenever he began to talk of Buſineſs, his Holineſs had a Fit of coughing at command, to free himself from the Ambassador's Conversation. These Audiences and Coughings continu'd from time to time, and became the Subject of Diversion to all, but a particular Faction. At length Castlemain was advis'd to threaten to be gone; at which the old Father was so little concern'd, when they told him of it, that he answer'd with his usual Coldness, Well, since he will be gone, tell him he had best to rise early in the Morning, and rest himself at Noon; for in these Countries it's dangerous to travel in the Heat of the Day.

An Embaſſy to Rome.

But with little Success.

In the main, King James met with nothing but Mortification at Rome, in the Person of his Ambassador, whom he soon after recall'd; being able to obtain of the Pope but two inconsiderable Things, namely, a License for the Marshal D'Humiere's Daughter to marry to her Uncle; and the other a Dispensation of the Statutes of the Jesuits Order, that Father Petre might enjoy a Bishoprick; the Want of which was suppos'd to be the Reason of the Vacancy of the Archbishoprick of York. As to the Supplies which Castlemain had private Orders to ask, his Holiness excus'd himself upon the Account of the vast Sums he gave the Emperor and the Venetians, to carry on the War against Turkish Infidels. Notwithstanding the Pope's Coldness, the Jesuits in Rome, paid the highest Respect to this Ambassador, which did him no Service with the Old-man; for his Holiness and that Order, were never hearty Friends. They entertain'd him in their Seminaries, with the greatest Magnificence; and nothing was wanting in Nature or Art, to grace his Reception. All their Stores of Sculpture, Painting, Poetry and Rhetorick, seem'd to have been exhausted upon this Entertainment. And tho' all the Inscriptions and Emblems center'd upon the Triumph of the Romish Religion, and the Ruin of Heresie in England; yet Care was taken, not to omit such particular Trophies and Devises as were adapted to their new acquired Liberty of setting up their publick Schools at London.

The Deaths of Archbishop Dolben,

This Year there dy'd three venerable Prelates, and first Dr. John Dolben, Archbishop of York, who had his Education in Christ-Church in Oxford, where he for some Time became an Officer in the Army of King Charles the First, during the Civil Wars, and a particular Support to the Church of England when in the lowest Ebb. After the Restauration he had several Honours deservedly conferr'd upon him; being a Man of an open, generous and noble Disposition, and withal of a natural, bold and happy Eloquence in the Pulpit: And as he resembled his Uncle, the famous Bishop Williams, in the Greatness of his Parts and Abilities, so by a kind of an Hereditary Right, he succeeded him in his Preferments, the Deanery of Westminster, and the Archbishoprick of York. The next was Dr. John Fell, Bishop of Oxford, educated in the same College, a particular Friend to the other, likewise an Officer in the Garrison, and a prime Assistant with him in securing the Remains of the Church of England. Upon the King's Return, he was made Dean of Christ-Church, and by degrees became the grand Restorer of the Exercises, Disputations, Morals, Ceremonies, Habits, Privileges, and whatever else might conduce to the Discipline and Glory of the University; and likewise became a most noble Benefactor to his own famous College, where he display'd both his Piety and his Munificence, and shew'd himself admirable in training up the Sons of the Nobility. He was eleven Years Bishop of Oxford, where he spent his Time in Celibacy, of an unspotted Life, and unblemish'd Reputation, and was the Publisher, or perhaps the Author of all but the first of those excellent Books said to be written by the Author of the Whole Duty of Man. The third was Dr. John Pearson, Bishop of Chester, a Norfolk Man by Birth, by Education of the University of Cambridge, where he was first admitted in King's-College. Retiring to London during the great Troubles, in the Year 1660, he return'd to Cambridge, where he was was firſt made Maſter of Jeſus-College, then Margaret-Profeſſor of Divinity, and Maſter of Trinity-College; from whence he was laſtly remov'd to the Biſhoprick of Cheſter, which See he fill'd with great Honour and Reputation: For beſides his Preaching, he ſhew'd himſelf a Perſon of very great and deep Learning, and his Works are highly valuable; his Expoſition upon the Creed is a famous Body of Divinity, and his Hiſtorical and Chronological Diſſertations, are written with that Accuracy and Judgment, that they have been admired and quoted by the moſt curious and learned Men in foreign Countries. How great a Loſs the Church and the Publick ſuſtain'd by the Death of theſe three Prelates, will be the better known when we remember that the Archbiſhoprick was kept vacant during the greateſt Part of this Reign, and the Biſhopricks of Oxford and Cheſter were fill'd up by ſuch Time-Servers as Parker and Cartwright. 1686. Jac. 2. Ref. 27

After theſe Divines, we ſhall take notice of the Deaths of three conſiderable Stateſmen, and firſt of Arthur Anneſley, Earl of Angleſey, of Ireland by Birth, but his Education chiefly in England, where after he had join'd with the Long-Parliament, Cromwell and his Party, he became ſo ſerviceable in the Reſtauration, that the King not only made him a Baron and an Earl, but likewiſe Lord Privy-Seal for ſeveral Years, as is already remember'd. He was a Man of deep Politicks, very ſubtle and reſerv'd in the Management of his Affairs, of more than ordinary Parts, and one who had the Command both of a ſmooth and a keen Pen. He was alſo much converſant in Books, and in Matters of Theology appear'd a Calviniſt, but the Encouragement he gave to Perſons of very different Perſuaſions, made it doubtful to many, where to fix his Religion: He was coming into Favour with the preſent King James, when he was taken away by Death, after he had acted the Politician more than Forty Five Years. The other two were own Brothers, and Sons to Thomas Lord Coventry, Keeper of the Great Seal of England, and mention'd in the laſt Volume: The Elder was Henry Coventry, brought up to the Civil Law in the Univerſity of Oxford, who after he had been a great Sufferer in the Royal Cauſe, upon the King's Return was made one of the Grooms of his Bed-Chamber, and afterwards employ'd with the Lord Holles to compleat the Treaty of Breda; and after other Services, he was rewarded with the Office of Secretary of State, which in eight Years Time he reſign'd, and at laſt dy'd in Retirement. He fill'd his Place with Honour and Reputation, but his Memory ſuffers by being concern'd in the Breach of the Triple League, ſo often mention'd in the laſt Book. The other Brother was William Coventry, who was likewiſe educated in Oxford, and made Doctor of the Civil Law, who having improv'd himſelf by Travelling during the Civil Wars, at the Reſtauration was honour'd with Knighthood, made a Privy-Counſellor, and had ſeveral Employments beſtow'd upon him. He diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by that notable Book call'd, The Character of a Trimmer, thought to be compos'd by the Marquiſs of Hallifax, a Book, tho' liable in ſome Paſſages, undoubtedly written with a Maſterly Pen. At his Death he generouſly gave Five Thouſand Pounds for the Relief of the French Proteſtants, and the Redemption of the Captives at Algiers.

VI. 1. We cannot better introduce the new Year $168\frac{6}{7}$, than with a remarkable Letter, never yet publiſh'd, written in Latin from a Jeſuit of Liege, to a Brother of his at Friburg, which gives a curious Account of the religious Affairs in England. The Letter is dated Feb. 2^{d}, $168\frac{6}{7}$, and runs thus in Engliſh: 'It is wonderful to ſee King James's great Affection to 'our Society: He wiſh'd Proſperity to this whole College, by the Reve-'rend Father the Provincial, and earneſtly recommended himſelf to our 'Prayers. Upon Father John Keynes's Return into England, he gave him 'a moſt

'a moſt gracious Reception (while Earls and Dukes were commanded for 'ſome Hours to wait for Admittance) with whom in the Queen's Preſence, 'he diſcours'd with all Familiarity: He ask'd him, How many Candidates 'for Orders he had, and how many Students? And upon the Provincial's 'Anſwer to his Majeſty, who was very urgent with him, That of the former, 'and of the latter, he had above Fifty; he reply'd, There wou'd be Occa- 'ſion for double or treble that Number, to effect what he deſign'd for that 'Society's Performance; and order'd that they ſhou'd be all exercis'd in 'the Art of Preaching; For now, ſays he, England has need of ſuch.

'I do not doubt but you have heard, that the King writing to Father 'de la Chaiſe, the French King's Confeſſor, concerning the Affairs of the 'Houſe among the Walloons, declar'd, That whatever was done to the Eng- 'liſh Fathers of that Houſe, he wou'd look upon as done to Himſelf. Fa- 'ther Clare, Rector of the ſame Houſe, being arriv'd at London to treat 'of that Matter, got an eaſy Acceſs to the King, and as eaſily gain'd his 'Point. The King himſelf forbid him to kneel and kiſs his Hand, accord- 'ing to Cuſtom, ſaying, Reverend Father, you have indeed once kiſs'd my 'Hand; but if I had known then, as I do now, that you were a Prieſt, I 'wou'd rather my ſelf, Father, have kneel'd down and kiſs'd your Hand. 'After he had finiſh'd his Buſineſs, in a familiar Converſation, his Majeſty told this Father, That he wou'd either convert England, or die a Martyr; 'and he had rather die the next Day and convert it, than reign twenty 'Years piouſly and happily, and not effect it. Finally, he call'd Himſelf 'A SON OF THE SOCIETY, of whoſe good Succeſs, he ſaid, he was as glad as 'of his own. And it can ſcarcely be expreſs'd how much Gratitude he 'ſhew'd, when it was told him, That he was made Partaker, by the moſt 'Reverend our Provincial, of all the Merits of the Society; out of which he 'is to nominate one for his Confeſſor; but hitherto it is not known who 'it will be: Some report that it will be the Reverend Father the Provin- 'cial, but ſtill there is no Certainty of that. Many are of Opinion, that 'Father Edward R. Petre, who is chiefly in Favour with the King, will 'obtain an Archbiſhoprick, but more believe it will be a Cardinal's Cap. 'To him has been granted, within this Month or two, all that Part of the 'Palace, in which the King us'd to reſide when he was Duke of York, 'where there is not a Day, but you may ſee I know not how many 'Courtiers waiting to ſpeak to his Eminence, for ſo they ſay he is call'd. For 'the King adviſes with him, and with many Catholick Lords, who have the 'chief Places in the Kingdom, to find a Method to propagate the Faith with- 'out Violence. Not long ſince ſome of theſe Lords objected to the King, That 'they thought he made too much Haſte to eſtabliſh the Faith. To whom 'he anſwer'd, I am growing old, and muſt take LARGE STEPS; elſe, if 'I ſhould happen to die, I might perhaps leave you in a worſe Condition 'than I found you. When they ask'd him, Why then he was ſo little 'concern'd about the Converſion of his Daughters, who were the Heirs 'of the Kingdom? he anſwer'd, God will take Care of that; leave the 'Converſion of my Daughters to me: Do you, by your Example, convert 'your Tenants and others to the Faith.

'He has Catholick Lord Lieutenants in moſt Counties; and we ſhall ſhort- 'ly have Catholick Juſtices of the Peace in almoſt all Places. We hope al- 'ſo, that our Affairs will have good Succeſs at Oxford. In the Publick 'Chapel of the Vice-Chancellor, who is a Catholick, there is always one 'of our Divines, who has converted ſome of the Students to the Faith. 'The Biſhop of Oxford himſelf ſeems to be a great Favourer of the Catho- 'lick Faith; he propos'd to the Council, "Whether it did not ſeem to be "expedient, that at leaſt one College ſhou'd be granted to the Catholicks "at Oxford, that they might not be forc'd to ſtudy beyond Sea at ſuch great " great Expences;" but it is not yet known what Anſwer he had. The 1686/7.

' ſame Biſhop, having invited two of our Brethren, together with ſome of Jac. 2.
' the Nobility, drank the King's Health to a certain Heretick Lord who Reſ. 27
' was in Company, Wiſhing his Majeſty good Succeſs in all his Undertakings: Adding alſo, That the Religion of the Proteſtants in England did not ſeem to him in a better Condition, than Buda was before it was taken; and that they were next to Atheiſts that defended that Faith. Many embrace the true Religion, and four of the moſt conſiderable Earls have lately made publick Profeſſion of it. Father Alexander Keynes, the Provincial's Nephew, to whom is committed the Care of the Chapel belonging to the Elector of Palatine's Envoy, is continually taken up in ſolving and anſwering the Queſtions of Hereticks who doubt of their Faith, of whom you may ſee two or three together walking by the Chapel Door, continually diſputing about ſome Point of Religion. As to Prince George, it is yet uncertain what Religion he profeſſes. We gradually begin to get Footing in England: We teach human Learning at Lincoln, Norwich and York; and at Worceſter we have a Publick Chapel, protected by a Guard of the King's Soldiers; and we are to buy ſome Houſes in the Town of Wiggan in Lancaſhire. The Catholick Intereſt grows very ſtrong; and at ſome Churches, granted to the Catholicks, upon Holy-Days there are often counted fifteen Hundred preſent at the Sermon. At London alſo our Buſineſs is carry'd on with the ſame good Succeſs: Sermons are preach'd upon every Holy-Day, and there are ſo many that frequent the Chapels, that they are not big enough to hold them. Two of our Society Dormer and Bertue, preach continually before the King and the Queen; Father Edward Neville, before the Queen Dowager; Father Alexander Keynes, in the Chapel aforeſaid; others in other Chapels. There are many Houſes bought in the Savoy, near Somerſet-Houſe, which is the Queen Dowager's Palace, towards the Erecting the firſt College in London, for about eighteen thouſand Florins; and they are hard at work to bring them to the Form of a College, that a School may be open'd before Eaſter.

' A Catholick Lord Lieutenant is ſhortly to go over to Ireland, becauſe the King cannot be ſatisfy'd with any other to eſtabliſh the Catholick Intereſt in that Kingdom. The Parliament will certainly ſit in this Month of February, of whom his Majeſty is reſolv'd to ask three Things: " Firſt, That by a General Act all the Catholick Peers may be admitted to " ſit in the Upper-Houſe: Secondly, That the Teſt may be aboliſh'd: " And, Thirdly, which is the chief Point, That all Penal-Laws againſt " Catholicks ſhou'd be abrogated." And that he may the better obtain theſe Things, he deſigns to let them all know, That he is reſolv'd to turn out all thoſe who will not heartily act for the obtaining of them; and likewiſe Diſſolve the Parliament. At which Reſolution ſome Hereticks being terrify'd, came to a certain Earl to adviſe with him what might be done; to whom he anſwer'd, The King's Mind is ſufficiently known; what he has once ſaid, he will certainly perform: If you love your ſelves, ſubmit to the King's Pleaſure. There is to be a great Preparation of War at London, and a Fleet of above a hundred Men of War is to be fitted out againſt the Spring, but againſt whom it is uncertain. The Dutch are under great Apprehenſions; but for what Reaſon, altho' they are ſaid to make an Armament, Time will beſt diſcover.'

The King's Management in Scotland.

This Letter is ſo plain as to need no Commentary; therefore we ſhall proceed to take notice, That Matters, tho' very forward, appear'd not to be ripe enough for the expected Meeting of the Parliament therein mention'd, which by Prorogation was to have been on the 15th of February. The Three Things hop'd for were too great to be ſurmounted at that time, and and by such a Parliament; but that being kept on Foot by a new Prorogation, before he Dissolv'd so Loyal an Assembly, the King resolv'd to try a bold Experiment, and to venture upon the third mention'd Project, tho' never so much to the Hazard of Himself, or Constitution. This was first thought best to be try'd in Scotland, where his Majesty had met with very great, tho' not full Success. In order to which, he sent his Letter to the Privy-Council of that Kingdom, dated Feb. 12. in which he told them, 'That he was pleas'd in August last to inform them of his Designs, in order to the Ease of his Roman Catholick Subjects, to which he had then 'a dutiful Answer: That now he thought fit to publish his Royal Intentions, and to give an additional Ease to those of Tender Consciences; so 'to convince the World of his Inclinations to Moderation, &c. Tho' at 'the same time he expresses his highest Indignation against those Enemies 'of Christianity, as well as Government and Human Society, the Field-Conventiclers, whom he recommends to them to root out with all the 'Severities of his Laws.

His Proclamation for Liberty of Conscience there.

Pursuant to this Letter, the Privy-Council caus'd the King's Proclamation for Liberty of Conscience to be publish'd, which contain'd in Substance, 'That his Majesty being resolv'd to unite the Hearts and Affections of his 'Subjects, to God in Religion, to Him in Loyalty, and to their Neighbours 'in Christian Love and Charity; he had therefore thought fit, by his Sove-'reign Authority, Prerogative Royal, and Absolute Power, which all his 'Subjects were to obey without RESERVE, to give and grant his Roy-'al Toleration to the several Professors of the Christian Religion after 'nam'd. First, He allows and tolerates the Moderate Presbyterians, to 'meet in their private Houses only; but it is his Pleasure that Field-Con-'venticlers be prosecuted according to the utmost Severity of the Laws. In 'like manner he tolerates Quakers to meet and exercise in their Form, in 'any Place or Places appointed for their Worship.' Then the Proclamation proceeds thus, 'Considering the severe and cruel Laws made against 'Roman Catholicks, therein call'd Papists, in the Minority of Our Royal 'Grandfather, of Glorious Memory, without his Consent, and contrary to 'the Duty of good Subjects, by his Regents and other Enemies to their 'lawful Sovereign, Our Great Grand-Mother Queen Mary, of Blessed 'and Pious Memory; wherein, under the Pretence of Religion, they 'cloath'd the worst of Treasons, Factions and Usurpations; and made these 'Laws, not against the Enemies of God, but their own: Which Laws have 'still been continu'd of course, without Design of Executing them, or any 'of them, ad Terrorem only, on supposition, That the Papists, relying 'upon an external Power, were incapable of Duty and true Allegiance to 'their Natural Sovereigns, and Rightful Monarchs: We of Our certain 'Knowledge and long Experience, knowing that the Catholicks, as it is 'their Principle to be good Christians, so it is to be dutiful Subjects; and 'that they have likewise, on all Occasions, shewn themselves good and 'faithful Subjects to Us, and Our Royal Predecessors, &c. do therefore, 'with the Consent of Our Privy-Council, by our Sovereign Authority, 'Prerogative Royal, and Absolute Power, Suspend, Stop and Disable all 'Laws or Acts of Parliament, Made or Executed against any of our Roman 'Catholick Subjects, in any Time past, to all Intents and Purposes, making 'void all Prohibitions therein mention'd, Pains or Penalties therein ordain'd 'to be inflicted: So that they shall in all Things be as free in all Respects 'as any of Our Protestant Subjects whatsoever; not only to exercise their 'Religion, but to enjoy all Offices, Benefices and others which We shall 'think for to bestow upon them in all Time coming.——And whereas the 'Obedience of Our Subjects is due to Us by their Allegiance and our So-'vereignty; and that no Law, Difference in Religion, or other Impedi-

'to the Crown; and conſidering that ſome Oaths are capable of being wreſt-
'ed by Men of ſiniſtrous Intentions, a Practice in that Kingdom, as fatal Jac. 2.
'to Religion as Loyalty; We therefore Call, Annul, and Diſcharge, all Ref. 27
'Oaths whatſoever, by which any of Our Subjects are Incapacitated from 'holding Places or Offices in Our ſaid Kingdom, Diſcharging the ſame to 'be taken or given in any Time coming, without our ſpecial Warrant and
'Conſent; And We do Stop, Diſable and Diſpenſe with all Laws injoining
'the ſaid Oaths, Teſts, or any of them, &c. Towards the Concluſion, the King reiterates former Promiſes in theſe Words; 'For the Encouragement
'of our Proteſtant Biſhops, and the Regular Clergy, and ſuch as have hi'therto liv'd orderly, We think fit to declare, That it never was Our Prin'ciple, nor will We ever ſuffer Violence to be offer'd to any Man's Con-
'ſcience, nor will We uſe Force, or invincible Neceſſity, againſt any Man
'on the Account of his Perſuaſion, nor the Proteſtant Religion; but will 'protect Our Biſhops and other Miniſters, in their Functions, Rights and 'Properties, and all Our Proteſtant Subjects, in the free Exerciſe of their
'Proteſtant Religion in the Churches.

Many Reflections were made upon this Proclamation; and it was ſoon obſerv'd, That this Toleration of Proteſtant Diſſenters was purely for the Sake of Popiſh Recuſants; and that the Moderate Presbyterians had not ſo great a Liberty allow'd them as the Quakers, who were ſuppos'd to bear a nearer Affinity to the Papiſts, and more diſpos'd to the Will of a Popiſh Prince. Perhaps the moſt ſhocking Part of it was the Abſolute Power which was to be obey'd without Reſerve, at leaſt it was ſo in England: But the Scots, having in one of their Acts of Parliament, made and mention'd in the laſt Year, recited the King's Sacred, Supreme, Sovereign, Abſolute Power and Authority, it was leſs wonder that the King ſhou'd uſe the ſame Terms, and that the Lords of the Council in Scotland in their Anſwer ſhou'd tell the King, 'That his Majeſty's Commands were exactly o- The Anſwer of the Lords of the Council.
'bey'd, and his Royal Proclamation printed and publiſh'd, by which his 'Majeſty had given a farther Evidence of his Favour and Goodneſs to all
'his Subjects.'——Farther promiſing, 'To maintain and aſſert his Royal 'Prerogative and Authority with the Hazard of their Lives and Fortunes:'
And thus concluding; 'We are very willing that your Majeſty's Subjects
'who are Peaceable and Loyal, may be at Eaſe and Security, notwithſtand-
'ing their private Profeſſion and Worſhip; and do conceive, That ſuch of 'them as are or ſhall be employ'd by your Majeſty in Offices of Truſt, Ci'vil or Military, are ſufficiently ſecured by your Majeſty's Authority and 'Commiſſion for the Exerciſing the ſame. We return your Majeſty our 'moſt humble Thanks, for giving us your Royal Word, For Maintaining
'the Church and our Religion as it is now eſtabliſh'd by Law; and reſt
'ſatisfy'd, believing your Majeſty's PROMISE to be the beſt and greateſt
'Security we can have.' Sign'd by near thirty Noble-Men and others. Thus a People, who formerly rebell'd againſt the Commands of a limited and mild Prince, the Father, now ſeem'd to yield up all to the abſolute and uncontrollable Power of the Son.

James, and gave him Hopes of finding the ſame Willingneſs in his Engliſh Jac. 3.
Subjects. In order to open the Matter, he aſſembled his Privy-Council, Ref. 28 and made this Declaration to them, 'That he had reſolv'd to iſſue out a 'Declaration for a General Liberty of Conſcience to all Perſons, of what The King's Management in England.
'Perſuaſion ſoever; which he was mov'd to do, by having obſerv'd, That 'tho' an Uniformity in Religious Worſhip had been endeavour'd to be eſta-
'bliſh'd within this Kingdom, in the ſucceſſive Reigns of four of his Pre-
'deceſſors,

1687. Jac. 3. Ref. 28

'deceſſors, aſſiſted by their reſpective Parliaments; yet it had prov'd altogether ineffectual. That the Reſtraint upon the Conſciences of Diſſenters, in Order thereunto, had been very prejudicial to the Nation, as was ſadly experienc'd by the horrid Rebellion in the Time of his Majeſty's Father. That the many Penal Laws made againſt Diſſenters, had rather increas'd than leſſen'd the Number of them: And that nothing cou'd more conduce to the Peace and Quiet of this Kingdom, and the Encreaſe of the Number, as well as of the Trade of his Subjects, than an entire Liberty of Conſcience; it having always been his Opinion, as moſt ſuitable to the Principles of Chriſtianity, That no Man ſhou'd be perſecuted for Conſcience ſake; for he thought Conſcience cou'd not be forc'd; and that it cou'd never be the true Intereſt of a King of England to endeavour to do it.' And at the ſame time he gave Directions to his Attorney and Solicitor-General, not to permit any Proceſs to iſſue in his Name againſt any Diſſenter whatſoever.

This Speech ſeem'd ſo ſpecious and plauſible, that it met with no Oppoſition in the Council; or rather the Council was ſo fitted to the King's Will, or ſo blinded by Ambition and Intereſt, that they either did or wou'd not ſee the grand Deſign of it: So that his Majeſty conceiving the Nation was now ripe and ready to receive a Yoke, that was to be impos'd with all imaginable Gentleneſs, and with the Pomp and Shew of Indulgence, on the 4th of April he caus'd his Gracious Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience to be publiſh'd. It was much the ſame with that of Scotland; ſave only that the Expreſſions of Annulling and Repealing Teſts and Oaths, which were made uſe of in that, were here ſoftned into thoſe of Suſpending and Diſpenſing with Penal Laws, &c. and inſtead of Abſolute Power he us'd Royal Prerogative. To give the Subſtance of it, in the Preamble, his Majeſty does not ſcruple to ſay, 'That he cannot but heartily wiſh, as it 'will eaſily be believ'd, That all his Subjects were Members of the Catholick Church; yet it is his Opinion That Conſcience ought not to be conſtrain'd;' and for the Reaſons alledg'd in the foremention'd Speech, which he repeats here at large. Then he ſays, 'By Virtue of his Royal Prerogative, he thinks fit to iſſue forth this his Declaration of Indulgence; making no Doubt of the Concurrence of his two Houſes of Parliament, when he ſhall think it convenient for them to meet. Firſt, he declares, That he will protect and maintain his Arch-biſhops, Biſhops and Clergy, and all other his Subjects of the Church of England, in the free Exerciſe of their Religion, as by Law Eſtabliſh'd; and in the quiet and full Enjoyment of their Poſſeſſions. He likewiſe declares, That it is his Royal Will and Pleaſure that all Penal Laws for Non-Conformity to the Religion Eſtabliſh'd, or by Reaſon of the Exerciſe of Religion in any manner whatſoever, be immediately Suſpended. And to the End that by the Liberty hereby granted, the Peace and Security of the Government in the Practice thereof may not be endanger'd, he ſtrictly Charges and Commands all his Subjects, That as he freely gives them leave to meet and ſerve God after their own Way, be it in Private Houſes, or Places purpoſely hired or built for that Uſe; ſo that they take ſpecial Care that nothing be Preach'd or Taught amongſt them, which may tend to alienate the Hearts of his People from Him or his Government; and that their Meetings and Aſſemblies be Peaceably, Openly and Publickly held, and all Perſons freely admitted to them, and that they ſignify and make known to ſome one or more of the next Juſtices of the Peace, what Place or Places they ſet apart for thoſe Uſes. And as he is deſirous to have the Benefit of the Service of all his Subjects, which by the Law of Nature is inſeparably annex'd, and inherent to his Royal Perſon; and that none of his Subjects may be for the future under any Diſcouragement or Diſability, who are otherwiſe well inclin'd and fit to ſerve him, by reaſon

'of ſome Oaths or Teſts that have uſually been adminiſtred upon ſuch Occaſions, he hereby further declares, That it is his Will and Pleaſure, that 'the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and the ſeveral Teſts and Declarations mention'd in the Acts of Parliament made in the 25th and the 30th Year of his Brother's Reign, ſhall not hereafter be requir'd to be 'Taken, Declared, or Subſcribed by any Perſons whatſoever, who are or 'ſhall be employ'd in any Office or Place of Truſt, either Civil or Military, under him, or in his Government: And it is his Intention, from 'time to time hereafter, to grant his Royal Diſpenſations to all his Subjects ſo to be employ'd, who ſhall not Take the ſaid Oaths, or Subſcribe 'or Declare the ſaid Teſts or Declarations. And he does hereby give his 'free and ample Pardon to all Non-Conformiſts, Recuſants, and other his 'Subjects, for all Crimes and Things by them committed, or done contrary to the Penal Laws, formerly made relating to Religion, and the 'Profeſſion or Exerciſe thereof. And although the Freedom and Aſſurance 'he has hereby given in relation to Liberty and Property, might be ſufficient to remove from the Minds of his Subjects all Fears and Jealouſies 'in relation to either; yet he thinks fit to declare, That he will maintain 'them in all their Properties and Poſſeſſions, as well of Church and Abby-Lands, as in other their Eſtates and Properties whatſoever.

1687. Jac. 3. Ref. 28

Upon the Appearance of this Declaration, the whole Kingdom ſeem'd ſtruck with Wonder and Amazement on one Side, and Joy and Satisfaction on the other. The latter ſoon ſeiz'd upon the Diſſenters of all Kinds, who were ſo tranſported, that they caught greedily at the Bait, without the leaſt diſcerning the Hook in it. They were not content with a ſilent Acceptance of this Liberty, but were drawn in to make Inſults of Joy for it, and preſented Addreſſes of Thanks ſo high and extravagant, that ſome of them were thought offenſive to the very Ears of the King. They thought indeed no Praiſes cou'd be too great to expreſs their Gratitude; no Bleſſings ſufficient to reward their Deliverer and Benefactor.

The Behaviour of the Diſſenters upon it.

The Anabaptiſts in and about London thus led the Way; 'Great Sir! 'Tis the Senſe of this invaluable Favour and Benefit, deriv'd to us from 'your Royal Clemency, that compels us once more to proſtrate our ſelves 'at your Majeſty's Feet, with the Tender of our moſt humble Thanks for 'Peace and Liberty.——Such Demonſtrations as theſe, of your Majeſty's 'tender Care of the Proſperity and Quiet of your Peaceable Subjects, will 'abſolutely Command the Hearts of them all, &c.' Shortly after came the Quakers, and ſaid thus; May it pleaſe the King! Though we are not 'the firſt in this Way, yet we hope we are not the leaſt ſenſible of the 'great Favours; we are come to preſent the King our Humble, Open and 'Hearty Thanks for—We rejoice to ſee the Day, That a King of England 'ſhou'd from his Royal Seat ſo univerſally Aſſert this Royal Principle, 'That Conſcience ought not to be reſtrain'd, nor People forc'd for Matters of mere Religion, &c.'. The Independents follow'd with a like Harangue; 'Sir! The great Calamity we have been a long time under, 'through the ſevere Execution of the Laws in Matters of Religion, has 'made us deeply ſenſible of your Majeſty's Princely Clemency toward us 'your Diſſenting Subjects; eſpecially, ſince in the Indulgence vouchſaf'd, 'there are no Limitations hindering the Enjoyment of it with a Good Conſcience, &c.' The Presbyterians came not far behind the reſt, and made their grateful Acknowledgments, 'That his Majeſty's Princely Pity had 'now reſcu'd them from their long Sufferings; and by the ſame Royal Act, 'had reſtor'd God to the Empire over Conſcience; and publiſh'd to the 'World his Royal Chriſtian Judgment, That Conſcience may not be forc'd; 'and his Reſolution, That ſuch Force ſhall not be attempted in his Majeſty's Kingdoms, during his Majeſty's Reign; which they therefore pray

Their Addreſſes.

Together with the Papists.

'may be long over them, &c.' And the Papists, as it was most proper, fell in with them, after some time, and in an Address, 'They testify'd their 'Thankfulness to Almighty God, and his Majesty, for so happy an Expe-'dient for the Ease and Comfort of all his Subjects: And though they 'were thought not to desire the least Ease or Good to those that differ'd 'from them in Opinion; yet they did not only Rojoice in the Universa-'lity of his Majesty's Bounty, but that it flow'd from a Prince of their 'Religion.' It wou'd be endless to take Notice of the innumerable Addresses that flew from all Parts of the Nation, which increas'd both in their Flights and Promises; but none was more remember'd than that from Mr. Alsop a Preacher in Westminster, which we forbear to particularize: Only we shall observe in general, that for the greatest Part of this Summer the Gazettes were throng'd with Addresses, fill'd with such Shews of Duty and Loyalty, that the rest of the World might naturally look upon the King as Unmoveable on his Throne, if there was any Confidence to be put in Addresses.

3. But because the Dissenters may have been too hardly censur'd, or unreasonably vindicated, in a Matter that has occasion'd so much Controversy, we shall lay before the Reader what has been said by two opposite, and not inconsiderable Writers, upon this Occasion. The First, who wrote in Defence of them, proceeds thus; 'The Dissenters were not so fond of 'hard Usage, as to refuse a Liberty so freely offered them; nor did they 'think it good Manners, to enquire too narrowly how that Indulgence 'came about, so long as they were shelter'd by it from Oppression. A 'Letter of Advice to them, was hereupon Publish'd by that accomplish'd 'States-man the Marquis of Hallifax, tho' without his Name. The Letter 'was written with a great deal of Artifice, with Design to insinuate a two-'fold Caution: That their new Friends were to be suspected; and that it 'wou'd neither be Christianity nor Prudence to hazard the Publick Safe-'ty, either by desire of Ease or Revenge. His Cautions were regarded 'by the wiser Part of them, notwithstanding the Uncertainty with what 'Design this Application was made to them. As Thankful as they were 'for their Ease and Liberty, they were yet fearful of the Issue, neither can 'any number of them of any Consideration, be charg'd with hazarding the 'Publick Safety, by falling in with the Measures of the Court, of which 'they had as great a dread as their Neighbours. And as for Revenge, tho' 'they had a fair Opportunity for it, yet cou'd they not think it a Thing 'desirable, either as Men or as Christians. If they over-did it in their 'Addresses, they thought the High-Church Party, who had been so us'd 'to topping Flights of Complement, when returning Thanks for the Dis-'solving one of the best of Parliaments, had little Reason to reflect on them.' Then clearing Mr. Baxter, and some others, from being concern'd in these Addresses, he says, 'They waited in Expectation of seeing the Effects of 'the Marquis's Declaration in behalf of the Church Party; That all their 'former Haughtiness (they are his own Words) towards the Dissenters 'was for ever extinguish'd; and that the Spirit of Persecution was turn-'ed into a Spirit of Peace, Charity and Condescension; that the Church 'of England was convinc'd of its Errors in being severe to them; and all 'thinking Men were come to a general Agreement, no more to cut our 'selves off from the Protestants abroad, but rather to enlarge the Foun-'dations, upon which we are to build our Defences against the common 'Enemy.

And against the Dissenters.

The opposite Author has given us this Historical Account; 'After all, 'the Papists in this Island, were but as a Drop of Water in the Thames, 'and not able to make Opposition singly to the rest of the Nation: The

'lengthening

'lengthening their Files, had made a greater Show, and render'd them more obnoxious, but had added little to their real Strength; therefore the Diſſenters where to be call'd in as Auxiliaries, to lend their helping Hand in the great Work.' Then ſpeaking of the Declaration it ſelf, he ſays, 'This to the Churchmen ſeem'd as a dangerous Storm likely to prove fatal to their Laws and Religion, which made it appear more like a refreſhing Shower to the Diſſenters; who were not content to offer up their fulſom Addreſſes of Thanks to their Jupiter Pluvius, without inſulting thoſe who juſtly dreaded its Conſequences. The loyal Church of England, which had not only preach'd, but conſtantly practis'd Obedience in all Things lawful, was now condemn'd as diſloyal and Diſobedient, becauſe ſhe cou'd not exceed thoſe Limits; and the Diſſenters, who were always Rebels in Speculation and in Practice, whenever they had Opportunity, were in an Inſtant become the only good Subjects. Thoſe who had ſignaliz'd their Zeal for the King's Intereſt by a Courſe of important Services, both before and ſince his Acceſſion to the Crown, were turn'd out of their Employments; and the Sticklers for the Excluſion-Bill, with the Patriots of Taunton and Tiverton, were now the fitteſt Perſons to be truſted. And theſe were ſo charm'd with the Favours they enjoy'd, that like Lovers in the Beginning of an Amour, if you wou'd believe their Addreſſes, Life and Fortune, Laws and Liberties, were all too ſmall a Sacrifice to return. But theſe Profeſſions were ſoon found to be like Lovers Vows, only writ in Sand, and obliterated by the next Guſt of Wind, or the next Wave of Water.' Next, ſpeaking of the Sufferings ſoon after felt by the Church of England, he tells us, 'That while that was harraſs'd, the Diſſenters lay lurking at their Eaſe in the Sun-ſhine of a Court which had thaw'd all their rigid Humour, and melted them down into a perfect Compliance with their Friends the Papiſts. They who were formerly refractory and diſobedient to the Laws, and were for paring the legal Prerogatives of the Crown, as if the Prieſts had tranſubſtantiated them alſo, cou'd now carry their Obedience beyond the Laws, and became the Champions of the Diſpenſing Power. Harry Care, after all his Packets of Advice from Rome, was now better adviſ'd, and he and others of them drew their Pens in its Defence, and directly againſt the Church of England, then more eſpecially the Bulwark of the Proteſtant Religion.

1687. Jac. 3. Ref. 28

The Reader may diſcover Truth and Light from both theſe Accounts, tho' a little overſtrain'd and obfuſcated: But this is certain, that the chief Endeavours at Court were to widen the former Breaches, and revive the Animoſities between the Church of England and the Diſſenters; and the former was more blacken'd than ever by Henry Care and other mercenary Writers, to the great Benefit of the Papiſts. In the mean time, Sir Roger L'Eſtrange, who had long writ in Defence of the Church, and laſtly for the diſpenſing Power, laid down his Pen, or rather was ſilenc'd as ſoon as the Toleration was ſet on foot, to which he had ever ſhewn himſelf an Enemy. The King's Declaration ſoon began to anſwer the Ends for which it was publiſh'd, and ſcarce a Day paſs'd without ſome Proteſtant or other being reconcil'd to the Church of Rome. The King's Religion was now become ſo faſhionable, as well as profitable, that it is no wonder that many weak, frail and irreligious Perſons were ready to embrace it. As the Miſchief became to be more viſible, ſo the Heats between the Church and the Diſſenters abated; and in time both began to conſider how to join and unite againſt the common Danger.

The Effects of the Declaration.

In order to effect which, and to do other Services to the Proteſtant Cauſe, the acute and celebrated Dr. Gilbert Burnet, then in Holland, drew his Pen with no common Succeſs, and ſhew'd a Genius that made a conſiderable Impreſſion upon all of them. Several ſmall Pamphlets of his were ſent into England, according to the Seaſon of the Times, relating to the Toleration, both in Scotland and England, the Teſts, the diſpenſing Power, the ſuppos'd Spirit of Perſecution in the Church of England, &c. What began firſt to affect them, was his Reflections upon the King's Proclamation in Scotland, in which, after his laying open the Dangers therein threatned, he makes this ſarcaſtical Obſervation upon the Phraſe, Glorious Memory, there attributed to the King's Grandfather: 'The peculiar Glory 'that belongs to King James's Memory, is, That he was a Prince of great 'Learning, and that he employ'd it chiefly in writing for Religion: Of the 'Volume in Folio, in which we have his Works', two Thirds are againſt 'the Church of Rome; one Part of them in a Commentary on the Reve- 'lations, proving that the Pope is Antichriſt; and another Part of them 'belong'd more naturally to his Poſt and Dignity; which is a Warning 'that he gave to all the Princes and States of Europe, againſt the treaſon- 'able and bloody Doctrines of the Papacy.' Then mentioning the Legacy of an ominous Wiſh on ſuch of his Poſterity as ſhou'd go over to that Religion, he adds, 'It is known King James was no Conqueror, and that 'he made more Uſe of his Pen than his Sword; ſo the Glory that is pe- 'culiar to his Memory, muſt fall chiefly on his learned and immortal Wri- 'tings: And ſince there is ſuch a Veneration expreſs'd for him, it agrees not 'ill with this to wiſh, That his Works were more ſtudy'd by thoſe who 'offer ſuch Incenſe to his GLORIOUS MEMORY.' As to the King's Declaration in England, reflecting upon that Part that complains of the Endeavours in the four laſt Reigns for Unity being ineffectual, the Doctor obſerves, 'It is not ſo very long ſince, that nothing was to be heard at Court, 'but the ſupporting the Church of England, and the extirpating all the Non- 'conformiſts; but now all is turn'd round again, the Church of England 'is in Diſgrace; and now the Encouragement of Trade, the Quiet of the 'Nation, and the Freedom of Conſcience are again in vogue, that were ſuch 'odious Things but a few Years ago, that the very mentioning of them was 'enough to load any Man with Suſpicions, as backward in the King's Ser- 'vice: While ſuch Methods are us'd, and the Government is as in an Ague, 'divided between hot and cold Fits, no wonder if Laws ſo unſteadily exe- 'cuted had fail'd of their Effect.' Then afterwards ſpeaking of the King's Promiſes to the Diſſenters, he ſays, 'It cannot be ſuppos'd that they will 'be more laſting than thoſe that were made ſome Time ago to the Church 'of England, who had both a better Title in Law, and greater Merit upon 'the Crown to aſſure them that they ſhou'd be well us'd, than theſe can 'pretend to.— They muſt remember, That as the Church of England is 'the only Eſtabliſhment that our Religion has by Law, ſo it is the main 'Body of the Nation; and all the Sects are but ſmall and ſtruggling Parties: 'And if the legal Settlement of the Church is diſſolv'd, and that Body is once 'broken, theſe leſſer Bodies will be all at Mercy; and it is an eaſy Thing 'to define what the Mercies of the Church of Rome are. But to proceed:

The Behaviour of the Church of England.

The numerous Addreſſes daily preſented to the King by the Diſſenters, upon the Account of his obliging Declaration, cou'd not but mortify the ſound Party of the Church of England, who juſtly look'd upon it at leaſt as a Jeſuitical Intention to advance Papiſts to Places of Truſt, and gradually to introduce them into the Legiſlature. But to add to their Affliction, the Court-Creatures gave them to underſtand, 'That they themſelves ought 'to imitate the Nonconformiſts, and fill up the Chorus of the grateful Ac- 'knowledgers of the King's Indulgence;' urging, as an undiſputable Motive, 'That his Majeſty had been moſt graciouſly pleas'd to Declare, That 'he wou'd protect and maintain his Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Clergy, and all 'other his Subjects of the Church of England, in the free Exerciſe of

'their

'their Religion, and in the quiet and full Enjoyment of all their Poſſeſ-
'ſions, without any Moleſtation or Diſturbance whatſoever.' Whatever were the Inducements, five Biſhops, Crew of Durham, Barlow of Lincoln, Cartwright of Cheſter, Wood of Litchfield and Coventry, and Watſon of St. Davids, prevail'd upon ſome of their Clergy to ſign Addreſſes of Thanks for that part of the King's Declaration. Yet theſe particular Addreſſes were ſo jejune and inſipid, that they ſeem'd rather like the forc'd Thanks, given by a corrected Child to a ſevere Parent, that holds the Rod over him, than like the hearty and free Acknowledgments which flow from the Senſe of real Favours. Parker Biſhop of Oxford was not ſo ſucceſsful as theſe Court-Prelates; for notwithſtanding the uncommon Zeal he ſhew'd upon this Occaſion, his Clergy ſtill refus'd to ſign an Addreſs which might prove of ſo dangerous Conſequence: Yet to let the World know, that it was not out of a ſullen Humour, or Diſloyalty, that they deny'd to pay that Homage to his Majeſty, they gave their Reaſons in Writing to their Biſhops. 1687. VII. 1. While the Rights and Privileges of the Nation were attack'd on every Side, while the Diſſenters adored the Hands that was putting Chains about their Necks, and while the corrupted Biſhops endeavour'd to decoy their Flocks into the ſame Compliance, the true Church felt the worſt of the Storm, which now began to diſcharge it ſelf upon thoſe glorious Seminaries of Learning, the two Univerſities; Places that had diſtinguiſh'd themſelves for their Loyalty to the Crown in the moſt difficult Times. It began with that of Cambridge, and in Appearance upon a ſmall Occaſion; of which Tranſaction we ſhall give a plain and diſtinct Account, with the Names of Perſons as they occur'd. The Roman Catholicks having got ſome ſmall Footing there, particularly in Sidney College, where one Baſſet of their Religion, obtain'd the Maſterſhip. In the Month of February there arriv'd a Letter from the King to Dr. Peachel the Vice-Chancellor, and Maſter of Magdalen College, importing, 'That hearing much Commendation 'of one Alban Francis, a Benedictine Monk, his Majeſty was pleas'd to 'command the Univerſity, That they ſhou'd admit him to the Degree of 'Maſter of Arts, without Adminiſtring any Oath or Oaths whatſoever, 'notwithſtanding any Law or Statute to the contrary; which his Majeſty 'was pleas'd to diſpenſe with, in favour of the ſaid Alban Francis.' The Vice-Chancellor was not over-haſty to read this Letter to the Senate, or Congregation of Regents and Non-Regents; but when it was done, it was unanimouſly agreed by the Members, to teſtify their Concurrence with the Vice-Chancellor, viz. not to admit the ſaid Francis, till the King had been petition'd to revoke the Mandate. Hereupon the Vice-Chancellor wrote a Letter to the Duke of Albemarle, then Chancellor of the Univerſity, to beg his Interceſſion with the King; to which his Grace ſome time after return'd an Anſwer, 'That he had try'd, but to no Effect; but that it was 'his Sentiment, that the moſt probable Way of Succeeding in the Matter 'was, for the whole Body of the Univerſity to concur and ſign a Petition, 'and ſend it to the King.' The Univerſity, to prevent the Inconveniency of being deem'd Tumultuary Petitioners, thought it the moſt adviſeable Way to ſend up the Senſe of the whole Body by particular Meſſengers from each Houſe of the Congregation. To which purpoſe Dr. Smoult, Profeſſor of Caſuiſtical Divinity, was made choice of by the Non-Regents, and Mr. Norris, Fellow of Trinity-College, by the Regents. The Subſtance they were to deliver, was, 'That the Houſes thought the Admiſſion of Mr. Fran- 'cis, without the uſual Oaths, Illegal; and conſequently the King was to 'be petition'd:' Which Opinions were freely given to the two Meſſengers of each Houſe, and unanimouſly approv'd of by the voting Members, except cept three Papists, and two others, willing to temporize, and follow the Stream of the Time.

In the Case of Father Francis.

At the same Time the Esquire-Beadles and Register were sent to the said Father Francis, to tell him, That the Senate or Congregation was ready to admit him, provided he wou'd Swear as the Law appointed; which he refus'd, insisting upon the King's Dispensation; and immediately took Horse for London, to prepossess his Patriots that recommended him to the King, with the Behaviour of the University. The Senate upon this, not to be wanting in their own Justification, dispatch'd after him one of the Esquire-Beadles, with two Letters, one for the Duke of Albemarle, and the other for the Earl of Sunderland: The Beadle was presently admitted to the Former, but cou'd get no Access to the Latter; and therefore put in his Letter importing, 'A most humble Submission to the King, with solemn 'Protestations, That what was done proceeded from no Principle of Stub- 'bornness or Disobedience, but a conscientious Sense of their Obligations to 'Laws and Oaths, and a respectful Intimation, That they were ready to 'Petition his Majesty when they might be admitted; but not daring to ap- 'proach without some Significations, that it wou'd be acceptable, they ap- 'ply'd themselves to his Lordship, desiring him to do the University the 'Favour to mediate for them.' The Officer was dismiss'd without any satisfactory Answer; and shortly after, a Second Letter was sent to the University, exactly the same with the other, only with an additional Clause, To do it at their Peril. Which being read in the Senate, they dispatch'd Mr. Braddock of Catherine-Hall, and Mr. Stanhope of King's-College to London, with two other Letters to the fore-mention'd Chancellor and Minister of State, and gave the Messengers farther Instructions for the Service of the University. Some time after the Delivery of these Letters, the Duke of Albemarle told the Messengers, That he had endeavour'd to intercede for them to the utmost of his Power, but to no Effect. From the Earl of Sunderland they had no other Answer, but That the King had seen the Vice-Chancellor's Letter, and was offended at the Proceeding of the University, and wou'd take Order very shortly to give a farther Answer.

The Heads summon'd to appear at London.

Soon after, the King's promis'd Letter was sent to Cambridge, by one Atterbury a Messenger, which was no other than a Summons from the new Ecclesiastical Commissioners, Commanding the Vice-Chancellor to appear in Person before them, and the Senate by themselves or their Deputies, to answer such things as shou'd be objected against them. Upon which the Senate appointed Dr. Peachel, Vice-Chancellor, and Dr. Echard Master of Catherine-Hall, attended by Dr. Babington, Dr. Smoult, Dr. Cook, Mr. Billers, Mr. Newton, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Stanhope, all Fellows of particular Colleges, to represent them at the Council-Chamber, according to the Summons. Upon their Appearance before the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, Lord President Sunderland, Earl of Mulgrave, Earl of Huntington, the Bishops of Durham and Rochester, and Lord Chief Justice Herbert; the Vice-Chancellor was ask'd, Why he had not obey'd the King's Commands in behalf of Mr. Francis? To which the Vice-Chancellor desiring Time to answer, after three Quarters of an Hour's Debate, the Register was order'd to tell him, That the Lords had granted him a Week's Time.

The Vice-Chancellor's Plea.

At which Time, the Vice-Chancellor put in his Answer in Writing, in the Name of the whole University of Cambridge; Containing a Recital of several Statutes, One made in the first Year of Queen Elizabeth, entituled, An Act to secure to the Crown the Ancient Jurisdictions over the State Ecclesiastical and Spiritual, and Abolishing Foreign Power repugnant to the same. Wherein it was Enacted, 'That every Person that shou'd be 'promoted to any Degree of Learning in the Universities, shou'd take the 'Oath therein mention'd, whereby he shou'd declare and acknowledge the of Allegiance; by which it was Enacted, 'That the ſaid Oath ſhou'd be 'taken by the Vice-Chancellor, all the Principals of Houſes, and by every 'other Perſon that ſhou'd be promoted to any Degree, &c. Upon which it was farther inſiſted, 'That both Himſelf, as Vice-Chancellor, and every 'Member of the Senate, had taken the Oath. And the ſaid Statutes were 'made for the Preſervation of the Doctrine profeſs'd by the Church of Eng- 'land, and the King's rightful Power and Prerogative, and that they had

'offer'd the ſaid Oath to Alban Francis, but he refus'd to take it: And 'upon his Refuſal, if they had admitted him, they had acted contrary to 'their Statutes; and it had been a Breach of Truſt, as well in the Vice-'Chancellor, as the Senate, and a Violation of their Oaths; and for theſe
'Reaſons they cou'd not admit him. Leaving it farther to their Lordſhips
'Conſideration, Whether their Caſe was under their Cognizance? Laſtly, they offer'd to their Lordſhips, 'That by the Statute of the ſeventeenth
'Year of King Charles the Firſt, there was a Clauſe, That no new Court
'ſhou'd be Erected and Appointed within this Realm, which ſhou'd have
'Like Power, Juriſdiction or Authority, as the High-Commiſſion then had,
'or pretended to have; and that all ſuch Commiſſions and Grants, and all 'Power and Authority granted thereby, ſhou'd be utterly void.' After this Anſwer was read, and the Court up, the Vice-Chancellor and Delegates were ſent for into the Council-Chamber, where they were acquainted by the Regiſter, 'That the Commiſſioners had put off the Proceedings in their
'Buſineſs till the 7th of May following, and that their Attendance was ex'pected at that time.' In the Interim there was a Rumour ſpread abroad, That the Lords had receiv'd a new Commiſſion; which was verify'd by the Alteration of ſome of the Commiſſioners, yet the Gentlemen of the Univerſity cou'd not prove it; for if they cou'd, the Commiſſioners had been oblig'd to begin all again.

But the 7th of May being come, upon the Appearance of the Vice-Chan- His Examination.
cellor and Delegates, the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys put a Queſtion to the Vice-Chancellor, What his Oath was that he had taken? The Vice-Chancellor, not expecting the Queſtion, with ſome Heſitation, anſwer'd, That it was in ſubſtance, to adminiſter and execute the Duty or Office of the Vice-Chancellor, which was ſtated by the Statutes of the Univerſity, and the Laws of the Land. From whence aroſe another Queſtion, Whether he did not remember any Maſters of Arts made without taking Oaths?
and Dr. Lightfoot was inſtanc'd; but then Dr. Cook affirm'd, that Mr.
Lightfoot at that Time ſubſcrib'd the Thirty Nine Articles and Canons; of which, the Firſt aſſerted the King's Supremacy; and the Lord Chancellor acknowledg'd, that Subſcribing was Swearing. Upon this a third Queſti-on was ask'd, Whether the Vice-Cancellor knew any Mandate from the King refus'd by the Univerſity before? In anſwer to which, it was inſtanc'd, 'That King Charles the Second had ſent his Mandate in behalf of 'one Tatnell, to the Univerſity, who upon refuſing to take the Oaths,
'and the Matter repreſented to the King, his Majeſty was pleas'd to recall 'the Mandate.' After theſe and ſome other like frivolous Queſtions, to ſhorten the Buſineſs, Chancellor Jeffreys commanded the Company to withdraw; and after ſome time ordering them to be call'd in again, proceeded to pronounce Sentence upon the Vice-Chancellor, as being guilty of great Diſobedience to the King's Commands, and other Crimes and Contempts;
'That he ſhou'd be depriv'd of his Office of Vice-Chancellor, and ſuſ- And Puniſh-

'that he ſhou'd not preſume to meddle with any of the publick Buſineſs of 'the Univerſity.' Which Sentence was afterwards drawn up in Form, put in Writing, and fix'd upon the Gates of Magdalen College, and Dr. Balderſon Maſter of Emanuel College was choſen to ſucceed in the Office of Vice-Chancellor. Thus ended the Proſecution with relation to Cambridge, which gave great Terror to that Univerſity, and particular Damage to Sidney College, the Reſidence of Father Frances; where there was ſo much Diſcouragement, that ſcarce a Scholar was admitted there during the reſt of the Reign. And tho' nothing like this was farther tranſacted, yet the Colleges were often peſter'd with Mandates for Fellowſhips, &c. to the great Diſcouragement of Learning, and all learned Men that had not a good Intereſt at Court.

Proceedings againſt Magdalen College in Oxford.

2. But the Storm that ſoon after fell upon the other Univerſity of Oxford, particularly upon Magdalen College there, as it was longer in gathering, ſo it prov'd more furious and formidable. And becauſe the boldeſt Strokes of that arbitrary Spirit that animated and actuated King James's Counſels, were ſo viſible through the Courſe of this Affair, a particular Relation of the Whole cannot be improper in this Hiſtory. St. Mary Magdalen College is one of the moſt noble and munificent Foundations for Learning in either of the Univerſities; and therefore it was no wonder if the Popiſh Clergy look'd upon it with an envious and greedy Eye, and did their utmoſt to graſp ſo rich a Prize into their own Poſſeſſion. This illuſtrious Society, from repeated Grants of Kings, ratify'd in Parliament, and from their own Statutes, were in an uninterrupted, as well as inconteſted Poſſeſſion of a Right to elect their own Maſter, uſually ſtyl'd by the Name of Preſident.

That Place being vacant on the 31ſt of March by the Death of Dr. Clark, immediate Notice was given by the Vice-Preſident Dr. Aldworth, for a new Election on the 13th of April, by affixing a Citation upon the Chapel Door, according to the Statutes of the College. But before the Day of Election, being inform'd that the King had granted a particular Mandate, in behalf of one Mr. Anthony Farmer, a Man of ill Reputation, who had promis'd to declare himſelf a Papiſt, they preſented a Petition to his Majeſty, humbly repreſenting, 'That the ſaid Mr. Farmer was a Perſon in ſeveral Reſpects 'uncapable of that Character, according to their Founder's Statutes; and 'did moſt earneſtly beſeech his Majeſty, either to leave them to the Diſ-'charge of their Duty and Conſciences, according to his Majeſty's moſt 'Gracious Toleration, and their Founder's Statutes, or to recommend ſuch 'a Perſon, who might be more ſerviceable to his Majeſty, and to this Col-'lege.' The Petition was deliver'd to the Lord Preſident Sunderland, by Dr. Thomas Smith, and Mr. Bagſhaw, two of the Fellows, and lay four Days in his Lordſhip's Hands, with a Promiſe of his particular Favour; but his laſt Anſwer was, That the King muſt be obey'd. Accordingly, on the 11th Inſtant, his Majeſty's Mandate was deliver'd to Mr. Robert Charnock, Fellow of the ſaid College, a Man newly converted, and wholly devoted to the Court; which Mandate was directed to the Vice-Preſident and Fellows, requiring, 'Forthwith to elect the ſaid Mr. Anthony Farmer, and admit him 'Preſident of the College.

A Mandate to make Farmer Preſident.

This Mandate was read by the Vice-Preſident, with decent Reſpect, in the Chapel of the College, before the Fellows there preſent, who ask'd them, Whether they, in Obedience to his Majeſty's Letters, wou'd forthwith elect Mr. Farmer Preſident? They all agreed to defer their Anſwers till Wedneſday the 13th. At which time, all the Fellows being met, the Vice-Preſident read the Statute concerning The Choice of a Preſident, and another Againſt Corrupt and Irregular Elections; then read the King's Letter in in behalf of Mr. Farmer, and a ſecond time demanded their Anſwer, which was to this Effect, ‘ That having a Petition lying at that time before his ‘ Majeſty, they ought not to proceed to Election, till they had receiv'd his ‘ Majeſty's Anſwer to the ſame.' Thereupon they all agreed, except Mr. Charnock, that the Election ſhou'd be deferr'd till the next Day. On that Morning the Vice-Preſident told them, ‘ That the Choice of a Preſident ‘ had been put off upon Account of a Petition to his Majeſty, in an- ‘ ſwer to which they had not yet receiv'd his Majeſty's Pleaſure; that the ‘ next Day was the utmoſt Time they had Power to Prorogue the Election ‘ to, by the Statutes; and therefore it was neceſſary they ſhould come to ‘ ſome Reſolution:' He told them farther, ‘ That the King had command- ‘ ed them to elect Mr. Farmer,' and ask'd their Senſe therein; which was unanimous, except Mr. Charnock, that the Election ſhou'd be deferr'd till the next Morning. Accordingly, at Eight a Clock, the Vice-Preſident and Fellows being met, Dr. Thomas Smith and Mr. Bagſhaw, acquainted the reſt from the Lord Sunderland, That in anſwer to their Petition, His Majeſty having ſent his Letter to the College, expected to be obey'd. After which the Vice-Preſident read over the King's Mandate, and ask'd them, Whether they wou'd comply with it? They deſired to proceed to an Election: And the Vice-Preſident having propos'd, Whether they wou'd make any farther Addreſs to his Majeſty? he himſelf, with Dr. Fairfax, Dr. Pudſey and Dr. Smith, were for a ſecond Addreſs; but all the reſt declar'd immediately for proceeding to an Election. Then the Vice-Preſident propos'd, Whether they ſhou'd go to an Election Vivâ Voce, or by Scrutiny? He himſelf, Mr. Thompſon, and Mr. Charnock were for proceeding in it Vivâ Voce, but all the reſt were for a Scrutiny, except Dr. Smith, who was for deferring the Election till they had once more petition'd the King. It being therefore the Senſe of the Majority, That they ought to proceed to the Election of a Preſident, according to the Statutes, and this the laſt Day limited; in order to it, the Holy Sacrament was ſolemnly taken by all, except Charnock; and then the Statutes concerning the Choice of a Preſident, and againſt Corrupt and Irregular Elections, were a ſecond time read by the Vice-Preſident. Every one took the Oath preſcrib'd by the Statutes, except Mr. Thomſon and Mr. Charnock, who refus'd it; and the two Senior Fellows were ſworn Scrutators in the Scrutiny of the whole Society. For the Nomination of a Preſident, Dr. Hough and Mr. Maynard had each of them the major Part of the Voices; and then the thirteen Senior Fellows being met to elect one of theſe two, Dr. Hough had eleven Voices, and was accordingly pronounc'd Preſident by the Senior Scrutator; and Mr. Maynard was appointed by the thirteen Senior Fellows to preſent him as Preſident Elect to the Viſitor the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in order to his Admiſſion. After which Mr. Charnock and Mr. Thompſon declar'd Vivâ Voce for Mr. Farmer, according to his Majeſty's Letter. The next Day Dr. Hough being preſented to the Viſitor, was ſworn and admitted Preſident by his Lordſhip, according to the Statutes; and on Sunday the 17th he took the ſame Oath again before the Society, and then took his Seat in the Chapel, as Preſident of Magdalen College.

The College elect Dr. Hough.

Upon the News of this Election at White-Hall, the King immediately order'd the Lord Sunderland to write to the Fellows, which he did in theſe Terms; ‘ Gentlemen, The King being inform'd, that notwithſtanding his ‘ late Mandate ſent to you for electing Mr. Farmer to be Preſident of your ‘ College, you have made Choice of another Perſon; his Majeſty com- ‘ mands me to let you know, he is much ſurpriz'd at theſe Proceedings; ‘ and expects you ſhou'd ſend me an Account of what paſs'd on that Oc- ‘ caſion; and whether you did receive his Majeſty's ſaid Mandate before ‘ you choſe Dr. Hough.' Thereupon the Vice-Preſident and Fellows drew up their Case, relating to their late Election of a President, which was presented to the Duke of Ormond, Chancellor of the University of Oxford, with a Letter, wherein, 'They humbly begg'd his Grace to interpose with 'his Most Sacred Majesty for them, that they might not lie under the 'Weight of his Displeasure, for not being in a Capacity of obeying his Com-'mands.' This Submission not being satisfactory; and the great Duke of Ormond's Interposition little regarded, the Vice-President and Fellows were cited to appear before the Ecclesiastical Commissioners at White-Hall.

The Fellows cited.

On the 6th of June, six Fellows deputed by the Society, viz. the Vice-President, Dr. Fairfax, Dr. J. Smith, Mr. Hammond, Mr. Dobson and Mr. Fairer, appear'd before the Lords Commissioners, according to the foremention'd Citation. It being first demanded of them, Why they refus'd to obey the King's Mandate? they desired time to consider of it, which was granted to the 13th. at which time appearing, the Vice-President deliver'd in their Answer, which was read by Mr. Bridgeman, and wherein they al-

'firm'd

'firm'd by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, their Viſitor, as the Statutes of the 'College direct. And that they might not lye under his Majeſty's Diſ- 'pleaſure by their Proceedings, they did make an humble Repreſentation 'thereof to his Majeſty, by his Grace the Duke Ormond, Chancellor of 'the Univerſity of Oxford, ſetting forth their Indiſpenſable Obligations 'to obſerve their Founders Statutes. All which Matters they humbly 'offer'd to their Lordſhips, and pray'd to be diſmiſs'd with their Lordſhip's 'Favour. 1687. Jac. 3. Ref. 28

This Anſwer was ſign'd but by Five of the Delegates, Dr. Fairfax not conſenting to it; and therefore he deſired their Lordſhips to hear him apart, and to take his Reaſons why he cou'd not ſubſcribe. This was pleaſing to the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, who expecting he wou'd ſubmit, gave him leave to ſpeak, ſaying, Ay, this looks like a Man of Senſe, and a good Subject, let's hear what he will ſay:—But finding his Miſtake, and that Dr. Fairfax inſiſted, That in Eccleſiaſtical Courts there ſhou'd be a Libel given to the Party appeal'd, that he may know his Accuſation; that he deſired that Libel, and did not know for what he was call'd there, and that the Matter did not lie in that Court, but in Weſtminſter-Hall; the Chancellor in a Paſſion told him, He was a Doctor of Divinity, but not of Law. To this the Doctor reply'd, That he deſir'd to know by what Commiſſion or Authority they ſate? Which put his Lordſhip beyond all Patience, and made him cry out, Pray what Commiſſion have you to be ſo Impudent in Court? This Man ought to be kept in a dark Room; Why do you ſuffer him to go without a Guardian? Why did you not bring him to me, to beg him? Pray let the Officers ſeize him—Then the Delegates were order'd to withdraw, and after a whole Hours debate, the Vice-Preſident was call'd in alone, and order'd to attend the Court with the reſt of the deputed Fellows, on Wedneſday the 22d of the ſame Month. Mr. Fairfax's Treatment.

On the appointed Day the Delegates appear'd again according to the Commiſſioner's Order, and gave in their Allegations againſt Mr. Farmer; the moſt material of which were; 'That he had misbehav'd himſelf in Trinity- 'College in Cambridge, and had there receiv'd Admonition from the Ma- 'ſter, in order to his Expulſion: That having left Cambridge, he taught 'School at Chippenham in Wiltſhire, under a Non-Conformiſt Miniſter, 'without a Licence: That in September 1683, he was admitted of Mag- 'dalen-Hall in Oxford, where ſuch frequent Complaints were brought a- 'gainſt him to the Principal, for his troubleſome Humour and unquiet 'Temper, that to preſerve the Peace of the Society, he was deſir'd to leave 'the ſaid Hall: That after his leaving Magdalen-Hall, he was admitted 'into Magdalen-College; where, diſcourſing about Religion, he declar'd, 'That there was no Proteſtant but wou'd cut the King's Throat: Tho' 'at other times he ſaid, That whatſoever he pretended, he was really a 'Member of the Church of England; and that he made an Intereſt with 'ſome Roman Catholicks only to get Preferment by their Means, and for 'that Reaſon was willing to be thought of their Religion: And that, in 'general, the ſaid Mr. Farmer had had the Unhappineſs to lie under an 'ill Fame, as to his Life and Converſation; and ſome ſcandalous obſcene 'Actions were alledg'd, better to be omitted than recited in a Hiſtory.' Allegations againſt Farmer

Theſe Allegations were confirm'd by ſeveral Letters and Certificates produc'd in Court, which Mr. Farmer vainly endeavour'd to invalidate: But nevertheleſs the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners actually depriv'd Dr. Hough of his Preſidentſhip, and ſuſpended the Vice-Preſident Dr. Aldworth and Dr. Fairfax; and order'd the Fellows of the College to cauſe their Sentence to be executed, and affix'd to the Gates of their College; all which they refus'd to obey, and met with farther Threatnings. But in the mean time the Court was ſo aſham'd of Farmer's profligate Life, that the Matter being in He is laid aſide.

ſuſpence for about ſix Weeks; and at laſt the King inſtead of inſiſting on his Mandate to him, granted a Second in behalf of Dr. Parker Biſhop of Oxford; of which Affair and Conſequence, a particular Account will be given in a more proper Place, the next Chapter.

The King under Difficulties.

3. All this time the King, notwithſtanding his appearing Succeſſes in the Univerſities and other Places, labour'd under uncommon Difficulties, eſpecially as to his Parliament, his Loyal Parliament that had acted ſo generouſly to Him, as well as honourably to their Countrey. The bringing them over to his Majeſty's Deſigns, had been often, and by various Methods attempted, as Cloſetings, Threats, Promiſes, &c. yet ſtill he met with many Impediments and unexpected Obſtructions. To compaſs this great Work, and conſequently to eſtabliſh the King's Religion, all Things were carry'd with an over-bearing Hand; and no Rewards, or Diſcouragements, not to ſay Puniſhments, were wanting to be laid upon Men of all Ranks and Qualities; and no Services were conſider'd when they came to ſtand in Competition with Religion. To exemplify which; the Lord Preſident found Means to preſerve the Aſcendency, which his ſuperior Genius gave him over Father Petre, to ſecure to himſelf that vaſt ſhare he had gain'd in the King's Confidence and Favours; tho' he had been a warm Promoter of the Bill of Excluſion in the late Reign, and for that remov'd out of his Office of Secretary State. Whereas the Earls of Clarendon and Rocheſter, Brothers-in-law to the King, and who had ſignaliz'd their Loyalty and Affection to his Majeſty, by a continu'd courſe of important Services, eſpecially in the Popiſh Plot and Bill of Excluſion, were remov'd from their Employments, merely upon the Account of their Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, and Papiſts advanc'd in their Room. The ſame happen'd not long after to the noble Earl of Shrewsbury, who refuſing to return within the Pale of the Roman Catholick Church, which he had deſerted for ſome Years, was turn'd out of his Commiſſion of Colonel of Horſe, and his Regiment beſtow'd on Richard Hamilton.

Promotions and Alterations.

To carry on the ſame Deſigns, eſpecially to maintain the Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, Sir Richard Allibone, and ſome other Romaniſts, were made Jugdes in Weſtminſter-Hall; and Popiſh Juſtices of the Peace, and Deputy Lieutenants eſtabliſh'd all England over; the Judges in their Circuits had their private Inſtructions to know how Men ſtood affected towards the King's Diſpenſing Power, and to turn thoſe out of their Offices and Employments, who ſhew'd the leaſt diſlike of it. The Soldiers by this time were grown intolerably inſolent: The Officers too, when ever they pleas'd, pretended to be exempt from the Civil Power; and tho' the King was in perfect Peace, yet an old obſolete Act of Parliament, that made it Death for Soldiers, taking Pay in the King's Service in his Wars abroad, on the High Sea or in Scotland, to deſert their Colours, was now made to extend to the new rais'd Army on Hounſlow-Heath. And becauſe the worthy Recorder of London, Sir John Holt, wou'd not expound that Law according to the King's deſire, he was put out of, or laid down his Place; and ſo was Sir Edward Herbert remov'd from being Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench to the Common-Pleas, to make way for Sir Robert Wright to hang a Soldier upon the ſaid Statute.

It is not eaſy to imagine that King James cou'd ſo ſoon have gone ſuch Lengths, had he not been incourag'd or miſled by Lawyers as well as Divines. Beſides the innumerable Addreſſes from the Diſſenters, on which the King too much rely'd, his Majeſty was highly pleas'd with that from ſeveral Benchers and Barriſters of the Middle-Temple, which was preſented to him at Windſor on the 11th of June. This, being much remember'd at that Time, is inſerted as follows: 'We your Majeſty's moſt duti-

' ous Reign over us.

Expectations of the Parliament.

After all theſe Flights and Complements receiv'd, ſtill the King cou'd not manage his Parliament, which was ready to grant him all reaſonable Demands, but from time to time Prorogu'd it, not without Hopes of a Compliance at laſt. The 28th of April being one appointed Day, great were Mens Expectations to ſee it meet; and upon that Occaſion Dr. Burnet ſent over a ſhort and ſevere Pamphlet againſt Repealing the Teſt, directed to the Members of both Houſes, out of which we ſhall inſert one Paragraph, as making great Impreſſion at that Time: ' Our King has given ſuch Teſti-
' monies of his Zeal for his Religion, that we ſee among all his other Royal
' Qualities, there is none for which he deſires and deſerves to be ſo much
' admir'd, ſince even the Paſſion of Glory, of making himſelf the Terror
' of all Europe, and Arbiter of Chriſtendom, (which, as it is natural to all ' Princes, ſo muſt it be moſt particularly ſo to one of his Martial and No' ble Temper) yields to his Zeal for his Church; and that He, in whom
' we might have hop'd to ſee our Edward the Third, our Henry the ' Fifth reviv'd, chuſes rather to merit the heightening his Degree of Glory
' in another World, than to acquire all the Laurels and Conqueſts that this
' low and vile World can give him: And that, inſtead of making himſelf
' a Terror to his Neighbours, he is contented with the humble Glory of ' being a Terror to his own People; ſo that inſtead of the great Figure
' which this Reign might make in the World, all the News of England is ' now only concerning the Practices on ſome fearful Mercenaries.

The King Endeavours with it.

But when this Parliament aſſembled on the ſaid 28th of April, it was immediately, by Commiſſion, Prorogu'd till the 22d of November. In the mean time the King took infinite Pains, and us'd all Methods to bring over the reſpective Members, eſpecially that of the Cloſet. Here his Majeſty repreſented to them, ' That ſince four Monarchs attempted, and ſo many
' wiſe Politicians us'd all the propereſt Means to eſtabliſh an Uniformity
' of Religion in England, and all in vain, the only Method of ſetling ſuch
' Peace in the Nation, as might not be diſturb'd by Religion, was to allow
' every Man the Liberty of freely uſing his own: That the Perſecuting of ' Non-Conformiſts at home, forc'd good Subjects to go abroad, who were

'advantagious to foreign Countries, and thoſe who ſtay'd were uneaſy and 'diſcontented; and if they had Virtue enough to bear with their Troubles, 'they were always ready to encourage Rebellions and join with Factions: 'That the fatal Conſequences of it had been apparent in the late Reigns, 'againſt which no King cou'd ſecure his Perſon or his Subjects, without 'taking away from reſtleſs Spirits, the Pretence of Religion, which they 'abus'd to the Diſturbance of all others.' The King vary'd and reiterated theſe Arguments, and back'd and inforc'd them with Promiſes, Threats, &c. Whatever Impreſſions he might make upon particular Perſons, he cou'd not with all his Arts, move the Steadineſs of a Majority; and therefore when he found his Endeavours all fruſtrated, on the 2d Day of July, he by Proclamation Diſſolv'd the Parliament, after it continu'd in Being above two Years, tho' leſs than two Months in Action.

Preparations for a new Parliament.

I. 1. AFTER King James had diſſolv'd his loyal and complying Parliament, he proceeded to take different Ways and Meaſures, tho' all to bring about the ſame Deſigns he had ſo long aim'd at and attempted. Whereas his late Attempts were to induce a Parliament in Being to come into his Meaſures, his preſent Buſineſs was to make a new Parliament that ſhou'd do the like, and ſupport and eſtabliſh what he had ſo happily ſet on foot. In order to this, he reviv'd the laſt Grievance in his Brother's Reign, in which he Himſelf was ſuppos'd to have had a principal Hand; and carry'd on the Buſineſs of Quo Warranto's and new modelling of Corporations to a bolder and greater Degree than had ever been known before; and for that end he employ'd Inſtruments of all ſorts, and us'd all manner of Ways and Methods that were likely to ſucceed. What he did in general, and the State of the Nation at this Time, ſhall be mention'd chiefly from the Words of a Manuſcript, written by a curious Obſerver of theſe Times, and left in the Herald's Office; which ſpeaking of the Year 1687, proceeds thus:

MSS. Boyer. Gazette Jones. Narrativ. Burnet. Complete Hiſtory. Wood. Calamy. &c.

The great Buſineſs of this Summer was the mighty Endeavours the Romaniſts make to oblige and diſpoſe People to be conſenting to the Repeal of the Penal Laws and Teſts, at the Meeting of the next Parliament, which is only hinder'd from being call'd, becauſe to effect this, their Power as yet is impotent. In order to it, all Things are roundly manag'd, and not a Stone is left unturn'd that they think can forward the ſame: All their Policy and Intereſt is employ'd therein; the King being reſolv'd upon it, as appears in his Declaration. To which purpoſe the Diſſenters are pitch'd on as the propereſt Tools to perform this great and glorious Work, as all their Writers term it; and therefore they are only careſs'd and flatter'd, the Church of England's Mind being known by her not Addreſſing. And altho' when the Duke of Monmouth was in the Weſt, the Diſſenters were moſt moſt of them thrown into Priſon, as not to be truſted, they are the Men now in Favour, advanc'd to the greateſt Places in the Kingdom, and are become the only Loyaliſts: And now all the Corporations of England were, by Commiſſion, new regulated, the old Loyaliſts turn'd out, and new ones put in. All the Aldermen of the City are turn'd out, and Diſſenters made in their Room: The Liſts of the Lord-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, &c. of the ſeveral Counties of England are review'd, and ſuch as wou'd not promiſe to employ their Intereſt in this Affair, turn'd out of Commiſſion, and others who wou'd, plac'd in their Room; who go into their ſeveral Counties to diſcourſe the Gentry, and diſcover their Inclinations, and requeſt them to promiſe that they will ſend ſuch Members to the next Parliament, that ſhall take off the Penal Laws and Teſts. But the Gentry are very backward in promiſing any ſuch Thing; and in many Places the Lord-Lieutenants that ſummon them, receive but blunt Anſwers, as in Dorſetſhire, Cheſhire, Lincolnſhire, Suffolk, &c. The more to influence them, all ſuch Juſtices of the Peace are alſo turn'd out of Commiſſion that they apprehend will not be aiding to the ſame, and Diſſenters made in their Room; beſides many other Officers about the Court that are turn'd out of their Places.—The Pamphlets, which are numerous, that are writ on this Subject are mere Trifles, they all beg the Repeal, and are purely made up of perſwaſive Paragraphs, and fulſome Complements to the Diſſenters, ſtill ſounding, 'What Bleſſings they will reap by the ſame, and what Fools they will 'be, if they let ſlip this Opportunity.' But the Labour they uſe to bring this about, and the mighty Pains they take to make the Diſſenters ſenſible of their Happineſs, cauſes People to ſuſpect the Reality thereof. All this was done in order to this great Deſign this Year, and many other State Politicians are employ'd; the Judges have it in their Charges for their Circuits, to repreſent the great Encreaſe of Trade ſince the laſt Indulgence, &c. yet the Romaniſts moſt plauſible Reaſonings are evidently no better than little Tricks and Sophiſms; and ſeem intended by themſelves, rather to abuſe the Simple, than to ſatisfy the Wiſe. Thus far the Manuſcript. 1687. Jac. 3. Reſ. 28

After the Diſſolution of the Parliament, the numerous Addreſſes that fill'd the Gazettes all this Summer, began to vary in their Phraſe, and to add new Promiſes beſides thoſe of Lives and Fortunes, which were by degrees look'd upon as too general; and many of them expreſſly promis'd to chuſe ſuch Repreſentatives as ſhou'd be ready to anſwer and obey the King's Deſire. Thus the Diſſenters in the County of Oxford, tell the King; 'When 'your ſacred Majeſty, in your great Wiſdom, ſhall think fit to ſummon 'another Parliament, we will uſe our utmoſt Endeavours to elect ſuch Per'ſons as may abrogate and aboliſh ſuch Laws as have impeded the free Ex'erciſe of Religion.' Thus again the Diſſenters of Cirenceſter in Glouceſterſhire, ſay, 'We aſſure your Majeſty, That whenſoever you ſhall pleaſe to 'ſummon a new Parliament, we ſhall uſe our beſt Endeavours for the E'lection of ſuch Members as ſhall comply with your Majeſty's gracious 'Intentions, of abrogating all the Penal Laws for Matters of mere Reli'gion.' And even the High-Sheriff, with the Grand-Jury and Juſtices of 'the Peace for the County of Hereford, were ſo pack'd together by the Court, as to aſſure the King, 'That whenſoever your Majeſty ſhall pleaſe 'to call another Parliament, all Places will concur to elect ſuch Members 'as will be ready and diſpos'd to ſecond your clement Inclinations to abo'liſh the Teſt and Penal Laws. A new Set of Addreſſes.

It was chiefly to ſolicite this great Cauſe, that the King took a long Progreſs this Summer; and one of his cloſeſt Attendants, was his Loyal Friend William Penn, the reputed Quaker. The Deſign of the King's Journey was given out in Publick, to be the taking a View of his Ports and Harbours, and particularly of the Haven and Fortifications of Portſmouth; but the ſe- The King takes a Progreſs.

cret Intention appear'd plainly, the influencing and preparing the Electors of every Corporation through which he paſs'd. And as the Preſence of a Sovereign King, naturally raiſes an awful Veneration on the Minds of thoſe who ſeldom approach Majeſty; it can hardly be expreſs'd with what joyful Acclamations he was receiv'd, and what Loyal Acknowledgments were paid him at Portſmouth, Wincheſter, Bath, Glouceſter, Worceſter, Ludlow, Shrewsbury, Cheſter, Newport, Litchfield, Coventry, Briſtol, Banbury, and other Places; which gave his Majeſty great Hopes and Expectations. The Univerſity of Oxford diſtinguiſh'd themſelves upon this ſolemn Occaſion, endeavouring by all poſſible Demonſtrations of Duty and Reſpect to remove the King's Prepoſſeſſions againſt them: But all their elegant Speeches and exquiſite Entertainments were not ſufficient to atone for the Oppoſition given to his Majeſty's Command, with relation to Magdalen-College: And this naturally brings us to the Continuation of the Narrative of that remarkable Affair, begun in the laſt Chapter.

Continuation of the Proceedings againſt Magdalen College.

2. The Court having dropp'd Mr. Farmer, and iſſu'd out a ſecond Mandate for Biſhop Parker to be Preſident, as is already remember'd; a Letter was ſent from the Earl of Sunderland to the Society of Magdalen College, to let them know, 'That the King expected a ready Obedience to be paid 'to his Pleaſure, and deſired a ſpeedy Account of their Proceedings.' But the Fellows, finding the Biſhop unqualify'd by the Statutes of the College, and having already legally fill'd up the Preſidentſhip by Dr. Hough, did think themſelves oblig'd by their Oaths not to obey the Mandate, nor to proceed to a ſecond Election. The King was ſo incens'd at this freſh Contempt of his Orders, that he reſolv'd to make Oxford a Part of his Progreſs, and to ſhew his Reſentment in Perſon. Being arriv'd there, on the 4th of September, he commanded the Fellows of Magdalen-College to attend him at his Lodgings at Chriſt-Church; where he ask'd Dr. Pudſey, the Senior of the Fellows that appear'd before him, Whether they did receive his Letter? Upon the Doctor's anſwering, They did; the King in an angry Tone reply'd, Then you have not dealt with me like Gentlemen: You have done very uncivilly and undutifully by me. Here they all kneel'd down, and Dr. Pudſey offer'd a Petition, in which they ſhew'd 'their un-'expreſſible Affliction in finding themſelves reduc'd to ſuch an Extremity, 'that either they muſt diſobey his Majeſty's Commands, contrary to their 'Inclinations, and that conſtant Courſe of Loyalty, which they had ſhew'd 'upon all Occaſions, or elſe break their Founders Statutes, and deliberately 'perjure themſelves.' Then mentioning the Statutes and the Oaths, every one were bound to obſerve and take, 'they humbly beſeech'd his Majeſty, 'to give them leave to lay their Caſe and themſelves at his Feet, and that 'he wou'd extend to them that Grace and Tenderneſs which he vouchſaf'd 'to all his other Subjects.' But their ſubmiſſive Poſture did not appeaſe the King, who refuſing their Petition, vented himſelf in theſe ſurprizing Words; Ye have been a ſtubborn, turbulent College; I have known you theſe ſix and twenty Years; and ye have affronted me in this. Is this your Church of England Loyalty? One wou'd wonder to find ſo many Church of England Men in ſuch a Buſineſs. Go home, and ſhew your ſelves good Members of the Church of England. Get you gone!——Know, I am your King!—I will be obey'd; and I command you to be gone!—Go and admit the Biſhop of Oxford Head, Principal, what d'ye call it,——I mean Preſident of the College. Let them that refuſe know, They ſhall feel the Weight of their Sovereign's Diſpleaſure. Upon which the Fellows going out of the King's Preſence, they were call'd back, and ask'd, Whether they had not admitted Mr. Holben Fellow, ſince they receiv'd his Inhibition? They anſwer'd, There was no new Election or Admiſſion, but only only the Conſummation of a former Election. The Conſummation of a former Election, cry'd the King, is downright Diſobedience, and a freſh Aggravation.——Get ye home, I ſay, again; and immediately repair to your Chapel, and Elect the Biſhop of Oxford, or elſe you muſt expect to feel the Weight of my Hand.——Thereupon the Fellows once more offer'd their Petition upon their Knees; but the King cry'd out, Get you gone; I'll receive none from you, till you have obey'd me, and admitted the Biſhop of Oxford. Upon which they immediately went to their Chapel, and Dr. Pudſey propoſing, Whether they muſt obey the King? They readily anſwer'd, 'They 'were as ready to obey his Majeſty in all Things that lay in their Power, 'as any of the reſt of his Subjects; but the Electing of the Biſhop of Ox- 'ford, being directly contrary to their Statutes, and the poſitive Oath they 'had taken, they cou'd not apprehend it in their Power to obey him in 'this Matter. 1687. Jac. 3. Reſ. 28

They refuſe to elect the Biſhop of Oxford.

Accordingly they drew up an Addreſs, expreſſing the ſaid Reſolutions in the moſt ſubmiſſive Terms, which they gave to the Lord Preſident Sunderland, and which was afterwards deliver'd to the King in his Progreſs at Bath. Wherever his Majeſty came, he work'd a miraculous Converſion, as his Flatterers expreſs'd it, except in Oxford; and therefore this being the only Oppoſition he receiv'd in his whole Journey, it cou'd not but provoke a Monarch, who expected to be obey'd in every thing. Yet before he made Magdalen-College feel the Weight of his Diſpleaſure, William Penn, who with a Jeſuitical Conſcience promoted King James's Deſigns, was induſtriouſly employ'd; 'Not to trepan them,' as he pretended in a Letter to one of the Senior Fellows, 'but out of a paſſionate Concern for their Intereſt, 'to perſuade them either to a Compliance with his Majeſty's Letter, or to 'think among themſelves of ſome Expedient, to prevent the Ruin of their 'College and themſelves; and to offer it to his Majeſty's Conſideration, 'That the Order for the Quo Warranto againſt the Colleges might be re-'call'd, before it was too late; for they cou'd not but be ſenſible how 'highly his Majeſty was incens'd againſt them. Every Mechanick, adds 'Penn, knows the Temper of his preſent Majeſty, who never will receive 'a Baffle in any thing that he heartily eſpouſes; and that he does this, 'your ſelves have had too late and manifeſt an Inſtance to doubt of his Zeal 'in the Affair. Where there are ſo many Statutes to be obſerv'd, it is 'impoſſible but ſome muſt be broken at one time or other; and I am in-'form'd by the Learned in the Law, That a Failure in any one Point 'forfeits your Grant, and lays your College open to the Royal Diſpleaſure. 'I cou'd, ſays he in the Concluſion, give many other prudent Arguments 'that might poſſibly incline you to put an End to your Troubles almoſt at 'any Rate; but I ſhall only ſuggeſt this one thing to you, That your fatal 'Overthrow wou'd be a fair Beginning of the ſo much aim'd at Reforma-'tion, firſt of the Univerſity, then of the Church, and adminiſter ſuch an 'Opportunity to the Enemy, as may not perhaps occur in his Majeſty's 'Reign.

William Penn's Letter to them.

To this Letter the College return'd a handſome Anſwer; wherein, among other things, they declare, 'They are not conſcious of ever having given 'his Majeſty any juſt Offence, and therefore have no Reaſon to fear the iſ-'ſuing out of a Quo Warranto againſt them: And as for the reſt, they 'believe no Inſtance can be given of a Quo Warranto, brought againſt a 'College or Hall in the Univerſities, or any other Eccleſiaſtical Corporati-'on, for the Abuſes of ſome of the Conſtitutions and Franchiſes in them: 'That the Miſdemeanours of particular Perſons will not deſtroy a College; 'and that if the Corporation of a College ſhou'd be diſſolv'd, the Revenues 'thereof will return to the Founders Heirs, and not devolve to the Crown. 'That if their College muſt be the firſt Example of that kind, they ſhall

'be better juſtify'd by the Obſervation of their Statutes, at leaſt to God 'and their own Conſciences, than they cou'd by a voluntary and deliberate 'Breach of them.' Then they concluded with mentioning 'their Loyalty to 'the Crown, particularly in the Duke of Monmouth's Rebellion, when they 'rais'd a Company at their own Charges, and under the Command of their 'Fellows engag'd againſt him.

Commiſſioners ſent to viſit them.

3. When all the Perſuaſions of Penn, and Endeavours of other Perſons, wou'd not prevail upon the Fellows to act contrary to their Conſciences, the King appointed an inferior ſort of Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, namely, Dr. Cartwright Biſhop of Cheſter, Sir Robert Wright, Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, and Sir Thomas Jenner, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, who were ſent down to Oxford, to viſit Magdalen-College in particular. The Fellows were all cited to appear before thoſe Commiſſioners, who ſate in the College-Hall on the 21ſt Day of October in the Morning. The Preſident Dr. Hough, and all the Fellows appearing, the Biſhop of Cheſter open'd the Meeting with a particular Speech, in which he began with ſevere Reflections upon Diſloyalty and Diſobedience, eſpecially 'On their undutiful Behaviour to his Majeſty when at their Univerſity, 'in denying Compliance with his juſt and reaſonable Requeſt.' He urg'd, 'That the Church of England taught an unconditional and unlimited Obe- 'dience*;* and then enlarg'd upon his Majeſty's gracious Temper, that wou'd 'have no Man oppreſs'd in Things againſt his Conſcience, but wou'd ſuffer all Men to worſhip God in their own Way. In the mean time, continu'd he, we cannot but ſuppoſe that his Majeſty will make uſe of all prudent and lawful Methods to encourage thoſe of his own Religion, without injuring the Church of England, which is, at preſent, the Religion by 'Law Eſtabliſh'd; for his Majeſty will maintain that Altar, at which he 'himſelf does not worſhip; but at preſent we are in more Danger of Pro- 'phaneneſs than Popery.' He farther told them, 'That their Corporation, 'as others, was a Creature of the Crown; and that it was Inſolence in 'their Local Statutes, to ſpurn againſt their Maker: That their Diſtempers 'had brought this Viſitation upon them, the Conſequences of which might 'be ill to the Church and Univerſities. He exhorted them by the Bowels 'of Chriſt to conſider theſe Things.' He told them, That the Eyes of the World were upon them, and they ought to take Care, that their Practices might not influence their deluded Admirers. In ſum, the whole Deſign of this Speech, ſeem'd by Promiſes and Threats, to endeavour to bring them to a Compliance.

In the Afternoon, the Commiſſioners being again ſate, and the Society before them, after ſome Endeavours of Dr. Hough the Preſident, for longer Time to adviſe with Council, and to get a Copy of the Commiſſion, which was deny'd; the Preſident was ask'd by the Biſhop of Cheſter, Whether they wou'd ſubmit to this Viſitation? To which the Doctor anſwer'd in the Name of himſelf, and the greater Part of the Fellows, That they ſubmitted to it, as far as was conſiſtent with the Laws of the Land, and the Statutes of the College, and no farther; and deſired their Lordſhips, that this Declaration might be recorded. Whereupon Mr. Juſtice Wright ask'd him, Whether they cou'd imagine that they acted againſt the Law of the Land? As to the Statutes, the King had diſpens'd with them. The next Queſtion the Biſhop put to the Preſident, was, Whether they obſerv'd all thoſe Statutes? and he anſwer'd, He hop'd they did; the Biſhop reply'd, You have a Statute for Maſs; Why don't you read Maſs? This Queſtion from a Biſhop was a little ſurprizing, but the Preſident ſoon anſwer'd it, by telling him, That the Matter of that Oath was unlawful, and conſequently not obligatory; and beſides, That that Statute was taken away by the Laws of the Land. After ſeveral other frivolous Expoſtulations, the Biſhop of Cheſter peremptorily demanded, Firſt, All their Regiſters. Secondly, An Account of the Revenues of the College, and of their Benefactors; to what Uſe their Money was aſſigned, how employ'd, and how far converted to other Uſes, or in plain Terms, how far it was deſign'd for Hoſpitality. Thirdly, A Copy of all the Leaſes they had let for two Years laſt paſt. Then the Decree, declaring the Preſident's Election null and void, being read, the Preſident objected, That being never cited before the Commiſſioners, nor heard by them either in Perſon or by Proxy, he thought himſelf the firſt Inſtance of any Man that was ever depriv'd of his Freehold, wherein he was legally inveſted. 1687. Jac. 3. Reſ. 28

The Commiſſioners deprive Dr. Hough.

The next Morning Dr. Hough was ſeveral Times required to deliver up the Keys and quiet Poſſeſſion of his Lodgings, to the Perſon whom his Majeſty had appointed Preſident; which the Doctor refuſing to obey, ſtill alledging the Legality of his Election, the King's Proctor ſtood up, and accus'd him of Contumacy: And then the Biſhop of Cheſter admoniſh'd him three Times, To depart peaceably out of his Lodgings, and to act no longer as Preſident, or pretended Preſident of his College. On the ſame Day in the Afternoon, the Biſhop of Cheſter ask'd the Fellows, Whether they wou'd admit the Biſhop of Oxford Preſident; ſince Dr. Hough's Place was declared void? To which the greateſt Part anſwer'd, They cou'd not do it without premeditated Perjury, and therefore wou'd not do it. During this Examination Dr. Hough came into Court, without any Attendance, and having waited till it was ended, and the Commiſſioners at a Pauſe, he deſired Leave to ſpeak a few Words; which being granted, he bravely ſaid, Since you have been pleas'd to deprive me of my Place of Preſident of this College, I do proteſt againſt all your Proceedings, in Prejudice of me and my Right, as illegal, unjuſt, and null; and therefore I appeal to my Sovereign Lord the King in his Courts of Juſtice. This ſo tranſported the Strangers and young Scholars in the Room, that they gave a triumphant Humm!—which ſo incens'd the Commiſſioners, that notwithſtanding all the Proteſtations the Preſident and Fellows cou'd make, the former offering to purge himſelf by Oath, that he was no ways acceſſary to it; yet the Lord Chief Juſtice was not to be pacify'd, but charging it upon Dr. Hough, bound him in a Bond of a Thouſand Pounds, and Security to the like Value, to make his Appearance at the King's-Bench Bar the Term following. Moreover the Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, They had met with nothing but Affronts from the College: That as for himſelf, he valu'd not what People ſaid of him, but was reſolv'd to vindicate the Honour of his Maſter to the laſt Drop of his Blood; and if the Civil Power cou'd not keep them in Order, the Military ſhou'd: At which Time ſeveral Officers then in Town, came into the Room. The ingenious Baron Jenner likewiſe ſhew'd his Reſentment upon this Occaſion, by punning upon the Preſident's Name, and ſaying to him, Sir, you muſt not think to Huff (Hough) us.

His Proteſtation applauded.

The Court having met again three Days after, the Biſhop of Cheſter ask'd the Fellows, Whether they wou'd inſtall the Biſhop of Oxford Preſident, or aſſiſt at his Inſtalment? To this they anſwer'd, as in the former Caſe, That as they cou'd not do it without deliberate Perjury, ſo it was not in their Power to do it. Whereupon they adjourn'd to the Chapel, and put Mr. Wiggins, Chaplain to the Biſhop of Oxford, impower'd as a Proxy, into the Preſident's Stall, in the Abſence of all the Fellows but Mr. Charnock; and he took the Oaths enjoin'd by the Statutes at the Admiſſion of a Preſident, with the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy. Then the Commiſſioners conducted him to the Preſident's Lodgings, where knocking three Times, and the Door not being open'd, a Smith was ſent for to force it open, and Mr. Wiggins in his Lord's Name, took poſſeſſion of the Lodgings.

The Commiſſioners inſtall Biſhop Parker by Proxy.

1687. Jac. 3. Reſ. 28

Immediately after, the Biſhop of Cheſter ask'd the Fellows, Whether they wou'd obey the Biſhop of Oxford, as now inſtall'd Preſident, by virtue of the King's Mandate? Dr. Fairfax briskly anſwer'd, He neither cou'd nor wou'd obey him, having already a lawful and ſtatutable Preſident. Dr. T. Smith and Mr. Charnock comply'd with his Majeſty's Pleaſure, and others deſir'd Time to conſider on ſo weighty a Queſtion, which was granted; the Biſhop of Cheſter bidding them go and conſult about it among themſelves. In the Afternoon this Anſwer was given in by the Society, except Dr. Fairfax: 'That whereas his Majeſty had been pleas'd by his Royal Au-'thority, to cauſe the Biſhop of Oxford to be inſtall'd Preſident, they did 'ſubmit as far as was lawful and agreeable to the Statutes of the College, 'and no way prejudicial to the Right and Title of Dr. Hough.' This Anſwer was accepted, except the laſt Clauſe, which the Lord Chief Juſtice, and Baron Jenner declar'd as Judges, to be inſignificant, Since nothing they cou'd do, cou'd any way invalidate Dr. Hough's Title, but left them ſtill at Liberty to be Witneſſes for him, or to be any other way ſerviceable to him in the Recovery of his Right: And upon this Aſſurance, the Society was prevail'd with to leave out the laſt Clauſe. Dr. Fairfax perſiſting in his former Anſwer, receiv'd Sentence of Expulſion; againſt which he proteſted as null, unjuſt and unlawful. This Proteſtation was over-rul'd by the Commiſſioners, and a Copy of the Sentence deny'd; tho' moſt earneſtly deſired at the Inſtance of Dr. Hedges and Mr. Vice-Chancellor, two Days after.

The Commiſſioners now thought they had gain'd their Point, and in a better Humour, declar'd, They were well ſatisfy'd with the Anſwer the Society had given them; and tho' before they had laid a Libel to their Charge, yet that Night they declared, They had met with nothing but Civility, and that they ſhou'd receive the ſame from them; and that they had ſhewn themſelves Men of excellent Temper, and that they wou'd repreſent them faithfully Above to their Advantage; and immediately they diſpatch'd an Expreſs to the Court, with an Account of their Proceedings. On the next Morning, the Fellows having been order'd before to bring in their Anſwers to the following Queries, '1. What Gifts and Proviſions they 'had for the Entertainment of Strangers? 2. What was the Value of 'them? 3. How they were apply'd? 4. And where was the Place of 'Entertainment?' They made it very ſatisfactorily appear, that one Year with another, they gave almoſt a Hundred Pounds in Charity-Money, over and above what by their Statutes they were oblig'd to give. Upon which their Lorſhips expatiated upon their generous Bounty and Liberality, ſaying, The Complaint on this Account was groundleſs; and that it wou'd induce his Majeſty to entertain better Thoughts of them in other Matters. The Day after, the Fellows having preſented to the Commiſſioners a Liſt of Leaſes, which had been renew'd for two Years laſt paſt, Mr. Charnock, the new Convert, ask'd their Lordſhips, Whether their Leaſes ſtood good, which had been ſeal'd ſince Dr. Hough's Election? The Lord Chief Juſtice anſwer'd, Yes; for Corporations always ſpeak by their Seals. Then their Lordſhips perus'd the College-Regiſters; and finding nothing in them to which they cou'd object, they were return'd, and the Court adjourn'd.

The Fellows are farther examin'd.

A particular Submiſſion expected from them.

Things now ſeem'd to go favourably for the Majority of the Society, when on Friday the 28th of October, the Commiſſioners convening the Fellows, acquainted them, That they had repreſented them fairly to the King; but that his Majeſty expected ſome farther Submiſſion, which they adviſ'd them to make, By acknowledging their Contempt to his Sacred Majeſty in Perſon, and to his Letters; That they ſhou'd promiſe to behave themſelves loyally for the future; That they ſhou'd own the Proceedings and Legality of the Court, implore his Majeſty's Pardon, and lay themſelves themſelves at his Feet; and that they ſhou'd declare their entire Submiſſion to the Biſhop of Oxford, as their Preſident. To this the Fellows gave their Anſwer in Writing, 'That they had endeavour'd in all their Actions, to expreſs their Duty to his Majeſty; and being conſcious to themſelves, that 'in the whole Conduct of the Buſineſs before their Lordſhips, they had 'done nothing but what their Oaths and Statutes had indiſpenſably oblig'd 'them to, they cou'd not make any Declaration, whereby they acknow-'ledg'd that they had done any thing amiſs; having acted according to the 'Principles of Loyalty and Obedience, ſo far as they cou'd, without doing 'Violence to their Conſciences, or Prejudice to their Rights, (one of which 'they conceiv'd the Electing a Preſident to be) from which they were 'ſworn upon no Account to depart.' Upon the Peruſal of this Anſwer, their Lordſhips expreſs'd their Diſlike to it, ſaying, It did not come up to the Addreſs ſent to his Majeſty at Bath, nor to the Paper they deliver'd three Days before. Whereupon a freſh Queſtion being put to the Fellows, Whether they wou'd obey the Biſhop of Oxford as their Preſident. All, except one or two, anſwer'd, They cou'd not do it. Then Mr. Fulham, being particularly interrogated, he alledg'd, That the Biſhop of Oxford had not Poſſeſſion in due Form of Law, nor by proper Officers; and that he was inform'd that the proper Officers to give Poſſeſſion of a Free-Hold was the Sheriff, with a Poſſe Comitatus. To this the Lord-Chief-Juſtice reply'd in a Paſſion, Pray, who is the beſt Lawyer, you or I? Your Oxford Law is no better than your Oxford Divinity; if you have a mind to a Poſſe Comitatus, you may have one ſoon enough. Mr. Fulham endeavour'd to make an Excuſe for what he had ſaid, which their Lordſhips rejected; and having thought fit to ſuſpend him from the Profits of his Fellowſhip, for his Contempt, and opprobrious Language, they adjourn'd till the 16th of November; and ſo immediately left Oxford and went to London.

Which they refuſe.

The Commiſſioners return to London.

4. After the King had ſeen an Account of the Proceedings of the Viſitors, being ſtill unſatisfy'd, his Majeſty order'd them, 'That at their Re-'turn to the College, they ſhou'd ſummon all the Fellows before them, and 'endeavour to make them ſenſible of their Offences; and if they ſhou'd re-'fuſe to ſubſcribe the above-mention'd Submiſſion, immediately to expel 'them for their Obſtinacy.' Purſuant to theſe Inſtructions, the Lords Commiſſioners return'd to Oxford on the 16th of November; and being ſat, the firſt thing they did, was to ſend for the Buttery-Book; then they call'd for Mr. Joyner and Mr. Allibone, two Roman Catholicks, whom they enter'd actual Fellows, all Oaths being diſpens'd with, beſides that of the College.

They go a ſecond time to Oxford.

Having gone ſo far, the Biſhop of Cheſter again made a formal Speech to the Fellows, wherein he told them; 'That their many Contempts and wil-'ful Diſobedience had occaſion'd this Viſitation, which wou'd end at laſt in 'their Ruin: That their Society had been long exercis'd in the Methods of 'of Quarrelling, had always been troubled with factious Spirits, and teſty 'Mutineers, ever ſince the Reſtoration of the late King: That they had 'encourag'd Quarrels among themſelves; Quarrels between themſelves and 'Preſident; Quarrels at length, between themſelves and Viſitor. That by 'theſe Steps, from quarrelling with the Preſident and Viſitor, they had at 'laſt advanc'd to the higheſt Pitch of Inſolence, to quarrel with their Prince, 'and affront his Sacred Majeſty.' Then he endeavour'd to make them ſenſible of their irregular Conduct, and heinous Offences, from their firſt diſobeying the King's Mandate, to that Day; and told them, 'They urg'd the 'Obſervances of their Statutes, of which they had not been ſo conſtant 'Obſervers when their own Humour prompted them to a Diſpenſation; wit-'neſs that of being ſerv'd per Maſculos, by which great Scandals had come 'to the Society by reaſon of Baſtards. His Majeſty, added he, was 'extremely amaz'd that his Clemency ſhou'd be deſpis'd; but yet, to 'your Comforts be it ſpoken, his Patience and Goodneſs extend as far as 'your Provocations can: But if you will perſiſt in your Obſtinacy, thoſe 'that are too tall to ſtand, and too ſtubborn to bend, deſerve to be bro-'ken. And now I think I have ſaid enough to let you know, that the Fig-'Leaves you have ſo artfully ſtitch'd together, are not ſufficient to cover 'your Nakedneſs. I wiſh to God you had the ſame Tenderneſs for your 'Concern, as his Majeſty's Commiſſioners have for you. But if you ſtill 'perſiſt to oppoſe the Royal Power of the King, we, who are come to vin-'dicate the Right and Honour of his Majeſty, reſolve to diſcharge our Con-'ſciences, and Duties to God and the King, without any Reſpect of Popu-'larity; that's but the Paradiſe of Fools, and Scorn of Wiſe Men; and there-'fore as for us, we have no more Regard to People's Diſlike, than what 'they dream. By reaſon therefore of your late hypocritical Submiſſion, the 'Commiſſioners have thought fit to draw up an Inſtrument, to which, if you 'will immediately ſubſcribe, before you leave the Room, we ſhall leave you 'to his Majeſty's Pardon: And this we expect from you all, except Dr. Tho-'mas Smith and Mr. Charnock, with whoſe Behaviour the King is ſo well 'ſatisfy'd, that he expects no more from them.

The above-mention'd Submiſſion being read to the Fellows, all, except Dr. Thomas Smith and Mr. Charnock, refus'd to ſign it. Mr. Thompſon being call'd in his Turn, alledg'd he had always been obedient to the King's Commands; that he was not concern'd in the Election of Dr. Hough; that he voted for Mr. Farmer, and was ready to ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxford; and ſo he was excus'd. After a ſhort time, all who refus'd to Sign the Submiſſion, being twenty five in Number, were call'd in, and by Sentence of their Lordſhips totally Depriv'd, and Expell'd from their Fellowſhips, for their Diſobedience to his Majeſty's Commands, and obſtinately contemning his Royal Authority; againſt which they all proteſted, declaring, They wou'd uſe all juſt and legal Ways of being reliev'd. This Sentence was confirm'd by a ſhocking Decree made at White-Hall by the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, declaring, not only the Deprivation of Dr. Hough, and the ſaid twenty five Fellows, 'But that they ſhou'd be incapable of re-'ceiving, or being admitted into any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, Benefice or 'Promotion; and ſuch of them who were not in Holy Orders, they ad-'judg'd incapable of receiving, or being admitted into the ſame.' Thus by a Sentence of an illegal Court, a famous Society of learned and worthy Proteſtants were turn'd out of their Free-Holds, to make room for a Popiſh Seminary; and thus was the unfortunate King prevail'd with by his evil Miniſters to aſſume a Power, not only to diſpenſe with Laws, but likewiſe with Oaths. After the Expulſion of the Fellows, moſt of the Demy's were likewiſe turn'd out of Magdalen-College by the Biſhop of Oxford, and Mr. Charnock his Vice-Preſident, and Roman Catholicks put in their Places.

They are depriv'd, and made incapable of any Benefice.

Biſhop Parker's Book.

To acknowledge the King's Favours, the Biſhop of Oxford ſoon after publiſh'd a Book, call'd, Reaſons for Abrogating the Teſt, impos'd upon all Members of Parliament; which Book was Licens'd by the Earl of Sunderland himſelf; and his Majeſty commanded the Stationers not to print any Anſwer to the ſame. This was very ſurprizing from a Biſhop of the Church of England; and the more ſo, when it was found that he had treated the chief Divines of it with an Inſolence ſuperior to any of its open Enemies. Therefore, notwithſtanding the King's Commands, ſeveral ſharp Anſwers came out againſt it; but none made greater Noiſe at this time than that written by Dr. Burnet; out of which we may take notice of two or three Paſſages. He unluckily turns theſe Words in the Title-Page, Written for

for the Author's own Satisfaction, and now publiſh'd for the Benefit of all others whom it may concern. But, ſays he, the Words are certainly wrong plac'd; for the Truth of the Matter is, That it was written for the Author's own Benefit, and now publiſh'd for the Satisfaction of all others whom it may concern. Speaking of the whole Body of the Biſhops, he ſays, 'If there were two or three ſuch as he among the twenty ſix, they may 'comfort themſelves with this, That a dozen of much better Men, had one 'among them, that I confeſs was not much worſe, if it was not for this, 'that he let the Price of his Treachery fall much lower than Sam. Oxon 'does.' Again he ſays, 'When one reflects on two of the Biſhops that 'were of that venerable Body, whoſe Memory will be bleſſed in the preſent 'and following Ages, thoſe two great and good Men that fill'd the Sees of 'Cheſter and Oxford, we muſt conclude, that as the World was not wor-'thy of them, ſo certainly their Sees were not worthy of them, ſince they 'have been plagu'd with ſuch Succeſſors—— With what ſenſible Regret 'muſt thoſe who were ſo often edify'd with the Gravity, the Piety, the 'Generoſity, and Charity of the late Biſhop of Oxford, look on, when 'they ſee ſuch a Harlequin in his room.' Having charg'd Dr. Burnet with writing Lampoons upon the preſent Princes of Chriſtendom, the Doctor retorts it upon him, with this ſatyrical Period; 'It is Lampoon enough upon 'the Age, that he is a Biſhop, but it is a downright Reproach that he is made 'the Champion of a Cauſe, which, if it is bad of it ſelf, muſt ſuffer extreme-'ly by being in ſuch Hands.

5. While the unequal Proceedings againſt Magdalen-College were depending, the King thought fit to give a Spectacle to his Subjects, which made them ſufficiently to underſtand, that he deſign'd to ſhew very little Regard to the Eſtabliſh'd Laws of the Nation. For as an Embaſſador had been the laſt Year humbly ſent to Rome; ſo a Nuntio from thence was this Year to be ſolemnly and magnificently receiv'd. Signior Ferdinando D'Adda, Domeſtick Prelate and Aſſiſtant to the Pope, who was the Queen's Favourite, and had follow'd the Court ever ſince the King's Acceſſion to the Crown, was declared Apoſtolical Nuntio the Year before, tho' in a private manner; but to complete the Character with more Pomp and Luſtre, he was conſecrated Archbiſhop of Amaſia, in the Royal Chapel at White-Hall, by Biſhop Leyburn, Vicar Apoſtolical in England, aſſiſted by two other Iriſh Biſhops. And tho' by Law it was High-Treaſon for any to aſſume the Character of the Pope's Nuntio; he was now to make his Publick Entry as a foreign Embaſſador, which he did on the 3d of July at Windſor with all Ceremony and Solemnity. This being a Sight that had not been ſeen in England for a hundred and fifty Years before, the Concourſe of People was very extraordinary upon this Occaſion: And it is hard to ſay, whether their Surprize at the Pomp and Grandeur of the Solemnity, was greater than their Indignation to behold the Nuntio in all his Pontificalibus, preceded by a Croſs-Bearer, and a Flock of Prieſts and Monks in the Habits of their reſpective Orders. We are aſſur'd that this Ceremony occaſion'd the Diſgrace of that celebrated Patriot the Duke of Somerſet, firſt Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to the King: For his Grace being then in Waiting, and the King having order'd him to attend the Nuntio to his Audience, he deſired his Majeſty to excuſe him from an Office which the Laws of the Land made criminal. The King reiterated his Orders; but his Grace perſiſting in his Denial, his Majeſty told him in a Paſſion, That he would trouble him no more with any Commands, and therefore he expected he wou'd reſign his Places of Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber, and Colonel of the Dragoons. To which the Duke was obedient, without the leaſt Concern; as being content to preſerve his Conſcience and Honour, while he loſt nothing but the King's Favour Favour and his Places. We are farther told that a certain Biſhop of the Church, or rather of the Court, was leſs ſcrupulous, and was willing to make up part of the Train, as if he had been one of the Roman Retinue. The Nuntio wanted an Opportunity to appear publickly in London; and therefore it was projected, that he ſhou'd be invited to come with the King himſelf to Dine at Guild-Hall on the Lord Mayor's Day: And he was accordingly receiv'd with unuſual Ceremony at Temple-Bar by Sir John Parſons and Sir Baſil Firebraſs, the two Sheriffs; and was particularly complemented by Sir John Shorter the Lord-Mayor, and a profeſs'd Diſſenter. And when a publick Account was given by Authority of the Grand Entertainment, eſpecial Care was taken to expreſs, 'That among the foreign Mi-'niſters who were invited, there were preſent the Pope's Nuntio, and the 'French Embaſſador.' Some have been of Opinion that this Miniſter was an Inſtrument of puſhing things to the fatal Extremities that were now in Preparation. But others ſay, He had certainly a greater Share in the Intrigues of the Ruelle, or Ladies Aſſembly, than in thoſe of the Cabinet-Council; and had too much Senſe to approve of all the Meaſures that were then taken: And therefore he often deſired to be recall'd, leſt he ſhou'd be thought to be really concern'd in them.

The French Proteſtants reliev'd.

Notwithſtanding the King's Zeal for his Religion, he this Year extended his Generoſity in a particular Manner to the diſtreſs'd Proteſtants who had lately fled from France upon Account of their Religion: For he not only granted them Briefs, but gave them alſo large Sums out of his Privy-Purſe, to excite the Charity of his Subjects by his Royal Example. Nevertheleſs, theſe Briefs had not all the good Effect that was intended by his Majeſty; many People refuſing to contribute towards theſe charitable Collections, upon an ill-grounded Suſpicion that they were deſign'd by the Court for the Maintenance of French Papiſts that were invited over to ſerve the King's Deſigns: Others endeavour'd to leſſen King James's Bounty, by ſaying it was but a Piece of Policy, in order to oblige his Proteſtant Subjects, and promote his new Deſign of Toleration. But a French Writer well obſerves, all that an Hiſtorian can ſay in this Matter is, that where the Benefit is real, it is a kind of Ingratitude too nicely to enquire into the Motive of it. The poor Proteſtants were not backward in expreſſing their Thanks to his Majeſty, particularly the Miniſters of their Church in the Savoy; but the latter did it with more Reſerve and Circumſpection, as appear'd upon the following Occaſion: The Jeſuits from the time of their Settlement in the Savoy, had a Deſign upon the French Chapel there; and Mr. Pulton their Rector or Principal, tamper'd with Mr. Dubourdieu, in order to engage him to reſign that Church, promiſing him, as from the King, to build them another on any Ground they ſhou'd chuſe between White-Hall and Temple-Bar, with a large Sum of Money beſides. Monſieur Dubourdieu made anſwer, That being but one, he deſired time to communicate his Propoſal to other Miniſters, and Church-Wardens in the Savoy. Theſe being met upon this critical Affair, it was agreed, That before they ſhou'd give the Jeſuits a poſitive Anſwer, they ſhou'd conſult with ſuch Lords who were moſt conſpicuous for their Wiſdom, and Affection to the Proteſtant Intereſt. Accordingly Mr. Dubourbieu waited upon the Lord Hallifax, Danby, Nottingham, and ſome few others, who all freely adviſ'd them after this Manner; Never hearken to any Terms with the Jeſuits; let them purſue their violent Meaſures; ſuffer your ſelves to be thruſt out of your Church; for by that Means you will do your own and the Nation's Buſineſs.

Promotions.

And now it may be Time to conclude the Old Year, as uſually, with Promotions and Deaths of conſiderable Perſons. As to the former, on the 26th of April, his Majeſty out of his Royal Favour to the Right Honourable the Earl of Sunderland, Lord Preſident of the Council, and Principal Secretary of State, was pleas'd to honour him with a Garter; and he was accordingly inſtall'd at Windſor on the 23d of May. The Duke of Berwick, the King's natural Son, was deſign'd for General of the Standing Forces; and to qualify him with more Experience and Reputation, he was ſent over into Hungary to make a Campaign in the Imperial Army; and his Majeſty was pleas'd to Knight Edward Vaudrey, Eſq; who was to attend his Grace in that Campaign. Captain William Phipps being on the 28th of June preſented to the King by the Duke of Albemarle, his Majeſty receiv'd him very graciouſly, and conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon him, in conſideration of his extraordinary Services in a late Expedition, having brought home a great Treaſure which was taken out of the Sea, after it had lain there forty four Years. The Duke of Albemarle himſelf was ſoon after made Governor of Jamaica; which Preferment was by many look'd upon as little better than an honourable Baniſhment. In Auguſt his Majeſty was pleas'd to confer upon Sir Francis Ratcliff Baronet, of Northumberland, the Dignity of an Earl of this Kingdom, creating him Baron of Tindale, Viſcount Ratcliff, and Earl of Derwentwater. On September the 25th, Roger Earl of Caſtlemain, his Majeſty's late Ambaſſador Extraordinary to the Pope, was ſworn of his Majeſty's Privy-Council, and took his Place at the Board. Within a Month after, his Grace William Duke of Hamilton, and Sir Nicholas Butler, one of the Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Cuſtoms, were ſworn, and took their Places at the ſame Board. Laſtly, on the 11th of November, the famous political Jeſuit, under the Title of the Honourable and Reverend Father Edward Petre, Clerk of the Cloſet to the King, was ſworn of his Majeſty's moſt honourable Privy-Council, and took his Place at the Board. This laſt Step was wholly againſt the Conſent of the Queen, and the moſt conſiderable Roman Catholicks, who look'd upon it as a ſure Way to bring Ruin upon all the King's Affairs and Deſigns; therefore it has been by many accounted one of the Political Strains of the Prime Miniſter: But of that we cannot ſpeak with Certainty.

Father Petre made Privy-Counſellor.

The Death of Dr. More.

For the Deaths of conſiderable Perſons, we ſhall begin with two Divines of very different Characters, Dr. Henry More, and Dr. Thomas Jacombe: The firſt was a Linconſhire Man by Birth, and of Chriſt-College in Cambridge by Education, where he continu'd many Years a Fellow, and an Ornament to that worthy Society, both for his deep Learning and exemplary Piety: He was a celebrated Platoniſt, one of a large and uncommon Genius, of a ſubtle and penetrating Head, and an indefatigable Searcher into Metaphyſical Notions, Immaterial Subſtances, Spirits, Apparitions, &c. being the great Promoter, and almoſt the Founder of Mr. Glanvill's remarkable Opinions. His Works have been much admired in ſeveral Countries, but not ſo much approv'd on, he being thought too Paradoxical in his Philoſophy, if not Heterodoxical in his Divinity; yet his Ethicks ſhew him to be a judicious, and his Metaphyſicks a profound Writer. The other, Dr. Jacombe, was one of the Chief of the Presbyterian Divines, born in Leiceſterſhire, and for ſome Time educated in both Univerſities, being for a while Fellow of Trinity-College in Cambridge. Leaving that Place before the Death of King Charles the Firſt, he was made Miniſter of Ludgate in London, till he was ſilenc'd by the Act of Uniformity in 1662, after which he was ſhelter'd by the Counteſs Dowager of Exeter. He was a moderate and beneficent Nonconformiſt, a celebrated Preacher, a conſiderable Scholar, and a noted Theologiſt; and at his Death he left behind him an excellent Library of the moſt valuable Books, in all Parts of Learning. After theſe two Divines, we ſhall mention that famous Vertuoſo Sir William Petty, who had his Education both abroad and in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he was made both Doctor of Phyſick, and Anatomy Profeſſor, and afterwards a Fela Fellow of the College of Physicians, and one of the first Members of the Royal Society, where he prov'd a most singular Promoter of Experimental Philosophy and Mechanick Instruments. He was a Man of a most pregnant Genius, and of a prodigious working Invention, which he continually reduc'd to Practice; and he finely distinguish'd himself by his Surveys of Ireland, his Political Arithmetick, and other Works which prov'd very honourable to himself, and useful to the Nation.

And the Duke of Buckingham.

Last of all we shall mention George Villers the famous Duke of Buckingham, a wonderful Man often mention'd in the late Reign, who in this retir'd to his only Castle at Helmeley in the North of Yorkshire, where he led a dissolute unaccountable Life for a Year and a Quarter, and spent the wretched Remains of a vast Estate; and going to hunt near Kirby-Moreside, not far off, he met with his last Sickness in a Publick House of that Town. Here the Lord Irwin his Relation prevail'd upon him to have a Clergy-man to assist him; who coming before him, ask'd his Grace Of what Religion he was? He answer'd to this Effect, It is an insignificant Question; for I have been a Shame and Disgrace to all Religions; if you can do me any Good, do. He dy'd in that House about threescore Years of Age; in which Period of Time, he had met with as much Variety of Fortunes, Accidents, Sufferings and Enjoyments in this World, as perhaps any Man in the Kingdom. With him expir'd a noble Family and Estate in the Second Generation; and those Honours were now extinguish-ed, which in their Rise had help'd to set the whole Nation into a Flame.

II. 1. We are now entering upon the fourth Year of King James's Reign, a Year the most formidable and most fortunate to the Protestant Cause, and the Liberties of the Nation, that had happen'd since the Restauration. Tho' indeed there was no great Reason to believe that the King cou'd obtain his Ends by a Parliament, considering the general Averseness of Counties, the free Spirit which had always distinguish'd a House of Commons, and the Difficulty of making a Majority of that numerous Assembly, yet the Protestants were not without their just Fears: They found that the Council was almost fill'd with Popish Lords, and that Father Petre, his Majesty's Confessor and chief Almoner, was lately admitted, and had a leading Vote in their Consultations; That the Church of England-Men were remov'd from all Employments to make room for Romanists, and such as under the Name of Dissenters promoted the Popish Designs; and that the King having the Power of England in his Hands, and that of France in readiness upon Occasion, he might be tempted into desperate Measures to establish his Religion. Yet still the more moderate and patient among them comforted themselves with the Thoughts that the King being advanc'd in Years, his Reign therefore cou'd not be long; and that a Protestant Princess, who was the next Heir to the Crown, wou'd soon make them forget the Hardships of a Popish Government, and restore the happy Days of Queen Elizabeth: But they were struck with Consternation when they heard the Whispers of the Queen being with Child, publickly confirm'd by a Proclamation, which appeared on the 2d of January in the Gazette, and declar'd, 'That it had pleas'd Almighty God (who in signal 'Manner had bless'd his Majesty and his Kingdoms, under his Majesty's 'Government, with great Prosperity, Peace and Plenty) to give his Ma-'jesty also apparent Hopes and good Assurance of having Issue by his 'Royal Consort the Queen, who, through God's great Goodness, was 'now with Child. Wherefore his Majesty Appoints, That on the fif-'teenth of this January, within the Cities of London and Westminster, 'and upon the twenty ninth in all other Places, Publick Thanksgiving and Solemn Prayer shou'd be offer'd up to God, on this Occasion, in a Form 'of

'ſhops of Durham, Rocheſter and Peterborough.

Accordingly, theſe three Biſhops, who ſtill acted in the room of the Bi- Jac. 4.
ſhop of London, drew up a Form of Thankſgiving and Prayer, at a time Ref. 28 when others were willing to decline the Undertaking. In which Form, the following Expreſſions in one of the Prayers, have been particularly remember'd and reflected upon.—— 'Bleſſed be that good Providence which has A particular Prayer.
, vouchſaf'd us freſh Hopes of Royal Iſſue by our Gracious Queen Mary.
'Strengthen Her, we beſeech Thee, and perfect what thou haſt begun:
'Command thy Holy Angels to watch over Her continually, and defend
'Her from all Dangers and evil Accidents, that what She has conceiv'd
'may be happily brought forth, to the Joy of our Sovereign Lord the 'King, the further Eſtabliſhment of his Crown, the Happineſs and Wel'fare of the whole Kingdom, and the Glory of thy great Name, &c.'
However, as far as we can learn, theſe and ſome other Expreſſions, were, by the greateſt part of the Clergy, omitted in the Reading, and paſs'd by, and the Day in moſt Places kept with great Coolneſs and Indifferency; not that there wanted Rejoicers and Time-Servers that cou'd make ſufficient amends for the others neglect.

The Roman Catholicks, who ſeem'd already to triumph over the Proteſtants, were ſtill more elevated upon this News; and ſo far, that ſome of them had the Aſſurance to declare, 'That tho' the Child ſhou'd prove a 'Daughter, yet it wou'd cut off the Princeſſes of Orange and Denmark
'from the Succeſſion,' upon a weak Suppoſition, 'That a Daughter born
'ſince the King's Advancement to the Throne, ought to take Place be'fore Princeſſes born while he was Duke of York.' And becauſe the Queen's Big-Belly was at this time Strange, therefore it was to be look'd upon as miraculous; and the Jeſuits gave it out, 'That it was either the 'Effect of a ſolemn Petition which the late deceas'd Dutcheſs of Modena
'had put up in Heaven to the Bleſſed Virgin Mary; or of a Vow the 'Queen had made to our Lady of Loretto, with the Preſent of a Golden
'Image enrich'd with Precious Stone.' Which Stories and Reports ſerv'd more to increaſe the Suſpicions of the Proteſtant Party, who began to re- Suſpicions about it.
collect former Accounts of Cheats and Impoſtures. They had heard that a like Deceit was attempted in the Reign of Queen Mary; when to relieve themſelves from the Fears of a Proteſtant Princeſs in Succeſſion, the Romiſh Prieſts gave it out, That the Queen was with Child, Prayers were order'd for her ſafe Delivery, and a Popiſh Preacher at St. Paul's pretended to tell the Birth, and to deſcribe the Boy; which Sham was ſuppos'd to be defeated only by the Vigilance of King Philip himſelf, who wou'd not endure ſuch an Impoſture. The Remembrance of that former Fact gave now a natural Application of it; and the Story of that Mock Conception, as deliver'd by Mr. Fox, was now Reprinted and Diſpers'd with the Title of Idem Iterum, or, Queen Mary's Big-Belly. Moreover ſeveral Ballads and Lampoons were thrown about the Court, reflecting upon this Matter, and ridiculing both the Prayers and the Biſhops that compos'd them, as that of 'Two Toms and a Nat, together ſate, &c.' The old Accounts of Impoſtures, join'd with the fabulous Stories of the Cauſe of the Queen's Conception, after ſhe had been ſeveral Years Childleſs; the great Care the Jeſuits took to inſinuate that ſhe wou'd certainly be deliver'd of a Prince, and ſeveral other concurring Accidents, had a mighty Influence upon the Minds of the Proteſtants, who began to look upon the whole as a Suppoſition. However, it cou'd not but keep them in perpetual Alarms; for ſuppoſing it, as they did, to be a Pious Fraud, the Diſcovery of it wou'd have been ſo much the more difficult, as it was the Intereſt of the Popiſh Party to uſe their utmoſt Care to conceal it.

1687/8. Jac. 4. Ref. 28

Addresses upon it.

The Court Party now gather'd visible Strength upon this News, and taking Advantage of the Fears and Consternation of the Protestants, they procur'd Addresses from several Counties, wherein his Majesty's dutiful Subjects not only Congratulated him upon so joyful Occasion, but assur'd him also of 'Their ready Compliance in the Electing such Members as shou'd concur 'with his Majesty's gracious Intentions of the Abrogation of the Penal 'Laws and Tests, equally pernicious to his Majesty's Prerogative, and 'his Subjects Liberty:' Thus that from the County of Gloceſter. The Addresses from the Counties of Stafford, Monmouth and York, the Cities of Canterbury and Carliſle, the Towns of Northampton, Totneſs, &c. were to the same Effect. But none was more remarkable, or made greater Noise than that from the Corporation of Scarborough, which is therefore inserted at length as follows: 'The Union of York and Lancaſter, made the Inhe-

That from Scarborough.

'ritance of this Empire One; the Conjunction of England and Scotland, 'made two Kingdoms One; but your Majesty's Declaration for Liberty 'of Conſcience, has made our Interest One; every Happiness was succeeded 'by a Greater, and every succeeding Age strove, as it were to outvy the 'Former. 'Tis true, our Civil Wars have been renew'd in the time of our 'Fathers; England and Scotland have again been dis-united by an unna-'tural Rebellion; but Liberty of Conſcience is so strong a Cement that no 'Age shall be able to dissolve it; its Firmness will encrease by its Durati-'on; for all Men will endeavour to propagate that Blessing which brings 'a visible Reward along with it: And if the darling Argument prevails, we 'have already an ocular Experience of our Profit, Men will not be more 'studious of transmitting a clear Title of their Possessions to their Children, 'than they will be of leaving an undoubted Inheritance of Trade, Society 'and Brotherly Affection. In the first Place therefore, on our Knees we 'thank the God of Heaven for your Majesty; and on the next, with all 'Humility we thank your Majesty, who, as a true Father of your People, 'have provided for them so rich a Patrimony of Immortal Happineſs: 'Tis a Portion put out to Use for Posterity, which in every seven Years 'will double and redouble the Principal. God Almighty, as we hope and 'pray, will grant you an Heir Maſculine of your Body; but you have 'already given us one of your Mind in your Gracious Declaration; 'tis to 'your Self alone, O Sacred Majeſty! that we stand oblig'd for it: We 'own it not to be the Counsel or Procurement of any other, none but a 'Wise and Gracious King cou'd have found it out, none but a CATHOLICK 'King has been able to effect it. We hope a Parliament will concur and 'ratify this Blessing; for this Blessing has, in a manner, ratify'd it self by 'its own Success. 'Tis an Act already pass'd in the Hearts of all your 'Loyal People; and what it wants in Formality of Law, is supply'd in the 'concurring Votes of all unintereſted Men. It will spread like the Tree in 'the Vision of Holy Daniel, till it over-shadows the three Nations; and 'the Birds of the Air shall not only build in it, but also the Beasts of the 'Forest shall be secure beneath it. May your Majesty long enjoy the Fruits 'of so happy a Plantation; may it be Fenc'd about by the Care of the 'present Age, and made Sacred to all future Time, as set by your Auspi-'cious Hands: And as it is in our Power, so we solemnly engage our 'selves to return to your Majesty two such Members to serve in Parlia-'ment, as shall Vote for Repealing the Test, and all Penal Laws in Mat-'ters of Religion: Laws which were begot under a Doubtful Title, were 'bred up in Perſecution, and wou'd subvert the Fundamental Freedom of 'Conſcience, which is God's Magna Charta to all his Reasonable Crea-'tures.

The Jesuits Efforts.

Over and above the forementioned Methods to introduce the Romiſh Religion, the Jeſuits, more especially, were daily publishing some Book or other other to bring it into Eſteem; ſuch as The firſt and ſecond Vindication of the Biſhop of Condom's Expoſition of the Catholick Church; A Chriſtian Doctrine compos'd by Bellarmine; The Maſs Triumphing; The Maſs vindicated; The Catechiſm of Pennance; The Catechiſm for the Curates, compos'd by a Decree of the Council of Trent; An Agreement between the Church of England, and the Church of Rome; Vane's loſt Sheep return'd home; Veron's Rule of Faith; The Guide in Controverſies; A Defence of the Doctrine and Rule of the Roman Catholick Church, &c. Theſe oblig'd the Champions of the Church of England, formerly remember'd, to draw their Pens with freſh Vigour in Defence of the Proteſtant Religion; and the Jeſuits were ſoon over-match'd by theſe Heroes, Stillingfleet, Tillotſon, Tenniſon, Wake, Sherlock, &c. not only by the Goodneſs of their Cauſe, but by a deeper Stock of Learning, and a ſtronger Force of Sound Reaſoning, which had a happy Influence upon the People in theſe perillous Times. Their Learning and Piety, their Humility and Paſtoral Care, together with their Courage and Bravery, attracted the Love and Veneration of the beſt and greateſt Perſons of both Sexes: They were now eſteem'd and honour'd both according to their Worth and Function, and the Clergy-Man's Gown and Habit was ſo nobly adorned with Goodneſs and Vigilance, that every one was ready to pay Reſpect to it; and now it was that the London Divines may be ſaid to be the Ornaments of the Reformed Churches, and the Glory of the Chriſtian World. Therefore to ſtop theſe powerful Men, the King was prevail'd with to regulate the Preſs, and under a Pretence that the ſeveral Parties in the Kingdom maintain'd a Seditious Paper-War, a Proclamation was iſſu'd out on the 13th of February, grounded upon a Statute made in the Fourteenth of King Charles the Second, 'prohibiting the Printing, and Selling all unlicens'd and treaſonable Books and Pamphlets, under the Pains and Penalties provided by the ſaid Act.' By this Means the Church of England was ſubtlely debarr'd the Freedom of Confuting the Errors of that of Rome, which ſoon appear'd to be the main Deſign of reſtraining the Preſs: For the King caus'd ſome Books to be ſuppreſs'd, which contain'd nothing but a Defence of the Reform'd Religion, and Diſputes concerning controverted Tenets. All which, as it happen'd, ſerv'd to add a new Luſtre to the fore-mention'd Divines.

And thoſe of the London Divines.

2. While the Romiſh Project for Abrogating the Teſt and Penal Laws was going on, and the Proteſtants were in amaze what to expect, an Accident fell out that help'd to buoy up the ſinking Spirits of the Nation. King James meeting every Day with Difficulties, which he found he cou'd not ſurmount without flying into violent Methods, at length took a Reſolution of trying the Inclinations of the Prince and Princeſs of Orange; not doubting but if he cou'd engage them to join with him in his Deſign, it wou'd find leſs Oppoſition in the enſuing Parliament. But becauſe his Majeſty did not think proper to addreſs himſelf directly to their Highneſſes, he employ'd Mr. James Stuart, a Lawyer, whom he had pardon'd and receiv'd into Favour after a long Baniſhment, and who pretended an intimate Acquaintance with Monſieur Fagel, Penſionary to the States of Holland, a wiſe Miniſter, in whom the Prince repos'd an entire Confidence, and for whom he had a particular Eſteem and Affection. To him Mr. Stuart wrote a Letter upon this Subject; but the Prince and Princeſs of Orange were ſo averſe to meddle in ſuch a nice Affair, and ſo unwilling to allow Mr. Fagel to return an Anſwer, which they knew wou'd not be pleaſing, that Mr. Stuart was oblig'd ſeveral Times to repeat his preſſing Inſtances, owning in his Letters, that he wrote them by the King's Directions. His Majeſty no doubt flatter'd himſelf that their Highneſſes wou'd not contradict his Intentions; eſpecially in a Conjuncture, when ſo many Reaſons ſeem'd to oblige them

The King's private Application to the Prince and Princeſs of Orange.

1687/8. Jac. 4. Reſ. 28

them to concurr with him in every thing; otherwiſe he wou'd not have been ſo eager to have their Opinions. But as their Highneſſes were Strangers to Diſſimulation, and far from yielding to what might prove fatal to thoſe Laws, which the Engliſh look'd upon as the Bulwark of the Proteſtant Religion; and for which, as preſumptive Heirs to the Crown of England; they always expreſs'd a great Tenderneſs; they were at laſt in a manner forc'd to direct Monſieur Fagel to write an Anſwer to Mr. Stuart: And the more, becauſe the Papiſts had induſtriouſly ſpread it abroad, 'That 'the Prince and Princeſs of Orange had agreed with the King's Deſign of 'taking off the Penal Laws and Teſt;' which Report was maliciouſly confirm'd by ſeveral Letters, which the Marquiſs of Albyville, the Engliſh Envoy at the Hague, was put upon to write; intimating that the Prince of Orange had told him the very ſame thing; which Letter was alſo made publick.

Monſieur Fagel's Letter upon that Occaſion.

And therefore, to diſſipate theſe injurious Reports, the Penſionary, by their Highneſſes Directions, wrote to Mr. Stuart to this Effect: 'That 'ſince he earneſtly deſired to know of him, what the Prince and Princeſs 'of Orange's Thoughts were, concerning the Repeal of the Penal Laws, 'and more particularly of the Teſt; he would deal very plainly with him in 'that Matter, and without Reſerve, ſince Mr. Stuart had ſaid in his Letters, 'That they were written by the King's Knowledge and Allowance. Firſt, 'he moſt poſitively aſſured him, That their Highneſſes had often declared, 'as they did in a particular manner to the Marquiſs of Albyville, That it 'was their Opinion, That no Chriſtian ought to be puniſh'd for his Conſcience, or be ill us'd becauſe he differ'd from the Publick and Eſtabliſh'd 'Religion; and therefore, that they cou'd conſent, That the Roman Catholicks in England, Scotland and Ireland, ſhou'd be ſuffer'd to continue 'in their Religion, with as much Liberty as is allow'd them in the United 'Provinces, where it cou'd not be deny'd but they enjoy full Liberty of 'Conſcience. And as to the Nonconformiſts, their Highneſſes did not only Conſent, but heartily Approv'd of their having an entire Liberty of 'Conſcience for the Exerciſe of their Religion, without any Trouble, Hinderance or Moleſtation, upon that Score: And that their Highneſſes were 'ready to concur at any time with his Majeſty in the ſettling and confirming this Liberty, and to protect and maintain it, as far as in them lay, 'according to the Language and uſual Form of Treaties, and likewiſe to 'confirm it with their Guarantee, which Mr. Stuart had mention'd in his 'Letters. And if his Majeſty thought fit to have their Concurrence in Repealing the Penal Laws, their Highneſſes were ready to give it, Provided thoſe Laws ſtill remain'd in their full Vigour by which the Roman 'Catholicks are ſhut out of both Houſes of Parliament, and out of all Publick Employments, both Civil and Military; as likewiſe all thoſe other 'Laws which confirm'd the Proteſtant Religion, and ſecured it againſt all 'the Attempts of the Roman Catholicks. But their Highneſſes cou'd not 'by any Means agree to the Repeal of the Teſt, and thoſe other Penal 'Laws laſt mention'd, that tended to the Security of the Proteſtant Religion; ſince the Roman Catholicks receive no other Prejudice from theſe, 'than their being Excluded from Parliament and Publick Employments; 'and that, by them, the Proteſtant Religion is ſhelter'd from all the Deſigns of the Roman Catholicks againſt It, or againſt the Publick Safety. 'That neither the Teſt, nor theſe other Laws can be ſaid to carry in them 'any Severity againſt the Roman Catholicks, upon the Account of their 'Conſciences; being only Proviſions Qualifying Men to be Members of 'Parliament, or to be Capable of bearing Office; by which they muſt declare before God and Man, That they are for the Proteſtant Religion. 'So that indeed, all this amounts to no more, than a Securing the Pro-

'teſtant

'teſtant Religion from any Prejudices that it may receive from the Roman 'Catholicks. 1687/8.

'More than this, adds the Penſionary, their Highneſſes have thought, Jac. 4.
'and do ſtill think, ought not to be ask'd or expected from them; ſince, Ref. 29
'by that Means, the Roman Catholicks and their Poſterity wou'd be for 'ever ſecured from all Troubles in their Perſons and Eſtates, or in the 'Exerciſe of their Religion: And they think the Roman Catholicks ought 'to be ſatisfy'd with that, and not diſturb the Quiet of the Kingdom, un'der Pretence, that they are ſhut out of Parliament and Employments;
'and becauſe thoſe Laws, wherein the Security of the Proteſtant Religion
'chiefly conſiſted, were not Repeal'd, by which they might be put 'into a Condition to Overturn it. As to what Mr. Stuart had writ, That
'the Roman Catholicks in Holland were not Excluded from Employments
'and Places of Truſt; he was groſſly miſtaken: For their Laws were ex-
'preſs in that Point, Excluding Roman Catholicks by Name from all Share
'in the Government, and from all Employment whatſoever. It was true,
'he did not know any expreſs Law that had Excluded them from Milita- 'ry Employments: That had been hard indeed; ſince, in the firſt Founda'tion of their State, they join'd with them in aſſerting the Publick Liber'ty, and did them Eminent Service during the Wars; therefore they were 'not excluded from Military Employments: For the Publick Safety was no
'ways endanger'd by that, both becauſe the Numbers of thoſe of their Re'ligion that ſerv'd in their Troops were very ſmall, and becauſe the States
'cou'd eaſily prevent any Inconveniency that might ariſe from thence;
'which cou'd not have been ſo eaſily done, if the Roman Catholicks had 'been admitted to a Share in the Government, and in the Policy and Ju-
'ſtice of their State.

After this, he tells him, 'That he was aſſured of this Truth, and cou'd 'give undeniable Proof of it, That their Highneſſes deſired nothing more
'earneſtly, than that his Majeſty might reign happily, and in a perfect
'good Intelligence with his Subjects; and that his Subjects being perſuaded
'of his Majeſty's Paternal Affection towards them, might upon all Occaſi-
'ons make ſuitable Returns to his Goodneſs, by all poſſible Demonſtrations
'of Duty and Loyalty: But their Highneſſes were convinc'd in their Con-
'ſciences, That both the Proteſtant Religion, and the Safety of the Na- 'tion wou'd be expos'd to moſt certain Dangers, if either the Teſts, or
'thoſe other Penal Laws, of which he had made frequent mention,
'ſhou'd be Repealed; Therefore they cou'd not concur with his Majeſty in
'thoſe Matters; for they believ'd they ſhould have much to anſwer to God,
'if the Conſideration of any preſent Advantage ſhou'd induce them to con-
'ſent to Things which they believ'd wou'd not only be very Dangerous,
'but Prejudicial to the Proteſtant Religion. Laſtly, the Penſionary tells 'him, That their Highneſſes ever had, and were reſolv'd ever to preſerve
'a profound Submiſſion to his Majeſty, as they thought themſelves in Du'ty bound by the Laws of God and Nature: But ſince the Matter that 'was then in Hand related not to the Making of new Laws, but to the 'Total Abrogation of thoſe already made both by King and Parliament;
'their Highneſſes did not ſee how it cou'd be expected of Them, that 'They ſhou'd Conſent to ſuch an Abrogation, to which they had ſo juſt
'an Averſion; as being a Thing that was contrary to the Laws and Cu-
'ſtoms of all Chriſtian States, whether Proteſtants or Papiſts, who ad'mitted none to a Share in the Government, or Publick Employments, but
'thoſe who profeſs'd the Publick and Eſtabliſh'd Religion, and endeavour'd
'to ſecure it againſt all Attempts whatſoever.

to the Earls of Sunderland and Melfort, and even to the King himſelf; and he alſo let Monſieur Fagel know as much, without informing him whether the Court deſir'd it ſhou'd be kept ſecret, or made publick. In the mean time it got printed in England, and in December and January, it was diſpers'd in great Numbers through the Kingdom, to the particular Encouragement and Satisfaction of the Generality of the People. This was ſoon after follow'd by a very notable Piece, call'd Reflections on Monſieur Fagel's Letter, which ſtill more rous'd and warm'd the Hearts of the Nation. It was written by a very extraordinary Hand, and ſome Things in it very animating, and almoſt Prophetical. Speaking of the inviolable Integrity of the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, he ſays, 'Our Judges have declar'd, 'That Princes can diſpenſe with the Obligation of Laws, but they have 'not yet given their Opinion, that they can diſpenſe with the Honour of 'their Word; nor have their Highneſſes any Confeſſor to ſupply ſuch an 'Omiſſion.' Then to comfort thoſe that are a little deſponding, he tells them 'A Revolution will come with a Witneſs; and its like it may come 'before the Prince of Wales be of Age to manage an unruly Spirit, that I 'fear will accompany it.——For my own Part, tho' I am neither young 'nor ſtrong, I hope to live to ſee a Day of Jubilee in England for all 'that deſerve it; when honeſt Men ſhall have the ſame Pleaſure in thinking on theſe Times, that a Woman happily deliver'd hath in reflecting on 'the Pain and Danger ſhe was in.' Not long after, there appear'd on the Court ſide, a Pamphlet call'd Parliamentum Pacificum, or the happy Union of King and Parliament in an healing Parliament, &c. wherein it was affirm'd, 'That the Letter written to Mr. Stuart, was not only Sup'poſititious, but that the Author had miſrepreſented the Sentiments of their 'Highneſſes, concerning the Repeal of the Teſts and Penal Laws.' Whereupon Monſieur Fagel thought himſelf oblig'd to prevent the World's being impos'd upon by that Impoſture, and therefore he not only printed ſome of Mr. Stuart's Letters, but wrote alſo to the Marquiſs of Albyville the following Letter; which he likewiſe caus'd to be made publick.

Reflections upon it.

Monſieur Fagel's ſecond Letter.

'My Lord, I have ſeen here in Engliſh a Pamphlet call'd Parliamen'tum Pacificum, Printed this Year in London, with the Earl of Sunder'land's Allowance; of which I cannot forbear Complaining, how averſe 'ſoever I am to make Expoſtulations: The Author of it maintains, That 'the Letter I wrote on the 4th of November laſt, relating to the Teſt and 'Penal Laws, is either a Forgery, or that I wrote it without the Order 'of their Highneſſes, or at leaſt of her Royal Highneſs. Not that I pre'tend to enter into the Particulars of that Pamphlet, with Deſign to con'fute any Thing in it, it being little agreeable to my Character and Incli'nation to meddle with publick Diſputes of that Nature. But you muſt 'not think it ſtrange, if I put you in mind, That it was not of my own 'ſelf that I engag'd in Writing the ſaid Letter; but rather, after I had been 'powerfully preſs'd to it for four Months together, from, or in the Name 'of his Majeſty; and when at laſt I was prevail'd with to write it, I did it 'with all the Precaution which ſo nice an Affair ſeem'd to require; in ſo 'much, that in all that Letter, there is not one Period, which I ought to 'fear might dipleaſe his Majeſty. Nevertheleſs, I ſee that in a Writing, 'printed by publick Authority, that Letter is branded as Suppoſititious, 'tho' his Majeſty, and even all the Court, know the Truth of the Buſineſs: 'And beſides that, I have own'd here to your Lordſhip, as the King's Mi'niſter, and to all thoſe that have ſpoke to me of it. But what is moſt 'injurious to me, is, That I am therein charg'd with having abus'd their 'Highneſſes Names, particularly that of her Royal Highneſs; as if I were 'a Perſon capable of ſo infamous a Cheat, and of a Falſity ſo unworthy of 'all Men of Honour, and that too in an Affair of the higheſt Importance.

You

'You will not take it ill, My Lord, if in this Matter I refer my self to 'the Knowledge you have of it, and to what you have often told me your 'Self, to wit, That their Highneſſes, and in particular her Royal High- 'neſs the Princeſs, had declar'd their Thoughts to you concerning the 'Teſt and Penal Laws, in the ſame manner as I had repreſented them; 'That you had acquainted the Court with it a long time before I wrote 'my Letter, and that you cou'd not conceive what Reaſon there was for 'preſſing me to write to Mr. Stuart. I do aſſure you that I wou'd not 'be much offended at that Pamphlet, nor at any other of that Nature, ha- 'ving already foreſeen that I ſhou'd not fail of being attack'd on that 'Score, wherein I cou'd eaſily have allow'd every Body the Liberty of pleaſing 'themſelves; but that writing being publiſh'd under the Authority of the 'Preſident of the King's Council, and Secretary of State, my Honour is 'concern'd to clear my ſelf to the World of ſo unjuſt an Accuſation laid 'to my Charge. 1687/8. Jac. 4. Ref. 28

'Therefore I thought I cou'd not do better than to addreſs my ſelf to 'you, my Lord, as being his Majeſty's Miniſter, and a Perſon perfectly 'well inform'd of the Buſineſs in Queſtion, deſiring that you wou'd be 'pleas'd to write to the Earl of Sunderland about it. I believe he has nei- 'ther ſeen nor examin'd the Paſſages of that Pamphlet that reflected upon 'me; and I am alſo perſuaded, that if he had, he wou'd not have ſign'd 'the Printing Allowance: For the ſaid Earl of Sunderland knows as well 'as any Body, that the ſaid Letter of Mr. Stuart is no Suppoſition, ſince 'he has ſeen the Letter it ſelf, or the Engliſh Copy of it, which I had 'ſent along with it. He ought alſo to be no leſs aſſur'd by your Letters, 'and by what you have related by Word of Mouth: That their High- 'neſſes, and particularly her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs, have ſeveral 'times told you their Opinion concerning the Teſt and Penal Laws, as I 'have expreſs'd it in my Letter to Mr. Stuart. Therefore I dare promiſe 'my ſelf from the Juſtice and Goodneſs of the Earl of Sunderland, that 'he will take care that the Allowance which was ſurreptitiouſly obtain'd 'for the Printing of that Pamphlet, may be recall'd, and the Author of ſo 'manifeſt and outragious a Calumny brought to condign Puniſhment. Nei- 'ther will I conceal from you, that I deſign to publiſh what has paſs'd in 'this Affair, as well as what I now take the Liberty to write to you; not 'with deſign to engage any further in the main Buſineſs, much leſs to gra- 'tify any Body, but ſolely to ſhelter my Honour from ſo falſe and heinous 'an Imputation.

What was ſtill more ſurprizing in this Affair, was, That Mr. Stuart poſi- tively deny'd in a printed Letter, that he ever wrote to Monſieur Fagel, although the latter had convinc'd him to the contrary, and had his Original Letters by him. But becauſe the King had ſeen the Penſionary's Letter, which he was unwilling the World ſhou'd know; and becauſe Mr. Stuart found it very difficult to return a ſolid Anſwer, he choſe to have recourſe to a Jeſuitical Evaſion. Upon this Exigency, a ſubtle Author, who pre- ſum'd much upon his Sufficiency, publiſh'd Animadverſions upon Monſieur Fagel's Letter, which he addreſs'd to that Patriot William Penn, and wherein he maintains, 'That no Man can for the Cauſe of Religion plead 'any juſtifiable Excuſe for his not rendering Subjection to ſuch as are his 'Superiors in a Natural or Civil Station, in their lawful Commands; and 'that the inflicting Temporal Penalties for ſuch Errors in Religious Opini- 'ons, as cannot be evinc'd by the Principles of Reaſon and Conſcience, to 'be againſt the common Light of Nature (tho' they may be prov'd by 'Scripture to be againſt ſuch Myſterious Truths as are proper only to the 'Chriſtian Religion) is not to be juſtify'd either by the General Law of 'Nature, or General Rules of Scripture.' Then he puts ſeveral Queries Animadverſi- ons upon it.

1687/8. Jac. 4. Reſ. 28

concerning the Inconveniences of the Penal Laws and Teſts, and inſinuates, 'That a more juſtifiable and ſuitable Security, both for our Religion 'and Civil Rights, might be obtain'd, if his Majeſty gave his Aſſent, by 'eſtabliſhing the ſeveral Matters propos'd in his Declaration, and ſome o-'ther Proviſions to be made by a new Law, than can be had or expected 'by continuing the preſent Laws.' But theſe and other Animadverſions, were rather a Confirmation than a Confutation of Mr. Fagel's Letter; and made all Men perceive that it was not Liberty of Conſcience, or the free Exerciſe of Religion alone, that mov'd the Popiſh Party to ſtir ſo much for the Repealing of the Teſt, ſince by that Letter their Highneſſes conſented to ſecure them that Liberty, and free them from the Penalties of the Laws; but that their Aim was to have their Excluſion from Places of Truſt taken off, which was the only Security of the Proteſtant Religion. However the Penſionary's Letter ſerv'd at this Time to ſupport the true Intereſt of the Nation, and gain'd an entire Confidence in the Prince and Princeſs, both from the Church of England and the Diſſenters, who began to have Hopes from them, if any violent Methods were us'd againſt either.

And now the taking or not taking off the Teſts and Penal Laws in the next Parliament, became a new Teſt of it ſelf, and ſerv'd to diſtinguiſh the Court and the Countrey. But becauſe the direct Repeal of thoſe Laws were apt to raiſe great Apprehenſions, more ſoftning Methods were us'd, and the former inſinuated that they ſhou'd not loſe the Benefit of them, but ſomething elſe ſhou'd be granted which ſhou'd be an Equivalent; which Words help'd to fill the Mouths of all People for ſome Months together. But this Project was ſoon ſhatter'd, and the Word ſufficiently diſſected by the admirable Pen of the Marquiſs of Hallifax, in a Pamphlet call'd, The Anatomy of an Equivalent; in which are ſeveral notable Paſſages: But that towards the Concluſion is worthy of a Place in Hiſtory, and of the Remembrance of all Princes and great Miniſters. Speaking of the Uncertainty and Variableneſs of Intereſt, the relying upon which was like building upon a Quick-Sand, he asks, 'Where are the Men ſo diſtinguiſh'd from the reſt of 'Mankind, that it is impoſſible for them to miſtake their Intereſt? Who 'are they that have ſuch an Exemption from human Frailty, as that it can 'never happen to them not to ſee their Intereſt for want of Underſtanding, 'or not to leap over it by Exceſs of Zeal? Above all, Princes are moſt liable 'to Miſtake; not out of any Defect in their Nature, which might put 'them under ſuch an unfortunate Diſtinction; quite contrary, the Blood 'they derive from great and wiſe Anceſtors, does rather diſtinguiſh them 'on the better ſide; beſides that, their great Character and Office of Go-'verning, giveth a noble Exerciſe to their Reaſon, which can very hardly 'fail to raiſe and improve it. But there is one Circumſtance annex'd to their 'glorious Calling, which in this Reſpect is ſufficient to outweigh all theſe 'Advantages; it is, That Mankind divided in moſt Things elſe, agree in 'this, to conſpire in their Endeavours to deceive and miſlead them; which 'maketh it above the Power of human Underſtanding, to be ſo exactly 'guarded, as never to admit a Surprize; and the higheſt Applauſe that 'cou'd ever be given to the greateſt Man that ever wore a Crown, is, 'THAT THEY WERE NO OFTNER DECEIVED.

3. And now the People of England began to fix their Eyes and Hearts upon a Proteſtant Succeſſor abroad; and the King, perceiving the Effect that the Backwardneſs of the Prince and Princeſs of Orange had wrought in the Minds of his Proteſtant Subjects, redoubled his Endeavours to get a Parliament at his Devotion: And for that Purpoſe, he ſent down his Emiſſaries into the ſeveral Counties, in order to procure the Election of ſuch Members as were willing to acquieſce in his Deſigns. At the ſame Time

Time he gave out Commiſſions for the Raiſing of new Troops for the Increaſing his Standing Army; in which Iriſh Papiſts were particularly diſtinguiſh'd and promoted; and likewiſe he caus'd a larger Fleet to be fitted out with extraordinary Diligence, as foreboding that he might have Occaſion to carry on his Cauſe by Force of Arms. Hence on the 17th of January his Majeſty wrote a Letter to the States of the United Provinces, to demand the ſix Engliſh and Scotch Regiments that were in their Service: And again on the 2d of March he iſſued out a Proclamation, 'Forbidding 'his Natural-born Subjects to Enter or Liſt themſelves in the Service of any 'Foreign Prince or State, either by Sea or Land. 1687/8. Jac. 4. Reſ. 28

The King ſends for his Troops out of Holland.

The States-General return'd a civil Anſwer to the King's Letter, but withal excus'd themſelves for not complying with his Majeſty's Deſire. They declared by a Reſolution taken in their Aſſembly, 'That having ex- 'amin'd all the Treaties of Alliance, and all that had paſs'd thereupon, when 'thoſe Regiments were form'd, they cou'd find no Agreement or Capitula- 'tion that cou'd oblige them to grant his Majeſty's Demands, eſpecially in 'that Juncture of Time. They acknowledg'd indeed, That by the Trea- 'ties concluded between England and the States-General, it was agreed, 'That in caſe that Crown ſhou'd have a War with ſome of her Neigh- 'bours, and ſhou'd have Occaſion for Troops, the States ſhou'd be obliged 'to ſend back the ſix Regiments into England, as they did in the Year 1685, 'at the Time of the Duke of Monmouth's Rebellion: But that now his Britannick Majeſty being in Peace with his Neighbours, and having no Trou- 'bles at Home, they ſaw no Reaſon that cou'd oblige them to ſend back 'thoſe Troops: That beſides, moſt of the Soldiers that ſerv'd in thoſe Re- 'giments, were Dutch; and laſtly, That properly ſpeaking, thoſe ſix Re- 'giments did not belong to his Britannick Majeſty, being partly made up 'of thoſe Regiments and Companies, which in the Year 1674, were in the 'Service of the States-General: In ſum, That thoſe Regiments had been 'rais'd at divers Times with vaſt Expence, either for Liſting-Money, or 'Tranſportation; the late King Charles the Second having forbid all Levies 'for foreign Princes and States throughout his Dominions.' To underſtand theſe Reaſons of the States, it is neceſſary to remember, That in the Year 1665, all the Engliſh and Scotch Troops, which had been ſent to the Aſſiſtance of that Commonwealth, even in Queen Elizabeth's Time, were disbanded by the States themſelves; ſo that thoſe who were willing to return home, were left at their Liberty; and thoſe who were inclinable to remain in the Service of the States, were alſo free to ſtay. Now becauſe there were many, both Officers and Soldiers, who had their particular Reaſons not to return to England, two Regiments were form'd out of them, which oblig'd themſelves by Oath to acknowledge no other Sovereign beſides the States-General. From whence it appears that the States had a Right to diſpoſe not only of the Engliſh and Scotch Soldiers in their Service, but alſo of their Officers: But however, to preſerve a good Correſpondence with his Britannick Majeſty, they offer'd Paſſes to all the Officers of the ſix Regiments that were willing to return Home, which about Forty of them accepted.

The States Refuſal and Anſwer.

The Marquiſs of Albyville preſented a Memorial to the States to preſs them to comply with his Majeſty's Deſire; but they ſtill perſiſting in their Reſolution, a Proclamation was iſſu'd out, commanding the Return of all the King's Subjects who had taken Arms under, and were then in the Service of the States-General of the United Provinces, either by Sea or Land; tho' upon no other Allegation than that the King thought it for his Service. This Proclamation caus'd a Debate among the States-General, the Reſult of which ſhew'd an Unwillingneſs to let the Engliſh and Scotch Regiments return, alledging, beſides their former Arguments, 'That there 'was nothing ſo agreeable to Nature, as that he who is born free ſhou'd 'have the Right and Liberty to ſettle himſelf whereſoever he ſhall think it 'moſt advantagious for him; and that it is in his Power to be naturaliz'd 'and become a Subject to them under whoſe Sovereignty he ſubmits his 'Perſon; and that any Government receiving ſuch, does thereby acquire 'over him the ſame Right it has over its own proper and natural Subjects.' Whereupon the Marquiſs of Albyville, by expreſs Order from his Maſter, deliver'd in a ſecond Memorial to the States, peremptorily demanding the Diſmiſſion of the ſaid Troops; 'For that pretended natural Liberty cou'd 'not ſubſiſt, after that Dominion and Obedience had been introduc'd; ſo 'that the Rights of Sovereignty and Subjection were now only to be con-'ſider'd; And that by virtue of theſe Rights, it had been the Common O-'pinion in all Times, that no natural Subject can withdraw himſelf from 'the Obedience he owes to his lawful Prince;' and therefore he inſiſted upon his Demand, as a Right the King wou'd never deſert. But it ap-pear'd that few or none of theſe Men were willing to return; which juſti-fy'd the Reſolutions of the States-General, and render'd the Inſtances of King James's Envoy, ineffectual.

But to little Effect.

Attempts againſt Tyrconnel.

4. While the Romaniſts were induſtriouſly contriving to eſtabliſh their Religion, there aroſe ſome Jealouſies and Diſputes amongſt them, which went near to break all their former Meaſures, and to render their whole Party ridiculous. Concerning which, we find no Book ſo clear and parti-cular, as The Hiſtory of King William the Third; therefore we ſhall make bold with that Author upon this Occaſion. The Earl of Tyrconnel, who had carry'd Things ſo high in his Government, began at laſt to diſcover, that Sheridon, Principal Secretary of State in Ireland, and one of the Com-miſſioners of the Cuſtoms, ſold Employments of all ſorts, Eccleſiaſtical, Ci-vil and Military; and that whenever he met with an Opportunity of ma-king an advantagious Bargain for a Place in the Cuſtom-houſe, he wou'd pretend, That 'twas upon the Lord Lieutenant's Recommendation that ſuch a Perſon was employ'd. This by degrees ſo much encreas'd upon the reſt of the Commiſſioners, that Dickiſon, who was one of them, writ over to the Lords of the Treaſury, 'That they were ſo clogg'd with Iriſh Officers, 'recommended by the Lord-Deputy, that he was afraid the Revenue wou'd 'ſink by ill Management.' Upon this, Tyrconnel receiv'd Orders not to re-commend a Man, nor any ways to intermeddle in the Revenue. The Commiſſioners alſo iſſu'd forth their Orders, That all Perſons who had pe-tition'd for Places in the Cuſtoms or Revenue, ſhou'd return to their re-ſpective Abodes, for there wou'd be no Employments diſpos'd of.

Firſt by Sheridon,

This Buſtle and Enquiry created various Quarrels between Tyrconnel and Sheridon; and from this Time forwards, the latter bent his Thoughts upon the Ruine of the former. His firſt Stratagem to undermine him, was to prepoſſeſs the Romiſh Clergy againſt him; to accompliſh which, he contra-cted an intimate Acquaintance with his Chaplain, who mark'd out what he had obſerv'd of Tyrconnel's Contempt of the Maſs and Religion. Of this, Sheridon, a bigotted Papiſt, gave an Account to Father Petre, whoſe Niece he had marry'd; by which Means he gain'd an Intereſt not only with that Favourite Jeſuit; but likewiſe with all the Iriſh Clergy, eſpecially with the Titular Primate of Armagh, who had no Affection for Tyrconnel; and both together, with the forementiond Prieſt, form'd Articles of Impeachment a-gainſt the Lord Lieutenant. All this cou'd not be tranſacted with that Se-creſie, but that Tyrconnel had ſome Intelligence of it; therefore, to coun-termine his Enemies, he made uſe of a third Prieſt, a Confident of his own; by whoſe Means he intercepted a Pacquet which Sheridon was ſending over to the Court of England, with his Accuſation againſt himſelf. Rice and Neagle, Neagle, his two grand Counſellors, advis'd him to write to the Lord Sunderland, which he did, ſetting forth Sheridon's Briberies, and other ſiniſter Practices, without taking Notice of his Contrivance againſt himſelf. After which, he ſent for Sheridon into his Cloſet, and in the Preſence of ſeveral Perſons, demanded of him, Whether he had written any Thing againſt him to London? Sheridon confidently anſwer'd, He had not; but that he had heard that his Excellency had writ againſt him; which ſo enrag'd the Deputy, a Man of ungovernable Paſſions, that he call'd him Traytor, Cheat, and other abuſive Names; and pulling out Sheridon's Letter, ask'd him, If that was not his Hand? This for the preſent put him into great Diſorder; but after ſome Recollection, he began to juſtify himſelf, and to enter into a Capitulation with his Excellency; at which Tyrconnel riſing in Exceſs of Fury to kick him, Sheridon was turn'd out. Tyrconnel and his Party held a long Conſultation how to proceed in this difficult Affair. They did not ſo much dread Sheridon's Intereſt, or Accuſation, as they did this Opportunity of awakening his Excellencies Enemies at Court. After various Debates, it was agreed that a proper Perſon ſhou'd manage Sheridon in private, and ſo accommodate the Matter, as to ſtifle any farther Noiſe of it, to which Sheridon was ready enough to hearken. But at the ſame Time both the Lord Deputy and he ſtrove who ſhou'd firſt enſnare his envious Competitor: Tyrconnel to execute his Revenge upon the Titular Primate, for joining with Sheridon, reviv'd the Quarrel that the Iriſh Clergy had with the Primate, eſpecially the Titular Archbiſhop of Caſhel, which happen'd in this manner. Upon an Aſſembly of the Titular Popiſh Biſhops of Ireland, great Debates aroſe concerning the Priority of their Juriſdictions, in reference to which, the Primate uſurp'd over them all, not diſtinguiſhing the Archbiſhop of Caſhell, who reſenting it as an Indignity, inflam'd the Difference to ſuch a Height, as caus'd the Aſſembly to break up abruptly, and in great Diſcontent. This Quarrel had been dormant for ſome Time, nor did it now continue long upon the Stage; for Tyrconnel receiv'd a ſecret Reprimand from Father Petre for this raſh Action, as tending to expoſe and ruine the Catholick Party.

1687/8. Jac. 4. Reſ. 28

In the mean time, Sheridon, to purſue his Deſign againſt Tyrconnel, ſolicited an Order from the King for his coming over, which having obtain'd, and being arriv'd at London, he ſoon found by the cold Reception he had from the Earl of Sunderland, that there was no Expectation of removing Tyrconnel, for he was fortify'd with the French Intereſt, and was in a manner Deputy to King Lewis, rather than King James; it being ſaid at Paris, when News came there of Tyrconnel's being ſtruck out, That there was none in England that durſt remove him. Sheridon wanted not thoſe who were Well-wiſhers to his Deſign againſt the Deputy, as the Lords Caſtlemain, Powis, and ſome others; but they durſt not truſt him with their Sentiments, but ſent ſome of their private Confidents, to animate him with general Promiſes, without mentioning any Name. He had not continu'd three Days in London, when he was follow'd by the Lord Dongan, Son to the Earl of Lymerick, who brought Letters to the Lord Sunderland and others, ſetting forth Sheridon to great Diſadvantage; which Negotiation had that Succeſs, that even Father Petre, Unckle to his Wife, wou'd admit him no longer to his Preſence: And ſoon after, being return'd to Ireland, by Sentence of the chief Judges he was diſmiſs'd from all his Employments; which was thought a juſt Retribution to a Man, who out of pure Intereſt, had deſerted the Church of England.

Sheridon's Fall.

Tyrconnel having eſcap'd this Blow, met with another from Rome it ſelf; which required the Aſſiſtance of his beſt Friends to ward and divert: The Earl of Caſtlemain had for ſome time been return'd from his Embaſſy to the Pope, but was advanc'd to no Preferment, which he complain'd of to his his Holineſs, and was ſeconded by Father Petre. Upon the Receipt of theſe Letters, the Pope, who had now ſome Hopes of England, writ over to his Nuntio to addreſs to the King in Caſtlemain's Behalf; nor wou'd his Holineſs's Recommendation have prov'd ineffectual, had there been a Vacancy. But to ſupply that, Father Petre took Occaſion to ſtrike at Chancellor Jeffreys, for tampering in the Buſineſs of Magdalen College: In order to which, he acquainted the King, 'That the beſt Courſe to accompliſh his 'pious Deſign of eſtabliſhing the Catholick Religion, was to let his Prime 'Miniſters underſtand, That no Pretence of Service done ſhou'd protect 'them, if they fail'd in the minuteſt Circumſtance relating to the Catholick 'Cauſe.' This Argument was ſo conſtantly and vigorouſly purſu'd, that towards the End of December it was brought into the Cabinet, and it was reſolv'd that Jeffreys ſhou'd be remov'd, and that three of the Lords of the Treaſury ſhou'd be made Lords Commiſſioners of the Broad-Seal, and that Caſtlemain ſhou'd be Lord Treaſurer. This Reſolve continu'd not ten Days, before the Scene ſuddenly chang'd, and Jeffreys appear'd more fix'd than ever. The true Cauſe of this was never known; only it was obſerv'd that the Queen and Lord Preſident adhered to him. This gave freſh Cauſe of Diſguſt to Caſtlemain, and to the Romiſh Church-Party; for now it began to appear that Affairs mov'd more by the Court of France, than of that of Rome: To ſuch inſuperable Difficulties was the unfortunate King James expos'd by his Eaſineſs and Bigottry: His Zeal and Affection led him to adhere to Rome, but his Succeſs and Security depended upon France, now the great Diſturber and Oppoſer of that Court.

By Caſtlemain and others.

The Church-Cabal, in the mean time, embrac'd the Opportunity of the Quarrel between Tyrconnel and Sheridon, to recommend Caſtlemain as a fit Perſon for the Government of Ireland; repreſenting in lively Colours, 'How injurious thoſe ſcandalous Impeachments of two ſuch Men had been 'to the Catholick Cauſe; and how much they had retarded its Progreſs:' Farther urging, 'That Tyrconnel had proceeded by too ſlow a Motion, and that 'he had effected nothing but the turning out of a few Soldiers, and frightning 'away the induſtrious Engliſh, who might by Indulgence and Encouragement be allur'd to turn Converts; and that Caſtlemain was a Man of great 'Parts, and of an inſinuating Carriage, for the accompliſhing ſuch a Work, 'as the Reducing of Hereticks.' All which was ſoon ſent to Tyrconnel, and by his Penſioner in London communicated to Paris. To prevent the impending Storm, the Lord Deputy and his two grand Polititians, Rice and Neagle, ſit up Day and Night, and conſulted what Apology they ſhou'd make for their ſmall Proficiency in Proſelyting Men to their Religion; and what future Method they ſhou'd take to endear Proteſtants to the Eſpouſal of the Romiſh Cauſe and Intereſt. They conſider'd, while the Engliſh were Maſters of their Lands, they fear'd not the Government; but if that they were touch'd in their Eſtates, they wou'd commit Treaſon, or turn Catholicks: And therefore, upon mature Deliberation, Rice and Neagle were ordor'd to draw up the Subſtance of an Act, whereby the Lands in the whole Kingdom were, in a manner, given to the Power of the King; and although the Catholicks were to have but half of their Eſtates, yet the other Part was to be under ſuch Qualifications, as that the King might diſpoſe of it to ſuch as he found to be obedient Sons. This, if the King wou'd have purſu'd, they cou'd have had a Parliament when they pleas'd, fitted for their Purpoſe; all Corporations being already put into Popiſh Hands, and all the Sheriffs of the Counties being Papiſts, who cou'd have made what Returns they pleas'd. And this Conſult being brought to Maturity, it was concluded, that Rice ſhou'd go over into England as Plenipotentiary in negotiating this Affair; and Chief Juſtice Nugent was to accompany him, tho' it was not thought fit to intruſt him with the ſecret Intrigue.

The

The Iriſh Embaſſadors, as they were call'd in England, being come over, Rice made his firſt Court to the Lord Sunderland; and was ſo active and induſtrious in advancing this new Deſign, that Father Petre was influenc'd to join in it, tho' at firſt he cou'd not be prevail'd upon to hear it: For he was abſolutely biaſs'd by Caſtlemain's Intereſt; and being no Polititian, but of a vain imperious Temper, was wont to contemn every thing that was not of his Humour: However, this Project being to convert or confound the Hereticks, he at laſt embrac'd it; and ſo it was concluded, that he and Sunderland ſhou'd wait on the King with it. But notwithſtanding Father Petre's Adherence to this laudable Deſign, he ſtill continu'd in Caſtlemain's Intereſt, and his former Inclinations to remove Tyrconnel: And it was believ'd, that that happy Difference among the ſeveral Romiſh Factions, was the prime Occaſion of diverting this fatal Blow deſign'd for Ireland. However, the Buſineſs was in the Cloſet fully diſcours'd to the King by Sunderland and Petre; and his Majeſty was ſoon enclin'd to the thing: But the great Difficulty was how to paſs it in the Council; for he was ſenſible that ſuch as were againſt Tyrconnel's Continuance in the Government of Ireland, wou'd be more violent againſt his being there at the Head of a Parliament, being a Man whom the Council had in contempt. Father Petre thought he cou'd eaſily remove that Impediment, by introducing the Pope's Recommendation of Caſtlemain; but that was cancell'd by the Protection the French King afforded to Tyrconnel. Amidſt ſuch Difficulties it was hard to form a Reſolution; but however it was agreed, 'That the two 'Judges ſhou'd be publickly introduc'd to the King with their Project for 'calling a Parliament in Ireland, and to repreſent to his Majeſty the deplo-'rable Condition of his Catholick Subjects, occaſion'd by the Injuſtice and 'Oppreſſion of the Act of Settlement.' All this was done accordingly; and they brought the Project to White-Hall, where the King receiv'd it in Writing, and told them, He wou'd adviſe with his Council about it.

Diviſions in Court about it.

The firſt Council-Day his Majeſty brought this Project to the Board, and in few Words acquainted thoſe preſent with the Contents and Importance of it, and by whom it was preſented to him. No Man ſpoke a Word, either for or againſt the thing, but deſired it might be read; which being done, the Lord Bellaſis, in a Heat of Paſſion, bitterly inveigh'd againſt it, ſaying, That if ſuch Deſigns as theſe were encourag'd, the Catholicks of England had beſt in time look out for ſome other Countrey, and not ſtay to be a mad Sacrifice to Iriſh Rebels. The Lord Powis, according to the beſt of his Underſtanding, ſeconded it; and in ſhort it was ſo run down, that none of the chief Promoters of it durſt attempt to ſpeak in its Vindication, but only deſired, that thoſe Gentlemen that brought over the Papers might be heard. Bellaſis was for Committing them, or commanding their immediate Return; but it was at laſt thought reaſonable to give them a particular Hearing. Theſe Embaſſadors appearing according to Appointment, Rice made a Speech full of Subtlety and Artifice, and anſwer'd the Objections that had been made by the Lords Bellaſis and Powis; but when Nugent came to ſpeak, he unexpectedly unravell'd all that Rice had plauſibly put together; and Bellaſis ſoon found out the Defect of his Iriſh Underſtanding, as he call'd it, abuſing him beyond the Reſpect due to the Place where the King was, calling him downright Fool and Knave; and Powis did the ſame. They were not long in tearing this fine Project in pieces; which when they had done, Bellaſis bid them make haſte to the Fool their Maſter, and bid him, the next Meſſage he ſent, to employ wiſer Men, and upon a more honeſt Errand. Powis bid them tell him, That the King had better uſe to make of his Catholick Subjects in England, than to ſacrifice them for a Reprizal to the Proteſtants of Ireland, in lieu of their Eſtates. The King remain'd ſilent, and without any Reſolve or Order, broke up up the Council; and the Embaſſadors appear'd no more upon the Stage, but departed with great Precipitation and Confuſion. And this Miſcarriage gave freſh Occaſion to Caſtlemain's Friends to raiſe Objections againſt Tyrconnel; alledging, 'That by his Means the Revenue in Ireland was incredibly ſunk, 'and that in another Year, there wou'd not be Money enough in the King-'dom to pay the Army; and that this laſt Project of his wou'd exaſperate 'and frighten away the Remainder of the Engliſh, who being the dealing 'and induſtrious Part of the Nation, wou'd put a fatal Period to the Trade 'of that Iſland.' But all theſe juſt and reaſonable Allegations, laid before the King by the moſt conſidering Perſons, were all to no effect: For tho' his Majeſty kept it ſecret from moſt of his Council, yet there was great Reaſon to believe that he had promis'd the French King the Diſpoſal of that Government and Kingdom. But to return to England.

The King's ſecond Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience.

III. 1. The Romiſh Religion being now triumphant, and the Breaches into the Engliſh Conſtitution born with all Submiſſion, King James, intoxicated with the fulſom Addreſſes, and hurry'd on by his own ill Fate, proceeded to an Attempt that help'd to bring all things to a Criſis. This was the reviving and improving his Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience; which Declaration being not eſteem'd advantagious enough to the Romaniſts, it was thought fit to iſſue out another in a higher Strain, in which they were chiefly included. This was publiſh'd upon the 27th Day of April, and is as follows: 'James Rex. Our Conduct has been ſuch in all Times, as ought 'to have perſuaded the World, that We are Firm and Conſtant to Our Re-'ſolutions: Yet that eaſy People may not be abus'd by the Malice of crafty 'wicked Men, We think fit for to Declare, That Our Intentions are not 'chang'd ſince the 4th of April 1687, when We iſſu'd out Our Declaration 'for Liberty of Conſcience in the following Terms.' [Here the Declaration was recited verbatim, and then it follows.] 'Ever ſince We granted 'this Indulgence, We have made it Our principal Care to ſee it preſerv'd 'without Diſtinction, as We are encourag'd to do daily by Multitudes of 'Addreſſes, and many other Aſſurances We receive from Our Subjects of all 'Perſuaſions, as Teſtimonies of their Satisfaction and Duty; the Effects of 'which We doubt not but the next Parliament will ſhew; and that it will 'not be in vain, That We have reſolv'd to uſe Our utmoſt Endeavours to 'eſtabliſh Liberty of Conſcience, on ſuch juſt and equal Foundations, as 'will render it Unalterable, and ſecure to all People the free Exerciſe of 'their Religion for ever; by which future Ages may reap the Benefit of 'what is ſo undoubtedly for the general Good of the whole Kingdom. It is 'ſuch a Security We deſire, without the Burthen and Conſtraint of Oaths 'and Teſts, which have been unhappily made by ſome Governments, but 'cou'd never ſupport any: Nor cou'd Men be advanc'd by ſuch Means to 'Offices and Employments, which ought to be the Reward of Services, Fi-'delity and Merit. We muſt conclude, That not only good Chriſtians will 'join in this, but whoever is concern'd for the Wealth and Power of the 'Nation. It wou'd, perhaps, prejudice ſome of our Neighbours, who 'might loſe part of thoſe vaſt Advantages they now enjoy, if Liberty of 'Conſcience were ſettled in theſe Kingdoms, which are above all others moſt 'capable of Improvements, and of Commanding the Trade of the World. 'In purſuance of this great Work, We have been forc'd to make many 'Changes both of Civil and Military Officers throughout Our Dominions, 'not thinking any ought to be employ'd in Our Service, who will not 'contribute towards the Eſtabliſhing the Peace and Greatneſs of their Coun-'trey, which We moſt earneſtly deſire, as unbiaſs'd Men may ſee by the 'whole Conduct of Our Government, and by the Condition of Our Fleet, 'and of Our Armies, which with good Management ſhall conſtantly be the Order'd to be read in all Churches.

This Declaration being iſſu'd out, the King was not contented to have it publiſh'd in the uſual Manner, but he was reſolv'd to have it ſolemnly read in all the Churches in England, excuſing it in all Maſs-Houſes and Meeting-Houſes. The Biſhops and Clergy were of all others averſe to the Subject Matter of this Declaration, as knowing the Illegality, and foreſeeing the fatal Deſign of it; and therefore the Court ſeem'd the more willing to mortify theſe powerful Enemies, and make them become acceſſary to their own Ruin, either by their Compliance or their Refuſal; and even to eat their own Dung, as the haughty Father Petre ſhamefully threatned; and therefore this Order of Council was made and publiſh'd at the Court at White-Hall, on the 4th of May: 'It is this Day order'd by his Majeſty 'in Council, That his Majeſty's late Gracious Declaration, bearing Date 'the 27th of April laſt, be read at the uſual Time of Divine Service, upon 'the 20th and 27th of this Month, in all Churches and Chapels within the Ci-'ties of London and Weſtminſter, and ten Miles thereabouts: And upon the '3d and 10th of June next, in all other Churches and Chapels throughout 'this Kingdom. And it is hereby farther order'd, That the Right Reverend 'the Biſhops, cauſe the ſaid Declaration to be ſent and diſtributed through-'out the ſeveral and reſpective Dioceſes, to be read accordingly.

Several Biſhops meet and debate about it.

It is eaſy to conceive how much the Biſhops and whole Clergy of England were affected and ſurpriz'd at this imperious Order, which they had Reaſon to take as the greateſt Hardſhip and Snare that cou'd be laid for them. They had no ſooner receiv'd it, but many of them aſſembled at the Archbiſhop's Palace at Lambeth, to conſult how they ought to behave themſelves upon ſuch a nice and arduous Occaſion. And having firſt implor'd the Divine Aſſiſtance by Extraordinary Prayers, after mature Deliberation, it was agreed, in the firſt Place, 'That the Matter of the Declara-'tion was altogether Illegal, the Foot on which it ſtood, being a Power 'not only to Diſpenſe in contingent and particular Caſes, which, if the 'Lawgivers cou'd have foreſeen, they wou'd have provided a Diſpenſation 'for them; but it was to Diſpenſe with all Sorts of Laws, in Caſes contra-'ry to the very Deſign and End of making them: That this was not pro-'perly a Diſpenſing, but a Diſannulling Power, highly prejudicial to the 'King Himſelf, becauſe it took away that Faith and Truſt which the Peo-'ple repoſe in him when a Law is made, which they look upon as their 'Security: That 'twas true, each Biſhop or Miniſter was not a capable 'Judge in ſuch Caſes; but however he was Judge for his own private Con-'ſcience, againſt which I muſt not act: That this Caſe was publickly ad-'judg'd in Parliament, in 1672: That the general Forbearance of Addreſſes, 'grounded upon the Illegality of that Diſpenſing Power, ſhew'd this to 'have been the Judgment of the greateſt Part of the Clergy and others: 'That the Declaration of the preſent Judges, went no farther than the par-'ticular Military Caſe of Sir Edward Hales, which, in whatſoever Words 'it was expreſs'd, yet never came legally to the Cognizance of the Sub-'ject:

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'ject: That an unlawful Matter was not to be publiſh'd, if he who publiſh'd 'it, thought the Matter unlawful; for it cannot come to him, being Ille-'gal, by any Legal Authority; for the King can do no Illegal Thing; and 'if his Officers do it, they do it not by the King's Authority; and there-'fore the Refuſing of it is no Diſobedience, being no Illegal Refuſal: That 'if, then, the Biſhops publiſh'd the Declaration, they did it voluntarily as 'their own Act, and conſequently publiſh'd an Illegal Thing, without Le-'gal Authority, and were puniſhable for it. That many and great were the 'ill Conſequences of Reading the Declaration; Firſt, That many wou'd 'juſtly judge the Clergy either Cowards or Hypocritical Time-ſervers, in 'Publiſhing what they thought Illegal, and Illegally ſent to them: Secondly, That many who had Votes for Parliament-Men, wou'd take this for the 'Conſent of the Publiſhers, and be ſtrengthen'd in the chooſing ſuch Men, 'as ſhou'd be Friends not only to the Indulgence, but to the Foundation of 'it, the Diſpenſing Power: Thirdly, That the World would have Reaſon 'to take the Publication for an Approbation; becauſe there cou'd be no o-'ther Intention in ordering it to be Publiſh'd, but to make the Clergy Par-'ties to it; for it was as much Known before it was Read, as it wou'd be 'after the Reading of it; and therefore the making it known was not 'the only Thing intended: And Fourthly, That after this they muſt ex-'pect farther Things to be publiſh'd by them, at which they muſt make a 'Stand; and their making a Stand when they had loſt their Reputation, 'wou'd be of no Force: That therefore in Prudence as well as Conſcience, 'they ought not to publiſh a Declaration, which they knew to be againſt 'Law, and which in its Nature and Deſign was levell'd againſt their own 'Intereſt, and that of their Religion.

In this Debate, ſome objected, 'That their Refuſal wou'd be interpreted 'by the Papiſts, as a Failure in the great Principles of Loyalty, to which 'the Church of England made Pretence:' Others ſaid, 'That Diſſenters 'wou'd conſtrue it, as a Declaration againſt all Tenderneſs to them;' and Others again, 'That Suſpenſion or Deprivation of the Refuſers might follow, 'whereby the People of their Church might be left as Sheep without a 'Shepherd.' To the firſt Objection it was anſwer'd, 'That their Non-'Addreſſing had been reflected on in Books as well as Diſcourſes, but had 'no Effect to blaſt their Loyalty, tho' the Clergy refus'd to Addreſs even 'in a Branch that made for themſelves, becauſe of that one Foundation on 'which that Cauſe ſtood, with the reſt of the Diſpenſing Power: That 'Loyalty being Obedience according to Law, they were the Loyal Men 'who acted not contrary thereto: That the beſt Friends to the Crown are 'thoſe who ſupport the Law; and that they ſtill maintain'd the Principle 'of Suffering without any Unchriſtian Oppoſition.' To the Second, they ſaid, 'That the Diſſenters had never ſuch Aſſurances from Church-Men 'of their Inclination to Tenderneſs to them as they then receiv'd; That 'they cou'd not but ſee, that this Refuſal was not to hinder any Favours 'towards them, by this Indulgence, but the Diſpenſing Power; which, 'if it took place, they cou'd not but diſcern, that a new Magna Charta 'for Liberty of Conſcience wou'd be of no Validity to them, for a new 'Declaration might diſpenſe with it at Pleaſure: And that the Wiſeſt and 'Beſt of them wou'd look upon their Refuſal as a Teſtimony of their Sin-'cerity to the Proteſtant Religion, and not of any Diſaffection to Them.' To the laſt Objection it was anſwer'd, 'That the Church and their Religi-'on wou'd ſuffer leſs by the Conſciouſneſs of their ſuſpended Prelates or 'Miniſters, than it wou'd by their Illegal Compliance in ſo great and fun-'damental a Point: That they had better Thoughts of the King's Clemen-'cy and Juſtice, when he ſhou'd be inform'd by Men of Conſcience a-'gainſt the Counſels of Men of Intereſt; for how cou'd the King, at the

'very

'very time he proclaim'd entire Liberty of Conſcience to all, even thoſe
'who formerly were look'd upon as his Enemies, do an open Violence
'to the Conſciences of thoſe who had ever been acknowledg'd to be his 'Friends. And in ſum, That they ought to perform their Duty, and leave
'the Event to the Mercy of God; and That a certain Evil was not to be 'done to avoid a contingent One.

They Screen their Clergy.

Upon this grand Conſultation, the Archbiſhop and Biſhops conſidering a great Storm was falling upon the whole Clergy of England, if they ſhou'd be proſecuted for refuſing the Declaration; and being unwilling to lay them under ſo hard a Temptation, as to ſave themſelves from Ruin by a ſinful Compliance, choſe rather to take the Blame and Puniſhment upon themſelves, in refuſing to ſend the Declaration to their Clergy. An Heroick Act worthy of the Character of Biſhops of the Church of England, who now reſolv'd to be Confeſſors, as their Predeceſſors had been Martyrs, for the Proteſtant Religion. And therefore before they parted they drew up an humble Petition, agreed to and ſubſcrib'd by all the Prelates then preſent, namely, Dr. Sancroft, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Dr. Lloyd, Biſhop of St. Aſaph; Dr. Kenn, Biſhop of Bath and Wells; Dr. Turner, Biſhop of Ely; Dr. Lake, Biſhop of Chicheſter; Dr. White, Biſhop of Peterborough, and Sir Jonathan Trelawny, Biſhop of Briſtol, in this Form: To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty; The humble Petition of William, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and divers of the Suffragan Biſhops of that Province, now preſent with Him, in behalf of Themſelves, and others of their abſent Brethren, and of the Inferior Clergy of their reſpective Dioceſes, Humbly ſheweth, 'That the great Averſeneſs they find in Them-
'ſelves to the Diſtributing and Publiſhing in all their Churches your Maje-
'ſty's late Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, proceeds neither from 'any want of Duty and Obedience to your Majeſty (our Holy Mother the 'Church of England, being both in her Principles and her conſtant Pra'ctice unqueſtionably Loyal, and having to her great Honour been more 'than once publickly acknowledg'd to be ſo, by your Gracious Majeſty;)
'nor yet from any want of Tenderneſs to Diſſenters, in Relation to whom
'we are willing to come to ſuch a Temper as ſhall be thought fit, when
'the Matter ſhall be conſider'd and ſettled in Parliament and Convocati-
'on: But among many other Conſiderations, from this eſpecially, becauſe
'that Declaration is founded upon ſuch a Diſpenſing Power, as hath 'been often declared Illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years
'1662, and 1672, and in the beginning of your Majeſty's Reign; and is a 'Matter of ſo great Moment and Conſequence to the whole Nation, both
'in Church and State, that your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour
'or Conſcience, ſo far make themſelves Parties to it, as the Diſtribution of 'it all over the Nation, and the Solemn Publication of it once and again,
'even in God's Houſe and in the Time of his Divine Service, muſt a'mount to in common and reaſonable Conſtruction. Your Petitioners
'therefore moſt humbly and earneſtly beſeech your Majeſty, That you 'will be pleas'd not to inſiſt upon their Diſtributing and Reading your Ma-
'jeſty's ſaid Declaration; and your Petitioners, as in Duty bound, ſhall
'ever Pray, &c.

And Petition the King againſt it.

On the ſame Evening, the 18th of May, and the Friday before the Declaration was firſt to have been read, ſix of theſe Prelates went over directly to White-Hall; and being introduc'd by the Earl of Sunderland, deliver'd their Petition into his Majeſty's Hands; none but themſelves and their Metropolitan being privy to it. Upon the reading of it, the King ſtartled, and ſhew'd himſelf to be very much incens'd, and made this Anſwer in a very angry Tone: I have heard of this before, but did not believe it: I did not expect this from the Church of England, eſpecially from ſome of you. If I change my Mind, you ſhall hear from me, if not, I expect my Command ſhall be obey'd. The Biſhops with all Reverence reply'd, We reſign our ſelves to the Will of God; and then immediately retir'd. The King's threatening Anſwer, tho' it ſtruck ſome Terror into the Minds of thoſe Reverend Prelates, yet it was not ſufficient to make them forget their Duty: They remain'd firm and unſhaken; and there were two or three Biſhops, who were mute in this Reign, and one or two more, Commiſſioners, that caus'd the Declaration to be publiſh'd: Nay, it was obſerv'd, that in ſome Churches, where the Miniſters, either through Fear or Miſtake, comply'd with the Orders of their Superiors, the greateſt Part of the Congregation diſappear'd as ſoon as they began to read the Declaration. In London it was only read in four or five Churches; and of thoſe that comply'd we have the Names of only three, viz. Hall, Elliot and Thompſon.

The King's Anſwer to their Petition.

Reflections upon the Declaration.

At the ſame time a Letter was drawn up by a great Hand, privately printed, and directed to all the Clergy in the Nation, being fill'd with excellent Arguments to diſſuade them from Reading the Declaration: Out of which we ſhall inſert the following Paſſage, as repreſenting the preſent Caſe of the Clergy. 'This is the difficulty of our Caſe; we ſhall be cen-'ſur'd on both Sides, but with this Difference: We ſhall fall a little ſooner 'by not Reading the Declaration, if our Gracious Prince reſent this as 'an Act of an obſtinate and peeviſh, or factious Diſobedience, as our Ene-'mies will be ſure to repreſent it to him; we ſhall as certainly fall, and 'not long after, if we do Read it, and then we ſhall fall unpity'd and de-'ſpis'd, and it may be with the Curſes of the Nation, whom we have 'ruin'd by our Compliance; and this is the Way never to riſe more: And 'may we ſuffer all that can be ſuffer'd in this World, rather than contri-'bute to the final Ruin of the beſt Church in the World.' Never was a Sheet of Paper more induſtriouſly and effectually diſpers'd throughout the Kingdom; many Thouſands being ſent from unknown Hands, by Poſts, Carriers, and other Ways; which ſerv'd to confirm ſuch as were wavering, and to ſhame out ſuch as were willing to oblige the Court at the Expence of the Church, and Clergy of England.

2. The Oppoſition of the Biſhops, as it was call'd, rais'd a remarkable Spirit throughout the Kingdom; The Church of England was alarm'd, and upon the Ferment; The Diſſenters ſtood gazing at a diſtance, and the Court appear'd both Uneaſy and Unreſolv'd what Courſe to ſteer in ſuch a critical Juncture. Some expected that the King wou'd now ſhew an unlimited Power, and deprive thoſe Prelates of their Dignities, by his ſole Diſpenſing Authority; Others, that he wou'd be contented to deliver them to his Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, and cauſe them to be ſuſpended: And others again imagin'd that he wou'd refer the Matter to the enſuing Parliament which he had promis'd to call. But the Popiſh Party had other Methods in view. And therefore the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the ſix Biſhops were ſummon'd before the Council, where they appear'd on the 8th of June; and being ask'd Whether they own'd the Petition? They immediately anſwer'd, They humbly hop'd, as they ſtood there as Criminals, his Majeſty wou'd not take advantage againſt them, for they were always ready to obey his juſt Commands. Upon which they were order'd to withdraw; and being call'd a ſecond Time, they made the ſame Anſwer to the former Queſtion: But Chancellor Jeffreys preſſing them to own the Paper, at the third coming in, the Archbiſhop confeſs'd, That it was written with his own Hand, and that the reſt had ſign'd it; adding withal, That they had done nothing but what they were ready to juſtify. The Lord Chancellor, a little ſurpriz'd at their Conſtancy, endea-vour'd to make them ſenſible of the ill Conſequences of their Diſobedience, which tended to diminiſh the King's Authority, and to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and at laſt ask'd them, Whether they wou'd give their Recognizances to appear before the Court of King's-Bench, to anſwer this high Miſdemeanour? This they all refus'd, inſiſting on the Privilege of their Peerage, which they were reſolv'd to maintain, as well as the Rights of the Church; being equally bound by their Callings to oppoſe all Innovations both in Government and Religion. This brave Anſwer threw the whole Council into Aſtoniſhment; and Jeffreys threatned to ſend them to the Tower, and to proſecute them to the utmoſt Rigour of the Law, unleſs they immediately recanted, and withdrew their Petition. They unanimouſly anſwer'd, That they were ready to go whitherſoever his Majeſty was pleas'd to ſend them; That they hop'd the King of Kings wou'd be their Protector and their Judge; That they fear'd nothing from Men; and that having acted according to Law, and their own Conſciences, no Puniſhments ſhou'd ever be able to ſhake their Reſolutions. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

The Biſhops ſummon'd to appear before the King.

Finding them thus immoveable, a Warrant was drawn and ſubſcrib'd by Chancellor Jeffreys, the Earl of Sunderland, the Lord Arundel, the Marquiſs of Powis, the Earls of Mulgrave, Huntingdon, Peterborough, Craven, Murray, Middleton, Melfort and Caſtlemain, the Lords Dartmouth, Godolphin and Dover, Sir John Earnly, Sir Edward Herbert, and Sir Nicholas Butler, to commit them Priſoners to the Tower; the Reaſon given in the Warrant being For Contriving, Making and Publiſhing a Seditious Libel againſt His Majeſty, and His Government: And Mr. Attorney and Solicitor-General were order'd to proſecute them for the ſame the next Term. 'Tis ſaid ſome of the Judges there preſent refus'd to ſet their Hands to that Warrant; but however, it was immediately put in Execution; and thoſe venerable Prelates were led to the Place of Confinement, with that compos'd Serenity in their Looks, that only reſults from a Calmneſs of Mind, and a Conſciouſneſs of their Duty. This Primitive Deportment attracted the Admiration of the moſt Hard-Hearted, and melted into Tears thoſe of a ſofter Nature; and the whole City was ſenſibly touch'd with a Mixture of Tenderneſs and Eſteem. They are ſent to the Tower.

Now leſt the People ſhou'd be too ſtrongly affected with ſo moving a Spectacle, they were ſent to the Tower by Water, in the moſt private Manner. But this Precaution was in ſome Meaſure uſeleſs; for the People, fixed with Love and Zeal, flock'd in great Multitudes to the River-Side, with loud Acclamations extoll'd the Biſhop's Conſtancy, and upon their Knees crav'd their Benedictions. The Court apprehending a Tumult, order'd ſome Companies of Soldiers to be up in Arms; but the People were now under too deep a Conſternation, to uſe any thing but Sighs and Tears to vent their Reſentments. For a while they ſeem'd ſtruck with a deadly Silence; nor is it in the Power of Words to expreſs the particular ſort of Affection, which the Engliſh Nation ſhew'd upon this Occaſion to their Spiritual Leaders. Not only the People, but Perſons of Quality, and even the Soldiers, ſecretly murmur'd at this Violence, and did not ſtick to ſay, That their Duty to the King was not ſufficient to ſtifle their juſt Concern for the Reverend Divines, who we ſo unworthily us'd, only becauſe they wou'd not betray their Conſciences, and the Truſt repos'd in them. Thus inſtead of falling into the Hands of a rude, ſevere Guard, they were no ſooner landed at the Tower, but moſt of the Officers and Soldiers fell on their Knees to beg their Bleſſing: And thus, as an Author obſerves, a Place, before polluted by the Reſidence of ſo many Traiterous Criminals, was in a manner ſanctify'd by the Preſence of their Tutelar Angels of the Church of Enggland, and of the Liberties of the Nation. Their Lordſhips were ſuffer'd to go immediately to the Chapel, to Evening Prayer, where it is obſerv'd, the Their Reception there.

Second

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

Second Leſſon was by the Courſe of the Church, extremely well adapted to their Condition; being the vi^th Chapter of the 2^d to the Corinthians; Giving no Offence in any Thing, that the Miniſtry be not blamed; but in all things approving our ſelves as the Miniſters of God, in much Patience, in Afflictions, in Neceſſities, in Diſtreſſes, in Stripes, in Impriſonments, &c. The King being inform'd of all the Demonſtrations of Tenderneſs and Reſpect that were paid to the Biſhops in Diſgrace, and fearing the fatal Conſequences, cauſed the Guard of the Tower to be doubled.

The Birth of the Prince of Wales.

3. In the midſt of this ſorrowful and calamitous Seaſon, a Matter of great Joy happen'd to the Roman Catholicks and Court-Favourites, and that was the News of the Queen's being deliver'd of a Son, on Trinity-Sunday, the 10^th of June, between the Hours of Nine and Ten in the Morning. Now it was, when her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs Anne was retired from Court, as it was ſaid, upon the Account of an Indignity offer'd her by the Queen, and the Biſhops ſecured in the Tower, that the Jeſuits Prophecy concerning the Birth of a Prince Wales was at laſt accompliſh'd. It had been a long Time uncertain, Whether Windſor, Hampton-Court, or White-Hall was the Place where the Queen deſign'd to lye in: But on a ſudden, we are told, that her Majeſty gave Orders for the fitting up of an Appartment for that Purpoſe in St. James's Houſe; and ſent many repeated Commands, That it muſt be finiſh'd by Saturday-Night. Accordingly her Majeſty on the 9^th of June was carry'd in a Chair to St. James's, after ſhe had play'd at Cards at White-Hall till Eleven a Clock at Night: And the next Morning, People were not a little ſurpriz'd, to hear that ſhe was brought to Bed of a Prince. What was more ſurprizing was, That the News was told with as much Confidence before the Delivery as after it; as if it was a Secret committed to ſome People who knew not how to keep any. The Author of the Complete Hiſtory tells us, 'That an eminent Citizen 'now living, Sir S. E. is ready to atteſt it upon Oath, That he was call'd 'up early that Morning to come to an Iriſh Agent of the King's, and while 'he was with him, a Meſſenger came to him from the Court, in very great 'Haſte and Joy, and told him in a great Rapture, That they had got a 'Prince of Wales; which was ſome Hours before the Time that was after-'wards given out.' In ſhort, adds he, the former Suſpicions concerning her Majeſty's big Belly, were now ſtrengthned by the Circumſtances of her Delivery, at a Time when moſt Proteſtant Ladies were at Church, the Biſhops impriſon'd, the Princeſs Anne at the Bath, and the Dutch Ambaſſador never call'd to be a Witneſs in Behalf of the Princeſs of Orange.

A Proclamation about it.

On the ſame Day, the King not only order'd the Lord Mayor to cauſe Bone-Fires, and other publick Rejoicings to be made, but publiſh'd a Proclamation, 'That it having pleas'd Almighty God, of his great and conti-'nu'd Mercy to his Majeſty and his Kingdoms, to bleſs Him and his Royal 'Conſort the Queen with a Son, and theſe his Kingdoms and Dominions 'with a Prince; his Majeſty thought fit to appoint a Time of Publick 'Thankſgiving for ſo great a Bleſſing, on Sunday June the 17^th within the 'Cities of London and Weſtminſter; and on July the 1^ſt in all other Places. 'And for this Purpoſe his Majeſty had ſignify'd his Royal Pleaſure to Tho-'mas Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, to Prepare a Form of Religious Service 'and Publick Thankſgiving ſuitable to this Occaſion.' Theſe Days were ſolemniz'd with extraordinary Rejoicings by the Popiſh Party; but the Proteſtants were for the moſt part ſilent and reſerv'd, as doubting the Fact and dreading the Conſequence. His Majeſty, to expreſs his Satisfaction, was pleas'd, by the Queen's Bed-Side, ſoon after her Delivery, to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon Dr. William Walgrave, her Majeſty's Phyſician, for his Skill and particular Services to her Majeſty: And the King, farther to ſhew his Exultation, beſtow'd great Preſents upon ſeveral of his Miniſters, and gave conſiderable Charities to the Poor, both Natives and Foreigners. And laſtly, the Birth of a Royal Son, which the Papiſts themſelves call'd Miraculous, produc'd a new Set of Loyal Addreſſes, tho' not ſo fulſom as the former; for now the Fervour was much abated, and no Papiſt cou'd expreſs his Joy for the Prince of Wales, but a Proteſtant was ready to return him this Anſwer, The Biſhops are in the Tower. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

to

As to this famous Birth, which has caus'd ſuch infinite Arguments, Opinions and Conjectures, it may be expected, that ſomething more particular ſhou'd be ſaid in this Hiſtory. The moſt fix'd Rule in hard and intricate Caſes, is never to ſwim beyond ones Depth: However, we may fairly and ſummarily repreſent the principal Allegations we find on both ſides. On the one ſide it was alledg'd, over and above the King's ſuppos'd Incapacity, 'That 'the Queen had been long without Children, and now had never a conſtant 'Reckoning: That ſhe was brought to Bed after a ſudden Removing of 'her Lodgings, and at a Time when moſt Proteſtant Ladies were either in 'Bed or at Church, as if ſhe had deſigned to avoid Witneſſes: That nei'ther the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, nor 'the Dutch Embaſſador, were preſent at her Majeſties Labour, tho' they 'were the three Perſons who ought principally to have been there: That 'during the Labour, the Bed her Majeſty lay in, was not left ſo open as it 'ſhou'd have been: That while her Majeſty went with Child, ſhe never 'ſatisfy'd the Princeſs Anne, and many Proteſtant Ladies about her, of her 'Bigneſs, either by letting them feel her Belly, or ſee her Breaſts; neither 'did ſhe ſhew the Princeſs any of her Milk after her Lying in: And more'over, there was a Warming-Pan brought into the Room on pretence of 'warming the Queen's Bed, which was altogether unneceſſary, the Weather 'being extreme hot, and the Room heated beſides by a vaſt Crowd of Peo'ple, on purpoſe, as it was reported, to make the Juggle undiſcern'd in the 'other. In ſum, it was alledg'd, That tho' the King, Queen and Courti'ers ſufficiently knew before the Delivery that the Nation ſuſpected an Im'poſture, they did not uſe thoſe Precautions as they might and ought to 'have done in ſuch a Caſe; and inſtead of putting it beyond all Poſſibility 'of Doubt, they left ſo many Marks of Suſpicion as caus'd infinite Doubts 'and Diſputes: Inſomuch that ſome honeſt Roman Catholicks own'd them'ſelves, That ſo important an Affair had been manag'd with great Supine'neſs and Imprudence, during all the Time it was depending. The different Opinions about his Birth.

On the other Side it was anſwer'd, 'That nothing was more common 'than Intermiſſions in Child-bearing, and even for Women that have had 'ſeveral Children, to miſtake in their Reckoning; and for thoſe who do 'not miſtake, to be often brought to Bed, ſometimes one, ſometimes two 'Months before the uſual Time, without any Prejudice to the Child: That 'the Queen was known to have ever had as eaſy and as quick a Labour as 'any Woman in the Kingdom; to which her Tallneſs not a little contribu'ted, and which was the Reaſon that a great many Perſons, who were ſent 'for, did not come in Time to ſee her deliver'd: That the Preſence of the 'Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Dutch Ambaſſador, was not abſolutely 'neceſſary, and that the Princeſs Anne's being at the Bath was a voluntary Action of her own; that the Court expected ſhe ſhou'd have aſſiſted 'at the Queen's Labour, which might have been ſufficient to convince her: 'And as for the Queen's Milk, which was never ſhewn her, it was no new thing 'to ſee Women loſe it within three or four Days after they are brought to 'Bed.' As to the Warming-Pan, it was reply'd, 'That a Labour often be'gins with a Quaking and Trembling like an Ague-Fit, for which ſome Per'ſons warm their Bed in the hotteſt Weather; and beſides, that it had been 'impoſſible to put a new-born Child, with the After-Burden, in the narrow

'Compaſs

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'Compaſs of a Warming-Pan, without ſtifling it.' All the other Objections were anſwer'd by ſaying, 'That the imperious Spirit of the Queen, and 'the inſulting Triumphs of the Romiſh Cabal, made the Court look upon 'all Precautions as mean and beneath them, which afterwards they were 'convinc'd wou'd have been but prudential Condeſcenſions.' Then great Streſs was laid upon the Incredibility of the Impoſture; 'That a King and 'a Queen ſhou'd conſpire to put ſuch a Cheat upon themſelves as well as 'the Nation, was unnatural and ſhocking beyond all Example.' To ſay no more of theſe Allegations, we are aſſur'd that the moſt perfect Account of this Matter is in a Manuſcript written by the late Biſhop of Worceſter, and quoted by Dr. Burnet, which, it is to be hop'd, will ſhortly ſee the Light. We ſhall only obſerve, that, notwithſtanding all Arguments to the contrary, the Belief of the Impoſture ſo ſpread in a ſhort Time, that among Proteſtants it became almoſt Univerſal. And this Belief, tho' for the moſt part crudely and ſtupidly entertain'd, ſeems to have been the juſt Judgment of Heaven for ſo many Violations and Breaches of ſolemn and publick Faith. There is a natural Puniſhment attends thoſe who are given often to deceive, which is not to be believ'd when they deliver the moſt important Truths.

The Concluſion.

IV. A Popiſh Succeſſor being born, the Hopes and Proceedings of the Romaniſts ſoon appear'd at the Height; and all Things ſeem'd now to conſpire to accompliſh the Ruine of the Proteſtant Intereſt. Only there was ſtill a Parliament wanting to ratify and approve all the illegal Steps that had been made, and more particularly to abrogate the Penal Laws and Teſts. To procure ſuch a Parliament, new Endeavours were us'd, and no Threats, as well as Promiſes, were neglected to try the Inclinations of the People: Cloſeting was reaſſum'd, and came again into Faſhion; and the King himſelf was at the Pains to ſound every Man's Mind, how far he might depend upon his Concurrence. If they did not readily promiſe to ſerve the King in his own Way, the diſtinguiſhing Word at that Time, there was uſually ſome Brand of Diſgrace put upon them. But it has been juſtly made a Queſtion, Whether the Parliament which the King was thus labouring to model, wou'd have anſwer'd his Expectation, had they come to ſit; for Mens Eyes began daily to open, and the warm Principles of Engliſh Liberty to rekindle in the Nation's Breaſt, notwithſtanding ſome Tranſactions had endanger'd the extinguiſhing of them. And tho' the Diſſenters, who were likely to be choſen into Parliament upon the new Model of Corporations, wou'd probably have made Terms for themſelves, and have mortify'd the Church of England, whoſe Stripes, tho' leſs, were freſher in Remembrance than their own; yet being as averſe to Popery as the Church cou'd be, it is not to be imagin'd that they wou'd, upon mature Deliberation, have unhing'd the Conſtitution of England, to enable the Papiſts to overturn the Eſtabliſh'd National Church, in whoſe Ruines both they and the Church-Men muſt have inevitably periſh'd.

New Endeavours for making of a Parliament,

Therefore King James had more than one Method in his View how to accompliſh his Deſigns: For what a Parliament in all probability, wou'd not do, he ſeem'd reſolv'd that an Army ſhou'd; and therefore Care was taken to model his Troops as much to that End, as the Shortneſs of the Time wou'd allow. Ireland was found to be the inexhauſtible Source whence England was to be ſupply'd with a Romiſh Army; and an Iriſh Papiſt was the moſt welcome Gueſt at Whitehall. They came over in Shoals to take Poſſeſſion of the Promis'd Land; and ſeem'd already to have ſwallow'd up with their Hopes, the beſt Eſtates of the Hereticks in England. Over and above compleat Regiments of them, there was ſcarce a Troop or Company wherein ſome of them were not plac'd by expreſs Order from the Court. This gave ſo great a Diſguſt to the Engliſh Officers and others, that they began began to vent Ballads and Lampoons upon the Iriſh; and all the ridiculous Stories and Blunders that had been told of others, were now reviv'd and charg'd upon thoſe of that Nation; and in ſhort, it prov'd one of the moſt immediate and viſible Steps towards the King's Downfal. But in the mean time, that the Nation might be made acquainted with his Majeſty's Deſign in augmenting his Forces, an Addreſs, ſuppos'd to be penn'd by a Jeſuit, was procured from the City of Carliſle, particularly, 'To thank his Maje-'ſty for his Royal Army, which really was the Honour and Safety of the 'Nation; let the Teckelites think and ſay what they wou'd.' And upon this Occaſion the Addreſſers aſſured his Majeſty, 'That when in his great 'Wiſdom he ſhou'd think fit to call a Parliament, they wou'd chuſe ſuch 'Members as wou'd certainly concur with his Majeſty in taking off the Pe-'nal Laws and Teſt, and not hazard the Election of any Perſon, who had 'any ways declar'd in Favour of thoſe Canibal Laws. Surely, ſay they, 'theſe Men that oppoſe your Majeſty in ſo gracious a Work, do not con-'ſider what a Sovereign Prince, by his Royal Power, can do. A Work 'which Heaven ſmiles upon, and will Reward with no leſs a Bleſſing than 'a Prince of Wales.

And for modelling the Army.

Addreſſes.

The Prieſts being now at the Height, were not wanting in putting all their crafty Methods in Practice, in order to eſtabliſh their Religion; and among the reſt, they reviv'd old Stratagems us'd in the Times of Ignorance; and ſent terrible threatning Letters to Perſons of Quality, and others, if they did not very ſhortly reconcile themſelves to the Mother Church of Rome. And to ſhew the Spirit of the Perſons and the Times, we ſhall inſert a Letter that never was yet printed, from a Romiſh Prieſt in Lincolnſhire to a Gentleman of the ſame County, who had gone ſome Lengths with that Party, and done them ſingular Services when they were under Difficulties in the late Reign. The Letter, verbally from the Original, runs thus: 'Sir, That you have been eminent for your Loyalty in the worſt 'of Times, no Body can doubt; but now it is expected, that you ſhou'd 'give ſome farther Teſtimony of your Affection: That which was reaſon-'able a Year ago, is now become neceſſary; and it cannot be ſuppos'd, 'that you who have gone thus far along with us, ſhou'd faint before the 'End of the Race; but one Stage more carrys us to the deſired Haven, 'where we ſhall be rewarded for all our Pains and Dangers. This is the 'Time, let every good Catholick declare himſelf; let us therefore do it 'greedily, and boldly, to the Terror of our Enemies, and Salvation of our 'ſelves and Friends. Thoſe who ſhou'd oppoſe us, are baffled through their 'Diviſions; they are become ſtupid Animals, only fit for Burthens, mere 'Machiavel Puppits; we ſtanding unſeen have made them play our Game, 'when they knew not what they did: We have decoy'd them into a Snare, 'and we may now come from behind the Curtain to affright them farther. 'Now, Sir, I wou'd adviſe you, for your own ſake, to declare your ſelf 'for the Mother Church of Rome: You have behav'd your ſelf as a true 'and faithful Son; do not then through Inadvertency, loſe the Reward 'that is laid up for you. She is reſolv'd to entertain no Baſtards, nor to 'give her Childrens Bread to Dogs, as Hereticks have been always ac-'counted: They can deſerve nothing from Her by their greateſt Services. 'She now is willing to own all for her Children, that are deſirous to em-'brace her for a Mother; let me tell you in ſhort, it is better to do it 'willingly, than by Compulſion; and ſhe is reſolv'd to make a thorough 'Reformation, to cut out the Core, that it corrupt not again. I ſpeak not 'this, that I think you want any Perſuaſion to induce you to reveal your 'ſelf, but only to give you a near Proſpect of Affairs; and that a Man that 'hath been ſo uſeful to Us, as you have been, may not want the Reſpect 'that is due to his Merit. Come, before you are call'd! Many conſider-

We are strong enough already to 'use Force; but we are willing to distinguish between those that come over 'for Love, and those that come over through Fear: That you may con- 'sider of at your Leasure; and I hope it will be of use to you. The Seven Bishops TRYAL.

2. In the Height of these melancholy Times, on the 15th of June came on the Tryal of the seven Bishops in the Tower; a Tryal perhaps the most important that ever was known before in Westminster-Hall; not only seven Prelates contending for the Rights of the best form'd Church, but seven Peers standing up for the Liberties of the best constituted Kingdom. The Court of King's-Bench being sate, his Majesty's Attorney-General mov'd for a Habeas Corpus, directed to Sir Edward Hales, Lieutenant of the Tower, to bring up his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and the six Bishops, which was granted; and the Venerable Prisoners were accordingly brought by Water. At their Landing, they were receiv'd by many Divines and Persons of Quality, and by a numerous Concourse of People, who with repeated Acclamations resounded their Wishes for their Deliverance. On the Bench sate Sir Robert Wright, Lord Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Holloway, two of the King's Creatures, Mr. Justice Powel, a Protestant of unquestion'd Integrity, and Mr. Justice Allybone, a profess'd Papist. The Counsel for the King were Sir Thomas Powis, Attorney-General, Sir William Williams, Sollicitor-General, Sir Bartholomew Shore, Recorder of London, Serjeant Trinder, a Papist, &c. And for the Bishops, the Chief in the Nation, Sir Robert Sawyer, Mr. Finch, Mr. Pollixfen, Sir George Treby, Serjeant Pemberton, Serjeant Levinz, and Mr. Somers; who all generously pleaded and exerted themselves without any Reward, scorning to take a Fee in so great and noble a Cause. Nor was the Auditory unanswerable to the Importance of the Trial; for besides several Thousands of both Sexes, the Court was grac'd with the Presence of the Marquisses of Hallifax and Worcester, the Earls of Shrewsbury, Kent, Bedford, Dorset, Bullingbrook, Manchester, Burlington, Carlisle, Danby, Radnor, and Nottingham; Viscount Fauconberge, and the Lord Grey of Ruthyn, Paget, Chandoys, Vaughan and Carbery.

The Return and Warrant being read, by which it appear'd, That the Prisoners were committed for Contriving, Writing, Framing, and Publishing a seditious Libel against his Majesty and the Government, the King's Attorney-General mov'd that the Information might also be read to them, and that they might plead to it according to the Course of the Court. Which Motion was oppos'd by the Bishops Counsel; objecting First, 'That the Pri- Arguments about their Commitment. 'soners were committed by the Lord Chancellor, and some other Persons of 'the Privy-Council, without expressing in the Warrant, That it was by 'Order of the Privy-Council; and therefore the Commitment was illegal, 'and the Prisoners were not legally in the Court. And Secondly, The 'Fact for which they were committed was such, as they ought not to 'have been imprison'd for; because a Peer ought not to be committed in 'the first Instance for a Misdemeanor.' Sir Thomas Powis answer'd, That 'the Bishops being in Court as Prisoners, the Matter of their Commitment 'was not to be examin'd before the Accusation was read; for when a Man 'was present in Court, let him come how he will, he was not to have any 'longer Time than that Instant to appear to, and be charg'd with the Infor- 'mation.' This Position was soon learnedly confuted by Mr. Finch, and the Attorney-

Attorney-General in effect deny'd that he had advanc'd it; but Sir Robert Sawyer having own'd, 'That a Peer might be in Priſon for Treaſon, Felony, 'Breach of the Peace:' The King's Council in a declamatory manner inſiſted, 'That there cou'd not be a greater Breach of the Peace, than for a 'Man to come to the King's Face, and publiſh a Libel againſt him; that 'there was nothing that did ſo tread upon the Heels of a Capital Offence; 'and that two or three Degrees more might carry it to High-Treaſon.' Upon theſe Diſputes, Mr. Juſtice Powell declared, 'That it was a Matter of 'the greateſt Conſequence, ſince all the High and Noble Peers of England 'were concern'd in it, as to their Privilege: That their Predeceſſors in that 'Court heretofore wou'd not determine the Privileges of the Peers, but left 'them to themſelves, to make what Judgment they pleas'd of them: That 'in an Affair of that Weight and Nature, the Court ought to take Time to 'conſider of it, and look into Precedents; and that for his part, he wou'd 'not deliver his Opinion, before he had conſulted all the Books that cou'd 'give him any Light into the Caſe.' But nevertheleſs, the Lord Chief Juſtice agreed with Judge Allybone and Judge Holloway, 'That the Fact 'charg'd in the Warrant, was ſuch a Miſdemeanor as was a Breach of the 'Peace, and therefore that the Information ought to be read, and the Biſhops muſt plead to it. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

After the Reading the Information, the Biſhops Council deſired in their Behalf, That they might have an Imparlance till the next Term, to conſider what they had to plead to; alledging, 'That there might be many De-'fences that a Man might have to make to an Accuſation of that Nature, 'which it is impoſſible for him to know at the firſt Hearing of an Infor-'mation read, and yet which wou'd be neceſſary for him to make uſe of, 'or at leaſt it wou'd be impoſſible for him to do it in ſuch a Manner as the 'Law allows and requires: That till of later Time this Practice, which the 'King's Council call'd, The Courſe of the Court, was never us'd, nor was 'any Man required to plead immediately; That this Courſe was brought in 'by the ſeveral Plots that had been of late, and the Heats of Parties about 'them: That the Zeal of one Time may introduce that by Surprize, which 'when Things are cool, and at another Time, will appear to be plain In-'juſtice; and in ſhort, That nothing was more miſchievous, or more de-'ſtructive to the Rights and Privileges of the Subjects.' Judge Powell confeſs'd, That what the Defendants deſired, was very reaſonable; and 'That if the ancient Courſe of the Court had been to grant an Imparlance, 'and a Copy of the Information before the Priſoners pleaded, the Lords 'the Biſhops ought to have the Benefit of that ancient Courſe.' The Sollicitor-General urg'd, 'That it was not ſufficient to make Declarations againſt 'the Unreaſonableneſs of the Practice, for it was but what the Biſhop's Council 'had done themſelves, and inſiſted upon it for Law; That all thoſe Men who 'upon Informations had been compell'd to plead, had had Injury done them, 'or elſe the Biſhops wou'd have no Injury by the Court's taking the ſame 'Courſe: That it was not more unreaſonable, than the Practice in the Caſe 'of Treaſon and Felony, where Perſons are compell'd to plead inſtantly: 'That as to what Mr. Finch had ſaid, That this was a novel Invention, 'and a Trick to rob a Man of his juſt Defence, ſure he forgot who he was 'that taught 'em; and if it was a Trick, they had learnt it from thoſe that 'trick'd before them: That he wonder'd the Biſhops Council ſhou'd inveigh 'againſt the Heat of the Times, when a great part of that Heat he knew 'who were the Inflamers of: That he believ'd that the Biſhops had an In-'clination to be clear'd, and ſuppos'd it was only their Counſel that deſir'd 'to delay it.' Therefore he preſs'd that the Matter might be put upon a fair Iſſue, and that Sir Samuel Aſtrey, Clerk of the Crown, might be examin'd about the Courſe of the Court. Sir Samuel being ask'd the Que- An Imparlance deſired for them.

Question, answer'd, 'That of late Years, if a Man appear'd upon a Recognizance, or was a Person in Custody, he ought to plead at the first Instance; but that he had known that it was in the Discretion of the Court to grant what Time they pleas'd.' Nevertheless the Lord Chief Justice declared, 'That the Bishops ought to plead to the Information.

But refus'd Their Plea.

Hereupon the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury offer'd a Plea in Writing, in Behalf of himself and his Brethren the other Defendants; alledging, "That "they were Peers of the Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, "and ought not to be compell'd to answer instantly for the Misdemeanor "mention'd in the Information; but that they ought to be required to ap- "pear by due Process of Law, and upon their Appearance, to have a Copy "of the said Information, and reasonable Time given them to imparle "thereupon." The King's Council labour'd hard to have this Plea rejected, alledging, 'That when the Opinion of the Judges had been deliver'd, 'then to put in a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, was such an Irregularity, and such an unworthy Way of Proceeding, as wou'd not be endured 'in an ordinary Case.' After a long Debate, Judge Powell said 'He was 'for receiving the Plea, and considering of it:' But the rest of the Judges declar'd, 'That the Plea being frivolous, and containing no more than 'what had already been over-rul'd, the Court might reject it, and that the 'Bishops must plead over.' Accordingly they pleaded Not Guilty; whereupon the King's Council pray'd the Clerk might join Issue on the Behalf of the King, and desired the Defendants to take Notice 'That they design'd to 'try this Cause on that Day Fortnight;' adding, 'That they were Bailable 'if they pleas'd.' Sir Robert Sawyer desir'd that their own Recognizance might be taken, which was readily granted; and accordingly the Lord Chief Justice order'd the Clerk to take a Recognizance of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury in Two Hundred Pounds, and of the rest of the Bishops in a Hundred Pounds each.

The Joy of the People.

Upon the Bishops being thus set at Liberty, the overflowing Joy of the People was answerable to the extraordinary Concern they express'd at their Confinement. Vast Numbers flock'd to Westminster-Hall to see them; and the Crowds were so great, that their Lordships were obliged to get to their Barge by private Stairs: And even then they were not wholly free from the Huzzaing Throng; several Persons running into the very Water to beg their Benedictions. When the Day was ended, the publick Rejoicings still continued, the whole Night being spent in making Bonefires, and Drinking to the Seven Heroick Prelates, with all the Demonstrations of unlimited Satisfaction. Within two Days after was the Thanksgiving for the Birth of the Prince of Wales; and tho' the Conduits in the City were made to run with Wine for several Hours together, and extraordinary Bonefires, &c. were appointed, yet the Joy of the People appear'd no ways comparable to that upon the Account of the Enlargement of the Bishops.

The second Day's Tryal, and great Appearance.

3. The 29th of June, the Feast of St. Peter, was a Day of the greatest Expectations, and produc'd a new Concourse of Gentlemen and others out of the Countrey, and almost double the Number of the Nobility in Westminster-Hall, as the Marquisses of Hallifax and Worcester, the Earls of Shrewsbury, Kent, Bedford, Pembroke, Dorset, Bullingbrook, Manchester, Rivers, Stamford, Carnarvon, Chesterfield, Scarsdale, Clarendon, Danby, Sussex, Radnor, Nottingham and Abingdon, Viscount Fauconberge, and the Lords Newport, Grey of Ruthyn, Paget, Chandoys, Vaughan, Carbery, Lumley, Carteret and Ossulston. The Jury in this Trial ought not to be forgot, who were, Sir Roger Langley, Baronet, Foreman, Sir William Hill, Knight; Roger Jennings, Thomas Harriot, Jeoffrey Nightingale, William Withers, William Avery, Thomas Austin, Nicolas

Nicolas Grice, Michael Arnold, Thomas Done, and Richard Shoreditch, Eſquires. 1688.

The Information being read and open'd to the Jury, the Attorney General, to molify the Proſecution it ſelf, and to pacify the People, who cou'd not forbear ſhewing their Reſentments, tho' in the Face of the Court, obſerv'd, 'First, That the Biſhops were not proſecuted as Biſhops, much leſs 'for any Point or Matter of Religion, but as Subjects of this Kingdom, and 'only for a Temporal Crime, as thoſe who had injured and affronted the 'King to his very Face. In the next place, They were not proſecuted for 'Omitting to do any thing, but as they were Actors for Cenſuring of his 'Majeſty and his Government, and for giving their Opinions in Matters 'wholly relating to Law and Government. That there is not any one 'thing, which the Law is more jealous of, than all Accuſations and Arraignments of the Government: That no Man is allow'd to accuſe even 'the moſt inferior Magiſtrate of any Misbehaviour in his Office, unleſs it 'be in a legal Courſe, tho' the Fact be true; That leaſt of all may any Man 'Cenſure the King, for it tends to poſſeſs the People that the Government 'is ill adminiſtred; the Conſequence of which is, to ſet them upon deſiring 'a Reformation, and what that tended to, and wou'd end in, they had all 'had, and too dear bought, Experience of: That Men were to take their 'proper Remedies for redreſſing of any Grievance they lay under, and that 'the Laws had ſufficiently provided for that: That his Majeſty, of his great 'Clemency and Goodneſs, and out of a Deſire that all his Subjects ſhou'd 'live eaſy under him, did iſſue forth his Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, which without all Queſtion was welcome to all his People that 'ſtood in need of it; and thoſe that did not, cou'd not but ſay the thing in 'the Nature of it was very juſt and gracious: That to take away the Surmiſes of the People, that the King was not in earneſt, and wou'd not, or 'cou'd not make good his Promiſes, he was pleas'd to renew them to his 'Subjects. Nay, that this might be known to all his People, even to the 'Meaneſt, who, it may be, were not willing or able to buy the Declaration; and that the King himſelf might be under higher Obligations, if it 'were poſſible, than his own Word, he was deſirous it ſhou'd be repeated 'in the Churches, and read in that ſacred Place, that all his People might 'hear what he had promis'd; and he himſelf might be under the ſolemn 'Tye and Obligation to keep his Word, by remembring that his Promiſes 'had, by his own Command, been publiſh'd, in the Time of Divine Service, in the Houſe of God: That the Jury ſhou'd find, when that which 'the Priſoners call'd a Petition ſhou'd be read to them, that all the Thanks 'his Majeſty had for his Favour and Goodneſs to his People, were only 'hard Words, and a heavy Accuſation, ſuch as a private Perſon wou'd be 'little able to bear: That his Majeſty, who was always a Prince of as great 'Clemency as ever the Kingdom had, and who was repreſented for all that, 'as a Prince of the greateſt Cruelty before his Acceſſion to the Crown, by 'his Enemies, was now accus'd by his Friends for the Effect of his Mercy; And that his Majeſty reſented the Uſage ſo far, that he had order'd; 'and thought fit to have a publick Vindication of his Honour, in this Matter by this Tryal.

The Attorney General opens the Tryal.

Jac. 4. Ref. 29

After a long Time ſpent in proving the Petition to be fram'd by the Biſhops, the Nature of the Publication, and on arguing ſome Niceties of the Law, they came at laſt to the Merits of the Cauſe: And here Sir Robert Sawyer firſt ſtood up, and diſplay'd his Abilities in the Defence and Vindication of the Great Men at the Bar. He alledg'd, 'First, That the Petition in que- 'ſtion was preſented to his Majeſty in moſt private and humble Manner: That 'there was nothing in it which contain'd any thing of Sedition, or any one 'Word that tended to diminiſh the King's Authority, but only a Paper to 'be

Sir Robert Sawyer's Speech in Defence of the Biſhops.

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'be reliev'd againſt an Order of Council, which the Defendents conceiv'd 'they were aggriev'd by: That it was an Excuſe barely for their Non-com-'pliance with the King's Order, becauſe the Diſpenſing Power, upon which 'it was founded, had been ſeveral times in Parliament declar'd to be againſt 'Law: That it can be no Queſtion, but that any Subject that is command-'ed by the King to do a thing which he conceives to be againſt Law, and 'againſt his Conſcience, may apply himſelf to the King, and tell him the 'Reaſon why he does not concur with his Majeſty in ſuch a Command. 'That the King's Counſel did inſiſt upon: That in this Caſe the Biſhops 'were not ſued as Biſhops, nor proſecuted for their Religon; but truly he 'knew not what they were ſued for elſe, the Information being againſt them 'as Biſhops, and no otherwiſe, and for an Act they conceiv'd they lawfully 'might do with relation to their Eccleſiaſtical Polity: That they were not 'Buſy-Bodies, or ſuch as meddled with Matters that did not relate to them, 'but that which was properly within their Sphere and Juriſdiction: That 'to load this Petition with ſuch horrid black Epithets, That it was done 'Libellouſly, Maliciouſly and Scandalouſly, and to oppoſe the King and Go-'vernment, was a very hard Caſe; and that the Lords Biſhops cou'd not 'but conceive a great deal of Trouble, that they ſhou'd lie under ſo heinous 'a Charge, where there was ſo little Proof to make it out: That their Pub-'liſhing of the King's Declaration was attended with Conſequences of the 'greateſt Moment; for if it had any Effect in Law, and theſe Laws were 'ſuſpended by virtue of this Declaration, then certainly it was of the moſt 'diſmal Conſequence; and it behov'd the Biſhops, as Fathers of the Church, 'humbly to repreſent it to the King; That by that Declaration, not only 'the Laws of our Reformation, but all the Laws for the Preſervation 'of the Chriſtian Religion in general were ſuſpended, and became of no 'Force, and all other Religions permitted: And thus all our Laws for keep-'ing the Sabbath, and which diſtinguiſh us from Heathens, wou'd be ſu-'ſpended too: That when a Law is ſuſpended, the Obligation thereof is 'taken away: So that the Declaration diſcharg'd at once all Miniſters 'and Clergy-Men from performing their Duty in Reading the Service of the 'Church, and their Hearers from attending upon that Service; and what a 'Miſchief that wou'd be to the Church, which was under the Care of the 'Defendents, every one might eaſily apprehend. That this pretended Power 'of Suſpending Laws had often been declar'd Illegal by the Parliament, as 'appears particularly in the time of Richard the Second, concerning the Sta-'tute of Proviſors; for where there were particular Diſpenſations for that 'Statute, the King was enabled to do it by Act of Parliament, and cou'd 'not do it without; and by the Proceedings in the Houſe of Commons in 'the Years 1661, 1672, and 1685. That in delivering this Petition the Bi-'ſhops had done nothing but their Duty, and meddled with their own Af-'fairs, which appear'd from the general Care that is repos'd in them by the 'Laws of the Land; urging farther, That they are frequently ſtyl'd in Law-'Books, The King's Spiritual Judges; That they are entruſted with the Care 'of Souls, and the Superintendency over all the Clergy; and beſides, That 'there is a ſpecial Care put upon them, by the expreſs Words of an Act of 'Parliament made in the Firſt of Elizabeth, which makes them ſpecial 'Guardians of the Law of Uniformity; In God's Name earneſtly Requi-'ring and Charging all the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, that they do endea-'vour themſelves, to the utmoſt of their Knowledge, that the true and 'due Execution thereof might be had from their Dioceſes, as they will 'anſwer before God for ſuch Evils and Plagues, wherewith Almighty 'God may juſtly puniſh his People for neglecting this good and wholſom 'Law: So that the Biſhops, upon pain of bringing upon themſelves the 'Imprecation of this Act of Parliament, were oblig'd to ſee it executed;

'and

'were to be Actors in it, that had ſuch a Tendency to deſtroy the very
'Foundations of the Church, as the Suſpenſion of the Laws relating to the Jac. 4.
'Church muſt do, it concern'd them that had no other Remedy, to addreſs Reſ. 29
'the King, by Petition, about it.

Sir Robert Sawyer was ſeconded by the eloquent Mr. Finch, who farther urg'd, 'That tho' the Biſhops had deliver'd the Paper mention'd in the In- Mr. Finch's Speech.
'formation, yet unleſs they had deliver'd a Falſe, Malicious, Seditious and 'Scandalous Libel; unleſs they had publiſh'd it to ſtir up Sedition in the 'Kingdom; and unleſs they had contriv'd this by Conſpiracy, to diminiſh
'the King's Prerogative and Authority, and that Power that was ſaid to 'be in the King, the Lords were not guilty of the Accuſation. As to the 'Paper, if it were a Libel, &c. it muſt be ſo either for the Matter of it, or
'for the Perſons that deliver'd it, or for the Manner of their preſenting
'it; but neither for the Matter, nor for the Perſons, nor for the Manner
'of preſenting it, was there any Endeavour to diminiſh the King's Royal 'Prerogative, nor to ſtir up Sedition, nor Reflection upon the King's True
'Royal and Kingly Authority. That the King's Declaration was founded 'upon a Power of Diſpenſing, which undertook to ſuſpend all Laws Ec-
'cleſiaſtical, as if the King had ſuch a Power: That a Power to abrogate
'Laws, was as much a Part of the Legiſlature, as a Power to make Laws:
'That according to the Conſtitution of the Government in England, the 'Legiſlative Power was in the King, Lords and Commons; but then if that 'Declaration was founded upon a Part of Legiſlature, which muſt be by 'all Men acknowledg'd not to reſide in the King alone, it cou'd not be a 'legal and true Power or Prerogative: That in the Year 1662, where 'there was but the leaſt Umbrage given of ſuch a Diſpenſing Power, altho'
'the King had declar'd in his Speech to the Parliament, That he wiſh'd
'he had ſuch a Power, which his Declaration before ſeem'd to aſſume,
'the Parliament was ſo jealous of this, that they immediately made their 'Application to his Majeſty, by an Addreſs, againſt the Declaration; al-
'ledging, amongſt other Reaſons, That the King cou'd not Diſpenſe with
'thoſe Laws without an Act of Parliament: That there was another At'tempt in 1672; and then, after his Majeſty had in his Speech mention'd
'his Declaration to them, the Parliament, particularly the Houſe of Com'mons, preſented an Addreſs to his Majeſty, ſetting forth, That this cou'd
'not be done by Law, without an Act of Parliament; and his Majeſty
'concurr'd with them ſo far in that Opinion, that he caus'd it to be made 'known to the Houſe of Lords, by the Lord Chancellor, That his Ma-
'jeſty had broken the Seal, and cancell'd the Declaration, with this far'ther Declaration, That it ſhou'd never be drawn into Example or Con-
'ſequence.

Mr. Finch was ſucceeded by the two notable Lawyers Mr. Pollixfen and Serjeant Pemberton: The firſt inſiſted, 'That the King's Declaration was The Speeches of Mr. Pollixfen and Serjeant Pemberton.
'not agreeable to the Laws of the Land, becauſe it did at one Blow ſet a-
'ſide all the Laws we have in England, for they were almoſt all Penal Laws,
'not only before the Reformation, but ſince: That the Will of the King
'is what the Law is; and if the King's Will be not conſonant to Law, it is 'not obliging: That the Caſes of Diſpenſations were all ſo many ſtrong
'Authorities againſt a general or particular Abrogation; for why ſhou'd any 'Man go about to argue, That the King may diſpenſe with this or that 'particular Law, if at once he can diſpenſe with all the Laws by an undoubt-
'ed Prerogative?' Serjeant Pemberton alledg'd on the ſame ſide, 'That
'ſuch a Diſpenſing Power with Laws and Statutes, ſtrikes at the Foundati'ons of all the Rights, Liberties and Properties of the King's Subjects:
'That the Penal Laws are the great Bulwark of the Reformed Religion,

'and the only human Fence of the Church of England; That they were 'made upon a Foreſight of the Miſchief that had, and might come, by falſe 'Religions into this Kingdom; and that they intended to defend the Nati- 'on againſt them, and to keep them out, particularly the Romiſh Religion, 'which is the very worſt of all Religions, and no way tolerable among 'us; whereas if this Declaration took effect, that Religion wou'd ſtand up- 'on equal Terms with the Eſtabliſh'd Religion.

And of Mr. Somers.

After ſome of theſe Arguments were repeated and diverſify'd, the Pleadings for the Biſhops were cloſ'd by the accurate Mr. Somers, who began with the great Caſe of Thomas and Sorrel in the Exchequer-Chamber upon the Validity of a Diſpenſation, urging, 'That there it was the Opinion of eve- 'ry one of the Judges, that there never cou'd be an Abrogation, or a Suſ- 'penſion, which is a Temporary Abrogation of an Act of Parliament, but 'by the Legiſlative Power; that indeed it was diſputed, how far the King 'might diſpenſe with the Penalties of ſuch a particular Law, as to parti- 'cular Perſons; but that it was agreed by all, That the King had no Power 'to ſuſpend any Law. That by the Law of all civiliz'd Nations, if the 'Prince does require ſomething to be done, which the Perſon who is to 'do it, takes to be unlawful, it is not only lawful, but his Duty, Reſcri- 'bere Principi, which is all the Biſhops had done here, and that in the 'moſt humble manner. That as to the Matters of Fact alledg'd in the 'ſaid Petition, there cou'd be no Deſign to diminiſh the Prerogative, be- 'cauſe the King has no ſuch Prerogative; that the Petition cou'd not be 'Seditious, becauſe it was preſented to the King in private and alone; nor 'Falſe, becauſe the Matter of it was true, nor Malicious, for the Occaſi- 'on was not ſought, the Thing was preſs'd upon them; nor, in ſhort, a 'Libel, becauſe the Intent was Innocent, and they kept within the Bounds 'ſet by Act of Parliament, that gives the Subject leave to apply to his 'Prince by Petition when he is aggriev'd.

The Reply of the King's Council.

To all theſe weighty Arguments, the Counſel for the King reply'd to this Effect; 'That our Religion teaches us, not to preſerve our Religion or 'our Lives by any illegal Courſes: That Evidences produc'd by the De- 'fendants againſt the King's Diſpenſing Power were only Tranſactions in 'Parliament; and that no one cou'd affirm that any thing can be a De- 'claration of Parliament, unleſs he that is the principal Part concurs, 'who is the King; for if one ſpeaks of the Court of Parliament in a Legal 'Senſe, he much ſpeak of the whole Body, King, Lords and Commons; 'and that a Declaration in Parliament, muſt be by the whole Body, and 'that is properly an Act of Parliament. That there was no greater Proof 'of the Influence of the Biſhop's Petition than the Crowd of that Day, 'and the Harangues that had been made: That the taking this Liberty to 'canvaſs and diſpute the King's Power and Authority, and to cenſure 'his Actions, poſſeſs'd the People with ſtrange Opinions, and rais'd Diſ- 'contents and Jealouſies, as if the free Courſe of Law were reſtrain'd, and 'arbitrary Will and Pleaſure ſet up inſtead of it: That it was a Queſtion 'whether the Biſhops, out of Parliament, can preſent any Petition to the 'King, That if they were commanded to do any Thing againſt their Conſci- 'ences, they ſhou'd have acquieſc'd till the Meeting of the Parliament: 'That the King is Supream over all of us, and has a particular Supremacy 'over the Biſhops, as Supream Ordinary, Governor and Moderator of the 'Church, and as ſuch may Diſpenſe with all the Eccleſiaſtical Statutes: 'That it was adjudg'd in the Caſe of Sir Edward Hales, That the King 'had a Power to Diſpenſe with the Penal Laws; and that the Defendants 'by queſtioning the King's Power, and referring themſelves to the De- 'clarations in Parliament, had done that which of late Days had been al- 'ways look'd upon as an ill Thing, as if the King's Authority was under

'the

'the Suffrages of Parliament.' Here it is remarkable that Sir William Williams, the Head of the Whig-Party, and Speaker of the two laſt Parliaments in King's Charles's Reign, who was ſo full of Fears of Popery and Arbitrary Power, when there was ſo little Occaſion, being now Sollicitor General, carry'd the Proſecution higher than the reſt of the King's Counſel, againſt thoſe who made this noble Stand againſt both; for which he was ſometimes hiſs'd in the Court, and at laſt of all, quite out of Weſtminſter-Hall. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

The Counſel having done ſpeaking on both Sides, the Lord Chief Juſtice Wright ſumm'd up the Evidence and told the Jury, 'That ſometimes the 'Diſpenſing Power had been allow'd, as in Richard's the Second's Time, 'and ſometimes deny'd; but that it was a Queſtion out of the preſent 'Caſe.' Then he gave them Directions, 'That if they believ'd the Peti- 'tion to be the ſame, that was preſented by the Biſhops to the King, then 'the Publication was ſufficiently prov'd. Next, that any Thing which 'tended to diſturb the Government, or make a ſtir among the People, was 'certainly within the Caſe of Libellis famoſis, and his Opinion in ſhort 'was, That the Biſhop's Petition was a Libel.' Mr. Juſtice Holloway declar'd, 'That the End and Intention of any Action was to be conſider'd; 'That the Biſhops were charg'd with delivering a Petition, which accord- 'ing to their Defence was done with all Humility and Decency imagina- 'ble; and that as they were Men of good Lives, the delivering of a Pe- 'tition was no Fault, it being the Right of every Subject to Petition: 'Therefore if the Jury were ſatisfy'd they did it with no ill Intention, but 'only to ſhew the Reaſons of their Diſobedience to the King's Command, 'he cou'd not think it to be a Libel.' Mr. Juſtice Powell more plainly declar'd, 'That he cou'd diſcern no Sedition, or any other Crime fix'd 'upon the Reverend Fathers, the Lords Biſhops, ſince there was nothing 'offer'd by the King's Counſel to render the Petition Falſe, Malicious or 'Seditious. He admoniſh'd the Jury to conſider, That the Contents of 'the Petition were, That the Biſhops apprehended the Declaration was 'Illegal, being founded upon a Diſpenſing Power claim'd by the King; 'but for his Part he did not remember in any Caſe in all the Law, That 'there was any ſuch Power in the King; and if there be no ſuch Power 'in the King, the Petition cou'd not be a Libel.' He concluded with tell- ing them, 'That he cou'd ſee no Difference between the King's Power to 'Diſpenſe with Laws Eccleſiaſtical, and his Power to Diſpenſe with any o- 'the Laws whatſoever; That if this were once allow'd of, there wou'd 'be no need of Parliaments, and all the Legiſlature wou'd be in the King; 'and he left the Iſſue to God and their Conſciences.' Mr. Juſtice Ally-bone, who ſpoke laſt, laid down theſe two Poſitions; 'Firſt, that no Man 'can take upon him to write againſt the actual Exerciſe of the Govern- 'ment, unleſs he has Leave from the Government, but he makes a Libel, 'be what he writes true or falſe. Secondly, That no private Man can take 'upon him to write concerning the Government at all; and that when he 'intrudes himſelf into other Mens Buſineſs, that does not concern his par- 'ticular Intereſt, he is a Libeller. Theſe Poſitions he back'd by a Reſo- 'lution of the Judges in King James the Firſt's Time, That to frame a 'Petition to the King to put the Penal Laws in Execution, was next Door 'to Treaſon;' which prov'd to be a groſs Miſquotation, inſtead of a Petition againſt the Penal Laws, and for which being taken up by Judge Powell and Serjeant Pemberton, little heed was given to any thing he ſaid afterwards. So the Jury withdrew, and ſate up all Night to conſider of the Verdict.

The People transported.

ſpacious Place reſound with louder Shouts and Acclamations, than when the Word NOT GUILTY was pronounc'd by the Jury. The liſt'ning Throng catch'd the Word from the Fore-Man, and ſo often repeated it, that Sollicitor Williams was ſo offended, that he earneſtly mov'd that ſuch as ſhouted in the Court might be committed. Whereupon a Gentleman of Grays Inn was laid hold on, but ſoon after diſcharg'd, with this ſhort Reproof from the Chief Juſtice; Sir, I am as glad as you can be that my Lords the Biſhops are acquitted; but your manner of Rejoicing here is indecent; you might Rejoice in your Chamber, or elſewhere, and not here. Nor did this Place, nor the Cities of London and Weſtminſter terminate the Shouts that were rais'd upon the Biſhops acquittal, but they flew like Lightning to the Camp at Hounſlow-Heath, where the whole Body of the Soldiers echo'd them ſo loud, that it ſtartled the King, who was that Day entertain'd in the Earl of Feverſham's Tent; inſomuch that his Majeſty ſent him out to know what was the Matter? The Earl came back and told the King, It was nothing but the Soldiers ſhouted upon the News of the Biſhops being acquitted. The King reply'd, much diſcompos'd, And do you call that Nothing? But ſo much the worſe for them. Whatever his Majeſty meant by theſe laſt Words, the People cou'd not contain; for notwithſtanding ſevere Prohibitions, innumerable Bonfires, Illuminations, &c. were made in London, the two Univerſities, and all great Places, and more particularly in the City of Norwich, where the Raptures and Tranſports were beyond all Expreſſion. All which gave a ſenſible Regret to the King, who threatned to deliver the Biſhops up to the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners; and to ſhew his Indignation, he immediately turn'd out the two Judges Holloway and Powell, and put in Sir Robert Baldock, one of his Council in this Tryal, in the room of the latter; and was proceeding in farther Acts of ſeverity, till Neceſſity in no long time oblig'd him to make a Stand.

The King provok'd.

For the News of the Biſhops Acquittal was not the only Mortification the King receiv'd at Hounſlow-Heath: From the general Bent of the People he found it was exceeding difficult, if not impoſſible for him to effect his Deſigns without open Forces; and therefore to try how far he might depend upon his Army, he endeavour'd to make them ſubſcribe a Writing, whereby they ſhou'd ingage themſelves to contribute, as far as in them lay, towards the Repeal of the Teſts and Penal Laws. To bring this to bear, it was thought fit to propoſe the thing to all the Regiments One by One; not doubting but that if two or three ſubmitted, the reſt wou'd follow their Example. Accordingly the Major of the Lord Litchfield's Regiment was order'd to open his Majeſty's Deſire to that Battalion, and Command all ſuch as wou'd not inſtantly comply with it, to lay down their Arms: But he was not a little ſurpriz'd when he found, that except two Captains, and ſome Popiſh Soldiers, the whole Regiment obey'd the latter Part of his Command. The King himſelf remain'd Speechleſs for a while; and having recover'd his Aſtoniſhment, commanded them to take up their Arms again, adding with a diſcontented ſullen-Look, That for the future he wou'd not do them the Honour to ask their Advice. Hereupon his Majeſty found that he muſt new-model his Army before he cou'd rely upon them, and therefore upon the firſt Occaſion, he caſhier'd ſeveral Proteſtant Officers and Soldiers, and fill'd them up with as many Papiſts either Engliſh or Iriſh as he cou'd procure. But this Regulation was ſo far from a Security, that it created new Diſcontents and Dangers. For afterwards when ſeveral Iriſh were put into the Duke of Berwick's Regiment, it was warmly oppos'd by Lieutenant-Colonel Beaumont and other Officers. The former remonſtrated to the Duke, 'That he was deſir'd by thoſe Gentlemen to inform his 'Grace, That they did not think it conſiſtent with their Honours to have 'Foreigners impos'd upon them, without being complain'd of, that their 'Companies

And mortify'd in his Camp.

'Companies were weak, or Orders had been ſent to recruit them; not 'doubting, but if ſuch Orders had been given, that what firſt, in very ill 'times, rais'd them Hundreds, cou'd eaſily now have made them according 'to the King's Complement. Therefore they humbly petition'd that they 'might have leave to fill up their Companies with ſuch Men of this Na-'tion, as they ſhou'd judge moſt ſuitable for the King's Service, and to 'ſupport their Honours; or otherwiſe, that they might be permitted with 'all imaginable Duty and Reſpect, to lay down their Commiſſions.' An Account of this, and ſome other diſcouraging Matters, being tranſmitted to his Majeſty at Windſor, he immediately order'd Lieutenant-Colonel Beaumont, Captain Paſton, and four other Captains, to be taken into Cuſtody; and a Court Martial was appointed to try them as Mutineers, which might have coſt them their Lives: But ſome News from abroad alter'd the Sentence, and they were only caſhier'd. Nor were the Sea-Forces more favourable to Popery; for the King having caus'd Maſs to be ſaid on Board his Men of War, there happen'd ſo great a Diſorder and Mutiny in the Fleet, that the Officers cou'd hardly ſave the Prieſts from being thrown over Board. 1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29 And Fleet.

4. The Proſecution of the Biſhops, and ſome other Proceedings, had made a conſiderable Impreſſion upon the Diſſenters: For tho' for the moſt part they were made uſe of towards the overturning of the Church, eſpecially after the King's firſt Declaration of Indulgence; yet by Degrees it appear'd that the more Moderate Sort were ſo fully ſatisfy'd with that Stand which the London Divines had made againſt Popery, and the unanſwerable Treatiſes they had writ againſt it, that they ſhew'd an unuſual Readineſs to come in to them. This, and the Dangers of Popery, put the good Archbiſhop and others upon conſidering of proper Methods to promote this Inclination, and to gain them over without doing any Prejudice to themſelves. Accordingly a Scheme was laid out to improve, and inforce the Diſcipline of the Church; to review and enlarge the preſent Liturgy, by correcting of ſome things, and by adding of others; and, if it ſhou'd be thought fit by Authority in Convocation and Parliament, by leaving ſome few Ceremonies, confeſs'd to be Indifferent in their Natures, as Indifferent in their Uſage, ſo as not to be neceſſarily obſerv'd by thoſe who made a Scruple of them; till they ſhou'd be able to overcome either their Weakneſſes, or Prejudices, and be willing to comply with them. The Scheme being laid out, the ſeveral Parts of it were committed, with the Approbation and Direction of the Archbiſhop, to a conſiderable Number of eminent Divines of the City. His Grace took one Part to Himſelf; another was committed to Dr. Patrick, others to Dr. Sharp, &c. Moreover the Archbiſhop, ſending certain Articles to the Clergy through his whole Province, dated July the 16th, in the xith Article has theſe remarkable Words; 'That they alſo walk in Wiſdom 'towards them who are not of our Communion: And if there be in their 'Pariſhes any ſuch, that they neglect not frequently to confer with them 'in the Spirit of Meekneſs, ſeeking by all good Ways and Means to gain 'and win them over to our Communion. More eſpecially that they have 'a very tender Regard to our Brethren, the Proteſtant Diſſenters: That 'upon Occaſion offer'd, they viſit them at their Houſes, and receive them 'kindly at their own; and treat them fairly wherever they meet them; 'perſuading them, if it may be, to a full Compliance with our Church; or 'at leaſt, that whereunto we have already attain'd, we may all walk by the 'ſame Rule, and mind the ſame Thing. And in Order thereto, that they 'take all Opportunities of aſſuring and convincing them, That the Biſhops 'of this Church are really and ſincerely irreconcileable Enemies to the 'Errors, Superſtitions, Idolatries, and Tyrannies of the Church of Rome; Deſigns to gain the Diſſenters to the Church of England.

'and that the very unkind Jealouſies which ſome have had of us to the 'contrary were altogether groundleſs. And in the laſt Place, that they 'warmly and moſt affectionately exhort them to join with us in daily fer-'vent Prayer to the God of Peace, for an Univerſal Bleſſed Union of all 'Reformed Churches both at Home and Abroad, againſt our Common 'Enemies, &c.'

While the Archbiſhop and other pious Divines were promoting the Good of the Church and Publick, ſome few Biſhops were moving in another Road, who inſtead of following the Example of their Perſecuted Brethren, had publiſh'd and read the Declaration, even after the Acquittal of thoſe Heroes. Nay the Biſhop of Durham carry'd the Buſineſs ſo far, that upon that Account he ſuſpended thirty Miniſters of his Dioceſe, and amongſt them one of his own Chaplains. And in the County of Cheſter, nine Curates, Rectors and others, were not contented to read the Declaration, but preſented likewiſe an Addreſs, wherein they tell his Majeſty, 'That if the Matter 'of the Declaration were not according to their Wiſhes, yet the Publiſh-'ing of it was according to their Duty, ſince it was iſſu'd out from the ex-'preſs Prerogative of his Supremacy over them; and they were required 'by what is Statute-Law, the Rubrick of their Liturgy, to publiſh what 'was enjoin'd by the King or their Biſhop, (whoſe Caſe therein was re-'markable) as much as what is preſcrib'd in the Rules of this Book; ſo that 'they cou'd not but with Trouble of Mind hear of the Proceedings of the 'Seven Biſhops, who, tho' they tenderly promis'd the Diſſenters Some-'thing, yet refus'd to do their Part about the Declaration, leſt they ſhould 'be Parties to it, which Reaſon the Addreſſers eſteem inſufficient. There-'fore they, in all Submiſſion, become earneſt, tho' too mean Interceſſors 'to his Majeſty in Behalf of the Church of England, That the Faults of 'Theſe and Others may not be laid to her Charge, in whoſe Communion 'there were many, and they hop'd there wou'd be more, who concurr'd 'in Promoting the Purpoſes of his mild Government; and ſo conclude 'with begging Leave to make their Congratulations for the happy Birth of 'the young Prince in his Hereditary Succeſſive Kingdom.' Now becauſe it was by the Inſtigation of their Biſhop that the Clergy of Cheſter had made this ſtrange Step, we are told that one of the Colleges of Oxford refus'd to admit the Son of that Prelate to a Fellowſhip that had been given him; and about the ſame Time that famous Univerſity refus'd alſo to give the Degree of Doctor to Mr. Gifford, whom the King had nominated to fill the vacant See of that City.

A ſtrange Addreſs from Cheſter Dioceſe.

The laſt Act of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners.

Still the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners proceeded to act with all Vigour, and by an Order made the 12th of July, 'Commanded all Chancellors, 'Arch-Deacons, Commiſſaries and Officials, to enquire in what Churches 'and Chapels his Majeſty's Declaration was read, and to tranſmit an Ac-'count thereof upon the 16th Day of Auguſt next.' But the Clergy finding this Court to be little better than a Popiſh Inquiſition, the greateſt Part of thoſe to whom the Order was directed, never took any notice of it. The Commiſſioners being met on the ſaid Day, were not a little puzzled how to proceed in this Matter: But after a long Conſultation, they were contented to repeat the ſame Order, 'Requiring all Perſons, having Eccle-'ſiaſtical Juriſdiction, to tranſmit to them upon the 15th of November next, 'an Account of the Enquiry they are hereby commanded to make in their 'Viſitations, together with the Names of the Parſons, Rectors, Vicars and 'Curates, that had either obey'd or diſobey'd his Majeſty's Command.'

The Biſhop of Rocheſter leaves them.

The Biſhop of Rocheſter, who had been thought too obnoxious and compliant, finding the Deſign of the Commiſſion it ſelf, now look'd upon it as inconſiſtent with his Profeſſion and Character to act any longer in it. Others wou'd have it, that the Whiſpers of an Invaſion and a Change open'd the the Eyes of that Prelate; but whatever it was, he wrote a Letter to his Colleagues, wherein he told them, 'That ſince their Lordſhips were re- 1688.

'him to ſerve his Majeſty any longer in that Commiſſion.' He proceeds farther, and ſays, 'That tho' I my ſelf did ſubmit in that Particular, yet I 'will never be any ways Inſtrumental in puniſhing thoſe my Brethren who 'did not. For, as I call God to Witneſs, that what I did was merely up- 'on a Principle of Conſcience; ſo I am fully ſatisfy'd, that their Forbear- 'ance was upon the ſame Principle.' The Loſs of this Biſhop was look'd upon as ominous to the Court, and his Letter, which was publiſh'd notwithſtanding the Precautions that were taken to ſuppreſs it, prov'd highly detrimental to the Popiſh Cabal; who ſtill drove on with ungovernable Zeal and Fury, to the great Terror of all wiſe and good Men, who had now little to hope for but from Heaven and Abroad.

V. 1. For above two Months after the Birth of the Prince of Wales, the Romiſh Intereſt was at the Height, appearing ſtill upon the Increaſe; and it is hard to expreſs the dreadful Apprehenſions the Generality had of an impending Storm; all finding ſuch Breaches into the Engliſh Conſtitution, as muſt ſhortly amount to a Diſſolution or a total Subverſion. But in the midſt of this Darkneſs and Night, in the Month of Auguſt there began to appear ſome Glimmerings of Light, ſome Dawnings of the Day from the Eaſt, which gradually gave Comfort and Refreſhment to the whole Nation. This ſerv'd to diſpel the dark Clouds and threatning Tempeſts, and in Time brought on a ſignal Deliverance, in which the Arm of God ſeem'd more viſible than the Hands and Hearts of Men. The Deliverance was generally thought more eminent and conſpicuous, as being brought about by ſuch a Concurrence of wonderful Circumſtances and Events, and effected and compleated in England with hardly any Convulſion or Bloodſhed. But others, who have judg'd of it more by accidental Conſequences than neceſſary Effects, as the vaſt Sums of Money and Seas of Blood that rather follow'd it than were produc'd by it, have accounted it more a Judgment than a Deliverance. We are gratefully ſatisfy'd with the Truth of the Latter, and do believe it not only to have been a Deliverance to the Britannick Dominions, but alſo to the principal Parts of Europe, who began to feel the Want of a Revolution almoſt as much as England it ſelf. The firſt Steps towards the REVOLUTION.

To underſtand the Greatneſs of the Revolution, as well as the Boldneſs of the Attempt, it will be proper to take a ſhort View of the State of Affairs in the Neighbouring Countries. To begin with France, the vaſt Scheme of making that Kingdom the Seat of Univerſal Monarchy, which had been founded by Cardinal Richlieu, and purſu'd by Mazarine, was ſo ſucceſsfully proſecuted, that its powerful Arms had for many Years been the Terror of Europe, the Progreſs of which cou'd not naturally be ſtemm'd, but by the Aſſiſtance of England. It is believ'd that Cromwell might eaſily have ſtopp'd this Torrent in the Beginning; but having particular Ends, he open'd the Paſſages to it. King Charles the Second ſeem'd willing to have drawn his Sword in the Defence of Flanders, but his Hands being more ty'd than, perhaps, his Inclinations, he choſe to ſubmit to a more eaſy and paſſive Way: And King James, on ſeveral Conſiderations, refus'd to enter into any Alliance to the Interruption of the Peace that the neighbouring Parts of Europe enjoy'd in his Reign. But this Peace being by others more juſtly look'd upon to be precarious, and like to continue no longer than the French had an Inclination to break it, they thought an honourable War more eligible; at leaſt it was but Prudence and Policy to enter upon Meaſures for their common Safety in Caſe of a Rupture. The State of Affairs in Europe.

The

The Management of the Prince of Orange.

The Prince of Orange, as it formerly appear'd, was always at the Head of the moſt forward of theſe Counſels: To this Hero Eaſe was tedious and inſufferable, and Inactivity like the State of Death; War was his beloved Miſtreſs, and a Camp his chief Scene of Pleaſure. But he had this peculiar Felicity from the Situation of Affairs in his Time, that whatever might be the Effects of a reſtleſs Temper, and an unbounded Ambition, ſeem'd purely the Reſult of Neceſſity and not Choice; and the glorious Pretenſions of Reſtoring the Balance of Power, and the invaded Liberties of oppreſs'd Nations, gave at leaſt a beautiful Varniſh to all his Undertakings. At his firſt Appearance in the World, and under moſt Diſadvantagious Circumſtances, he had bravely put a Check to the rapid Courſe of the Conqueſts of France, and with wonderful Courage and Conſtancy carry'd on the War, till it concluded in the Peace of Nimiguen. After which he became the chief Inſtrument in forming the League of Ausburg againſt France, thereby to bring all the Forces of the Confederates upon that Monarch, and keep him in play, in caſe he ſhou'd attempt to croſs his Deſigns, by turning his Arms againſt the Hollanders. On the other Hand, he repreſented to the Houſe of Auſtria 'the ambitious Deſigns of the French King, and how eaſily he might 'make himſelf Univerſal Monarch, if he were ſupported by the Crown of 'England, which for five hundred Years paſt had held the Balance of Europe;' adding, 'That it was not the Advancement of the Romiſh Reli-'gion which the King of France had in view, but the aggrandizing his en-'croaching Power; ſince at the ſame time that he perſecuted his Proteſtant 'Subjects, and favour'd the Growth of Popery in England, he counte-'nanc'd Count Tekeli, and had made a ſecret Alliance with the Turks.' The Emperor and the King of Spain plainly ſaw the Strength of theſe Reaſons; and the rather, becauſe the Endeavours of their Miniſters to bring King James into the German League againſt France had prov'd ineffectual. Among the reſt, Don Pedro de Ronquillo, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, a Perſon that beſt knew the Engliſh Genius and Conſtitution, made uſe of the moſt prevailing Arguments to engage him to break with France; aſſuring him, 'That nothing wou'd more endear him to his Proteſtant Subjects, 'nor more powerfully incline his Parliament to grant Eaſe to the Roman 'Catholicks.' But his Majeſty was already ſo ſtrongly united with France, that he anſwer'd the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, That he wou'd faithfully obſerve the Alliances he had made with his Maſter; but that he was oblig'd as religiouſly to entertain the Amity that was between him and the King of France his near Relation; that he deſir'd to live in Peace with all his Neighbours, and wou'd endeavour to preſerve it amongſt them. The Courts of Vienna and Madrid ſaw the Tendency of this unſatisfactory Anſwer; and therefore both the Emperor and his Catholick Majeſty were the more diſpos'd to hearken to the Propoſals made them by the Prince of Orange, not only againſt King Lewis, but againſt the King of England, his devoted Ally.

The Power of France and other Nations.

But all the Confederacies that cou'd be made were too light without the Weight of England in the Scale, and without her Strength, were an unequal Match for the Power of France; which Monarchy was then in its moſt flouriſhing Condition, abounding in Riches and Plenty, numerous Gallant Troops and experienc'd Officers, all at the abſolute Command of a Prince as well qualify'd for vaſt Atchievements, as ever ſat upon the Throne. The Empire was a large Body, and appear'd robuſt and nervous, but was very feeble in the Joints, the bulky Limbs being ill compacted by a fundamental Error in its Conſtitution; and the Emperor himſelf was ſtill engag'd in a War with the Turks, which tho' ſucceſsfully carry'd on of late Years, had nevertheleſs quite exhauſted his Coffers. Spain had for almoſt a Century of Years languiſh'd under a conſumptive Decay, and wanted

Spirits

Spirits to keep up her lingering Vitals, much more to revive and ſupport her diſtant Parts, as ſufficiently appear'd by the late Loſs of Luxemburgh. Holland, tho' healthy and vigorous, yet was unable to defend her ſelf without better Seconds; ſo that all the former Efforts of the Prince of Orange were by Himſelf compar'd to thoſe of a weak Sculler againſt an Eddy. Now an impatient Senſe of the Difficulties that Prince had to encounter, and an Ambition of appearing at the Head of a Force ſufficient to curb the growing Power of France, and ſnatch the Laurels from that Monarch's Brow, might well raiſe his Appetite even to a Crown, which a ſtrange Concurrence of Circumſtances had conſpired to place upon his Head. The Death of the Elector of Cologn happen'd about the Time of the Birth of the Prince of Wales, and the Competition about a new Election, manifeſtly tended to a Rupture; Prince Clement, Brother to the Elector of Bavaria, one of the two Candidates, being ſupported by Germany: and the other, the Cardinal of Furſtemberg, by the Crown of France: This, with the Umbrage taken at the Fortifying of Traerbach by the French, made the War in effect neceſſary. In this nice Juncture of Affairs the Prince of Orange was particularly encourag'd from England to form his great Deſigns; and this Juncture made his Propoſals ſo readily embrac'd, as it ſet the Roman Court in oppoſition to the Church of Rome, made even the Pope and the Houſe of Auſtria concur in ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion in England, and induc'd Sovereign Princes to encourage the Overthrow of a Sovereign Brother by the Hands of his own Subjects. 1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

2. England of all other Nations was more immediately concern'd to bring about a Revolution, and the Birth of a Popiſh Succeſſor, and the Proſecution of the Seven Biſhops had ripen'd Matters, and brought them to ſuch a Height, that all Perſons began to look out for a Deliverance. Several of the Biſhops, ſeriouſly reflecting on the imminent Danger, to which the Proteſtant Religion, as well as the whole Nation was expos'd, writ Invitations to his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, to ſuccour them in this Emergency. Many Temporal Lords and conſiderable Gentlemen were embark'd in the ſame Deſign, and a ſecret Correſpondence was maintain'd for ſome time between them and the Court of the Hague, whither Gentlemen were continually going, and ſome always reſiding there to ſupport and cultivate it, as Mr. Sidney, Sir Robert Peyton, Sir Rowland Gwyn, Dr. Burnet and others. In July one Joſeph Flight brought over near fourſcore Letters, to as many of the prime Nobility and Gentry, and carry'd back Anſwers with great Diſpatch and Safety. The Lord Wharton, tho' advanc'd in Years, took a Journey through Holland to Germany; Colonel Sidney, Uncle to the Earl of Sunderland, went to the Spaw, under the Pretence of only Drinking the Waters; and the Lord Dunblain, Son to the Earl of Danby, a brave bold-ſpirited Sea-Man, who commanded an Independent Frigate, together with Mr. Johnſon, and ſome others, croſs'd and re-croſs'd the Seas, to carry ſeveral Diſpatches and Reſolutions. The Earl of Shrewsbury having left his Regiment of Horſe, and mortgag'd his Eſtate for forty thouſand Pounds, went over to the Prince, to offer him both his Sword and his Purſe. He was follow'd by Admiral Herbert, Mr. Herbert his Couſin, Mr. Ruſſel, the Lord Mordant, and the Earl of Wiltſhire. As to thoſe others in England who aſſiſted in this great Work, we are to mention the Earl of Danby, who had as great a Share in this as in the Marriage of the Princeſs of Orange, the Earl of Devonſhire, the Earl of Dorſet, the Lord Lovelace, the Lord Delamere, the Duke of Norfolk, the Marquiſs of Hallifax, and his Son the Lord Eland, the Marquiſs of Wincheſter, the Lord Pawlet his Son, the Lord Willoughby, Son to the Earl of Lindſey, Mr. Leſter, Mr. Hamden, Mr. Powle, &c. beſides ſeveral eminent Citizens in London. And their Principles.

what Motives and Principles theſe Perſons proceeded ſhall be deliver'd in the Words of the eloquent Biſhop Sprat, who in a Letter to the Lord Dorſet, ſays, 'I know it was formerly a popular Objection of divers miſguided Diſſenters from the Church of England, That our Principles were too Monarchical, and that we carry'd the Doctrine of Obedience farther than might be conſiſtent with the Safety of a Proteſtant Church, or the Privilege of a free-born People. But it is now to be hop'd, that the ſtrongeſt Argument of all others, which is Experience from undoubted Matter of Fact, has put this Objection for ever out of Countenance; that ſince it is undeniable, that during the whole Time, when our Civil and Spiritual Liberties were in ſo much Danger, the greateſt and moſt conſiderable Stop, that was here put to the Arts of Rome, and Intrigues of France, was by the ſteady Reſolution of the true Sons of the Church of England.—— It will be ſufficient to affirm, once for all, That the main Body of thoſe, who made ſo brave a Stand, were all of the Church of England; and the Principles on which they ſtood, were all Church of England Principles. My Lord, It was by theſe Perſons and theſe Principles, that Popery was ſtopp'd in its full Career, by theſe it was hinder'd from conquering, and put in a Condition to be ſhortly after conquer'd it ſelf in this Nation.' But to proceed:

Their Application to the States-General.

The deplorable State of Things having awaken'd the Minds of many of the Nobility and Gentry, they reſolv'd to ſhake of a Yoke they cou'd not bear. In order to which, they apply'd themſelves not only to the Prince of Orange, but to ſeveral leading Members of the States-General of the United Provinces, repreſenting to them, 'How nearly they were concern'd in what then paſs'd in England, which was but one Branch of the Deſigns driven on by the French King and his Adherents, for enſlaving all Europe, and rooting out what they call'd the Northern Hereſy, both Name and Thing.' They ſhew'd them, 'That if they ſuffer'd the Conſpiracy of the common Enemies to go any farther, they wou'd be involv'd in the Ruin of England, and muſt ſpeedily fall under the French Yoke, of which they had felt the Weight in the Years 1672, and 1673, and had lately heard more of it from thoſe great Numbers of French Proteſtants who had taken Refuge in their Countrey. They inſiſted how glorious it wou'd be for them to become the Sanctuary of oppreſs'd Innocence.' They put them in mind of what had heretofore been done for their Republick by the Engliſh Nation, 'When they had newly caſt off the Spaniſh Tyranny, and were forc'd to implore the Succour of their Neighbours againſt a Power which then carry'd on the ſame Deſigns, and much by the ſame Methods, which had been copy'd from them by the French in the latter Times.' They convinc'd them, 'That all Reaſons of Gratitude, Humanity, Policy and Chriſtianity concurr'd, to encline them to comply with their Requeſt, in putting their helping Hand towards the oppoſing a Bank to that Torrent which otherwiſe wou'd overflow all Chriſtendom. Neither was the Buſineſs of a Nature to admit Delay; ſince if they ſlipp'd that Opportunity then in their Hands, by the French King's ſending his Forces to the Upper Rhine, to begin the War upon Philipsburgh; if they let paſs that ſeaſonable Occaſion of helping England, in all Probability it wou'd be too late to attempt any thing hereafter: The two Kings hoping in a ſhort time to put both the Dutch and the Engliſh out of Capacity of diſputing their Pleaſure.

Proviſions made by them and the Prince of Orange.

All theſe Arguments, and the Inſtances of ſo many conſiderable Engliſh Men, prevail'd to that Degree, that the States-General reſolv'd to lend them their beſt Troops; and accordingly the Forces were order'd to rendezvous near Nimeguen, not far from the Camp of the Elector of Brandenburgh, who had march'd his Army thither to act in Conjunction with the Confe-

Confederates, now alarm'd by the Dauphine's Hoſtility in Germany. The Prince of Orange had juſt before, under the Pretence of the Buſineſs of Cologn, aſſiſted at an Interview, and long Conference held at Minden in Weſtphalia, between the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburgh, the Landgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel, and the Princes of the Houſe of Lunenburgh, wherein Meaſures were concerted both to recover England, as well as depreſs France. This, and his frequent Journies to the Army near Nimeguen, ſoon gave alarm to the Count D'Avaux and the Marquiſs D'Albyville, Miniſters of France and England reſiding at the Hague; eſpecially when there was an Interview between the Prince and the Marquiſs of Caſtanaga, Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands, on the Frontiers, wherein Matters were concerted for the Defence of thoſe Provinces, on the Prince's Abſence. The Prince's Friends gave it out, 'That it was about ſome Affairs depending be-'tween his Highneſs and the Count de Solre, concerning certain Lands in 'the Dependency of Conde, France having undertaken the Defence of that 'Count;' whereas the true Reaſon of that Interview, and all the Prince's extraordinary Motions at that time, was wholly unknown to the World. This was in the Month of Auguſt; and tho' the Marquiſs D'Albyville went to London about that time, ſo ſecret were the Councils of this Prince, that King James had no manner of Notice of his Intentions: To diſguiſe which, he happily made uſe of the Rupture between France and the Empire, as a Colour for his Military Preparations. And indeed the whole Expedition was manag'd with a Secrecy ſo exact and well guarded, as fully confirm'd the Character which Experience had extorted from the Mouth of his great Enemy, the French King, That in the Cabinet he was the greateſt Man in Europe. 1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

The Prince having detach'd from his own, and the Elector of Brandenburgh's Camp, what Forces he thought neceſſary for his Expedition, which he deſign'd ſhou'd look more like a Reſtorer than a Conqueror; the King of Sweden moſt generouſly offer'd to ſupply the Dutch with an equal Number of Troops, and perform'd his Promiſe; otherwiſe the States durſt hardly have ventur'd ſuch an Army abroad, when they were threatned by a very formidable Enemy at home. At the ſame time that Care was taken to procure a proper and ſufficient Number of Land Forces, Orders were carefully ſent to the ſeveral Cities of Holland, to have ſo many Ships of War and ſo many Tranſports in readineſs by a particular Day, which was executed with all poſſible Chearfulneſs and Expedition. Tho' the Enterprize was extraordinary, and of the boldeſt Nature in the World, yet there was ſcarce a Man in Holland, excepting Papiſts, who was hear'd to murmur at either the Charge or Hazard of it; and Men, Women and Children, lifted up their Prayers to Heaven for the Succeſs of his Highneſs, and the preſent Deliverance of England. The Readineſs of the Dutch.

3. During theſe great Preparations, which in England gave ſome Glimmerings of Hope in the Countrey before they gave anſwerable Apprehenſions to the Court, the Count D'Avaux, the French Embaſſador at the Hague, kept a watchful Eye upon the Motions of the Prince of Orange, grew more jealous of theſe uncommon Proceedings, and diſcover'd from ſeveral convincing Circumſtances, that they were intended againſt England. He gave timely Notice of it to King Lewis his Maſter, from whom King James had the firſt certain and poſitive Intelligence; we ſay poſitive, becauſe Mr. Bevil Skelton, while he reſided at the Hague, had made ſome remote Diſcoveries, and had intercepted a Letter, intimating, That a great Project was ſecretly carry'd on againſt the King of England, of which he immediately gave an Account to his Majeſty: But the Court of England had been ſo often impos'd upon by ſham Plots, and rous'd with falſe Alarms, The French Embaſſador's Suſpicion of them.

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

and now intoxicated with Succeſs, that no great Notice was taken of Mr. Skelton's Information. However, the French King laid more Weight upon Count D'Avaux's Advice, and preſs'd King James to take ſuch Notice of it as it deſerv'd, and to put himſelf into a Poſture of Defence againſt the intended Invaſion of his Dominions.

Intelligence receiv'd by Mr. Skelton

Much about the ſame time, Mr. Skelton, lately arriv'd at Paris in Quality of Envoy Extraordinary from England, held Intelligence with a certain Gentleman, who gave him farther Light into this Affair. This Gentleman was one Bude de Verace, a Proteſtant of Geneva, Grand-Son to the famous Librarian Budæus, and formerly a Captain in the Prince of Orange's Guards, who having in a Duel kill'd the Son of one of the States, was oblig'd to fly for his Safety. The Earl of Clarendon, whoſe Son the Lord of Cornbury had receiv'd great Civilities from Verace, while he ſtudy'd at Geneva, recommended him to the Prince of Orange, by the Interceſſion of Mr. Skelton; who not only obtain'd Verace's Pardon, but procur'd him alſo the Place of Gentleman Uſher to her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs. Verace being thus reſtor'd to the good Opinion of the Prince, he inſinuated himſelf more and more into it, and fell into an Intimacy with Mr. Bentinck his Favourite; but being ſuſpected of making ſome Diſcovery of his Maſter's Deſign againſt King James, or as others pretend, having reflected upon the Princeſſes having no Children, he was turn'd out of his Place. He had not been long at Geneva, when upon the News of the great Preparations in Holland, he wrote to Mr. Skelton, then at Paris, 'That he had ſuch Things to com'municate to the King of England, that were of no leſs Concern than the 'Crown he wore, and the expoſing a Son-in-law he had too much truſted;
'but that he wou'd not diſcover the Secret to any but the King himſelf;
'and that if his Majeſty wou'd let him know his Pleaſure, he wou'd imme'diately repair to England.' Upon this Advice Mr. Skelton wrote five or ſix Letters to the Court of England, in the ſame warm and preſſing Style, as thoſe writ to his Maſter by the French King. On the other Hand, the Marquiſs of Albyville, the Engliſh Envoy at the Hague, was not wanting in his Duty; ſo that King James had ſufficient Notice given him not to be ſurpriz'd; but it was late before he hearken'd to thoſe Advices, and the following Reaſons are given, why he did not hearken to them ſooner. 'The 'Prince of Orange ſtill continu'd ſo dutiful to him, as gave no Occaſion to 'entertain any ſuch Jealouſy: That Prince continu'd paying him the ſame
'Reſpects, and even Complementing him, as others did, upon the Birth of 'the Prince of Wales, and caus'd his Name to be added to the reſt of the 'Princes of the Family, to be pray'd for in his Chapel.' Beſides, upon the News of a great Armament in Holland, Van Citters the Dutch Ambaſſador, gave King James to underſtand, 'That France had more Reaſon to 'be alarm'd at it than England.' On the other ſide his Majeſty ſo much depending upon a numerous Army, a ſtrong Fleet, and the Affections of his People, diſregarded the feeble Attempts of the Hollanders; at leaſt, it is ſaid, he was taught to diſregard them by his prime Miniſter the Earl of Sunderland.

Who in vain gives Notice to King James.

The Earl of Sunderland.

Here Father Orleans takes an Occaſion enviouſly to ſum up all that has been ſaid for and againſt that Great Man, whoſe Character and Actions had been ſo dubious to the World: They that accuſe him of Infidelity, ſays he, ground their Charge upon Circumſtances and Facts, and ſay, 'That the 'Earl was an Enemy reconcil'd to King James through Policy and Neceſ-
'ſity; That no Man had puſh'd on the Bill of Excluſion in the ſeveral
'Parliaments more warmly than he; and that he never ſought after his
'Friendſhip, till he ſaw him Uppermoſt: That he was one who reſolv'd to
'to ſide with the prevailing Party, tho' at the ſame time he manag'd a 'Reſource with thoſe that were under, in caſe of a Change: That while

'York. That, upon the latter's Acceſſion to the Throne, being become
'prime Miniſter, and almoſt the only one, he had been zealous for him,
'during his Proſperity; but as ſoon as he diſcover'd a Party was forming
'againſt him, he had held a near Correſpondence with his Enemies: That 'his Lady conſtantly writ to the Princeſs of Orange, and his Uncle Henry
'Sidney, one of the Heads of the Party, who was gone over into Holland,
'to the Prince: That the Earl in a printed Letter, owning he had embrac'd
'the Roman-Catholick Religion, to be more able to ſerve the Proteſtants,
'ſhew'd he was not always of the ſame ſide he appear'd to be: That no
'leſs can be ſaid of the Violence he us'd to his Maſter, in perſuading him,
'contrary to his Inclinations, to bring Father Petre into the Privy-Coun'cil, againſt his own Will, and all the Oppoſition made by the Queen,
'and in ſpight of the Eſſential Laws of his Order, which his Majeſty con-
'ſented to, to oblige this Miniſter: That the ſame Inference may be drawn 'from his Proceedings in the Diſturbance about the Seven Biſhops, whom
'he caus'd to be hard ſet in the Council, and yet ſecretly favour'd: That
'the ſlight Account he made of ſo many Advices brought of the Deſigns
'of the Prince of Orange and the Dutch, muſt needs ariſe from an unfaith-
'ful Intention, as muſt the Methods he afterwards perſuaded him to fol'low, which finally depriv'd his Maſter of the only Means left him to op-
'poſe his Enemies.' On the other ſide, the ſame Author ſays, 'Thoſe who 'are for excuſing him, ſay thus, That it is no infallible Rule, that a re- And what
'concil'd Enemy cannot become ſincere; and that a Man may ſave him- for him.
'ſelf a Reſource with a Party, without embracing it: That the Earl was 'never convicted of having any Perſonal Underſtanding with his Maſter's
'Enemies, tending to betray him: That his Lady's Correſpondence with
'the Princeſs of Orange, tho' ſuſpicious at this Conjuncture, is not a ſuffi-
'cient Reaſon to charge the Husband with ſuch a Crime: That Colonel
'Sidney, tho' his near Relation, might have deceiv'd him, as he did others,
'and make him believe that he went to the Spaw only for the ſake of the 'Waters: That his owning he chang'd his Religion to ſerve the Prote-
'ſtants, is rather an Excuſe to them, than a Proof of his being privy to 'their Deſigns; ſince no Man needs make Excuſes to thoſe with whom he 'has already concerted Meaſures: That his introducing Father Petre into
'the Council, was only a prudential and allowable Piece of Policy to bring 'upon the Jeſuit all the odium of the People, for the irregular Conduct of 'the Court: That the Undertakings of the Prince of Orange againſt a King,
'that had a powerful Force both by Sea and Land, ſeem'd ſo Extraordina'ry, not to ſay extravagant to every Body, that not knowing how to give 'credit to it, he did not think himſelf oblig'd to lay any Weight on Skel-
'ton's Information; and if he had given Credit to them, thoſe very Forces
'he ſaw about his Maſter might juſtly make him reject ſuch Succours from 'France, as he thought dangerous, and he cou'd not think neceſſary.'
Thus far Father Orleans, who leaves the whole as a Problem to be decided by the judicious Reader. Beſides theſe, others add in his Favour, 'That 'from the beginning he faithfully ſerv'd King James, as became a Prote-
'ſtant Subject: That tho' he acted in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, yet
'for a good while he defended Magdalen-College: That he was againſt
'diſſolving the Parliament: That he ſo openly oppos'd the Proſecution of
'the Biſhops, that he expos'd himſelf to the Fury of the Popiſh Party; and
'tho' he feign'd, or rather not diſown'd himſelf to be a Roman Catholick
'to prevent his immediate Ruine, yet did he ſtill continue to be the Ob'ject of their Hatred: And laſtly, that upon the News of the Prince's co'ming, he advis'd his Majesty to call a Free Parliament, and depend upon 'that.' Accordingly the King, on the 24th of August, declar'd in Council, That he intended to call a Parliament, in pursuance of his Declaration, to meet on the 27th of November next; and directed the Chancellor to issue out Writs on the 5th of September.

A new Parliament design'd.

In the mean time the French King and the English Envoy at his Court, did so earnestly renew their Informations of the certain Designs of the Prince of Orange to invade England, that the Envoy Skelton was at last commanded to send for the forementiond Verace, and to return his most Christian Majesty Thanks for his good Offices. Accordingly he writ to Verace, who by this time having chang'd his Mind, refus'd to comply with the King's Desires, or so much as to meet Skelton at Chambery, a City in Savoy, not above a Day's Journey from Geneva, through which that Envoy was to pass in his Way to Italy. However, the French King knowing he cou'd not have a better Opportunity to engage King James in the strictest Alliance, than the present dangerous Condition of his Affairs, notwithstanding his grand Design was against Germany, he immediately dispatch'd Monsieur Bonrepos to his Britannick Majesty, to offer him thirty Thousand of his Men. The sudden arrival of Bonrepos, which was on the 25th of August, and his frequent Conferences with the English Ministers, in Conjunction with Monsieur Barillon, the old French Ambassador, gave Jealousy to the Spanish Minister de Ronquillo; who thereupon frankly told the Lord Sunderland, 'That his Business must be either Publick or Pri-'vate; if the latter, he had nothing to say; but if the former, he desir'd to 'be made acquainted with it; or else those whom it might concern, wou'd be 'at liberty to judge what they thought fit about it, and to take their Mea-'sures accordingly.' The Reason of which Expostulation we are told was this: Ronquillo being with King James two Days before, his Majesty told him, 'That Bonrepos had assur'd him that there was a Treaty very near 'concluded between his Master and the Duke of Brandenburgh;' whereby the Spanish Ambassador reasonably conjectur'd, 'That France, the bet-'ter to draw England, into an Alliance, had made a Shew of her Trea-'ties with other Princes.' This Conjecture, it seems, prov'd true: A Treaty was actually on foot between France and England; and it was reported to be so far advanc'd, that it wou'd be impossible to prevent its Conclusion. It was added, 'That the Court of France, in order to faci-'litate this Negotiation, had industriously spread the Report of the Prince 'of Orange's Designs, or at least exaggerated the Greatness of the Arma-'ment, that King James might not think himself safe without Foreign As-'sistance:' And indeed the Ministers of the House of Austria were given to understand, 'That what the King did was only to secure himself against 'the Hollanders.' But Ronquillo not being satisfy'd with this Declaration, demanded a private Audience, which was granted. He was two full Hours in close Conference with the King; and having assur'd him that the Dutch had no Design upon England, he represented to him 'The fa-'tal Consequences of entering in any Alliance with France, and how ill 'it wou'd sound in the Nation, that while he pretended to call a Free Par-'liament, he shou'd introduce Foreign Troops into his Kingdom.' The King own'd to the Spanish Ambassador, 'That the sending of Bonrepos, at 'that nice Juncture, was the most unfriendly Turn that the French King 'cou'd have done him; That he wish'd it had been in his Power to send 'him back the next Day after his Arrival; but since in Decency he cou'd 'not do that, he wou'd however give him but small Encouragement to 'stay.' And at the same time his Majesty assur'd Ronquillo, 'That he 'had much rather entertain a good Correspondence with Holland, than be 'thought to have a strict Alliance with France.' Thereupon the Ambassa'dor took his leave with private Pleaſure and Satisfaction; and Bonrepos finding his Maſter's officiouſneſs but coldly receiv'd, ſet out for France on the 4th of September. 1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

Here Father Orleans farther takes notice of the Earl of Sunderland, and ſays, 'Conſidering the things rightly, it was a nice Point for a King of 'England to bring an Army of Strangers into his Dominions, and thoſe 'Roman Catholicks, and eſpecially French: It was enough to blacken the 'Memory of a Prince in the Minds of his People, and an Acknowledgement 'of all the Reports ſpread abroad, of his having enter'd into an Alliance 'on purpoſe to ſuppreſs the Religion and Liberties of his Countrey: Be-'ſides, his Majeſty had more than a ſufficient Number of Forces to with-'ſtand all the Attempts of the Dutch, which his Fleet alone was able to 'oppoſe; and when the worſt ſhou'd happen, his Army cou'd ſcarce fail of 'deſtroying them, as being much more numerous, and well-diſciplin'd.' And then this Author tells us, That Sunderland, who firſt advis'd the Refuſing of thoſe Succours, ſupported his Opinion with the fore-mention'd Reaſons. But on the other ſide he adds, thoſe of another Mind proceeded upon theſe following Reaſons; 'That the thing was not only to be conſi-'der'd of it ſelf, but in the preſent Circumſtances; that the preſent Buſineſs 'was not barely oppoſing one Army againſt another, but to diſcover whe-'ther the Army that was to oppoſe the Enemy did not conſent with them 'for promoting of their Deſigns; whether the Officers that commanded 'them were any more above Corruption, than thoſe in other Parts of the 'Government, who were ſaid to be debauch'd, and yet not known.' From hence, thoſe who argu'd after this manner, concluded, 'That if unfortu-'nately the Corruption was got into the Army, as well as into other 'Parts, the King, by refuſing the Foreign Succours, which with what Loy-'al Subjects wou'd join him might make a conſiderable Party, wou'd be 'expos'd to all the Power of his Enemies, without any Defence.' Amidſt this Diverſity of Opinions, concludes he, the Suffrage of the Prime Miniſter, the King's Goodneſs to his Subjects, the Honour of the Nation, the Confidence repos'd in the Commanders of his Army, moſt of them Men of ſuch Quality, as were thought above being ſtain'd with Treaſon, or elſe Perſons loaded with his Favours, inclin'd the King to eſpouſe that which the Event has diſapprov'd, and caus'd him to refuſe thoſe Succours he might eaſily have receiv'd; the Fleets might have oppos'd them not being yet fit for Action.

The Earl of Sunderland's Reaſons for refuſing.

Contrary Reaſons.

However, things being at this Height, Albyville the Engliſh Envoy at the Hague was order'd to demand of the States-General, 'What they meant 'by their great and ſurprizing Warlike Preparations both by Sea and Land, 'at that Time of the Year, when all Operations, eſpecially thoſe at Sea, 'uſe to ceaſe.' To which the States made anſwer, 'That they arm'd in 'Imitation of his Britannick Majeſty, and might with more Reaſon demand 'an Explanation about the Alliances into which He was lately enter'd.' This bold Anſwer, which at another time might have produc'd a Rupture, was now left without Reply. However as it increas'd the Suſpicions of an Invaſion, ſo all imaginable Methods were taken for a Security againſt it. The chief Ports, and particularly Hull and Portſmouth, the two Keys of England, were put into the Hands of Roman Catholicks, and the Garriſons ſo modell'd, that the Majority were of that Religion.

Demands upon the States General.

4. It was with much Concern that France heard the Reſolution taken in England, and it is not eaſy to expreſs how much that Court took to heart the Danger of a King who had been long belov'd there. Mr. Skelton was juſt tired out with People Stopping, Queſtioning, and almoſt Quarrelling with him, becauſe their Advice was not follow'd. They were very urgent urgent with him to find out ſome Expedient to ſerve his Maſter in ſpight of the Miniſters at home; and they went ſo far as to oblige him to propoſe a Method, which wou'd have certainly ſav'd him, had not the Court of England, ſtill proceeding in the ſame Way, put a ſtop to it. One Day Monſieur de Croiſſy preſſing the Envoy touching that Point, the Latter, after anſwering, That he had no Orders, and durſt not ask any thing, added, That nevertheleſs he believ'd, that if his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty wou'd declare to the States how much he eſpous'd King James's Concerns, and threatned to attack them, in caſe they attempted any thing againſt them, it wou'd certainly put a ſtop to their Deſign, and ſo break all the Prince of Orange's Meaſures, without giving the Engliſh any Cauſe to complain, that the King had call'd any Strangers into their Countrey. De Croiſſy approving of the Envoy's Propoſal, he went to acquaint the King Himſelf, who readily embracing all the Methods propos'd for Aſſiſting the King of England, ſent Orders accordingly to the Count d'Avaux, his Ambaſſador at the Hague.

His Ambaſſador's Memorial to the States-General.

On the 9th of September, that Miniſter deliver'd in and publiſh'd this Memorial to the States-General, Declaring, 'That the ſincere Deſire the King, 'his Maſter, had to maintain the Tranquillity of Europe, wou'd not ſuffer his 'Majeſty to ſee the great Preparations for War, both by Sea and Land, made by 'their Lordſhips, without taking the Meaſures, that Prudence, the continual 'Companion of all his Actions, inſpired him with, to prevent the Miſchiefs 'theſe Warlike Preparations wou'd certainly draw after them. And altho' 'the King, being perſuaded of the Wiſdom of their Counſels, and cou'd not 'imagine that a Free State ſhou'd ſo eaſily reſolve to take up Arms, and to 'kindle a War, which at the preſent Juncture cou'd not but be fatal to all 'Chriſtendom; nevertheleſs his Majeſty cou'd not believe their Lordſhips 'wou'd engage themſelves in ſo great Expence, both at Home and Abroad, 'to entertain in Pay ſo many Foreign Troops, to put to Sea ſo numerous 'a Fleet ſo late in the Year, and to prepare ſo great Magazines, if they had 'not a Deſign form'd, anſwerable to the Greatneſs of the Preparations. That 'all theſe Circumſtances inclin'd the King, his Maſter, to believe with Rea'ſon, That this Arming threatned England; therefore his Majeſty had 'commanded him to Declare to them, on his Part, That the Tyes of 'Friendſhip and Alliance between Him and the King of Great Britain, 'wou'd oblige him not only to aſſiſt him, but alſo to look on the firſt 'Act of Hoſtility that ſhou'd be committed by their Troops, or their Fleet, 'againſt his Majeſty of Great Britain, to be a manifeſt Rupture of the 'Peace, and a Breach with his Crown.

This plain Declaration began to open Mens Eyes both at Home and Abroad, and almoſt put the States to a Stand; however, they return'd no Anſwer to it, but complain'd to the Marquiſs of Albyville of this new Alliance, and likewiſe order'd their Ambaſſador Van Citters to complain of the Memorial to the Court of England. Whereupon a particular Council was held, where tho' they had a freſh Opportunity of accepting the offer'd Diverſion from France, they alter'd not their Methods, and the prime Miniſter Sunderland ſtood to his firſt Advice; and in Concluſion it was reſolv'd to diſown the Count d'Avaux's Proceedings. This Reſolution was immediately communicated to Van Citters by the Earl of Middleton, Secretary of State; and the King's Miniſters at the Hague, Bruſſels and Madrid, were order'd to Declare, 'That the French Memorial was preſented without 'his Majeſty's Knowledge or his Apprehenſion.' Over and above, Mr. Skelton was ſuddenly recall'd, and immediately committed Priſoner to the Tower for his over Officiouſneſs, and Exceeding his Inſtructions. 'And thus, 'ſays Father Orleans, the Poſitiveneſs of a Miniſter, if no more be thought 'of it, deliver'd up a mighty King into the Hands of his Enemies, and an

King James's Preparations.

5. The King having by this Time receiv'd ſo many concurring Advices from the Hague, as amounted to a moral Certainty of the Deſigns of the Prince of Orange, he order'd the Fitting out of the Fleet to be carry'd on with double Diligence; Commiſſions were given out for Augmenting the Army; Orders were diſpatch'd to Tyrconnel for ſending over whole Regiments out of Ireland; and Barillon the French Ambaſſador made a Propoſal, very formidable to thoſe who wiſh'd well to the Prince, namely that France ſhou'd abandon the Deſign lately taken to beſiege Philipsburgh, and carry on the War into Holland. This plauſible Overture was approv'd of by four or five of the Council; but others warmly oppos'd it, Alledging, 'That ſuch a Violation of former Treaties with Holland wou'd be ſufficient 'to raiſe the Clamours of the whole Nation, and to alienate the Minds of 'all the Engliſh Proteſtants from his Majeſty.' This Suggeſtion, of the two, being more plauſible, did not miſs of its Effect: And farther it is to be remember'd, that thoſe who favour'd the Prince's Expedition had been very induſtrious in ſpreading a Report, 'That the Dutch Armament was 'only deſign'd to hinder the French from Landing in England, where, in 'Purſuance of a Secret Treaty made with King James, they were to ex-'tirpate the Proteſtant Religion.

His Proclamation about a new Parliament.

To diſſipate the Fears and Apprehenſions of the People, on the 21ſt of September his Majeſty iſſu'd out a Proclamation Importing, 'That having 'already ſignify'd his Pleaſure to call a Parliament, leſt thoſe whoſe Right 'it was to chuſe Members, ſhou'd lie under any Prejudice and Miſtakes, 'through the Artifices of diſaffected Perſons, he thought fit to Declare, 'That it was his Royal Purpoſe to endeavour a Legal Eſtabliſhment of an 'Univerſal Liberty of Conſcience for all his Subjects; that it was alſo his 'Reſolution Inviolably to preſerve the Church of England, by ſuch a Con-'firmation of the ſeveral Acts of Uniformity, that they ſhou'd never be 'alter'd any other Ways than by Repealing the ſeveral Clauſes, which in-'flict Penalties upon Perſons not Promoted, or to be Promoted to any Ec-'cleſiaſtical Benefices within the Meaning of the ſaid Act, for Exerciſing 'their Religion contrary to the Purport of the ſaid Acts of Uniformity. 'And that for the farther Securing, not only the Church of England, but 'the Proteſtant Religion in General, he was willing the Roman Catholicks 'ſhou'd remain Incapable to be Members of the Houſe of Commons; 'whereby thoſe Fears and Apprehenſions wou'd be remov'd, which many 'Perſons had had, That the Legiſlative Authority wou'd be engroſs'd by 'them, and turn'd againſt Proteſtants. After which he exhorted them 'to lay aſide all Animoſities, and ſo to diſpoſe themſelves, as to think of 'ſuch Perſons to repreſent them in Parliament, whoſe Abilities and Tem-'pers render'd them fit for ſo great and good a Work.' This Proclamation was thought ſo ambiguouſly worded as to the Repeal of the Penal Laws, the Confirming the Acts of Uniformity, and the Excluding the Roman Catholicks from the Lower-Houſe only, that it occaſion'd ſeveral Diſputes, and had but little Effect upon the People, who began to caſt their Eyes toward the Eaſt.

From whence, upon the Arrival of Intelligence from the Marquiſs de Albyville, of the embarking of ſeveral Regiments on Board the Dutch Fleet, the Command of the Army was firſt offer'd to the Count de Roye, an experienc'd French General, and an Exile for his Religion; upon whoſe declining the Office, it was beſtow'd on the Earl of Feverſham: But however, in

in the Case of a Descent, the King design'd to head his Army Himself; and the Queen, with the Prince of Wales, were to retire to Portsmouth, a well fortify'd Sea Town, of which the Duke of Berwick was Governor. The Command of the Fleet, which consisted of Forty Four Men of War, was given to the Lord Dartmouth; the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London were order'd to prevent the spreading of false News, and to keep the City quiet; and two or three Bishops were offer'd Places in the Privy-Council, which they refus'd to accept, by reason of the several Papists that sate there. Besides these Precautions at Home, it was resolv'd in Council, that the Marquis de Albyville shou'd deliver a farther Memorial, representing to the States-General, 'That although his Majesty had believ'd, that what he had 'declar'd to their Ambassador in England, and the Orders he had given to 'him upon the same Subject, might have satisfy'd their Lordships, That 'there was no other Treaty between his Majesty and the most Christian 'King, than those that were Publick, and in Print; yet since a great deal 'of Artifice and Industry had been us'd to make the World believe that his 'Majesty was enter'd into other Treaties and Alliances with the most Chri-'stian King, his Majesty, to shew his great Regard he had to the Friend-'ship and Alliances which were between Him and their Lordships, and his 'Desire to continue the same, had commanded him, his Envoy Extraordi-'nary, to assure their Lordships, That there was no other Treaty between 'Him and France, than those that were Publick: And farther, that as his 'Majesty extreamly desir'd the Preservation of the Peace and Repose of 'Christendom, so he wou'd be also glad to take such Measures with their 'Lordships as might be most convenient for maintaining the Peace of Ni-'meguen, and the Truce of twenty Years concluded in 1684.' Some Members of the Council were against presenting of this Memorial, as exposing the King's Honour to Suspicion; but the Majority were not only for it, but likewise mov'd, That the Lord Godolphin and the Bishop of Winchester shou'd be sent over to Holland to support the Credit of it, which last Motion came to nothing. As for the States, they took no Notice of the King's Offers, but suffer'd the Prince of Orange to proceed with the Shipping off his Men.

A new Memorial to the States-General.

The King undeceiv'd and in a Consternation.

VI. 1. During these several Motions and Transactions, and notwithstanding the open Preparations, the deluded King was not without some Hopes that the Storm might discharge it self rather in some other Countrey than his own; but on the 23d of September his Eyes were fully open'd by the News he receiv'd from the Marquis of Albyville at the Hague, 'That 'Pensionary Fagel had frankly own'd to him the Design of the Prince of 'Orange; adding, That if the Dutch Ambassador in England had said any 'thing to the contrary, he had done it out of his own Head, and without 'Orders from the States.' At the same Time the Marquis acquainted his Majesty, 'That several English Lords and Gentlemen had already cross'd 'the Sea, and lay private in Holland, ready to accompany the Prince in his 'Expedition.' Upon the Reading this Letter, the poor King turn'd pale, and for a while remain'd speechless and astonish'd: The airy Castle of Unlimited Power, rais'd by the Magick of Jesuitical Counsels, now vanish'd in a Moment; and the misled Monarch, by the Prince's Approach, freed from his Inchantment, found himself upon the Brink of a Precipice; while all his intoxicating Flatterers stood Thunder-struck at a Distance, without daring to lend him a helping Hand, for fear that both He and They shou'd be involv'd in the greater Ruine. In this Extremity, the sinking Monarch, whom this imminent Danger had render'd clear-sighted, discover'd the chief Support of the English Monarchy, the Bishops, and eagerly endeavour'd to lay hold on that which before he had attempted to overthrow. ſhop of Ely, who had loſt the King's good Graces for ſiding with his petitioning Brethren, was now reſtored to his former Favour, and employ'd to manage a Reconcilement between his Majeſty and the reſt of the Prelates that were then in Town. Accordingly, the next Day, the Biſhops of Winchester, Chicheſter, Peterborough, Rocheſter, Ely, and Bath and Wells, being ſummon'd, appear'd before his Majeſty, London and Briſtol were not then come to Town, and the Archbiſhop was ſick, and came alone the next Day after. The King having receiv'd the Biſhops with extraordinary Marks of Favour and Kindneſs, told them, That he deſired the Aſſiſtance of their Counſels on this preſent Exigency; aſſuring them, That He was ready to do whatever they ſhou'd think neceſſary for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion, and of the Peoples Rights, without derogating from his own Prerogative. Their Lordſhips anſwer'd the King's Confidence in them by their Expreſſions of their Duty and Loyalty to his Majeſty, and wou'd have given him more particular Proofs of their Zeal for his Service, had not the King told them, That he was not then at Leiſure; and therefore deſired them to conſult together about ſo weighty a Matter: Whereupon they took their Leaves, and repair'd to Lambeth, to draw up ſomething equal to the Difficulty of the Seaſon. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

In the mean Time the King, to prepoſſeſs the Minds of the People againſt the Prince of Orange, on the 28th of September, he iſſu'd out a Declaration, ſetting forth, 'That his Majeſty had receiv'd undoubted Advice, that a great and ſudden Invaſion from Holland, with an arm'd Force of Foreigners, wou'd ſpeedily be made in an hoſtile Manner; and although ſome falſe Pretences relating to Liberty, Property, and Religion, contriv'd and worded with Art and Subtlety, might be given out, it was manifeſt however, That no leſs Matter by this Invaſion was propos'd, than an abſolute Conqueſt of theſe his Majeſty's Kingdoms, and the utter ſubduing and ſubjecting them, and all his People, to a foreign Power; which was promoted by ſome of his Majeſty's Subjects, being Perſons of wicked and reſtleſs Spirits, implacable Malice, and deſperate Deſigns; who having no Senſe of the Miſery of former inteſtine Diviſions, nor being mov'd by his Majeſty's reiterated Acts of Mercy, did again endeavour to embroil this Kingdom in Blood and Ruine, to gratify their own Ambition and Malice, propoſing to themſelves a Prey and Booty in ſuch a publick Confuſion. That tho' his Majeſty had Notice, that a foreign Force was preparing againſt him, yet he had always declin'd any foreign Succours, but rather had choſen to rely upon the true and ancient Courage, Faith and Allegiance of his own People, with whom he had often ventur'd his Life for the Honour of his Nation, and in whoſe Defence againſt all his Enemies, he was firmly reſolv'd to live and die: And therefore his Majeſty ſolemnly conjur'd his Subjects to lay aſide all manner of Animoſities, Jealouſies, and Prejudices, and heartily and chearfully to unite together, in the Defence of Him and their native Countrey. That albeit the Deſign had been carry'd on with all imaginable Secrecy, and Endeavours to ſurprize and deceive his Majeſty, yet he had not been wanting on his Part, to make ſuch Proviſion as did become him, and made no doubt of being found in ſo good a Poſture, that his Enemies might have Cauſe to repent their raſh and unjuſt Attempts.' In the Concluſion, his Majeſty declared, 'That he did intend to have met his Parliament in November next, and that the Writs were iſſu'd forth accordingly, propoſing to Himſelf, amongſt other Things, That he might be able to quiet the Minds of all his People in Matters of Religion; but that in regard of this ſtrange Attempt, deſign'd to divert his ſaid gracious Purpoſes, he found it neceſſary to recall his foreſaid Writs, &c.

A Proclamation againſt the Prince of Orange's Invaſion.

London Charter reſtored, and a General Pardon granted.

regain the Affection and Confidence of the Church of England, and began to tread backwards the unfortunate Steps they had made. The Biſhop of London's Suſpenſion was taken off; and Sir John Chapman, a Church-man, was nominated to ſucceed Sir John Eyles, the preſent Lord-Mayor of London, who was an Anabaptiſt. And moreover, hearing that the Biſhops, among other Things, deſign'd to beg the Reſtoration of the Charter of London, he anticipated that part of their Petition, and, the Day before their Appearance, ſending for the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs of that City to Whitehall, he told them, 'That out of his Concern for the Peace and 'Welfare of the City, and as a Mark of the great Confidence he had in 'them at this Time, when the Kingdom was threaten'd with an Invaſion, 'he reſolv'd to reſtore to them their ancient Charter and Privileges, and 'to put them into the ſame Condition they were in at the Time of the 'Judgment pronounced againſt them upon the Quo Warranto; that ſo 'they might be better enabled to ſerve him with Duty and Loyalty, which 'they had given the King his Brother and Him ſo many Teſtimonies of; 'and upon which he depended.' And on the ſame Day, October 2d, a general Pardon was publiſh'd by Proclamation, out of which were excepted Sir Robert Peyton, Sir. Rowland Gwin, Dr. Burnet, Major Wildman, Samuel Johnſon, Titus Oates, Robert Ferguſon, and Ten others leſs known. This was of ſingular Advantage to the Miniſters of State; but was not much regarded by the Body of the People, whoſe Eyes, Ears and Hearts were ſo intent upon the Hopes of a Deliverance, that they cou'd hardly look upon a common Fane without offering up their Wiſhes and Prayers for an Eaſterly Wind.

The Biſhops Advice to the King.

2. The 3d of October being come, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhops of London, Winchester, St. Aſaph, Ely, Chicheſter, Rocheſter, Bath and Wells, and Peterborough, Nine in all, waited upon his Majeſty; to whom the Archbiſhop thus addreſs'd himſelf, with admirable Meekneſs, Gravity and Courage: 'May it pleaſe your Sacred Majeſty, When I 'had lately the Honour to wait upon you, you were pleas'd briefly to ac-'quaint me with what had paſs'd two Days before, between your Majeſty 'and theſe my Reverend Brethren: By which, and by the Account which 'they themſelves gave me, I perceiv'd, that in Truth there paſs'd nothing, 'but in very general Terms, and Expreſſions of your Majeſty's gracious 'and favourable Inclinations to the Church of England, and of our reci-'procal Duty and Loyalty to your Majeſty; both which were ſufficiently 'underſtood and deſired before, and, as one of my Brethren [the Biſhop of 'Bath and Wells] then told me, wou'd have been in the ſame State, if 'the Biſhops had not ſtirr'd one Foot out of their Dioceſes. Sir, I found 'it griev'd my Lords the Biſhops to have come ſo far, and to have done 'ſo little; and I am aſſur'd they came then prepared to have given your 'Majeſty ſome more particular Inſtances of their Duty and Zeal for your 'Service, had they not apprehended from ſome Words which fell from your 'Majeſty, That you were not at Leiſure to receive them. It was for this 'Reaſon that I then beſought your Majeſty to command us once to attend 'you all together, which your Majeſty was graciouſly pleas'd to allow and 'encourage. We therefore are here now before you, with all Humility to 'beg your Permiſſion, that we may ſuggeſt to your Majeſty ſuch Advices 'as we think proper at this Seaſon, and conducing to your Service, and 'ſo leave them to your Princely Conſideration.

Their particular Propoſals to him.

The King was now no more that overbearing Monarch, who to the petitioning Biſhops and others, had declar'd, That he expected to be obeyed: But now, as it were transform'd into another Prince, and taught Condeſcenſion by the impending Danger, he graciouſly permitted the Archbiſhop to proceed, proceed, which he did in theſe following Advices. 'I. To put the whole 1688.

'Management of his Government, in the ſeveral Counties, into the Hands 'of ſuch of the Nobility and Gentry there, as were legally qualify'd for it. Jac. 4.
'II. To annul his Commiſſion for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs; and that no ſuch 'Court be erected for the future. III. That no Diſpenſation might be Ref. 29
'granted or continu'd, by virtue whereof any Perſon not duly qualify'd by 'Law, had been or might be put into any Place, Office or Preferment, in 1.
'Church or State, or in the Univerſities, or continu'd in the ſame, eſpe- 2.
'cially ſuch as had Cure of Souls annex'd to them; and in particular, That 3.
'he wou'd reſtore the Preſident and Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen College
'in Oxford. IV. To ſet aſide all Licenſes or Faculties, by which any 4.
'Perſons of the Romiſh Communion might pretend to be enabled to teach 'publick Schools. V. To deſiſt from the Exerciſe of his Diſpenſing Power, 5.
'and to permit that Point to be freely and calmly debated, and finally 'ſettled in Parliament. VI. To inhibit the Four foreign Biſhops, who ſtyl'd 6.
'themſelves Vicars Apoſtolical, from farther invading the Eccleſiaſtical Ju-'riſdiction, which by Law was veſted in the Biſhops of the Church of En- 'gland. VII. To fill the vacant Biſhopricks, and other Eccleſiaſtical Pro- 7.
'motions, within his Gift, both in England and Ireland, with Men of 'Learning and Piety; and in particular, (which the Archbiſhop own'd to 'be his peculiar Boldneſs, ſince 'twas done without the Privity of his Bre'thren) forthwith to fill the Archiepiſcopal Chair of York (which had ſo
'long ſtood empty, and upon which a whole Province depended) with ſome
'very worthy Perſon; for which he was bold to ſay, his Majeſty had then 'before him a very fair Choice. VIII. To ſuperſede all farther Proſecu- 8.
'tions of Quo Warranto's againſt Corporations, and to reſtore to them their 'ancient Charters and Privileges; as they heard God had put into his Heart
'to do for the City of London, which they intended otherwiſe to have 'made one of the principal Requeſts. IX. That Writs might be iſſu'd 9.
'out with convenient Speed for the Calling of a Free and Regular Parlia'ment, in which the Church of England might be ſecured according to the 'Acts of Uniformity; Proviſion might be made for a due Liberty of Con-
'ſcience, and for ſecuring the Liberties and Properties of all his Subjects;
'and a mutual Confidence might be eſtabliſh'd between his Majeſty and all
'his People. X. Above all, That his Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to permit 10.
'his Biſhops to offer ſuch Motives and Arguments, as (they truſted) might,
'by God's Grace, be effectual to perſuade his Majeſty to return to the Com'munion of the Church of England, into which moſt Holy Catholick Faith
'he was Baptized, in which he was Educated, and to which it was their 'daily earneſt Prayer to God, that he might be re-united.' Which laſt Point we are aſſur'd, That the Archbiſhop afterwards re-inforc'd in a private Conference with the King, by a Diſcourſe full of convincing Arguments, and which ſavour'd of all the free Breathings of the Primitive Times of Chriſtianity. But the Romiſh Religion had now taken too deep Root in his Royal Breaſt.

The backward Steps, and Redreſs of Grievances.

We may eaſily imagine how much the Prieſts were inrag'd at theſe innocent and good Propoſals, by the Reſentment they afterwards expreſs'd, when their Affairs were in a worſe Condition than at preſent; and tho' they ſounded very harſh in the King's Ear, yet the Neceſſity of his Affairs oblig'd him to conceal his Diſcontent, and alſo to comply with moſt of them. Biſhop Sprat obſerves, that they were drawn up at Lambeth on the firſt of October, and preſented the third; and the Prince of Orange's Declaration was ſign'd in Holland the tenth, new Style, which was juſt at the ſame time; and that the Matter of them was very near the ſame, except one or two Particulars, too high for Subjects to meddle with; and this at a time when their Lordſhips were not apprehenſive of the Weakneſs of the King, and the wonderful Alterations that follow'd; which ſufficiently manifeſted the Courage, as well as the Honeſty of thoſe Prelates. However, the King immediately went about to redreſs moſt of the Grievances complain'd of, and in two Days the Commiſſion for Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical was diſſolv'd. The next Day the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, who among the reſt of his Proceedings, ow'd his Preferment to the gaining of the Charter of London, was now forc'd to carry it back again from whence it was taken: The Lord Lieutenants of the ſeveral Counties were required to inform themſelves of the Abuſes and Irregularities committed in the late Regulations of Corporations, in order to redreſs the ſame: The Biſhop of Wincheſter, Viſitor of Magdalen College in Oxford, was order'd to ſettle that Society Regularly and Statutably: A Proclamation was alſo iſſu'd out for Reſtoring Corporations to their ancient Charters, Liberties, Rights, and Franchiſes: The Earl of Darby was made Lord Lieutenant of the Counties of Cheſter and Lancaſter; the Earl of Oxford, Lord-Lieutenant of Eſſex; and the Earl of Feverſham, Lord Lieutenant of Kent. Popiſh Juſtices of the Peace, Mayors, Recorders, and others Magiſtrates, were diſplac'd, and Proteſtants put in their Rooms: So that in the Space of about twelve Days, that formidable Fabrick was in effect, or in a great meaſure demoliſh'd, which the Romiſh Cabal had been near Four Years in erecting.

Prayers appointed.

In the mean Time, on the 11th of October, was publiſh'd a particular Form of three Prayers, compos'd by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to be us'd in all Churches of the Kingdom, to be added to the uſual Liturgy, during the Time of publick Apprehenſions from the Danger of Invaſion. In one of which there were theſe Expreſſions: 'In this Time of Danger ſave 'and protect our moſt gracious King; give thy holy Angels charge over 'him; preſerve his Royal Perſon in Health and Safety; inſpire him with 'Wiſdom and Juſtice in all his Counſels; proſper all his Undertakings, for 'thy Honour and Service, with good Succeſs, &c.' Another had theſe Petitions, 'Preſerve that holy Religion we profeſs, together with our Laws 'and ancient Government; and unite us all in unfeigned and univerſal Cha'rity one towards another, and in one and the ſame holy Worſhip and Com'munion.' Theſe were rightly conſtru'd to be as much againſt Popery, as they were for his Majeſty's Perſon: However, it ſoon appear'd how little the Nation was to depend upon theſe precipitate and conſtrain'd Conceſſions of the King. For when on the 16th of October the Biſhop of Wincheſter had caus'd a Citation to be fix'd upon the Gates of Magdalen College, to recall Dr. Hough, and the former Fellows of that Society by the 2d of November following; an Account coming that very Poſt, 'That the Dutch Fleet had 'ſuffer'd very much in a Storm, and that they wou'd be hardly able to put to 'Sea again till the next Spring,' the Biſhop, upon a frivolous Pretence, was recall'd to London, and the Reſtoration of the College deferr'd. Yet ſhortly after, when that falſe News was contradicted, and the Dutch Fleet reported to be in a ſailing Poſture, the old Affection to the Church of England immediately reviv'd, and the Reſtoration of the College was effected on the 24th of the ſaid Month. This Paſſage has been very much remark'd, ſince it loſt the King great Numbers of Friends, who were now more than ever ſenſible of his repeated Breaches of Faith, and inſenſibly fell away from him, at a time when he moſt of all wanted their Aſſiſtance.

The King wavering.

He makes great Preparations againſt the Prince of Orange.

After the King had a little recover'd his firſt Fright, the Conſternation was not ſo great at Court, but that they were in Hopes to render the Prince of Orange's Deſigns abortive; to which End the Lord Dartmouth was diſpatch'd to Sea, with Orders to attend the Dutch Fleet off of Oſtend; and chiefly to fall upon the Tranſport-Ships, if he ſaw them making their Way towards England. The Duke of Newcaſtle, the Earls of Lindſey, Derby, Pembroke and Aliſbury; and the Lords Faulconberge and Jermyn, with ſome ſome few more of the Nobility, offer'd their Service to his Majeſty. Whereupon the King gave Commiſſions to the Duke of Newcaſtle, to raiſe a Regiment of Foot; to the Lord Brandon, Son to the Earl of Macclesfield, and to the Marquiſs of Miremont, Nephew to the Earl of Feverſham, each a Regiment of Horſe; to Colonel Henry Gage, and Colonel Solomon Richards, two Regiments of Foot; and many independent Troops and Companies to ſeveral others of the Nobility and Gentry: The young Duke of Ormond offer'd to ſerve as a Volunteer in the Army, and was to be accompany'd by the Lieutenant Colonels and Captains that had lately been caſhier'd out of the Duke of Berwick's Regiment: The Train'd Bands of the City of London, and the Countrey Militia, were order'd to be in Readineſs to march: The Duke of Gordon, a Roman Catholick, was ſent into Scotland to put that Kingdom into a Poſture of Defence: The Duke of Grafton, who had aſpir'd to the Command of the Fleet, was made Governor of the Tower, pro tempore, inſtead of Sir Edward Hales, a Roman Catholick: Two thouſand five hundred Men arriv'd at Cheſter out of Ireland, and three thouſand at Carliſle out of Scotland: Mr. Skelton, having been eighteen Days in the Tower, was ſet at Liberty, and had a Regiment of Foot given him. So that there ſeem'd to be ſufficient Care taken to reſiſt a much more formidable Enemy. Over and above, a Proclamation was publiſh'd on the 20th of October, 'Commanding all Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Sheriffs and 'other Officers, Civil and Military, in the reſpective Counties, Cities, &c. 'to cauſe the Coaſts to be carefully watch'd; and upon the firſt Approach 'of the Enemy, to cauſe all Horſes, Oxen and Cattel, which might be fit 'for Burthen or Draught, and not actually imploy'd in the Service and De'fence of his Majeſty and the Countrey, to be driven and remov'd to the 'Space, at leaſt, of twenty Miles, from the Places where the Enemy ſhou'd 'attempt to land.' And beſides all theſe human Precautions, extraordinary Prayers of Forty Hours were ſaid in the King's Chapel, where the Hoſt was in a particular Manner expos'd. But becauſe the Mob were now rous'd with the News of the Prince's Coming, and began to inſult the Popiſh Chapels, the King caus'd them to be ſhut up; and the Jeſuits and Romiſh Prieſts diſcovering the gathering Storm, began to retire and fly for Shelter into foreign Parts.

3. In the midſt of theſe Times of Diſtraction, the declining Party was reſolv'd to make the beſt of their Popiſh Succeſſor, and us'd all Endeavours to promote the Belief of a real Prince of Wales: Accordingly the Infant, which was before Chriſtned into the Romiſh Faith, was upon the 15th of October, in the Chapel of St. James, by Father Laben, ſolemnly Nam'd JAMES, FRANCIS, EDWARD; the Pope, repreſented by his Nuncio, being God Father, and the Queen Dowager God-Mother. About the ſame time, a new Occaſion was offer'd to incite them to ſupport his tottering Reputation: A Pamphlet was diſtributed in Holland; entituled, A Memorial of the Engliſh Proteſtants, preſented to their Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, &c. ſuppos'd to be written by Dr. Burnet, or rather Major Wildman; wherein, after a long Narrative of the Grievances of the Nation, the Author particularly complains of King James's obliging his Subjects to own a ſuppos'd Child for the Prince of Wales; adding, That his Majeſty wou'd never ſuffer the Witneſſes that were preſent at the Queen's Delivery to be heard and examin'd. This Pamphlet, and other Reports, made ſo great a Noiſe at the Court, that upon the 22d of October, his Majeſty held an extraordinary Council; and having ſent for the Queen Dowager, and all ſuch Lords Spiritual and Temporal as were then in Town, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, the Judges, and ſeveral of their Majeſty's learned Council, in a Speech he told them, 'He

The Prince of Wales chriſten'd.

An extraordinary Council about him.

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'He had call'd them together upon a very extraordinary Occaſion; but that 'extraordinary Diſeaſes muſt have extraordinary Remedies: That the ma- 'licious Endeavours of his Enemies had ſo poiſon'd the Minds of ſome of 'his Subjects, that by the Reports he had from all Hands, he had reaſon to 'believe, that very many did not think this Son, with which God had 'bleſs'd him, to be his, but a ſuppos'd Child. But, he might ſay, That by 'a particular Providence, ſcarce any Prince was ever born where there were 'ſo many Perſons preſent. That he had taken this time to have the Mat- 'ter heard and examin'd there, expecting that the Prince of Orange, with 'the firſt Eaſterly Wind, wou'd invade this Kingdom: And as he had of- 'ten ventur'd his Life for the Nation before he came to the Crown, ſo he 'thought himſelf more oblig'd ſo to do now he was King, and did intend 'to go in Perſon againſt him, whereby he might be expos'd to Accidents; 'and therefore he thought it neceſſary to have this now done, in order to 'ſatisfy the Minds of his Subjects, and to prevent the Kingdoms being en- 'gag'd in Blood and Confuſion after his Death: That he had deſir'd the 'Queen Dowager to give her ſelf the Trouble to come thither, to declare 'what ſhe knew of the Birth of his Son; and that moſt of the Ladies, Lords, 'and other Perſons who were preſent, were ready to depoſe upon Oath 'the Knowledge of this Matter.

And Depoſitions.

Beſides the Declaration of the Queen Dowager, who only ſaid, That ſhe was in the Room when the Queen was deliver'd of the Prince of Wales, the Depoſitions of forty Perſons more were taken in form. Of theſe Witneſſes ſeventeen were Roman Catholicks, namely, the Dutcheſs of Richmond, the Marchioneſs of Powis, the Counteſſes of Peterborough, Fingall and Lichfield; the Lady Bulkely, the Lady Waldgrave, Mrs. Mary Crane, Mrs. Iſabella Waldgrave, Mrs. Peligrina Turini an Italian; Mrs. Anne Cary, Mrs. Mary Anne Delabadie a French Woman, dry Nurſe to the Prince; Mrs. Judith Wilks the Queen's Midwife; the Lady Arundel of Wardour; the Earls of Murray and Melfort, and Sir William Waldgrave firſt Phyſician to the Queen. The Proteſtants were twenty three in Number, viz. the Counteſſes of Arran, Sunderland, Roſcommon and Mareſchall; Suſanna Lady Bellaſis, the Lady Iſabella Wentworth, Mrs. Catharine Sayer, Mrs. Margaret Dawſon, Mrs. Elizabeth Bromely, Mrs. Elizabeth Pearſe, the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, the Earls of Sunderland, Mulgrave, Craven, Feverſham and Middleton, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Sir Stephen Fox, Lieutenant Colonel Griffin, Sir Charles Scarborough, firſt Phyſician to the King, Sir Thomas Witherly, ſecond Phyſician to the King; Dr. Robert Brady, one of his Majeſty's Phyſicians in Ordinary, and James St. Amand, their Majeſty's Apothecary. As to the Depoſitions themſelves, the Subſtance of them was to lay open the Particulars and Circumſtances belonging to a Big-belly'd and Lying-in Woman, and indeed more proper to be treated by Phyſicians and Midwives, than by Annaliſts and Hiſtorians. Only we are juſt to remember, that the greateſt part of them, by reaſon of the Cloſeneſs of the Queen's Bed, and other Accidents, were but little to the Purpoſe, and ſcarcely more than if the Deponents had been in another Room. But ſome few of them were more than Circumſtantial, and as home as cou'd be expected; particularly what was ſworn concerning her Majeſties Milk in her Breaſts, and what was depos'd by the Midwife and the Nurſe, concerning her actual Delivery, and the Prince of Wales being the ſame Child.

After theſe Depoſitions were taken, his Majeſty acquainted the Lords, 'That the Princeſs Anne of Denmark wou'd have been preſent; but that 'ſhe being with Child likewiſe, and having not lately ſtirr'd abroad, cou'd 'not come ſo far without Hazard:' Adding farther, 'That tho' he did not 'queſtion but every Perſon there preſent was ſatisfy'd before in this Matter,

'yet

'yet by what they had heard, they wou'd be better able to ſatisfy others: 1688.
'That, beſides, if He and the Queen cou'd be thought ſo wicked as to 'endeavour to impoſe a Child upon the Nation, they ſaw how impoſſible Jac. 4.
'it wou'd have been; neither cou'd He himſelf be impos'd upon, having
'conſtantly been with the Queen during her being with Child, and the Reſ. 29
'whole time of her Labour. That there was none of them but wou'd
'eaſily believe him, who had ſuffer'd ſo much for Conſcience ſake, uncapa-
'ble of ſo great a Villany, to the Prejudice of his own Children; and that 'he thank'd God that thoſe that knew him, knew well, that it was his 'Principle to do as he wou'd be done by, for That was the Law and the 'Prophets; and he wou'd rather dye a thouſand Deaths, than do the leaſt 'Wrong to any of his Children.' And to conclude all, five Days after, the Declaration made by the King, and Queen Dowager, together Which are Recorded.
with the ſeveral Depoſitions, were enroll'd in Chancery, purſuant to an Order of Council: And becauſe the Earl of Huntington, a Proteſtant, and the Earl of Peterborough, a Romaniſt, who were able to depoſe to the Queen's Delivery, had not been examin'd at the Council-Board, they brought their Depoſitions into Court, which the Lord Chancellor order'd to be read, and afterwards enroll'd with the reſt. But notwithſtanding the Formality, and even Solemnity of this Affair, and the careful Diſtribution of theſe De- poſitions, they had little or nothing of the intended Effect upon the People, who were now ſo prepoſſeſs'd, that they made a thouſand Reflections with croſs and perverſe Obſervations upon them, and in all their Diſcourſes they appear'd more provok'd than appeas'd. They ſhew'd ſo little Regard to the Modeſty of a Woman, or the Majeſty of a Queen, that ſome ſaid, That ſhe ought to have been deliver'd at Charing-Croſs. And their common Anſwer to the moſt material Part of the Depoſitions, was 'That the Queen's Milk
'was nothing but the Effects of Art and Management, and what was ſaid
'concerning her Delivery was downright Lying and Perjury:' To ſuch a low Ebb and Condition was the unhappy King's Credit reduc'd by his frequent Breach of Faith, that the Body of his Subjects wou'd neither believe what he ſaid Himſelf, nor any of thoſe that ſwore for him.

4. The Affair of the Depoſitions was but juſt compleated, when, on The Earl of Sunderland's Diſgrace, and Cauſes of it.
the 28th of October, the Earl of Sunderland was ſuddenly remov'd from his Places of Preſident of the Council, and Principal Secretary of State; which caus'd great Speculations in the Kingdom. The Occaſion of his Diſgrace, we are aſſur'd was thus: Mr. Skelton, to juſtify his Conduct in France, gave an Account to the King, 'That having receiv'd Information of the 'Prince of Orange's Deſigns from Mr. Bude de Verace, he had writ ſix or
'ſeven Letters about it to the Earl of Sunderland; to which having no
'Anſwer, he had apply'd himſelf to the King of France, who thereupon
'diſpatcht Monſieur Bonrepos to England, and ſent Orders to his Ambaſ-
'ſador at the Hague to Expoſtulate with the States-General the Reaſons 'of their Warlike Preparations.' Which Account of Skelton began to raiſe Suſpicions againſt the Prime Miniſter; and theſe were ſoon after encreas'd by the Depoſition of one Wickſtead, formerly a Monk, who being ſeiz'd for holding Correſpondence with the Enemies, and examin'd before the Council, charg'd the Earl of Sunderland to his very Face, with revealing his Majeſty's Secrets to the Prince of Orange; whereupon Wickſtead was committed to the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger, from whom he made his Eſcape. This Accuſation from a Perſon of his Character, had made but little Impreſſion at another Juncture; but agreeing ſo nearly with that of Mr. Skelton, the Earl's paſt Conduct was more nicely and ſeverely can-vaſs'd; and the King call'd to mind, 'That the very ſame Perſon who had
'for ſome time encourag'd him in his Alliance with France, had caus'd

'him

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'him to reject that Assistance, when he stood most in need of it;' which perswaded his Majesty that he was embark'd in another Interest, and therefore he thought fit to remove him from the aforesaid Places. It is farther reported, that to defeat the Earl, the King demanded of him the Original of a certain Treaty, which he answer'd he had mislaid, and which the Earl's Enemies said, he had transmitted to the Prince of Orange. This the Earl positively deny'd; and as to the Business of Skelton's Letters, 'If he 'gave no Account of them to the King, it was not because he held Intel-'ligence with the Prince of Orange, but because he had an invincible Con-'tempt for Skelton, who, he was us'd to say, never wrote but Second-'Hand News.

His Apology. But the Earl of Sunderland has since publish'd a very particular Apology for himself with relation to this and his Conduct in other Affairs; in which Apology he declares to the World, That he did not go those Lengths in King James's Measures as was generally believ'd, for which he was hated by the Popish Party; that he was against the Dispensing Power, as the most Chimerical Thing that was ever thought of; and particularly he was against dissolving the Parliament, and told his Majesty, That in case he dis-solv'd it, he must must give over all Thoughts of Foreign Affairs, for no other wou'd ever assist him, but on such Terms as wou'd ruin the Monarchy; in sum, that he gain'd no Advantage when he was in, and Ruin when he was out. To be a little more particular, speaking of the Grievances he had caus'd the King to redress, when he had heard of the Prince's Designs, he says, 'It was then thought I had destroy'd my self by engaging 'against the whole Roman Catholick Party to such a Height as had not 'been seen: They dispers'd Libels of me every Day, told the King That I 'betray'd him, that I ruin'd him by perswading him to make such shame-'ful Condescensions; but most of all, by hindering the securing the chief 'of the disaffected Nobility and Gentry, which was propos'd as a certain 'Way to break all the Prince's Measures; and by Advising his Majesty to 'call a Free Parliament, and to depend upon that, rather than any Foreign 'Assistance.— After these Accusations of High-Treason were brought a-'gainst me, which, with some other Reasons relating to Affairs abroad, 'drew the King's Displeasure upon me, so as to turn me out of all with-'out any Consideration; and yet I thought I escap'd well, expecting no-'thing less than the loss of my Head; nor had it been otherwise, if my 'Disgrace had been deferr'd a Day longer.' Speaking of the intended Assistance from France, he says, 'Indeed French Ships were offer'd to join 'with our Fleet, and they were refus'd: Since the Noise of the Prince's 'Design, more Ships were offer'd; and it was agreed how they shou'd be 'commanded, if ever desir'd. I oppos'd to Death the accepting of them, 'as well as any Assistance of Men; and can say most truly, That I was 'the principal Means of hindering both, by the help of some Lords with 'whom I consulted every Day, and they with me, to prevent what we 'thought wou'd be of great Prejudice, if not ruinous to the Nation.—— 'My greatest Misfortune has been to be thought the Promoter of those 'Things I oppos'd and detested, while some I cou'd name have been the 'Inventers and Contrivers of what they have had the Art to lay upon o-'thers; and I was often foolishly willing to bear what my Master wou'd 'have done, tho' I us'd all possible Endeavours against it.

And that of the Bishop of Rochester, and Earl of Mulgrave. Besides the Earl of Sunderland, there were two other great Men who thought fit to publish Apologies, as having been believ'd too complying with King James's Measures, especially with Relation to the Ecclesiastical Commission; and these were Dr. Sprat Bishop of Rochester, and the Earl of Mulgrave. The First, in two Letters to the Earl of Dorset, with no little Art and Eloquence has varnish'd over those Actions most liable to Exception ception; but he ſeem'd better to excuſe them by his deſerting the Commiſſion, and joining heartily with his ſuffering Brethren in the moſt difficult Time; and declaring that the brave Stand they made, and their Proceedings upon it, were all upon Church of England Principles. The Earl of Mulgrave with equal Fineneſs has endeavour'd to clear himſelf to the famous Dr. Tillotſon, and like the other, inſinuates That his acting in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, was to prevent greater Miſchief, and keep out worſer Men. However, we think we ought to inſert the following Paragraph in his Letter; 'And ſince I have been forc'd to mention my Good-'Will, at leaſt, if not my Service, to ſuch learned Men of the Clergy who 'I thought deſerv'd it, it may be allow'd me to give this one Inſtance 'more of it: That altho' in preferring Men to all Places of the Houſehold, 'I never us'd to ask Permiſſion firſt, and accordingly was often refus'd for 'the ſake of Roman Catholicks and others, who were recommended by 'Perſons more in Favour than my ſelf; yet I was ſo careful in keeping 'that conſiderable Part of the Family unmix'd with mean or unworthy 'Chaplains, whom others I fear'd wou'd have impos'd upon his Majeſty, 'that I conſtantly fill'd up thoſe Vacancies, without giving him the leaſt 'Notice or Trouble about it, and ſupply'd them with the ableſt ap-'prov'd Divines I cou'd poſſibly find, moſt commonly recommended to 'me by the Biſhops who were not of the Court: Which I conceiv'd the 'moſt proper Courſe in a Matter concerning Clergy-Men, with a King of 'a different Perſuaſion from theirs, and intended for his real Service, be-'lieving it had been better for him, as well as his Kingdom, if the great-'eſt Eccleſiaſtical Dignities had been diſpos'd of by others with as much 'Caution. 1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

There were ſome others who thought themſelves ſo obnoxious, as not to rely upon Apologies, and therefore judg'd it more uſeful and ſecure to ſue out their ſeveral Pardons from the King; ſuch were the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, Sir Nicholas Butler, the Biſhop of Cheſter, the Biſhop of Durham, and about twenty more. This was upon the 1ſt of November, when all guilty Perſons moſt of all fear'd an impending Storm; while all the reſt, the Generality of the Nation, had their Eyes and Ears, their Hands and Hearts lifted up towards Holland, in Expectation of a great and mighty Change. All former Injuries between the two Nations were forgot, and the Engliſh expected ſo much Good, and fear'd ſo little Hurt from the Dutch, that the witty Lord Dorſet ſaid, That if they came at this Seaſon, it may be call'd the merry Invaſion. Particular Pardons.

VII. 1. While King James was labouring under great Difficulties and Diſtractions, providing for his Security, and endeavouring to remove the Fears and Jealouſies of his Proteſtant Subjects, the Prince of Orange was embarking his Troops with extraordinary Diligence; and to juſtify his Undertaking to the whole World, he publiſh'd a ſolemn Declaration, Dated October the 10th New Style, divided into twenty ſix Articles, but reducible to theſe Three Principal Heads: 'The Firſt contain'd a particular 'Enumeration of the Grievances of the Engliſh Nation, eſpecially the King's 'arrogating to himſelf a Diſpenſing Power: His advancing Papiſts to Ci-'vil, Eccleſiaſtical and Military Employments, and allowing them to ſit in 'the Privy-Council: His ſetting up an Illegal Commiſſion for Eccleſiaſtical 'Affairs, in which there was One of his Miniſters of State, who made 'publick Profeſſion of the Popiſh Religion, and who at the time of his firſt 'Profeſſing it, declar'd, That for a great while before, he had believ'd 'that to be the only true Religion; and by which not only the Biſhop of 'London was ſuſpended, but the Preſident and Fellows of Magdalen-Col-'lege arbitrarily turn'd out of their Free-Holds, contrary to that expreſs The Prince of Orange's Preparations and DECLARATION. I.

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'Proviſion in Magna Charta, That no Man ſhall loſe Life or Goods but 'by the Law of the Land: His allowing Popiſh Monaſteries and Colleges 'of Jeſuits to be created: His turning out of Publick Employments all 'ſuch as wou'd not concur with him in the Repeal of the Teſt and Penal 'Laws: His Invading the Privileges, and Seizing on the Charters of moſt 'Corporations, and placing Popiſh Magiſtrates in ſome of them: His Sub-'jecting the Courts of Judicatory to his Arbitrary and Deſpotick Power, 'and putting the Adminiſtration of Juſtice into the Hands of Papiſts: His 'not only arming the Papiſts, in Contempt of the Laws, but likewiſe rai-'ſing them up to the greateſt Military Truſt, both by Sea and Land, Stran-'gers as well as Natives, and Iriſh as well as Engliſh, that he might be in 'a Capacity to enſlave the Nation: His putting the whole Government of 'Ireland into the Hands of Papiſts: His Aſſuming an Abſolute and Ar-'bitrary Power in the Kingdom of Scotland; from which it was apparent 'what was to be look'd for in England.

II. Secondly, his Highneſs alledg'd, 'That thoſe great and inſufferable Op-'preſſions, and the open Contempt of all Law, together with the Appre-'henſions of the ſad Conſequences that muſt certainly follow upon it, had 'made the Subjects to look after ſuch Remedies as are allow'd of in all 'Nations, and in the moſt Abſolute Monarchies, all which had been with-'out Effect; his Majeſty's Evil Counſellors having endeavour'd to make 'all Men apprehend the Loſs of their Lives, Liberties, Honours and Eſtates, 'if they ſhou'd go about to preſerve themſelves from this Oppreſſion by 'Petitions and Repreſentations; an Inſtance of which was the Proſecution 'of the Seven Biſhops: That a Peer of the Realm [the Lord Lovelace] 'was treated as a Criminal, only becauſe he ſaid, That the Subjects were 'not bound to obey the Orders of a Popiſh Juſtice of Peace; tho' it is e-'vident, that they being by Law render'd incapable of all ſuch Truſts, no 'Regard is due to their Orders: That both He and his Conſort the Prin-'ceſs, had endeavour'd to ſignify, with Terms full of Reſpect to the King, 'the juſt and deep Regret, which all theſe Proceedings had given them, 'and declared what their Thoughts were, touching the Repealing of the 'Teſts and Penal Laws; but that theſe Evil Counſellors had put ſuch ill 'Conſtructions on their good Intentions, that they had endeavour'd to a-'lienate the King more and more from them. That the laſt and great Re-'medy for all theſe Evils, was the Calling of a Parliament, which cou'd 'not yet be compaſs'd, nor cou'd be eaſily brought about; for thoſe Men 'apprehending, That a Lawful Parliament wou'd bring them to Account 'for all their open Violations of Law, and for their Conſpiracies againſt 'the Proteſtant Religion, and the Lives and Liberties of the Subjects, they 'had endeavour'd under the ſpecious Pretence of Liberty of Conſcience, 'firſt to ſow Diviſions between thoſe of the Church of England and 'Diſ-'ſenters, with Deſign to engage Proteſtants, who are equally concern'd 'to preſerve themſelves from Popiſh Oppreſſion, into mutual Quarrellings; 'that ſo by theſe, ſome Advantages might be given to them to bring about 'their Deſigns; and that both in the Elections of Members of Parliament, 'and afterward in the Parliament it ſelf: That they had alſo made ſuch Re-'gulations as they thought fit and neceſſary, for ſecuring all the Members 'that were to be choſen by the Corporations; by which Means, they hop'd 'to avoid the Puniſhment they deſerv'd, tho' it was apparent, that all 'Acts made by Popiſh Magiſtrates were null and void of themſelves: So 'that no Parliament cou'd be Lawful, for which the Elections and Re-'turns were made by Popiſh Magiſtrates, Sheriffs and Mayors of Towns; 'and therefore as long as the Magiſtracy was in ſuch Hands, it was not 'poſſible to have a Free Parliament Legally Call'd, and Choſen. That 'there were great and violent Preſumptions, inducing his Highneſs to believe,

'that

'That thoſe evil Counſellors, in order to the gaining the more Time for 1688.
'the effecting of their ill Deſigns, had publiſh'd, That the Queen had 'brought forth a Son; tho' there had appear'd, both during the Queen's Jac. 4.
'pretended Bigneſs, and in the Manner wherein the Birth was manag'd, Ref. 29
'ſo many juſt and viſible Grounds of Suſpicion, that not only He himſelf,
'but all the good Subjects of the Kingdom, did vehemently ſuſpect, That
'the pretended Prince of Wales was not born of the Queen: And tho'
'many both doubted of the Queen's Bigneſs, and of the Birth of the Child,
'yet there was not any one Thing done to ſatisfy them, or put an End to 'their Doubts. That ſince his Conſort the Princeſs, and likewiſe He him-
'ſelf, had ſo great an Intereſt in this Matter, and ſuch a Right, as all the 'World knew, to the Succeſſion of the Crown; ſince all the Engliſh did
'in the Year 1672, when Holland was invaded with a moſt unjuſt War, uſe
'their utmoſt Endeavours to put an End to that War, and that in Oppoſi-
'tion to thoſe who were then in the Government; ſince the Engliſh Na'tion had ever teſtify'd a moſt particular Affection and Eſteem, both to his
'Highneſs's deareſt Conſort and to Himſelf, he cou'd not excuſe himſelf
'from eſpouſing that Intereſt, in a Matter of ſuch high Conſequence, and
'from contributing all that in him lay for the maintaining both of the Pro-
'teſtant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of theſe Kingdoms: To the 'doing of which, his Highneſs was moſt earneſtly ſolicited by a great
'many Lords, both Spiritual and Temporal, and by many Gentlemen, and
'other Subjects of all Ranks.

In the laſt Place, his Highneſs Declared, 'That for the foremention'd III.
'Reaſons, he has thought fit to go over to England, and to carry with 'him a Force ſufficient to defend him from the Violence of thoſe Evil
'Counſellors: That his Expedition was intended for no other Deſign, but
'to have a Free and Lawful Parliament Aſſembled as ſoon as it was poſ-
'ſible; and that in Order to this, all the late Charters, by which the Ele'ction of Burgeſſes were limited contrary to the ancient Cuſtom, ſhou'd be 'conſider'd as Null and of no Force. That to this Parliament He wou'd refer
'the Enquiry into the Birth of the pretended Prince of Wales, and of all 'Things relating thereto, and to the Right of Succeſſion: That he wou'd
'concur in every Thing that might procure the Peace and Happineſs of the 'Nation, under a juſt and legal Government: That he wou'd keep the 'Forces under his Command, under all the Strictneſs of Martial Diſcipline,
'and promis'd that he wou'd ſend back all thoſe Foreign Forces as ſoon as
'the State of the Nation wou'd admit of it: That therefore he invited and 'required all Perſons whatſoever to come and aſſiſt him, in order to the 'executing his Deſigns againſt all ſuch as ſhall endeavour to oppoſe him.
'That he wou'd likewiſe take Care that a Parliament ſhou'd be call'd in 'Scotland, for reſtoring the Ancient Conſtitution of that Kingdom, and for 'bringing the Matters of Religion to ſuch a Settlement, that the People 'might live eaſie and happy. That he wou'd alſo ſtudy to bring the King'dom of Ireland to ſuch a State, that the Settlement there might be reli-
'giouſly obſerv'd, and that the Proteſtant and Britiſh Intereſt there might 'be ſecured.' He concludes all in theſe Words, 'And We will endeavour
'by all poſſible Means, to procure ſuch an Eſtabliſhment throughout all
'the Three Kingdoms, that they may all live in a happy Union and Cor-
'reſpondence together; and that the Proteſtant Religion, and the Peace,
'Honour and Happineſs of theſe Nations may be eſtabliſh'd upon laſting
'Foundations.

gether with another to the ſame Effect for Scotland; when his Highneſs being inform'd that King James, by granting moſt of the Biſhops Demands, had taken Meaſures to render it ineffectual, fourteen Days after he caus'd the following Addition to be made to it: 'After we had prepared and printed 'our Declaration, we have underſtood, That the Subverters of the Reli- 'gion and Laws of theſe Kingdoms; hearing of our Preparations to aſ- 'ſiſt the People againſt them, have begun to retract ſome of their Arbi- 'trary and Deſpotick Power that they had aſſum'd, and to vacate ſome 'of their unjuſt Judgments and Decrees: The Senſe of their Guilt, and 'the Diſtruſt of their Force, have induc'd them to offer to the City of 'London ſome ſeeming Relief from their great Oppreſſions; hoping thereby 'to quiet the People, and to divert them from demanding a Re-eſtabliſh- 'ment of their Religion and Laws under the Shelter of our Arms: They 'did alſo give out, That we do intend to Conquer and Enſlave the Na- 'tion; and therefore it is we have thought fit to add a few Words to our 'Declaration.

'We are confident, that no Perſons can have ſuch hard Thoughts of us, 'as to imagine we have any other Deſign in this our Undertaking, than to 'procure a Settlement of the Religion, and of the Liberties and Proper- 'ties of the Subjects upon ſo ſure a Foundation, that there may be no 'Danger of the Nation's relapſing into the like Miſeries at any Time here- 'after. And as the Forces we have brought along with us are utterly diſ- 'proportion'd to that wicked Deſign of Conquering the Nation, if we were 'capable of intending it; ſo the great Numbers of the principal Nobility 'and Gentry, that are Men of eminent Quality and Eſtates, and Perſons 'of known Integrity and Zeal, both for the Religion and Government of 'England; many of them being alſo diſtinguiſh'd by their conſtant Fidelity 'to the Crown, who do both accompany us in this Expedition, and have 'earneſtly ſolicited us to it, will cover us from all ſuch malicious Inſinuations: 'For it is not to be imagin'd, that either thoſe who invited us, or thoſe 'who are already come to aſſiſt us, can join in a wicked Attempt of Con- 'queſt, to make void their own lawful Titles to their Honours, Eſtates and 'Intereſts. We are alſo confident, that all Men ſee how little Weight there 'is to be laid on all Promiſes and Engagements that can be now made, 'ſince there has been ſo little Regard had in the Time paſt to the moſt SO- 'LEMN PROMISES. And as that imperfect Redreſs that is now 'offer'd, is a plain Confeſſion of thoſe Violences of the Government, that 'we have ſet forth; ſo the Defectiveneſs of it is no leſs apparent: For 'they lay down nothing which they may not take up at Pleaſure; and 'they reſerve entire, and not ſo much as mention their Claims and Pretences 'to an Arbitary and Deſpotick Power, which has been the Root of all 'their Oppreſſion, and the total Subverſion of the Government. And it 'is plain, that there can be no Redreſs, no Remedy offer'd, but in Parlia- 'ment, by a Declaration of the Rights of the Subjects that have been in- 'vaded, and not by any pretended Acts of Grace, to which the Extremity 'of their Affairs have driven them. Therefore it is that we have thought 'fit to Declare, That we will refer all to a Free Aſſembly of this Nation in 'a lawful Parliament.

The Reſolution of the States of Holland.

Beſides this famous Declaration, now ſo eagerly entertain'd, about the ſame time was publiſh'd, The Reſolution of the States-General, containing the Reaſons that had oblig'd them to aſſiſt his Highneſs the Prince of Orange with Ships, Men and Ammunition, in his intended Expedition into England: Whereon, beſides the repeated Invitations his Highneſs had receiv'd from the Engliſh Nobility, Gentry and Clergy, they alledg'd, 'That 'the King of France had upon ſeveral Occaſions ſhew'd himſelf diſſatisfy'd 'with their State; which gave them Cauſe to fear and apprehend, That 'in Caſe the King of Great-Britain ſhou'd happen to compaſs his Deſigns 'within his Kingdom, and obtain an Abſolute Power over his People, that 'then both Kings, out of Intereſt of State, and Hatred and Zeal againſt the

'Proteſtant

'Proteſtant Religion, wou'd endeavour to bring their State to Confuſion, 'and if poſſible, totally to ſubject it.' Of this they had a particular Pro- 1688. ſpect, according the Biſhop of Sarum's Account, who tells us, 'That the Jac. 4. Earl of Caſtlemain, King James's Ambaſſador at Rome, had preſs'd the Pope, and the Patron Cardinal Cibo, to admit his Maſter to mediate a Re- Ref. 29 conciliation between the Courts of Rome and Verſailles; and ſaid, When that was brought about, the two Kings wou'd effectually ſerve the Cauſe of the Church, and begin with the Deſtruction of Holland. This the Pope thought fit to tell to the Head of the Imperial Party at Rome; who wrote it to the Emperor; and the Emperor wrote the ſame to the Prince of Orange.

2. The Prince of Orange being now ready for his great Expedition, on the 16th of October he went into the Aſſembly of the States-General to take a ſolemn Leave of them, and deliver'd himſelf to this Effect: 'That he 'was infinitely oblig'd to them, and was ſorry he had no Opportunity to 'ſhew his Inclination, Love and Affection to Them, as they had done to 'Him: That he had hitherto been encourag'd and ſupported by their Aſ- 'ſiſtance, which they had ſo abundantly contributed to him, both by Counſel 'and otherwiſe, That it was needleſs for him to recapitulate the Reaſons 'which induc'd him to leave his Native Countrey: That he hop'd and 'pray'd, That God wou'd endue him with Wiſdom, Foreſight and Cou- 'rage, and not withdraw his Arm from him in Time of need: That he 'call'd God to witneſs he did not undertake ſuch an arduous Affair, but for 'his Glory: That his only Aim was for the Honour of God, the Welfare 'of their Countrey, and of the Chriſtian Religion; and that therefore he 'hop'd God wou'd beſtow his Bleſſing on it; and if by the Bleſſing of God 'he ſhou'd attain his Ends, to ſet the States at greater Liberty, and free 'them from the Fear of their Neighbours, and the haughty Tyranny of 'thoſe who wou'd enſlave them: That he had left the Care of the Army 'to Prince Waldeck, and earneſtly deſir'd the States to aſſiſt him, and to 'be unanimous amongſt themſelves.' Here he ſeem'd to ſtop; and after ſome Pauſe, he paſſionately recommended one Thing more to them; 'That as he did not know how God might diſpoſe of him ſince he had 'put on his Sword, and knew not when he ſhou'd put it off; But in caſe 'God ſhou'd permit that to befal him, which had happen'd to many others, 'and that he ſhou'd loſe his Life in this Expedition, they wou'd then take 'the Princeſs his Wife under their Protection, who was as well affected 'to that Countrey and the Proteſtant Religion, as he himſelf was; and 'he was ſatisfy'd She cou'd no where find ſuch a ſecure Place as under the 'Wings of the States. That he had but one Thing more to deſire, which 'was, That they wou'd always remember him in their publick and private 'Prayers, as in his own he ſhou'd have the ſame Regard for them.' With which the Tears flow'd from his Eyes, the whole Aſſembly melted into a generous Sorrow; and Penſionary Fagel having return'd a moſt moving Speech to him, they parted as much with the Tenderneſs of Lovers, as the Affection of Friends. The Prince takes his leave of the States, with a Speech.

All Things being in Readineſs, on the 19th of October, the Dutch Fleet, conſiſting of about Fifty Men of War, Twenty Five Frigates, as many Fire-ſhips, with near Four Hundred Victuallers, and other Veſſels for the Tranſportation of above Four Thouſand Horſe, and Ten Thouſand Foot, ſet ſail from the Flatts near the Briel, with a South-Weſterly Wind. The Prince himſelf embark'd on a Frigate of about Thirty Guns, and with him Count Naſſaw, General of the Horſe; Count de Solmes, Colonel of the Foot-Guards, Count de Stirum, Monſieur Bentinck, Monſieur Overquerque, and Monſieur Zuyleſteyn. In the other Ships were many of the Nobility and Gentry of England He puts to Sea.

land and Scotland, who had already declar'd for the Prince; of which the Chief were the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Macclesfield, Viſcount Mordant, the Earl of Argyle, the Lord Wiltſhire, the Lord Pawlet, the Lord Elan, Son to the Marquiſs of Hallifax, and the Lord Dunblaine, Son to the Earl of Danby, Admiral Herbert, Mr. Henry Herbert, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Ruſſel, Sir Rowland Gwyn, Major Wildman, Dr. Burnet, Mr. Harbord, Mr. Ferguſon, and many others. And among Foreigners, were the famous Mareſchal Schomberg, with his Son Count Charles Schomberg; Monſieur Caillemote, Son to the Marquiſs de Rovigni, and Two or Three Hundred French Officers, who had left their Countrey for their Religion, and had now a Share in this Proteſtant Expedition. Admiral Herbert led the Van of the Fleet, Vice-Admiral Evertzen brought up the Rear, and the Prince plac'd Himſelf in the main Body, carrying a Flag with Engliſh Colours, and their Highneſſes Arms, ſurrounded with this Motto, THE PROTESTANT RELIGION, AND LIBERTIES OF ENGLAND; and underneath the Motto of the Houſe of Naſſaw, JE MAINTIENDRAI. i. e. I will maintain.

But driven back by a Storm.

This numerous Fleet were all under Sail, when the Wind coming more Weſterly, there aroſe a dreadful Storm in the Night, which continu'd with ſo much Fury for Two Days, that they with great Difficulty return'd into Helvoet-Sluice, and ſome other Ports; and tho' with conſiderable Damage, yet without the Loſs of one Veſſel of Note, and but of one Man. Which Diſaſter prov'd a mighty Pleaſure to the Popiſh Party, who cou'd not conceal their inſulting Joy, but boaſted, That God Almighty had now recompens'd them for the Loſs of the Spaniſh Armada, which a Hundred Years ago was deſtin'd to conquer the Engliſh Hereticks. And great Care was taken to aggravate the Loſs in the Engliſh Gazette, namely, 'That Four 'Hundred Horſe had been thrown over-board, and ſeveral dead Men, One 'of their Men of War ſtranded, and another diſabled:' And then again, 'That the Damage ſuſtain'd by the Dutch Fleet did appear to be much 'greater than was at firſt reported: That there were Fifteen Hundred 'Horſes dead and unſerviceable; the Prince of Orange had loſt moſt of 'his own, and the Mareſchal Schomberg the beſt of his Horſes; his Son, 'Count Charles, was in great Danger, the Ship he was in having rent her 'Main-Maſt: A Captain of Horſe in the Sieur Bentinck's Regiment was miſ-'ſing, with his whole Troop; and Two Captains of the Foot-Guards were 'likewiſe miſſing, with their Companies, &c.' The ſame aggravating Reports were induſtriouſly ſpread in Holland, but with a different Deſign; which was to make the Court of England more remiſs in their Preparations: The Harlem and Amſterdam Gazettes were order'd to give a diſmal Relation of the 'Great Damage the Dutch Fleet, and the Army on Board them, 'had ſuſtain'd: Nine of the Men of War loſt, beſides others of leſs Value; 'a Thouſand Horſes caſt over-broad; Dr. Burnet, and ſeveral Engliſh 'Gentlemen drown'd; what an ill Opinion the States-General had of the 'Expedition; and that it was next to an Impoſſibility, that the Prince 'cou'd be in a Condition to purſue his Deſign till the next Spring.' This for a ſhort Time, had ſuch an Effect upon the Engliſh Court, that the King cou'd not help diſcovering his Mind ſo far as to begin to recal ſome of his late Acts of Grace, and unhappily to ſhew that they were more the Reſult of Neceſſity than Inclination.

3. It was in this critical Juncture that Captain Langham, who belong'd to one of the Engliſh Regiments in Holland, and juſt arriv'd from thence, was ſeiz'd upon Suſpicion, and in his Portmanteau were a Parcel of the Prince of Orange's Declarations, which were the firſt that were brought over into England. When that Expreſſion came to be read to the King, That the Prince was moſt earneſtly invited over by divers of the Lords, both both Spiritual and Temporal, and by many Gentlemen and others, his Majeſty was in great Perplexity, and in haſte ſent for the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London, Rocheſter, and two or three more, that happen'd to be then in Town, and demanded of them, Whether the Contents of the Prince's Declaration, relating to their Inviting him over, were true? The Biſhops were cautious in their Anſwer, and in general, promis'd their faithful Allegiance to his Majeſty; whereupon the King immediately required them to juſtify themſelves to the World, as to their Part in that Invitation; and accordingly he fix'd a ſhort Day, whereon he oblig'd them to preſent a Paper under their own Hands, ſignifying their Abhorrence of the Prince of Orange's intended Invaſion. He farther let them know, 'That 'his good Succeſs depended upon their ready Compliance with his Com-'mand; and that a Declaration was then in the Preſs againſt the Prince of 'Orange, and was only deferr'd to have their Paper of Abhorrence inſerted 'into it. 1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

When the Day of Tryal came there were great Throngs at Court, expecting the Iſſue of that Meeting; and the Biſhops ſaw both the Friends and the Enemies of the Church of England, equally impatient to know what they wou'd do in that difficult Moment. And there happen'd to be but four of their Number, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London, Peterborough and Rocheſter, who were preſent upon the Place, to endure that terrible Brunt. As ſoon as they were come into the King's Preſence, his Majeſty with great Eagerneſs call'd for their Paper. But with all Submiſſion, 'They begg'd to be excus'd from Writing any thing of that Nature, and 'from making a particular Defence to a general Accuſation, leſt they ſhou'd 'give the firſt Precedent of that kind againſt the Privilege of Peers: Be-'ſides, that their Profeſſion being to promote Peace, they thought it be-'long'd not to them to declare War, eſpecially againſt a Prince ſo nearly al-'ly'd to the Crown.' Whereupon the King ſtill more inſiſted, argu'd and expoſtulated with their Lordſhips; inſomuch, that they never ſaw him more vehement in his Speech, and tranſported in his Expreſſions, than at that time. However, they ſtill made good their humble Refuſal, in as dutiful Terms as was poſſible; and among many Arguments, urg'd, 'That as they 'were join'd with their Brethren, the other Lords Spiritual, and with the 'Lords Temporal, and with the Gentry of England, in the Accuſation; ſo 'they beſeech'd him, that they might not be ſeparated from them in their 'Juſtification.' Concluding all with an earneſt Requeſt to his Majeſty, 'That he wou'd be pleas'd to condeſcend to the calling a Free Parliament, 'wherein only he cou'd underſtand what was the general Senſe and true In-'tereſt of the whole Kingdom.' At laſt, when neither the King wou'd hearken to their zealous Motion for a Parliament, nor the Biſhops cou'd be prevail'd on to ſubſcribe an Abhorrence of the Prince's Deſign, his Majeſty parted with great Indignation. And thereupon the Jeſuited Party at Court were ſo openly enrag'd againſt them, that, as they were credibly inform'd, one of the Chief of them adviſ'd in a Heat, They ſhou'd all be impriſon'd, and the Truth ſhou'd be extorted from them by Violence.

A particular Obſervation.

Biſhop Sprat, from whom we had this Account, obſerves, That the Biſhops of Scotland, on the contrary, were drawn into a Declaration, abhorring the Invaſion of the Prince of Orange, and renouncing the Principles on which it was founded; which prov'd ſuch a Snare to them, that they cou'd not in Honour act in Parliament after the Revolution, but deſerted the Service of their Church and Countrey, and left the Management of both entirely to the Presbyterians, who then made uſe of the Opportunity, and eſtabliſh'd themſelves by Law; purely by the Abſence of the Biſhops from Parliament. 'So that, ſays he, as the Engliſh Biſhops refu-'ſing to ſtand by the Doctrine of Paſſive Obedience, ſav'd Epiſcopacy in 'England;

A Proclamation againſt the Prince of Orange.

3. To keep the Prince's Declaration from the Knowledge of the People, on the 2d of November, a Proclamation was iſſu'd out, 'Warning and 'Admoniſhing all his Majeſty's Subjects, that they did not publiſh, diſperſe, repeat, or hand about the ſaid treaſonable Declaration, upon Peril 'of being proſecuted according to the utmoſt Severity of the Law.' But the Court finding that this Inhibition was of little Effect, but rather ſerv'd to encreaſe Men's Curioſities, they ſuffer'd the Declaration to be printed, with a Preface, with ſome ſpecious Animadverſions upon it. About the ſame Juncture there was alſo printed the following Letter of the Prince of Orange to the Officers of the Engliſh Army:

The Prince's Letter to the Engliſh Army.

'Gentlemen and Friends,
'We have given ſo full and ſo true an Account of our Intentions in this Ex-'pedition in our Declaration, that as we can add nothing to it, ſo we are 'ſure you can deſire nothing more of us. We are come to Preſerve your 'Religion, and to Reſtore and Eſtabliſh your Liberties and Properties; 'and therefore we cannot ſuffer our ſelves to doubt, but that all true Engliſh 'Men will come and concur with us in our Deſire, to ſecure theſe Nations 'from Popery and Slavery. You muſt all plainly ſee, that you are only 'made uſe of as Inſtruments to enſlave the Nation, and ruin the Proteſtant 'Religion: And when that's done, you may judge what your ſelves ought 'to expect, both by the Caſhiering all the Proteſtant and Engliſh Officers 'and Soldiers in Ireland, and by the Iriſh Soldiers being brought over to 'be put in your Places; and of which you have ſeen ſo freſh an Inſtance, 'that we need not put you in mind of it. You know how many of your 'Fellow Officers have been us'd for their ſtanding firm to the Proteſtant Re-'ligion, and to the Laws of England: And you cannot flatter your ſelves 'ſo far as to expect to be better us'd, if thoſe who have broke their Word ſo 'often, ſhou'd by your Means be brought out of thoſe Streights, to which 'they are at preſent reduc'd. We hope likewiſe that you will not ſuffer 'your ſelves to be abus'd by a falſe Notion of Honour; but that you will 'in the firſt Place conſider what you owe to Almighty God and your Re-'ligion, and next to your Countrey, your Selves, and your Poſterity; which 'you, as Men of Honour, ought to prefer to all private Conſiderations and 'Engagements whatſoever. We do therefore expect that you will conſider 'the Honour that is now ſet before you, as Inſtruments of Serving your 'Countrey, and Securing your Religion: And we ſhall ever remember the 'Service you ſhall do us upon this Occaſion; and will promiſe you, that 'we ſhall place ſuch particular Marks of our Favour on every one of you, as 'your Behaviour at this Time ſhall deſerve of us and the Nation; in which 'we ſhall make a great Diſtinction of thoſe that ſhall come ſeaſonably to join 'their Arms with ours: And you ſhall find us to be your Well-wiſhing and 'Aſſured Friend.

This Letter was ſecretly ſpread over the Kingdom, and as much diſpers'd as the Declaration, and had a wonderful Effect on the Spirits of the Soldiers; ſo that thoſe that did not immediately comply with it at the Prince's Landing, yet reſolv'd they wou'd never draw their Swords in this Quarrel, till they had a Free Parliament to ſecure the Religion, Laws and Liberties of England. Nor had the following Letter, written by Admiral Herbert to the Engliſh Fleet, leſs Influence upon the Sea-Men.

Admiral Herbert's Letter to the Fleet.

'Gentlemen, I have 'little to add to what his Highneſs has expreſs'd in general Terms, beſides 'laying before you the dangerous Way you are at preſent in, where Ruin 'or Infamy muſt inevitably attend you, if you don't join with the Prince in 'the Common Cauſe, for the Defence of your Religion and Liberties: For 'ſhou'd it pleaſe God, for the Sins of the Engliſh Nation, to ſuffer your

'Arms

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'Arms to prevail, to what can your Victory ſerve you, but to enſlave you deeper, and overthrow the true Religion in which you have liv'd, and your Fathers dy'd? Of which, I beg you, as a Friend, to conſider the Conſequences, and reflect on the Blot and Infamy it will bring on you, not only now, but in After-ages; that by your Means the Proteſtant Religion was deſtroy'd, and your Countrey depriv'd of its ancient Liberty: And if it pleaſes God to bleſs the Prince's Endeavours with Succeſs, as I don't doubt but he will, conſider then what their Condition will be that oppoſe him in this ſo good Deſign, where the greateſt Favour they can hope for, is, their being ſuffer'd to end their Days in Miſery and Want, deteſted and deſpis'd by all good Men. It is therefore, and for many more Reaſons, too long to inſert here; that I, as a true Engliſh Man, and your Friend, exhort you to join your Arms to the Prince, for the Defence of the Common Cauſe, the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of your Countrey. It is what I am well aſſur'd the major and beſt Part of the Army, as well as the Nation, will do as ſoon as Convenience offers. Prevent them in ſo good an Action, while it is in your Power, and make it appear, That as the Kingdom has always depended on the Navy for its Defence, ſo you will go farther, by making it, as much as in you lies, the Protection of our Religion and Liberties; and then you may aſſure your ſelves of all Marks of Favour and Honour ſuitable to the Merits of ſo great and glorious an Action. After this, I ought not to add ſo inconſiderable a thing, as that it will for ever engage me to be in a moſt particular Manner, Gentlemen, Your Faithful Friend, and Humble Servant.

Inſtructions to the Lord Dartmouth.

The Fleet, to which this Letter was directed, were then at the Buoy of the Nore, under the Command of the Lord Dartmouth, who having fitted it out with all Expedition, receiv'd theſe Inſtructions from the King: 'Whereas we have receiv'd undoubted Advice, That a great and ſudden Invaſion from Holland, with an armed Force of Foreigners and Strangers, will be made ſpeedily in an Hoſtile Manner upon this our Kingdom; Our Will and Pleaſure is, That all neceſſary Orders being by you iſſu'd for the haſtning our Ships and Veſſels, now fitting forth out of the Rivers of Thames and Medway, together with thoſe already at Sea under Command of Sir Roger Strickland, Vice-Admiral of our ſaid Fleet, at the intended Rendezvous at the Buoy of the Nore; you do with all Diligence repair on Board our Ship Reſolution, Captain William Davis Commander, or ſuch other of our Ships as you ſhall now, or at any time hereafter, think fit to bear our Flag, as Admiral, taking upon you the Charge and Conduct of our ſaid Fleet, &c. Which Fleet, and every Part thereof, we (out of our entire Reliance upon your approved Loyalty, Valour, Circumſpection and Experience) do hereby Authorize and Impower you to lead; and by our Orders to direct and diſpoſe of at all ſuch Times, and in all Emergencies, as you in your Diſcretion ſhall judge moſt conducing to our Honour, and the Security of our Dominions; and particularly in the preventing the Approach of any Fleet or Number of Ships of War from Holland upon any of our Coaſts, or their making any Deſcent upon the ſame. Towards your more effectual Execution whereof, We do hereby farther Impower and Require you, to endeavour by all Hoſtile Means to ſink, burn, take, and otherways deſtroy and diſable the ſaid Fleet, and Ships thereof, when and whereſoever you ſhall meet with, or otherwiſe think fit to look out for and attack the ſame, &c.

This Fleet conſiſted of ſixty one Veſſels of War, of which thirty eight were of the Line of Battel; which in human Probability, upon a Battel, wou'd have worſted the Prince of Orange's Men of War, or at leaſt defeated his Tranſports, and ſo ruin'd the Grand Deſign. Lying at Anchor at the

The Fleet not ſtaunch to the King, yet formidable to the Dutch.

Gunfleet, and ready, in all Reſpects, to put out to Sea, the Lord Dartmouth the Admiral, call'd a Council of War, and by a great Majority it was reſolv'd to continue there, in order to intercept the Dutch Fleet: But there were ſome, particularly Sir William Jennings, the Commander of a Third Rate Veſſel, who thought it more adviſeable to ſtand over to the Coaſt of Holland, and there attend the coming out of their Fleet. This laſt Propoſal, as Secretary Burchett obſerves, did certainly carry great Weight with it, had there been a real Deſign of obſtructing the Prince of Orange in his Paſſage to England; but inſtead of that, adds he, Matters were ſo concerted, and agreed among the Flag-Officers and Commanders, who had frequently private Meetings, that had the Admiral come fairly up with the Dutch, it wou'd not have been in his Power to have done very much againſt them: Altho' there was great Reaſon to believe, that, in ſuch a Caſe, his Lordſhip, and ſome of the Captains, wou'd have acted to the utmoſt of their Power. But after all, the Hazard of meeting of them was ſo great, that the miſſing of them was look'd upon as a peculiar Bleſſing and Providence. In ſum, the Naval Power and Land Forces, the Engliſh Fleet, and the Army now on Foot, were, in appearance, abundantly more than ſufficient to overthrow all the Deſigns of Holland, without the leaſt Aſſiſtance from France.

The Prince of Orange's ſecond Attempt.

4. Such was the Poſture of Affairs in England, when the Prince of Orange, under great Diſcouragements undaunted, began his ſecond Attempt for the Relief of Europe and his own Glory. The Storm that had caus'd ſo great a Confuſion in his Fleet, did not ſo much ruffle or diſorder his Mind; and while moſt Perſons about him had ſtill their Fancies haunted with the Horrors of the late Tempeſt, his Highneſs with a Compoſedneſs and Serenity of Mind, peculiar to himſelf and great Men, was purſuing his fix'd Deſign, and induſtriouſly repairing his Loſſes. The firſt thing he did was to ſend out a certain Number of Coaſt-Pilots, by the Dutch call'd Lotes-Men, to cruiſe up and down the Seas between Holland, England and France, to get Intelligence of the ſcatter'd Fleet, and to order all the Ships they met with to go into Helvoet-Sluys. By the help of theſe Pilots his Highneſs was inform'd, That none of his Veſſels were loſt, except one Fly-Boat, laden with Men and Horſes, which was driven upon the Coaſt of England, and ſecur'd by one of King James's Frigates; but that all the reſt were ſafe in one Harbour or another, tho' moſt them much ſhatter'd and damag'd in their Rigging. The ſtormy Weather continu'd for eight Days; during which time, all Diligence was us'd in Refitting and Victualling the Fleet, in ſupplying the Loſs, and encreaſing the Number of the Horſes; ſo that on Friday, the 1ſt of November, Old Style, eleven Days after they had firſt put to Sea, all Things were in Readineſs, and the Wind Eaſterly.

He again puts to Sea.

On that Day, in the Afternoon, the Prince of Orange, attended by the great Men of every Nation, went on board a new Veſſel of about twenty eight Guns, call'd the Briel, with the Rotterdam Admiral, the Trumpets ſounding, the Hautboys playing, the Soldiers and Seamen ſhouting, and vaſt Crouds of Spectators on the Shore, breathing out their Wiſhes, and ſending forth their Prayers after him. The uſual Signal being given, the whole Fleet weigh'd Anchor with all poſſible Expedition, being divided into three Squadrons, on Board of which were Troops of ſeveral Countries: The Red Flag was for the Engliſh and Scotch, commanded by Major-General Mackay; the White Flag was for the Prince's Guards and the Brandenburghers, commanded by Count Solms; and the Blue for the Dutch and French, commanded by the Count of Naſſaw. The Winds were proſperous, and withal a brisk Gale, and by the Compaſs the Fleet pointed towards the North, ſo that ſome concluded that the Prince deſign'd to have landed landed in thoſe Parts of England. By the earneſt Invitation of the Earl of Danby, and the Lords that manag'd in the North, his Highneſs, tho' contrary to the Inclination of the Seamen, had determin'd to land in the Mouth of the Humber, as we are aſſur'd by Biſhop Burnet. But the Strength of the Eaſt Wind made it impracticable; and ſo after ſome Hours ſailing in the Night, with Lights in every Ship, the whole Fleet ſtruck Sail, and drove before the Wind towards the Eaſtern Coaſts of England. The next Morning they ſail'd happily with the ſame Wind without meeting with any Engliſh Ship; and on Saturday the 3d of November, they diſcover'd the Coaſts of Eſſex and Kent, and the Wind being favourable, the Fleet made all the ſail they cou'd, and pointed towards the Chanel, ſome of the Tranſports paſs'd within Sight of the Engliſh Fleet under the Lord Dartmouth, near the Gunfleet; but the Engliſh then rid with their Yards and Top-maſts down, and the height of the Wind ſo hinder'd them from purchaſing their Anchors, that they cou'd not purſue them in due time. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

He enters the Chanel.

About Noon Day, on the 3d of November, the Prince of Orange who had led the Van, tack'd about to ſee the Rear well come up, and between Dover and Calais call'd a Council of War; and afterwards order'd that his own Standard ſhou'd be ſet up, and that the Fleet ſhou'd cloſe up in a Body. His Highneſs with three Men of War to attend him, one at a diſtance before his Ship, and one on each Side, ſail'd forwards before the Navy; the Tranſport Ships, Victuallers and Tenders, ſail'd next, with their Decks crouded with Officers and Soldiers, and the main Body of the Men of War brought up the Rear, ready to receive the Enemy, if they ſhou'd attempt to diſturb their Courſe, as was expected. And here the Reader may pleaſe to carry his Imagination either to the French or Engliſh Shore, to view with the Crouds of amaz'd Spectators this glorious but formidable Sight, and behold the Prince of Orange riding triumphantly in the Engliſh Chanel, while Lewis and James are in daily Alarms; and then let him conſider the peculiar Felicity of the Republick of Holland, which at this time was able to controul the two greateſt Monarchs of Europe.

King James, who expected that the Prince of Orange wou'd have landed in the North of England, and who had ſent a ſtrong Detachment of his Army that Way, was not a little ſurpriz'd and confounded to hear by ſeveral Expreſſes, that the Dutch Fleet was ſeen off of Dover on the 3d of November, ſteering their Courſe Weſtward, ſo numerous, that they were ſix Hours in paſſing by that Harbour, being rang'd in a Line ſeven Leagues long: That on the 4th they were diſcover'd off of Portſmouth and the Iſle of Wight; but ſtill he hop'd that the Lord Dartmouth wou'd attend them, and give a good Account of them. The 4th of November being the auſpicious Birth-Day of the Prince of Orange, now thirty eight Years of Age, moſt were of Opinion that he wou'd land that Day at or near Portſmouth; but that being a Sunday, his Highneſs dedicated it to Devotion and the Service of God, and ſo proceeded more to the Weſt, deſigning for Dartmouth or Torbay. That Night a ſtrong Gale and a bold Pilot carry'd the Fleet beyond the deſir'd Ports; and when Day-light ſhew'd them the Coaſt, they then ſaw the Inconvenience and Danger, and apprehended that they might be forc'd to ſail on to Falmouth, or a worſe Place, which gave them a very melancholy Proſpect. But in the Moment that they ſaw this Danger, the Wind providentially turn'd to the South, and with a gentle Gale carry'd them directly into Torbay, and to the moſt convenient Place for landing a Body of Horſe, that perhaps was to be found round the whole Iſland; ſo that in three Hours time, as the foreſaid Biſhop tells us, above ſeven Thouſand Horſes were landed. And it is further remarkable, that the Wind ſoon after turning Weſt, did that Night blow into ſuch a Storm, that the Lord Dartmouth, who came up with the King's Fleet in ſight of them,

He arrives with his Fleet at Torbay.

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

them, was driven back, and ſo ſhatter'd, that he cou'd no longer keep out at Sea, but was forc'd at length to go into Portſmouth.

Upon the Fleet's arrival in Torbay, the Prince of Orange gave Order that his great Standard ſhou'd be put up, which was accordingly done: The White Flag was put uppermoſt, ſignifying his moſt gracious Offer of Peace to all ſuch as wou'd live peaceably; and under that the Red or Bloody Flag was ſet up, ſignifying War to all that oppos'd his juſt Deſigns. Drawing into the Bay's Mouth, they diſcover'd the People of Devonſhire, who flock'd in great Numbers to the Sea Shore, not to oppoſe the Prince's Landing, but to welcome their Deliverer with joyful Shouts and Acclamations, and to furniſh Him and his Followers with Proviſions for their Refreſhment. Coming very near, juſt before any landed, a certain Chaplain, on board the Golden-Sun, from the Top of the uppermoſt Cabin, flouriſh'd a Bible, and with a Voice loud enough to be heard by the People, cry'd out, For the Proteſtant Religion, and maintaining the Goſpel in Truth and Purity, we are all by the Goodneſs and Providence of God come hither, after ſo many Storms and Tempeſts. Moreover, continu'd he, It is the Prince of Orange that is come, a zealous Defender of that Faith which is truly Ancient, Catholick and Apoſtolical, who is the Supream Governor of this great and formidable Fleet. Having rode at Anchor for a ſhort Space, the Prince of Orange, about Noon-Day and fine Weather, landed with Mareſchal Scomberg, and divers Lords, Knights and Gentlemen: At which the Admiral of Rotterdam gave divers Guns, the Trumpets ſounded, the Hautboys play'd, the Drums beat, and the Soldiers ſhouted, which was anſwer'd by the joyful Huzzas and Acclamations of the People.

Where he ſafely lands with all his Forces.

Thus the Prince of Orange, after five Days Expedition, ſafely arriv'd in England within twenty Miles of Exeter, on the 5th of November, a Day already famous and auſpicious for the Diſcovery of the Gun-Powder Plot above fourſcore Years before, and which Providence hath thought fit to render more memorable, by a Second Deliverance from Popery. The firſt Footing upon Engliſh Ground, in a ſhort time caus'd him to take full Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh Dominions; which Poſſeſſion, in ſpight of the moſt formidable Powers and Oppoſitions, he held to the Day of his Death.

The State of the Nation, and of the King.

I 1. FROM the 5th of November this Year we may date a new Æra in England; in which Kingdom were now contending oppoſite Powers and Armies in the very Bowels: A diſmal Proſpect of it ſelf, and very threatening, and yet very little frightful to the Nation in general, who were more fill'd with Hopes and Expectations, than Fears and Apprehenſions. Yet of the contending Parties, the the moſt odious to the People, that of King James was the moſt powerful in Appearance, and that which for a few Days, ſeem'd moſt likely to carry the Cauſe. And it is believ'd by the wiſeſt Heads, that if his Majeſty had immediately Headed his Forces, Hors'd his Foot-men, and rode directly to the Prince, he had both prevented the Revolt of his Soldiers, and defeated the Power of his Adverſaries: But this was a critical Juncture, the Iſſue of which, as he cou'd not foreſee, ſo it became beyond his Will, as well as his Power, to prevent. He was tired and confounded in his Mind and Intellects, and no leſs haraſs'd and diſorder'd in his Body and Conſtitution. He found himſelf deceiv'd, and involv'd in innumerable Difficulties, and knew not how to enter upon ſudden Action, ſuch as was anſwerable to this extraordinary Emergency. How far the Conſciouſneſs of his former Actions affected him, is hard to determine; but ſtill he had great Hopes from the Fidelity of his Army, and the Addreſſes of his People, in both which he had put ſuch a General Confidence, as was more Romantick than Reaſonable. He had been ſo much flush'd and elevated, that he knew not how to ſuſpect or diſtruſt, and therefore knew not how to make uſe of a ſound Phyſician. This may be illuſtrated from a Private Inſtance and Story, related to the Author by an Eye-Witneſs of ſufficient Credit. About the Time of the Prince's Landing, five or ſix conſiderable Officers in the Army, and two or three Gentlemen, all in favour with the King, met at a Tavern in Weſtminſter; where drinking pretty hard, one of the Officers, moſt overtaken in Wine, freely and affectionately began A Health to the Prince of Orange, and Confuſion to all his Oppoſers. This ſtartled the reſt of the Company, and brought them to a ſerious Conſultation the next Morning what to do upon this Diſcovery, which they found neceſſary to be made known to the King Himſelf. This laſt was very uneaſy to them, and every one was glad to decline the Office, as invidious and ungrateful. Yet their Loyalty made them ſenſible of the Neceſſity, and therefore it was concluded, that Lots ſhou'd be drawn, and the Perſon upon whom the Lot fell ſhou'd go immediately and diſcover the Matter to the King. This was done; and the Officer, whoſe Chance it was to make the Diſcovery, was ſo far from being encourag'd, that he was immediately Caſhier'd, and the criminous Perſon taken into greater Favour. Which laſt was more ſurprizing to the Company, who ſhaking their Heads, ſaid, The King believes his Enemies more than his Friends, and he has put it out of our Power to ſerve him.

1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

A private Story of the King.

However, his Majeſty took all the ordinary Methods of ſecuring himſelf againſt a Foreign Invaſion, and what is common between one Enemy and another, where there is no Appearance of a Revolt and Defection; ſtill apprehending that his ſtanding Forces and Militia were ſufficient for that End. The Duke of Berwick was ſent down to Portſmouth with moſt of the Troops that were in and about London, to ſecure that important Place, and to deter People from joining his Highneſs; and all the reſt of the Forces, juſt before encreas'd by the coming over of four thouſand Iriſh, were order'd to march with all Speed towards him, and to rendezvous on Salisbury Plain, where the King deſign'd to command in Perſon, and where he reckoned to have had an Army of thirty thouſand Men; but afterwards it was thought fit to leave ſeven or eight thouſand behind in London, under the Command of the Lord Craven, to ſuppreſs the Inſurrections of the Mob. At the ſame time all Endeavours were us'd to render the Prince and his Army contemptible in the Sight of the People, by printing a Liſt of them, and giving out, That but nine of the Nobility, and Gentry only, and a few Rabble, appear'd for him. Nay, the King being inform'd that the City of London, and the Counties of York and Kent, deſign'd to addreſs him to incline him to come to an Accommodation with the Prince of Orange, his Majeſty raſhly declar'd

He provides againſt the Prince of Orange.

clar'd in Council, That he wou'd look upon all Thoſe as his Enemies who ſhou'd pretend to adviſe him to treat with the Invader of his Kingdoms.

His Declaration againſt him.

Accordingly he caus'd a particular Declaration to be iſſu'd out againſt his Highneſs, immediately after his Landing, which contain'd, 'That it was 'but too evident by a late Declaration, publiſh'd by the Prince of Orange, 'that notwithſtanding the many ſpecious and plauſible Pretences it carries, 'his Deſigns in the Bottom did tend to nothing leſs than an abſolute uſurp-'ing of his Majeſty's Crown and Royal Authority, as might fully appear 'by his aſſuming to himſelf in the ſaid Declaration the Regal Style, re-'quiring the Peers of the Realm, both Spiritual and Temporal, and all 'other Perſons of all Degrees, to obey and aſſiſt him in the Execution 'of his Deſigns; a Prerogative inſeparable from the Imperial Crown of 'this Realm: Adding, That for a more undeniable Proof of his immode-'rate Ambition, and which nothing cou'd ſatisfy but the immediate Poſ-'ſeſſion of the Crown it ſelf, he call'd in Queſtion the Legitimacy of the 'Prince of Wales, his Majeſty's Son and Heir apparent; tho' by the Pro-'vidence of God, there were preſent at his Birth ſo many Witneſſes of un-'queſtionable Credit, as if it ſeem'd the peculiar Care of Heaven, on pur-'poſe to diſappoint ſo wicked and unparallell'd an Attempt. That in or-'der to the effecting his ambitious Deſigns, he ſeem'd deſirous to ſubmit 'all to a Free Parliament, hoping thereby to ingratiate himſelf with the 'People; tho' nothing was more evident than that a Parliament cou'd not 'be Free ſo long as there was an Army of Foreigners in the Heart of his 'Majeſty's Kingdoms, ſo that in Truth he was the ſole Obſtructor of ſuch 'a Free Parliament. His Majeſty being fully reſolv'd, as he had already 'declared, ſo ſoon as by the Bleſſing of God his Kingdom ſhou'd be deli-'ver'd from this Invaſion, to call a Parliament, which cou'd no longer be 'liable to the leaſt Objection of not being freely choſen, ſince his Majeſty 'had actually reſtored all the Boroughs and Corporations to their ancient 'Rights and Privileges. Upon which Conſiderations, and the Obligations 'of their Duty and natural Obedience, his Majeſty cou'd no ways doubt, 'but that all his faithful and loving Subjects wou'd readily and heartily 'concur and join with him in the entire Suppreſſing and Repelling of his 'Enemies and rebellious Subjects.' The greateſt part of the Nation were already ſo prepoſſeſs'd in Favour of the Prince's good Intentions, that this ſharp Declaration ſerv'd only to exaſperate their Minds againſt King James; but his Majeſty and Counſellors were now thought to be turn'd giddy with Reſentment, and incapable of following thoſe wiſe Methods which were only to be ſuggeſted by cool and ſober Thoughts.

The Progreſs of the Prince of Orange.

2. In the mean time they were not a little encourag'd by the ſlow Progreſs of the Prince of Orange after his firſt Landing, which was in a Countrey that had felt the ſevere Effects of the Duke of Monmouth's Expedition. Tho' the People were ready enough to ſhew their Joy and good Wiſhes, they were extremely fearful of offering their Services and Perſons. They were ignorant of the Engagements of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and chief Gentlemen of England to aſſiſt and join with him; and Monmouth met with greater Encouragement than the Prince did, liſting more in one Day, than his Highneſs did in ten. The Men of Devonſhire, by way of Excuſe, told the Prince's Officers, That they were enough of themſelves to do the Buſineſs, and wanted no more: And indeed the Prince's Army, conſidering how carefully it was compos'd, after it was well refreſh'd, was far from being contemptible; conſiſting of ſeventy eight Field-Officers, near a thouſand inferior Officers, and fifteen thouſand four hundred Soldiers, Horſe and Foot, which was above two thouſand more than the

Liſt

Liſt publiſh'd by King James's Order made them. The Prince brought Arms for as many more as he had with him; but being a regular and ſelect Army, and not needing ſuch immediate Aſſiſtance as the Duke of Monmouth, he was not ſo haſty in granting Commiſſions to raiſe Regiments, for which he ſhou'd be in Honour oblig'd to ſee Proviſion made. The firſt he gave, were to the Lord Viſcount Mordant, Sir John Guiſe, and Sir Robert Peyton, who being very curious in their Men, were longer in filling their Regiments, than Monmouth was in compleating his Army. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

Moving forward with this Army, the firſt Place the Prince's Declaration was publickly read at, was Newton-Abbot, a Market-Town, a few Miles from Torbay, in the Way to Exeter. And the firſt Man who read it was a Miniſter of the Church of England; in the ſame Day that the Prince march'd thither, and took up his Quarters at Sir William Courtney's Houſe, where he was nobly entertain'd, and ſtaid two Nights. From thence he advanc'd to Chudleigh, and thence, on the 8th of November, to the City of Exeter, where moſt People impatiently waited his Coming, and whither Dr. Burnet was ſent before to prepare Quarters for his Highneſs. The Biſhop's Palace and the Deanery being both view'd, the latter was thought to be more convenient, and accordingly choſen. On the Friday his Highneſs enter'd that City in a ſplendid and triumphant Manner, the Warlike Harmony of his Trumpets, Hautboys and Kettle-Drums, being drown'd by the louder Peals of the Bells, Huzzas and Acclamations of the overjoy'd Multitudes. This ſolemn Entry was ſtill extoll'd and magnify'd at London; and a Paper was publiſh'd with an Account of the Form and Manner of it; adding ſuch a terrible Deſcription of the Findland and Swiſs Guards, as made a ſtrong Impreſſion on the Vulgar, who look'd on King James's Liſt of his Forces, tho' not much ſhort of Truth, as a mere Fable to leſſen his Strength. The Biſhop of the Place, Dr. Lamplugh, as ſoon as he heard of the Prince's Landing, to teſtify his Loyalty, immediately poſted to the Court, where he was rewarded with the Archbiſhoprick of York, which for ill Purpoſes had been kept too long vacant. He was ſucceeded by Sir Jonathan Trelawny of Briſtol, one of the ſeven ſuffering Biſhops; whoſe Biſhoprick was deſign'd for Mr. Archdeacon Chetwood, who, as it happen'd, never enjoy'd it, tho', we are told, he very well deſerv'd it for the good Advice he often gave to the King, and the Steadineſs he ſhew'd in the time of the greateſt Danger. He arrives at Exeter.

The firſt thing the Prince did after his Arrival at Exeter, was to go and pay his grateful Acknowledgments to Almighty God, and to cauſe Te Deum to be ſung in the Cathedral Church for his happy and ſafe Arrival. After the Collects were ended, Dr. Burnet began to read his Highneſs's Declaration, at which the Miniſters of the Church there preſent, were ſo ſurpriz'd, that they immediately left their Seats and went out; however, the Doctor continu'd reading, and the Declaration being ended, he cry'd, God ſave the Prince of Orange! to which the major Part of the Congregation anſwer'd, Amen. The Prince being for a while fix'd in the Deanery, and the main Body of his Army being advanc'd near Exeter, it was diſpos'd of, the Horſe about Tiverton, Culhampton, Honyton, and Places adjacent; and part of the Foot encamp'd on Cliſt-Heath. And now his Highneſs's main Care was both to refreſh, and to re-inforce his Army: The Drums beat for Volunteers, and not only every Regiment of Engliſh and Scotch that came with the Prince, and which wanted Men, were compleated, but the new Regiments of Sir John Guiſe, and Sir Robert Peyton, fill'd up a-pace: Horſes for re-mounting the Cavalry, and for the Train of Artillery, were bought up; and, in ſum, every thing was provided to march towards Salisbury. His Declaration read there.

3. Tho' the Prince of Orange had landed without Obſtruction, and proceeded without Oppoſition, yet for the firſt nine Days he was not without Difficulties and Perplexities. He was made to believe that all the Gentlemen of the Weſt wou'd join with him upon his firſt Landing; but during this Space ſcarce any Perſon of Note had come in to him: He found that the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Exeter came to viſit him, rather out of Fear than Affection, being buſyed in dubious Conſultations among themſelves: He found that as his Recruits increas'd, he wanted Money to pay off his Men, and the Countenance of great Perſons; and indeed he began ſo far to doubt the Succeſs of his Expedition, that in a Council of War held at Exeter, he ſuffer'd it to be propos'd to him to re-imbark for Holland. But on the tenth Day, November the 15th, there appear'd conſiderable Numbers of the Gentry of the adjacent Parts, and generally firm Church-Men, as Sir Edward Seymour, Sir William Portman, Sir Francis War, Colonel Palmer, &c. Theſe having waited on his Highneſs, he made this memorable Speech to them: Tho' we know not your Perſons, yet we have a Catalogue of your Names, and remember the Characters of your Worth and Intereſt in your Countrey. You ſee, we are come according to your Invitation, and our Promiſe. Our Duty to God obliges us to protect the Proteſtant Religion, and our Love to Mankind your Liberties and Properties. We expected you, that dwelt ſo near the Place of our Landing, wou'd have join'd us ſooner: Not that it is now too late, nor that we want your Military Aſſiſtance ſo much as your Countenance and Preſence, to juſtify our declared Pretenſions, in order to accompliſh our good and gracious Deſign. Tho' we brought both a good Fleet, and a good Army, to render theſe Kingdoms happy, by reſcuing all Proteſtants from Popery, Slavery, and Arbitrary Power, by reſtoring them to their Rights and Properties eſtabliſh'd by Law, and by promoting of Peace and Trade, which is the Soul of Government, and the very Life-Blood of a Nation; yet we rely more on the Goodneſs of God, and the Juſtice of our Cauſe, than on any Human Force or Power whatſoever. Yet ſince God is pleas'd we ſhall make uſe of Human Means, and not expect Miracles for our Preſervation and Happineſs, let us not neglect making uſe of this gracious Opportunity, but with Prudence and Courage put in Execution our ſo honourable Purpoſe. Therefore, Gentlemen, Friends and Fellow-Proteſtants, we bid you, and all your Followers, moſt heartily welcome to our Court and Camp. Let the whole World now judge if our Pretenſions are not Juſt, Generous and Sincere, and above Price; ſince we might have even a BRIDGE OF GOLD to return back: But it is our Principle and Reſolution, rather to die in a good Cauſe, than live in a bad one; well knowing that Virtue and True Honour is its own Reward, and the Happineſs of Mankind our great and only Deſign.

The Gentry come in to him.

His Speech to them.

Upon the Arrival of theſe Gentlemen at Exeter, Sir Edward Seymour ſent for Dr. Burnet, and ask'd him, Why they were a Rope of Sand, why they had not an ASSOCIATION? Whereupon one was drawn up and laid on a Table in the Prince's Lodgings, where the Lords and Gentlemen of his Court and others ſign'd it, as following: 'We whoſe Names are hereunto 'ſubſcrib'd, who have now join'd with the Prince of Orange, for the De- 'fence of the Proteſtant Religion, and for the Maintaining the Ancient 'Government, and the Laws and Liberties of England, Scotland and 'Ireland, do Engage to Almighty God, to his Highneſs the Prince, and 'to one another, to ſtick firm to this Cauſe, in the Defence of it, and ne- 'ver to depart from it till our Religion, Laws and Liberties are ſo far ſe- 'cured to us in a Free Parliament, that they ſhall be no more in Danger of 'falling under Popery and Slavery. And whereas we are engag'd in this

'Common

'Common Cauſe under the Protection of the Prince of Orange, by which means his Perſon is expos'd to Danger, and to the curſed Attempt of Papiſts and other bloody Men; We do therefore ſolemnly engage to God, and one another, That if any ſuch Attempt be made upon him, we will purſue not only thoſe that make it, but all their Adherents, and all that we find in Arms againſt us, with the utmoſt Severity of a juſt Revenge, to their Ruin and Deſtruction. And that the Execution of any ſuch Attempt (which God of his infinite Mercy forbid) ſhall not divert us from proſecuting this Cauſe which we do now undertake, but that it ſhall engage us to carry it on with all the Rigour that ſo barbarous an Attempt ſhall deſerve.' This Aſſociation was ſent and ſign'd in many Places, and particularly by many in the Univerſity of Oxford, to which Place the Prince was earneſtly invited; and his Highneſs deſign'd to have gone thither, had not the Neceſſity of his Affairs hinder'd it. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

The neighbouring Gentry having led the way, in going over to the Prince, they were ſoon follow'd by ſeveral other Perſons of greater Note, the Lord Colcheſter, Son to the Earl Rivers, Lieutenant of the Lord Dover's Troop of Life-Guards, waited upon his Highneſs, accompany'd by the honourable Mr. Wharton, Colonel Godfrey, John Howe, Eſq; four Life-Guards of the Troop, and about threeſcore Men more on Horſeback. Theſe Perſons of Quality were follow'd by the Earl of Abington, Captain Clarges, Mr. Ruſſel and others. But what was ſtill more material, the Lord Cornbury, Son to the Earl of Clarendon, Colonel of Dragoons, being come to Salisbury, and pretending an Order from the King to go and beat up one of the Enemies advanc'd Poſts, carry'd off with him his own Regiment, and thoſe of Horſe of Berwick, St. Albans, and Fenwick; and with the major Part of them, went over to the Prince at Exeter. About the ſame Time his Highneſs was inform'd from Cheſhire, that the Lord Delamere having receiv'd certain Intelligence of his Landing in the Weſt, and ſeeing the Iriſh throng over in Arms, under Pretence of aſſiſting the King, but in reality to command the Nation, had thereupon aſſembled fifty Horſemen, and at the Head of them march'd to Manchеſter; and that the next Day he march'd to Bodin-Downs, his Forces being then an hundred and fifty ſtrong, declaring his Deſign was to join the Prince, and inviting all his Tenants to follow him in that honoorable Cauſe and Enterprize. About the ſame Time the Lord Lovelace was alſo marching towards Exeter, with Deſign to bring to his Highneſs a Re-inforcement of ſixty or ſeventy Horſemen; but paſſing through the Town of Cirenceſter, he was by the Duke of Beaufort's Orders made Priſoner by the Militia of that County, with thirteen of his Followers, after an obſtinate Skirmiſh, in which ten or twelve Men were kill'd on both Sides. Several great Perſons join with the Prince.

4. The Court at Whitehall was continually inform'd of theſe Tranſactions, and endeavour'd to make the beſt of them in the publick Accounts; and particularly there appear'd ſome Joy for the taking the Lord Lovelace; but this was ſoon overwhelm'd by the killing News of the Lord Cornbury's Defection, which was like to break and ruin all their Meaſures. For upon the hearing of it, both the Artillery, the reſt of the Troops, and the King's Equipage, that was advancing towards Salisbury, had Orders to ſtop their March; it being uncertain whether his Majeſty wou'd go to the Army or not. However, after ſeveral Conſultations, which the Earl of Feverſham held with the General Officers, and at which Count de Roye aſſiſted, it was advis'd and judg'd neceſſary, That the King ſhou'd haſten his Departure to the Army, there by his Preſence to keep thoſe firm to their Duty who were in a ſtaggering Condition. The Court alarm'd.

1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

A Petition from ſeveral Lords Spiritual and Temporal.

On the contrary ſide, moſt of the Proteſtant Lords, both Spiritual and Temporal, who were then in London, namely, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Archbiſhop of York Elect, the Biſhops of St. Aſaph, Ely, Rocheſter, Peterborough and Oxford; the Dukes of Grafton and Ormond; the Earls Dorſet, Clare, Clarendon, Burlington, Angleſley and Rocheſter; Viſcount Newport, and the Lords Paget, Chandois and Oſſulſton, drew up a moſt wholeſome Petition, which was conſider'd, agreed on and ſign'd at the Biſhop of Rocheſter's Houſe at Weſtminſter. And tho' they had heard that his Majeſty had proteſted, He wou'd take it highly ill of any Man, that ſhou'd offer him a Thing of that Nature, yet the two Archbiſhops, with the Biſhops of Ely and Rocheſter, ventur'd to deliver the Petition, which runs in theſe Words: 'May it pleaſe your Majeſty, We your Maje-
'ſty's moſt Loyal Subjects, in the deep Senſe of the Miſeries of a War, now
'breaking forth in the Bowels of your Kingdom, and of the Danger to 'which your Majeſty's Sacred Perſon is thereby like to be expos'd, as alſo
'of the Diſtractions of your People by reaſon of the preſent Grievances,
'do think our ſelves bound in Conſcience of the Duty we owe to God
'and our Holy Religion, to your Majeſty and our Countrey, moſt hum-
'bly to offer to your Majeſty, That in our Opinion, the only viſible Way
'to preſerve your Majeſty, and this your Kingdom, wou'd be the Calling
'of a Parliament, Regular and Free in all its Circumſtances. We there'fore moſt earneſtly beſeech your Majeſty, That you wou'd be graciouſly
'pleas'd with all Speed to call ſuch a Parliament; wherein We ſhall be 'moſt ready to promote ſuch Counſels and Reſolutions of Peace and Settle- 'ment in Church and State, as may conduce to your Majeſty's Honour
'and Safety, and to the Quieting the Minds of your People. We do like-
'wiſe humbly beſeech your Majeſty, in the mean Time to uſe ſuch Means
'[viz. A Treaty with the Prince, and thoſe who had declared for him]
'for the preventing the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, as to your Majeſty ſhall
'ſeem moſt meet.

It was ſaid there was a ſharp Anſwer to be given to this good Petition, which was the Senſe of all the King's Friends in the Nation, except a few deſperate Men, whoſe Crimes had made them dread an After-Reckoning, and ſome others who choſe to hazard all, rather than to truſt to a Parliament. However, two Days after, the Lords thought it neceſſary for their Vindication, to publiſh the Petition; which ſo enrag'd the Jeſuits, that they printed ſevere Reflections upon it. But the Day after was publiſh'd this Anſwer of the King's; My Lords, What you ask of me, I moſt paſſionately deſire; and I promiſe upon the FAITH OF A KING, That I will have a Parliament, and ſuch an One as you ask for, as ſoon as ever the Prince of Orange has quitted this Realm: For how is it poſſible a Parliament ſhou'd be Free in all its Circumſtances, as you petition for, while an Enemy is in the Kingdom, and can make a Return of near a Hundred Voices? By this unſatisfactory, tho' plauſible Anſwer, the King in effect ruin'd his Intereſt; for the leaſt diſcerning Perſons cou'd not but perceive, That the Power of the Prince was the only Human Security the Nation had for the Calling of a Free Parliament, and that if the King ſhou'd force his Highneſs to leave the Kingdom, all their Laws and Liberties muſt become precarious, and lie at the Mercy of the Conqueror.

The King's Anſwer.

The King prepares to meet the Prince.

II. 1. The Prince of Orange had been landed twelve Days before the King remov'd from London, of which Space of Time every Day and Hour was precious. But his Majeſty was diſtracted between good and bad Advice, harraſs'd in his Body, as well as diſorder'd in his Mind, and diſ-heartned with black and ominous Apprehenſions, the Effects of Conſciouſneſs, as well as Superſtition. In the mean time the Mob were as ſuperſtitious and credulous dulous as the Papiſts, and took particular Notice of the ſudden Fall of the Scepter of Queen Mary of the Statue on the Royal-Exchange, as portending the Downfal of Popery; and farther they were alarm'd with the Report of a vaſt Number of Caldrons, Gridirons, Knives and Spits, being found in the Popiſh Seminary at St. John's; and likewiſe with the Belief of a Holy League between the Kings of England and France to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion. The Diſturbances, occaſion'd from theſe Opinions, and the general Hatred to Popery, might be one Reaſon of this King's delaying his Departure; but however in Concluſion, he reſolv'd to venture his Fortune in the Field, and to ſet forward on the 17th of November. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

But before he left Whitehall, his Majeſty, who was apprehenſive that the Example of the Lords Colcheſter and Cornbury, wou'd prove contagious, aſſembled the Officers that were ſtill in London, among whom were the Duke of Grafton, the Lord Churchill, Colonel Trelawny and Colonel Kirk, and ſpoke to them after this moving Manner: According to the Lords Petition I have engag'd my Royal Word to call a Free Parliament as ſoon as the Prince of Orange has quitted the Kingdom; and am reſolv'd to do all that lies in my Power, to quiet the Minds of my People, by ſecuring their Religion, Laws and Liberties: If you deſire any more, I am ready to grant it. But, added he, if after all this, any of you is not ſatisfy'd, let him declare himſelf: I am willing to grant Paſſes to all ſuch as deſire to go over to the Prince of Orange, and ſpare them the Shame of deſerting their Lawful Sovereign. This ſo far affected them, that ſome of them, at leaſt, promis'd to ſpend their Blood in his Defence. At the ſame Time the Lord-Mayor of London having waited on the King to wiſh him a good Journey, his Majeſty recommended to him the Care of the City, telling him, That he had left a ſufficient Number of Troops for their Defence; and that in caſe of Need, he might apply himſelf to the Privy-Council; aſſuring him withal, That if he return'd victorious, he wou'd punctually perform what he had already promis'd for the Security of their Religion and Liberties. But the Council then left at Whitehall deſtroy'd the Force of theſe fair Proteſtations: For of the Five Perſons it conſiſted of, Three were odious to the Nation, viz. the Chancellor, and the Lords Arundel and Bellaſis, Two Roman Catholicks, the Fourth the Lord Preſton, who was ſuſpected of favouring Popery; and the Fifth, the Lord Godolphin, a Perſon againſt whom there was no Exception, beſides continuing there ſo long. But Father Petre, one of the deſign'd Number, having been moſt deeply involv'd in all Irregularities, was infinitely afraid of the threatning Storm; and therefore thought it high Time for him to retire to France; which he did under the Protection of the Lord Walgrave, who was ſent Ambaſſador to that Court, in the room of Colonel Skelton.

His Speech to his Chief Officers,

And to the Lord-Mayor.

2. Tho' the Court was ſenſible of the very ill Condition of their Affairs, yet ſtill they put on a Face of Aſſurance, and ſent the Duke of Hamilton to Scotland, giving it out, 'That he wou'd ſoon return with a conſiderable 'Body of Forces, which the Nobility of that Kingdom had rais'd for the 'King's Service.' Thus his Majeſty left London to go for Salisbury; and the better to ſhew an Affection for the Church of England, he took along with him a Proteſtant Chaplain, Mr. Archdeacon Chetwood, formerly mention'd, who bravely caus'd the Romiſh Prieſts to remove out of the Biſhop's Chapel, which had been appointed for the King's Uſe, and had it daily crowded with thoſe of the Eſtabliſh'd Religion. The King arriv'd at Salisbury on the 19th at Night, fatigu'd, diſorder'd and troubled with Bleeding at the Noſe: He was immediately waited on and complemented by ſuch Officers of the Army as were moſt devoted to him, who all expreſs'd their Abhorrence of the Defection of the Lord Cornbury, which nevertheleſs was ap-

His ill Fortune.

prov'd of by a great many. The next Day, his Majeſty going to view Part of his Army which quarter'd Eight Miles from Salisbury, his Noſe fell a bleeding a freſh, and in ſuch violent Manner, that nothing cou'd ſtop it but the Breathing one of his Veins; which Illneſs, or ominous Circumſtance as it was accounted, hinder'd him from going the next Day to Warminſter, the moſt advanc'd Poſt of his Army. On the ſame unlucky Day, moſt of the Chief Officers, and even ſome of thoſe who diſapprov'd the Lord Cornbury's Action, apply'd themſelves to the General, the Earl of Feverſham, deſiring his Excellency to aſſure the King, 'That upon any Occaſion they 'ſhou'd be ready to ſpill the laſt Drop of their Blood in his Service; but 'yet they cou'd not in Conſcience fight againſt a Prince, who was come 'over with no other Deſign than to procure the Calling of a Free Parlia-'ment, for the Security of their Religion and Liberties.

And now the King begun to underſtand how little he was to depend upon that Army on whom he had plac'd his greateſt Confidence; and the Earl of Feverſham, who ſtrongly ſuſpected the Lord Churchill, earneſtly conjured his Majeſty to have him ſecured; to which the King however cou'd never be brought to conſent. We are told, that Colonel Windham likewiſe, under the Emblem of a Lap-Dog, gave his Majeſty to underſtand, how commonly Favourites were good for nothing, but to no Effect. Theſe Suſpicions prov'd better grounded than his Majeſty believ'd; for the very next Day, the Lord Churchill, who commanded a Brigade of about Five Thouſand Men, went over to his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, with as many as were willing to follow him; among whom were the Duke of Grafton, Colonel Barkley, and Four or Five Captains of his Regiment of Dragoons. This Defection was a killing Surprize to the King, who ſtill knew not how to believe ſo much of a Perſon on whom he had beſtow'd diſtinguiſhing Favours, and whom he had rais'd to be a Lieutenant-General, a Captain of a Troop of Life-Guards, and a Gentleman of his Bed-Chamber. To aggravate this Action, it was reported by ſome, and inſinuated by Father Orleans, that he had laid a Deſign, with Colonel Kirk, who commanded at Warminſter, to carry off the King to the Prince of Orange, which was prevented by his Majeſty's Bleeding at the Noſe. But this Report appear'd to be altogether groundleſs; but for his going over to the Prince, the following Letter he then ſent to the King may ſerve to clear him from all ſuch Aſperſions: 'SIR, Since Men are ſeldom ſuſpected of Sincerity, when 'they act contrary to their Intereſts; and tho' my dutiful Behaviour to 'your Majeſty in the worſt of Times (for which I acknowledge my poor 'Services much over-pay'd) may not be ſufficient to incline you to a cha-'ritable Interpretation of my Actions; yet I hope the great Advantage I 'enjoy under your Majeſty, which I can never expect in any other Change 'of Government, may reaſonably convince your Majeſty and the World, 'that I am acted by a Higher Principle, when I offer'd that Violence to 'my Inclination and Intereſt, as to deſert your Majeſty at a Time, when 'your Affairs ſeem to challenge the ſtricteſt Obedience from all your Sub-'jects; much more from One who lies under the greateſt Perſonal Obliga-'tions imaginable to your Majeſty. This, Sir, cou'd proceed from nothing 'but the inviolable Dictates of my Conſcience, and a neceſſary Concern for 'my Religion, which no good Man can oppoſe, and with which I am in-'ſtructed, Nothing ought to come in Competition. Heaven knows with 'what Partiality my dutiful Opinion of your Majeſty, has hitherto repre-'ſented thoſe unhappy Deſigns, which inconſiderate and ſelf-intereſted Men 'have fram'd againſt your Majeſty's True Intereſt and the Proteſtant Re-'ligion. But as I can no longer join with ſuch, to give a Pretence by 'Conqueſt to bring them to effect; ſo I will always, with the Hazard of 'my Life and Fortune (ſo much your Majeſty's Due) endeavour to pre-make himſelf far greater in reducing and humbling the moſt exorbitant and exalted Power in the Chriſtian World.

The King returns from Saliſbury.

The poor King finding himſelf thus deſerted, and his beſt Friends falling away from him; and being falſely alarm'd, as if Duke Schomberg, the Prince's General, was marching with all ſpeed to fight him, left Salisbury with great Precipitation, like one that fled before an Enemy; having firſt publiſh'd a Proclamation, November 22, 'Promiſing a free and abſolute Pardon to all 'his Subjects, who had taken up Arms, and join'd with the Prince of O- 'range, provided they quitted and deſerted him, within the Space of 'twenty Days.' But as he had the Mortification to ſee this Proclamation ſlighted and diſregarded, ſo in his Way towards Windſor he met with a greater, in ſeeing himſelf forſaken by his Royal Highneſs Prince George of Denmark, the Duke of Ormond, Sir George Hewett and others, who left him at Andover. The Prince, as he went off, wrote this remarkable Letter to his Majeſty: 'SIR, With a Heart full of Grief I am forc'd to write 'what Prudence wou'd not permit me to ſay to your Face; and may I e'er 'find Credit with your Majeſty, and Protection from Heaven, as what I 'now do is free from Paſſion, Vanity or Deſign, with which Actions of 'this Nature are too often accompany'd. I am not ignorant of the frequent 'Miſchiefs wrought in the World, by factious Pretences of Religion; but 'were not Religion the moſt juſtifiable Cauſe, it wou'd not be made the 'moſt ſuperior Pretence. And your Majeſty has already ſhewn too inte- 'reſted a Senſe of Religion, to doubt the juſt Effects of it in one, whoſe Pra- 'ctices have, I hope, never given the World Cauſe to cenſure his real Con- 'viction of it, or his Backwardneſs to perform what his Honour and Con- 'ſcience prompt him to. How then can I any longer diſguiſe my juſt Con- 'cern for that Religion, in which I have been ſo happily educated, which 'my Judgment truly convinceth me to be the beſt, and for the Support of 'which I am ſo highly Intereſted in my Native Country? And is not Eng- 'land now, by the moſt endearing Tye, become ſo? While the reſtleſs Spi- 'rits of the Enemies of the Reform'd Religion, back'd by the cruel Zeal, 'and the prevailing Power of France, juſtly alarm and unite all the Prote- 'ſtant Princes of Chriſtendom, and engage them in ſo vaſt an Expence for the 'Support of it; Can I act ſo ungenerous and mean a Part, to deny my Concur- 'rence in ſuch worthy Endeavours, for the Diſabuſing your Majeſty, by the 'Re-inforcement of thoſe Laws, and the Re-eſtabliſhment of that Govern- 'ment, on which alone depends the Well-Being of your Majeſty, and of the 'Proteſtant Religion in Europe? This, Sir, is that irreſiſtible and only 'Cauſe, that cou'd come in Competition with my Duty and Obligation to 'your Majeſty, and be able to tear me from you, while the ſame affectio- 'nate Deſire to ſerve you continues in me. Cou'd I ſecure your Perſon by 'the Hazard of my Life, I ſhou'd think it cou'd not be better employ'd. 'And wou'd to God theſe your diſtracted Kingdoms might receive that ſa- 'tisfactory Compliance from your Majeſty, in all their juſtifiable Pretenſi- 'ons, as might, upon the only ſure Foundation, That of the Love and In- 'tereſt of your Subjects, eſtabliſh your Government, and as ſtrongly unite 'the Hearts of all your Subjects to you, as is that of, Yours, &c.

The Deſertion and Letter of Prince George.

The Prince advances from Exeter.

3. While the King's Power and Intereſt was daily weaken'd by Deſer- tion and Diſcord, the Prince of Orang's Party encreas'd, and was farther ſtrengthen'd by the Aſſociation formerly mention'd, ſign'd by all the Lords and Gentlemen that join'd his Highneſs at Exeter. So that upon the News of King James's being come to Salisbury, the Prince march'd out of Exe- ter with his Army, only leaving Sir John Guiſe, with his new-rais'd Regiment, to guard and ſecure that City; and his Van-Guard advancing towards Sherborn, a Party of King James's Horſe that were coming into the Town, ſuddenly retreated back to Salisbury. And here was the plain Appearance of War and a Battel, but it came only to a Skirmiſh at Wincaunton, between a Detachment of ſeventy Horſe, and fifty Dragoons and Granadeers of the Royal Army, commanded by Glifford, Sarsfield and Webb, and twenty five of the Prince's Men, commanded by one Campbel, a Lieutenant in Mackay's Regiment. Notwithſtanding the Inequality of Numbers, the latter fought with that undaunted Bravery, that they maintain'd their Ground for a conſiderable time: And when they were in danger of being overpower'd, a Miller, that by chance came that Way, alarm'd the King's Party, telling them, That he had overtaken a ſtrong Detachment of the Prince's Army, who were juſt entering the Town; upon which they retreated in great Confuſion, leaving ſeveral of their Men kill'd upon the Spot, and Cornet Webb wounded. This ſmall Action ſtruck a Terror into the Minds of King James's Forces, who were otherwiſe but little enclin'd to Fighting: And beſides, it was every where magnify'd ſo much above the real Truth, that it clearly ſhew'd how much the Nation wiſh'd the Proſperity of the Arms of the Prince of Orange.

A Skirmiſh.

The Prince's Entry into Salisbury.

His Highneſs however us'd the beſt Means to avoid all Bloodſhed; and being ſoon after inform'd of the King's Retiring to London, and the broken Remains of his Army to Reading, he reſolv'd to poſſeſs himſelf of Salisbury, and made a publick Entry into that City. Accordingly, accompany'd by the Prince of Denmark, the Dukes of Ormond and Grafton, Mareſchal Schomberg, Count Solms, Count Naſſaw, Heer Zuileſteen, Heer Bentinck, Heer Overkirk, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Macclesfield, the Lords Mordant, Churchill, Wiltſhire, Cornbury, Colcheſter, with many other Lords, Knights and Gentlemen, his Highneſs rode in a triumphant Manner through the Streets of Salisbury to the Biſhop's Palace, aſſign'd for his Lodgings. The Manner of their Entrance into this City, was far more glorious than that of Exeter; and the Formality and Solemnity of it was much encreas'd by the Management of the Mayor, Aldermen and Corporation. The Spectators were innumerable, and their Joy and Exultation almoſt incredible; and vaſt Multitudes came out of all Parts of the Countrey to get a Sight of him whom they look'd upon as the Hopes and Deliverer of the Nation.

Riſings in many Places.

4. The Defection of ſo great a Part of the Army was not the only Misfortune that alarm'd the King and Court, but the ſeveral Inſurrections, at the ſame time, in diſtant Parts of the Nation, gave a ſudden and fatal Turn to all their Deſigns. The Dutch Fleet was got ſafe into Plymouth, which Town the Earl of Bath had happily ſecur'd for the Prince of Orange, and caus'd his Declaration to be publickly read there. The Lord Lovelace being reſcu'd by a Party of his Highneſſes Forces, re-inforc'd the Earl of Shrewsbury and Sir John Guiſe, who had forc'd the Duke of Beaufort to ſurrender to them the important City of Briſtol. Likewiſe the Earl of Devonſhire, with ſeveral other Lords and Gentlemen, aſſembled at Derby, where on the 20th of November they deliver'd a Paper to the Mayor of that Town, importing, 'That as with Grief they apprehended the Calami'ties that might ariſe from the Landing of a Foreign Army in this Kingdom;
'ſo they cou'd not but deplore the Occaſion given for it, by ſo many Inva-
'ſions made of late Years on their Religion and Laws. And whereas they
'cou'd not think of any other Expedient to compoſe their Differences,
'and prevent Effuſion of Blood, than that which procur'd a Settlement in 'theſe Kingdoms, after the late Civil Wars, The Meeting and Sitting of a
'Parli-

'Parliament, freely and duly choſen; they thought themſelves oblig'd, as 'far as in them lay, to promote it; and the rather, becauſe the Prince of 'Orange, as appear'd by his Declaration, was willing to ſubmit his own 'Pretenſions, and all other Matters, to their Determination. They hear-'tily wiſh'd, and humbly pray'd, That his Majeſty wou'd conſent to this 'Expedient, in order to a future Settlement; and hop'd that ſuch a Tempe-'rament might be thought of, as that the Army then on foot might not 'give any Interruption to the Proceedings of a Parliament. But if, to the 'great Misfortune and Ruin of theſe Kingdoms, it ſhou'd prove otherwiſe, 'they farther declared, That they wou'd to their utmoſt, defend the Pro-'teſtant Religion, the Laws of the Kingdom, and the Rights and Liber-'ties of the Subject.

At Nottingham.

About the ſame time there was a general Rendezvous at Nottingham, conſiſting of a great Number of the Nobility, Gentry and Commonalty, who on the 22d of November ſubſcrib'd a remarkable Declaration; in which, having ſummarily rehears'd the Grievances of the Nation, they did unanimouſly declare, 'That not being willing to deliver their Poſterity over to 'ſuch a Condition of Popery and Slavery, as their Oppreſſions inevitably 'threatned, they wou'd, to the utmoſt of their Power oppoſe the ſame, by 'joining with the Prince of Orange, for the Recovery of their almoſt ruin'd 'Laws, Liberties and Religion. And herein they hop'd all good Pro-'teſtant Subjects wou'd, with their Lives and Fortunes, be aſſiſtant to them; 'and not be bugbear'd with the opprobrious Terms of Rebels, by which 'the Court wou'd fright them, to become perfect Slaves to their tyrannical 'Inſolences and Uſurpations. For they aſſur'd themſelves, that no rational 'and unbiaſs'd Perſon wou'd judge it Rebellion to defend their Laws and 'Religion, which all Engliſh Princes have ſworn at their Coronations; 'which Oath, how well it had been obſerv'd of late, they deſir'd a Free-'Parliament might have the Conſideration of. They indeed own'd it Re-'bellion to reſiſt a King that govern'd by Law; but he was always ac-'counted a Tyrant that made his Will his Law; and to reſiſt ſuch an one 'they juſtly eſteem'd no Rebellion, but a neceſſary Defence: And on this 'Conſideration they doubted not of all honeſt Mens Aſſiſtance, and humbly 'hop'd for, and implor'd the Great God's Protection, that turn'd the Hearts 'of People as pleas'd him beſt; it having been obſerv'd, That People cou'd 'never be of one Mind without his Inſpiration, which had in all Ages con-'firm'd that Obſervation, Vox Populi eſt Vox Dei.

At the ſame time alſo, the vigorous Earl of Danby, with his Son the Lord Dumblaine, the Lord Fairfax, the Lord Willoughby, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, made themſelves Maſters of the City of York; and having diſarm'd, and turn'd out all the Papiſts, who under the Protection of the Duke of Newcaſtle ſtood up for the King, declared for a Free Parliament. Likewiſe Colonel Copley, Deputy-Governor of Hull, ſurpriz'd that important Sea-Port Town, and made the Lord Langdale, the Popiſh Governor, the Lord Montgomery, and the reſt of the Papiſts, Priſoners; till, with the Help of the Towns-Men, Sea-Men, and part of the Garriſon, he had ſecured the Fort and Citadel. The great Town of Newcaſtle receiv'd the Lord Lumley, and declared for the Prince of Orange, and a Free Parliament. The Duke of Somerſet, the Earl of Oxford, and ſome other Perſons of Note, went over to the Prince; and the Earl of Stamford and the Lord Delamere, join'd the Earl of Shrewsbury at Briſtol. Soon after, the Duke of Ormond, being gone to Oxford with a Party of the Prince of Orange's Troops, caus'd his Highneſs's Declaration to be publickly read in that famous Univerſity. The Town of Berwick in a ſhort time follow'd the Example of York, and declar'd for the Prince; and five Commiſſioners from Scotland, of whoſe Number were the Duke of Queensbury and the Earl of Belcarris, were coming up to London, to demand a Free Parliament in that Kingdom. So that in a little time the Defection was almoſt Univerſal; and what is to be remember'd is, That the chief Actors were all Church of England Men, and proceeded, as Biſhop Sprat terms it, upon Church of England Principles; and many of thoſe who cou'd not comply with the after Settlement, were obſerv'd to be the moſt ſtrenuous Aſſerters of the Laws and Liberties of the Nation. To vindicate which, there came out a notable Piece, ſuppos'd to be written by the Earl of Danby himſelf, intituled The Thoughts of a private Perſon, about the Juſtice of the Gentlemens Undertaking at York, November 1688; wherein it is ſhew'd, That it is neither againſt Scripture, nor Moral Honeſty, to defend their Juſt and Legal Rights, againſt the Illegal and Unjuſt Invaders of them. Which Piece had a mighty Effect upon the Minds of many doubting Perſons; and was writ with that Modeſty, Strength and Clearneſs, that it was hardly ever exceeded by thoſe of the ſame Side, or perhaps fully anſwer'd by thoſe of the other.

The Princeſs Anne retires.

5. Amidſt all this diſtracting News, upon the King's arrival at London, November 26th, his Trouble was aggravated by the ſudden Receſs of the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, his ſecond Daughter, for whom he had a particular Tenderneſs, who was privately gone from White-Hall the Night before. The News of this moſt ſenſibly touch'd the King, who entering into his Palace, with a Flood of Tears, cry'd out, God help me, my own Children have forſaken me! It was juſt before reported that the Queen had treated her Royal Highneſs very harſhly and rudely, and had proceeded ſo far as to ſtrike her; ſo that the People were incens'd to that degree, that as ſoon as ſhe was miſſing, they offer'd to tear all the Romiſh Party in pieces, upon a Surmiſe that they had either privately murther'd her, or confin'd her to the Tower. And the King's own Guards appear'd ready to join with the enraged Mob, if the following Letter from the Princeſs to the Queen had not been produc'd:

Her Letter to the Queen.

'MADAM, I beg your Pardon, if I am 'ſo deeply afflicted with the ſurprizing News of the Prince's being gone, 'as not to be able to ſee you, but to leave this Paper to expreſs my hum-'ble Duty to the King and your Self; and to let you know that I am gone 'to abſent my ſelf, to avoid the King's Diſpleaſure, which I am not able 'to bear, either againſt the Prince, or my Self; and I ſhall ſtay at ſo great 'a Diſtance, as not to return before I hear the happy News of a Recon-'cilement. And as I am confident the Prince did not leave the King with 'any other Deſign, than to uſe all poſſible Means for his Preſervation; ſo 'I hope you will do me the Juſtice to believe, that I am not capable of 'following him for any other End. Never was any one in ſuch an unhap-'py Condition, ſo divided between Duty and Affection to a Father and a 'Husband; therefore I know not what to do, but to follow one, to pre-'ſerve the other. I ſee the general Falling-off of the Nobility and Gen-'try, who avow to have no other End, than to prevail with the King to 'ſecure their Religion, which they ſaw ſo much in Danger by the violent 'Counſels of the Prieſts; who, to promote their own Religion, did not 'care to what Danger they expos'd the King. I am fully perſuaded that 'the Prince of Orange deſigns the King's Safety and Preſervation, and hope 'all Things may be compos'd without more Bloodſhed, by calling of a 'Parliament. God grant a happy End to theſe Troubles, that the King's 'Reign may be proſperous, and that I may ſhortly meet you in Peace and 'Safety: 'Till then, let me beg you to continue the ſame favourable Opi-'nion that you hitherto had of, Yours, &c.

She meets her Huſband at Oxford.

The King was ſoon after inform'd, That her Royal Highneſs, with the Lady Churchill, and the Lady Berkley, the two ſhining Ladies of her Court,

Court, had privately taken Coach at the Biſhop of London's Houſe in Alderſgate-Street: From whence they went directly to the Rendezvous at Nottingham, attended by that noble Prelate in his Buff-Coat, and with all other Military Accoutrements, together with the Earl of Dorſet, and about forty Horſe-Men. At Nottingham, where ſhe was welcom'd with the utmoſt Joy and Reſpect, the Earl of Devonſhire gave her a Guard of two Hundred Men, by whom ſhe was ſafely conducted to Oxford; where the Prince, her beloved Husband, ſoon after met her, with a ſufficient Detachment of the Prince of Orange's Forces.

III. 1. We are now arriv'd at the Thorns and Troubles, with which a Crown is often attended, and ſometimes ſurrounded; and are come to conſider King James, the Monarch of three Kingdoms, under greater Struggles and Difficulties than the meaneſt of his Subjects; ſo that he began to be the Object of Commiſeration, as well as Indignation. His Countenance and Aſpect was pale and dejected, his Body and Conſtitution was diſordered and unhing'd, and his Mind and Intellects ſeem'd diſtracted and unfixt, if not down right infatuated. He was indeed ready to lay hold on any likely Support; and accordingly, the firſt Thing he did after his Return to London, was to ſummon and aſſemble all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal that were then in Town, to conſult with them about the preſent Exigencies and Emergencies. And tho' moſt of theſe Peers were ſuch as his Majeſty had either diſoblig'd or neglected in the height of his Proſperity, yet upon this tender Occaſion, as became noble Patriots, they all forgot their Perſonal Wrongs, being only intent upon the Dangers, which ſo imminently threatned both King and Kingdom. Among the reſt, the Earl of Clarendon, ſeeing the Extremity of the Diſtemper, ſpoke with that Freedom which a good and faithful Phyſician ought to uſe on the like Occaſion. He enumerated all the irregular and unwarrantable Proceedings of the governing Party, which had occaſion'd thoſe dangerous Symptoms that now appear'd in the Body Politick, and concluded with the Majority, upon a ſpeedy calling of a Free Parliament: And to remove the Difficulties that were objected, they repreſented to his Majeſty how neceſſary it was; ‘ Firſt, to grant a general Pardon to all thoſe who either came over with ‘ the Prince of Orange, or had join'd him ſince his Landing. Secondly, to ‘ depute ſome of the Lords to his Highneſs to treat with him about a Suſ‘ penſion of Arms, and to endeavour to bring Matters to an Accommoda‘ tion. And Laſtly, to turn all Papiſts immediately out of their Employ‘ ments, to convince the World that his Majeſty acted a ſincere Part.

The King's Difficulties.

He applies to the Lords.

Their Advice.

This being the joint Opinion of them all, the King took that Night to conſider of the Advice, and the next Day declar'd in Council, That he was reſolv'd to call a Free Parliament, that ſhou'd meet on the 15th of January next following: Accordingly the Lord Chancellor was order'd to iſſue out his Writs; and a deſirable Proclamation went forth on the 30th of November, wherein his Majeſty declar'd, ‘ That for the Security of all Perſons ‘ both in their Elections and Service in Parliament, all his Subjects ſhou'd ‘ have free Liberty to Elect; and all the Peers, and ſuch as ſhou'd be elect‘ ed Members of the Houſe of Commons, ſhou'd have full Liberty and ‘ Freedom to ſerve and ſit in Parliament, notwithſtanding they had taken ‘ up Arms, or committed any Act of Hoſtility, or been any way aiding ‘ or aſſiſting therein: That for the better Aſſurance thereof, his Majeſty ‘ had directed a general Pardon to all his Subjects to be forthwith prepar'd ‘ to paſs his Great-Seal. And for the reconciling all the publick Breaches, ‘ and obliterating the very Memory of all paſt Miſcarriages, his Majeſty ‘ did hereby exhort, and kindly admoniſh all his loving Subjects, to diſpoſe ‘ themſelves to elect ſuch Perſons for their Repreſentatives in Parliament, ‘ as

'as might not be byaſs'd by Prejudice or Paſſion, but qualify'd with Parts, 'Experience and Prudence, proper for this Conjuncture.' His Majeſty farther declar'd, That he wou'd nominate Commiſſioners to treat with the Prince of Orange; but as to that Part of the Lords Advice relating to the Roman Catholicks, it being a tender Point, his Majeſty only ſaid, He wou'd leave that Matter to be debated in Parliament. However, Sir Edward Hales, the Lieutenant of the Tower, having been obnoxious, and ſuſpected by the City, as if he had deſign'd to bombard it, his Majeſty turn'd him out of his Government, and put Colonel Skelton in his Place; who now by a Viciſſitude of Fortune, was made the Commander of a Fortreſs, where he had lately been a Priſoner.

The King ſends three Lords to treat with the Prince.

The Perſons firſt propos'd to be ſent to treat with the Prince of Orange, were the Marquiſs of Hallifax, the Earl of Rocheſter, and the Lord Godolphin, with whom ſome wou'd have join'd the Biſhops of Wincheſter and Ely; but after a long Conſultation, their Number was fix'd to theſe Three, the Marquiſs of Hallifax, the Earl of Nottingham, and the Lord Godolphin, who were allow'd to be Men of great Parts, Addreſs and Application, and who in the late Council had ſhew'd a particular Zeal for his Majeſty's Preſervation. The Earl of Rocheſter was really as capable of that important Negotiation, and as agreeable to the Prince, as any of the reſt; but either He or the Marquiſs of Hallifax was neceſſarily to be left out, and therefore that Earl got himſelf excus'd. To carry on this Affair, a Trumpeter was immediately diſpatcht by the Earl of Feverſham, with a Letter to his Highneſs, to demand the neceſſary Paſſes: And on Sunday, December the 2d, the Commiſſioners began their Journey, and arriv'd the next Day at Reading, where they met the Trumpeter with his Highneſs's Paſſes; who at the ſame time demanded a Paſs for one of his Gentlemen, whom he deſign'd to ſend to the Princeſs Anne of Denmark. The Day before the Departure of the Commiſſioners, the Earl of Clarendon, without making a farther Myſtery of it, went directly over to the Prince of Orange, which gave many Occaſion to think that he was gone before them, if not to defeat their Negatiation, at leaſt to give the Prince a Jealouſy of the Marquiſs of Hallifax, the irreconcileable Enemy of his Family, and who began to be ſuſpected by the Presbyterians themſelves, ſince he undertook this Accommodation. Others diſcours'd, that the great Warmth the Marquiſs had lately ſhewn for the King's Preſervation, did not ſo much proceed from his Affection to his Perſon, as from his domineering Spirit, which made him zealous for a Negotiation, which he deſign'd to engroſs to himſelf.

A remarkable Paper ſtyl'd the Third Declaration of the Prince of Orange.

2. While this Negotiation was on foot, there appear'd a printed Paper at London and other Places, call'd The Third Declaration of the Prince of Orange, &c. which ſhew'd that great Things are often brought about by unknown Agents. Conſidering the Effect it had on the Nation, we ſhall inſert it as following, without any Abridgement: 'We have in the whole 'courſe of our Life, and more particularly by the apparent Hazards both by 'Sea and Land, to which we have ſo lately expos'd our Perſon, given to 'the World ſo high and undoubted Proofs of our fervent Zeal to the Pro- 'teſtant Religion, that we are fully confident no true Engliſhman and 'good Proteſtant can entertain the leaſt Suſpicion of our firm Reſolution, 'rather to ſpend our deareſt Blood, and periſh in the Attempt, than not to 'carry on the bleſſed and glorious Deſign, which, by the Favour of Hea- 'ven, we have ſo ſucceſsfully begun to reſcue England, Scotland and Ire- 'land from Popery and Slavery, and in a Free Parliament to eſtabliſh the 'Religion, the Laws and Liberties of theſe Kingdoms on ſuch a ſure and 'laſting Foundation, that it ſhall not be in the Power of any Prince for

'the

'the future to introduce Popery and Tyranny. Towards the more eaſy 1688.
'compaſſing this great Deſign, we have not been hitherto deceiv'd in the 'juſt Expectation we had of the Concurrence of the Nobility, Gentry and Jac. 4.
'People of England with us, for the Security of their Religion, and the 'Eſtabliſhment of their Liberties and Properties. Great Numbers of all Ref. 19
'Ranks and Qualities have join'd themſelves to us; and others, at great
'diſtances from us, have taken up Arms and declar'd for us: And, which 'we cannot but particularly mention, in that Army which was rais'd to be
'the Inſtrument of Slavery and Popery, many, by the ſpecial Providence
'of God, both Officers and common Soldiers, have been touch'd with 'ſuch a feeling Senſe of Religion and Honour, and of true Affection to their 'Native Countrey, that they have already deſerted the illegal Service they 'were engag'd in, and have come over to Us, and have given us full Aſſu-
'rance from the reſt of the Army, that they will certainly follow this Ex'ample, as ſoon as we ſhall approach near enough to receive them without 'Hazard of being prevented or betray'd.

'To which End, and that we may the ſooner execute this juſt and ne-
'ceſſary Deſign we are engag'd in for the publick Safety and Deliverance
'of theſe Nations, we are reſolv'd with all poſſible Diligence to advance
'forwards, that a Free Parliament may be forthwith call'd, and ſuch Pre'liminaries adjuſted with the King, and all things ſettled upon ſuch a Foot,
'according to Law, as may give us and the whole Nation juſt Reaſon to 'believe, the King is diſpos'd to make ſuch neceſſary Condeſcenſions on 'his Part, as will give entire Satisfaction and Security to all, and make 'both King and People once more happy. And that we may effect
'all this, in the Way moſt agreeable to our Deſires, if it be poſſible, with'out the Effuſion of any Blood, except of thoſe Execrable Criminals who 'have juſtly forfeited their Lives for Betraying the Religion, and Subvert-
'ing the Laws of their Native Countrey, We do think fit to Declare, That
'as we will offer no Violence to any, but in our own neceſſary Defence;
'ſo we will not ſuffer any Injury to be done to the Perſon, even of any
'Papiſt, provided he be found in ſuch Place, and Condition, and Circum-
'ſtances as the Law requires. So we are reſolv'd, and do Declare, That 'all Papiſts who ſhall be found in open Arms, or with Arms in their Hou-
'ſes, or about their Perſons, or in any Office Civil or Military, upon any 'Pretence whatſoever, contrary to the known Laws of the Land, ſhall be 'treated by Us and our Forces, not as Soldiers and Gentlemen, but as Rob-
'bers, Free-booters and Banditti; they ſhall be incapable of Quarter, and 'entirely deliver'd up to the Diſcretion of our Soldiers. We do farther De'clare, That all Perſons who ſhall be found any Ways aiding or aſſiſting
'to them, or ſhall march under their Command, or ſhall join with, or ſub-
'mit to them in the Diſcharge or Execution of their Illegal Commiſſions or 'Authority, ſhall be look'd upon as Partakers of their Crimes, Enemies to
'the Laws, and to their Countrey. And whereas we are certainly inform'd,
'that great Numbers of armed Papiſts have of late reſorted to London and 'Weſtminſter, and Parts adjacent, where they remain, as we have Reaſon
'to ſuſpect, not ſo much for their own Security, as out of a wicked and 'barbarous Deſign, to make ſome deſperate Attempt upon the ſaid Cities,
'and their Inhabitants, by Fire, or ſudden Maſſacre, or both; or elſe to be 'more ready to join themſelves to a Body of French Troops, deſign'd, if 'it be poſſible, to land in England, procured of the French King, by the 'Intereſt and Power of the Jeſuits, in purſuance of the Engagements,
'which, at the Inſtigation of that peſtilent Society, his moſt Chriſtian Ma-
'jeſty, with one of his Neighbouring Princes of the ſame Communion, has 'enter'd into for the utter Extirpation of the Proteſtant Religion out of 'Europe. Tho', we hope we have taken ſuch effectual Care to prevent

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'the One, and ſecure the Other, that by God's Aſſiſtance we cannot doubt 'but we ſhall defeat all their wicked Enterprizes and Deſigns.

'We cannot however forbear, out of the great and tender Concern we 'have to preſerve the People of England, and particularly thoſe great and 'populous Cities, from the cruel Rage and bloody Revenge of the Papiſts, 'to require and expect from all the Lord-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, 'and Juſtices of the Peace, Lord-Mayors, Mayors, Sheriffs, and all other 'Magiſtrates and Officers, Civil and Military, of all Counties, Cities and 'Towns of England, eſpecially of the County of Middleſex, and Cities of 'London and Weſtminſter, and Parts adjacent, that they do immediately 'diſarm and ſecure, as by Law they may and ought, within their reſpective 'Counties, Cities and Juriſdictions, all Papiſts whatſoever, as Perſons at 'all Times, but now eſpecially, moſt dangerous to the Peace and Safety 'of the Government; that ſo, not only all Power of doing Miſchief may 'be taken from them, but that the Laws, which are the greateſt and beſt 'Security, may reſume their Force, and be ſtrictly executed. And we do 'hereby likewiſe Declare, That we will protect and defend all thoſe who 'ſhall not be afraid to do their Duty in Obedience to theſe Laws. And 'that for thoſe Magiſtrates, and others, of what Condition ſoever they be, 'who ſhall refuſe to aſſiſt us, and in Obedience to the Laws, to execute 'rigorouſly, what we have required of them, and ſuffer themſelves at this 'Juncture to be cajoled and terrifyed out of their Duty, we will eſteem 'them the moſt criminal and infamous of all Men; Betrayers of their Re- 'ligion, the Laws, and their Native Countrey; reſolving to expect and 'require at their Hands the Life of every ſingle Proteſtant that ſhall pe-'riſh, and every Houſe that ſhall be burnt or deſtroy'd by their Treachery 'and Cowardice.' Given under our Hand and Seal, at our Head Quarters at Sherborn-Caſtle, the 28th Day of November, 1688. WILLIAM HENRY, Prince of ORANGE. By his Highneſs's ſpecial Command, C. HUYGENS.

The great Effects of it. This was the boldeſt Attempt that ever was made by a private Perſon; but whoever was the Author of this Declaration, which the Prince of Orange totally diſown'd, it did his Highneſs no ſmall Service at this nice Juncture: The Roman Catholicks were dreadfully alarm'd at it; and ſeveral Juſtices of the Peace caus'd it to be publiſh'd. A certain Captain likewiſe boldly deliver'd a Copy of it to the Lord Mayor of London, charging him, before Witneſſes, to ſee it exactly put in Execution; and the inferior Officers of Juſtice deſired his Lordſhip's Aſſiſtance, that they might better obey his Highneſs's Orders. And indeed the Popiſh Party was now ſo low, that there was, at the ſame Time, An Hue and Cry after Father Petre, publickly cry'd and ſold in the Streets, notwithſtanding he was no leſs than a Privy-Counſellor. And farther, a legal Accuſation againſt the Earl of Salisbury for 'Infringing the moſt Sacred Laws of the Kingdom, by turning 'Papiſt,' was preferr'd to the Grand-Jury of Middleſex, who found the Bill againſt the ſaid Earl.

The Duke of Norfolk's Tranſactions at Norwich.

3. While theſe Things were tranſacting in London, the Duke of Norfolk, hereditary Earl Marſhal of England, and Lord Lieutenant of the County, whoſe Title he bore, ſummon'd all the Quality and Gentry of thoſe Parts to meet him at the City of Norwich; where being aſſembled, leſt the Place ſhou'd be alarm'd at the extraordinary Concourſe of People, he made a Speech to the Mayor in the Market-Place; acquainting him, 'That out 'of a deep Senſe, he and the others there met, that in the preſent un-'happy Juncture of Affairs, nothing cou'd better ſecure the Laws, Liber- 'ties and Proteſtant Religion, than a Free Parliament, they were there 'met to pronounce that they wou'd do their utmoſt to defend the ſame, 'by

'by Declaring for ſuch a Free Parliament. And ſince his Majeſty had been 'pleas'd to order Writs for ſuch a Parliament, he cou'd only add in the 'Name of himſelf, and of all thoſe Gentlemen, and others there met, 'That they wou'd ever be ready to ſupport the Laws, Liberties and Pro- 'teſtant Religion.' And ſo, concluded he, God ſave the King! In this the Mayor, Aldermen, and the reſt of the Corporation, and a numerous Aſſembly, did unanimouſly concur with his Grace and the reſt of the Gentry. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

About five Days after, December the 6th, the Mayor and Corporation of King's Lynn preſented an Addreſs to the Duke of Norfolk, humbly deſiring him, 'That they might be put into ſuch a Poſture by his Grace's Di- 'rection and Conduct, as might make them appear as zealous as any in the 'Defence of the Proteſtant Religion, the Laws and ancient Government.' To which his Grace return'd this Anſwer, That no Man wou'd venture his Life and Fortune more freely for the Defence of the Laws, Liberties and Proteſtant Religion, than he wou'd do; and with all the Gentlemen there preſent, and many more, wou'd procure a Settlement in Church and State, in Concurrence with the Lords and Gentlemen in the North, and purſuant to the Declaration of the Prince of Orange. And according to their Deſire, he order'd the Militia, both Horſe and Foot, to be rais'd throughout the County; whereupon the Tradeſmen, Seamen and inferior ſort, put Orange Ribbons in their Hats, ſhouting and echoing Huzzas to the Prince of Orange and the Duke of Norfolk. Thus all Places began to ſhew their Inclination, and there appear'd an univerſal Diſpoſition to favour the Prince of Orange, and the great Cauſe he had eſpous'd. Lynn applies to him.

4. All theſe Motions bred new Troubles and Uneaſineſs in the Court: Nor were they leſs impatient to know how the Commiſſioners, Hallifax, Nottingham and Godolphin, wou'd be receiv'd by the Prince of Orange: For ſeveral began to apprehend that ſomething farther was aim'd at, beſides the ſecuring of the Proteſtant Religion, the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom; and that his Majeſty's Crown, if not his Perſon, was not out of Danger. It was not ſo much the Coming of his Highneſs with an Army that gave the Popiſh Party theſe melancholy Apprehenſions, but rather the general Diſcontents of the Nobility, Clergy and People, and the Expectance of a ſevere Examination of their own Illegal Proceedings in a Free Parliament; and therefore they began to think of having the Royal Family croſs the Sea, as ſoon as theſe Surmiſes ſhou'd attain to a greater Degree of Certainty. On the 6th of December the three Commiſſioners by an expreſs acquainted the King, 'That they were to meet the Prince of Orange that 'Night at Amesbury;' but the next Day they inform'd his Majeſty, 'That 'his Highneſs had made a new Appointment to meet them at Hungerford, 'and had ſent to them the Earls of Clarendon and Oxford, to deſire them 'to make their Propoſals in Writing.' This Meſſage of the Prince was interpreted to be Evaſive or Contemptuous; not only becauſe he refus'd to treat by Word of Mouth with his Majeſty's Commiſſioners, but alſo becauſe he had deputed two Perſons to them, of whom the laſt had never been concern'd in any publick Affair, and the firſt was a profeſs'd Enemy to the Marquiſs of Hallifax, the principal Manager on the King's Part. From theſe firſt Steps, and from a particular Letter from one of the Commiſſioners, the moſt zealous for the King's Intereſt, the Popiſh Cabal, particularly Monſieur Barillon the old French Ambaſſador, and Count Lauzan, began to ſuſpect the Succeſs of this Negotiation, and preſſingly adviſ'd the King to ſupport Himſelf, his Queen and the Prince of Wales, by a ſpeedy Receſs from the Nation. However the King was ſtill willing to wait for a full and clear Account of the Affair. The King adviſ'd to retire from England. Undetermin'd.

During

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

During which Time, there happen'd a ſecond kind of a Skirmiſh; For upon the News of the Prince's Forces advancing towards Reading, to prevent farther Deſertions, the King's Army that quarter'd there, was order'd to march nearer London, and to fix their Head-Quarters at Colebrook. But the 8th of December, the Court being inform'd that it was only a Detachment of his Highneſs's Horſe that was advanc'd to Newbery, the Royal Forces were remanded to their old Poſt, and the ſame Day the General, the Earl of Feverſham, return'd to Maidenhead, where were the Head Quarters. The next Day, the King's Troops marching thither, the Towns People, who had been great Sufferers by their former Quartering amongſt them, invited ſome of the Prince of Orange's Forces that lay not far off, to take Poſſeſſion of that Poſt, to ſecure themſelves againſt the Violences of the Iriſh. Colonel Lanier, who commanded the Royal Detachment, being firſt come to Reading, poſted ſome Companies of Iriſh Dragoons, to defend a Bridge over which his Highneſs's Troops were to paſs, and drew up a Scotch Regiment of Horſe in Battalia in the Market-Place. Upon the Approach of a ſmall Party of the Prince's Cavalry, the Iriſh made a Diſcharge, and abandon'd their Poſt; and the Scotch who, had no Inclination to fight, follow'd their Example, and fled in Diſorder, till they were rally'd by the Earl of Feverſham, who was coming up to their Relief. Of the Iriſh, not many were kill'd, and as few taken: However the Royaliſts complain'd that the Town's People ſhot at them behind from their Windows, while the Prince's Horſe charg'd them before; but the others juſtify'd themſelves by ſaying, That the Fear the Iriſh were in, made them imagine that they were attack'd on every ſide, which, at this Juncture, the Court thought fit to believe. Maidenhead Bridge was alſo fortify'd, and the Defence of it committed to the Iriſh; but ſome of the Townſmen beating a Dutch March upon Tubs in the Night, in order to alarm them, this Stratagem took ſo well, that the Iriſh abandon'd their Poſt in Confuſion, leaving their Great-Guns behind them.

A ſecond Skirmiſh.

The three Lords Propoſals to the Prince of Orange.

In the mean Time, the three Commiſſioners, Hallifax, Nottingham and Godolphin, appointed to treat with the Prince of Orange, at Hungerford deliver'd to his Highneſs the following Propoſals in Writing, dated December the 8th, 'Sir, The King commanded us to acquaint you, That he obſerveth all the Difference and Cauſes of Complaint, alledg'd by your Highneſs, ſeem to be referr'd to a Free Parliament. His Majeſty, as he hath already Declared, was reſolv'd before this to call one; but thought, that in the preſent State of Affairs, it was adviſable to defer it till Things were more compos'd: Yet ſeeing that his People ſtill continue to deſire it, he hath put forth his Proclamation in order to it, and hath iſſu'd his Writs for the Calling of it. And to prevent any Cauſe of Interruption in it, he will conſent to every Thing that can be reaſonably required for the Security of thoſe that ſhall come to it. His Majeſty hath therefore ſent us to attend your Highneſs for the adjuſting of all Matters that ſhall be agreed to be neceſſary to the Freedom of Elections, and the Security of Sitting, and is ready immediately to enter into a Treaty in order to it. His Majeſty propoſes, That in the mean Time the reſpective Armies may be reſtrain'd within ſuch Limits, and at ſuch a Diſtance from London, as may prevent the Apprehenſions that the Parliament may be in any kind diſturb'd; being deſirous that the Meeting of it may be no longer delay'd, than it muſt be by the uſual and neceſſary Forms.

The Prince having receiv'd this Paper, ſubſcrib'd by the Commiſſioners Names, continu'd his March toward London; and being arriv'd at Littlecott, the next Day, with the Advice of the Lords and Gentlemen aſſembled with him, his Highneſs made the following Propoſals, in Anſwer to thoſe of his Majeſty: 'We, with the Advice of the Lords and Gentlemen aſſembled with 'us, have, in Anſwer, made theſe following Propoſals. I. That all Papiſts

'Proclamations which reflect upon Us, be recall'd; and that if any Perſons, Reſ. 29
'for having aſſiſted Us, have been committed, that they be forthwith ſet
'at Liberty. III. That for the Security and Safety of the City of London,
'the Cuſtody and Government of the Tower, be immediately put into the 'Hands of the ſaid City. IV. That if his Majeſty ſhall think fit to be at 'London, during the Sitting of the Parliament, that We may be there alſo,
'with equal Number of our Guards: Or if his Majeſty ſhall pleaſe to be in 'any Place from London, whatever Diſtance he thinks fit, that We may be 'at a Place of the ſame Diſtance; and that the reſpective Armies be from 'London Thirty Miles; and that no farther Forces be brought into the 'Kingdom. V. That for the Security of the City of London, and their 'Trade, Tilbury Fort be put into the Hands of the ſaid City. VI. That a
'ſufficient Part of the Publick Revenue be aſſign'd Us, for the Support and 'Maintenance of our Troops, until the Sitting of a Free-Parliament.
'VII. That to prevent the Landing of the French, or other Foreign Troops,
'Portſmouth may be put into ſuch Hands, as by his Majeſty and Us ſhall
'be agreed on.

Theſe Propoſals were ſent with all Speed to the King, and they were look'd upon as ſo reaſonable and moderate in this Juncture, that his Majeſty upon the Reading of them ſaid, They were better than he expected. This ſeems to have been the moſt critical Hour in the King's whole Reign; and his preſent Compliance wou'd, reaſonably ſpeaking, have kept the Crown upon his Head during the reſt of his Life. As his Invaſions had been inſufferable, ſo his Difficulties were become innumerable, but ſtill not inſuperable, if he had not abandon'd Himſelf to Popiſh Counſels. However, he thought fit that Evening to call an Extraordinary Council, and beſides the Lords that were in Town, he ſent for the Lord-Mayor of the City, and the Sheriffs, whom he charg'd to take particular Care of the City, and omit nothing that lay in their Power for the Preſervation of the Peace and Tranquillity of the ſame; ſo that all Things look'd as tho' he had deſign'd to comply with the Prince's Propoſals; and at the Breaking up, the ſame Council was order'd to meet the next Morning, to give their farther Advice upon this Exigency of Affairs. Before they broke up, we are told, That the King under ſome Diſtraction of Mind, amidſt the ſilent Company, earneſtly apply'd himſelf to the Earl of Bedford, Father to the executed Lord Ruſſel, ſaying, My Lord, you are a good Man, and have a great Influence, you can do much for me at this Time. To which the other anſwer'd, I am an old Man and can do but little;—then added with a deep Sigh, I had once a Son that cou'd now have been very ſerviceable to your Majeſty: Which Word ſtruck the King half dead with Silence and Confuſion. The King confounded.

Upon the breaking up of the Council, the King enter'd into a deep Conſult with his Popiſh Friends that had reduc'd him to all theſe Difficulties. Theſe were the Men that now at this Exigency, as well as formerly, did him the greateſt Miſchief. They all plainly ſaw, that nothing cou'd ſave his Majeſty in a Free Parliament, but the total Delivering up of Popery in the Nation, and the Paſſing ſuch Acts, as ſhou'd be moſt effectual Bars to the Return of it again. Being fill'd with this Proſpect, they, who reſolv'd to ſacrifice their King, and every Thing elſe, rather than ſee their Deſigns blaſted, firſt ſtudy'd to fright the Queen, with the Apprehenſions of ſomewhat diſmal, that ſhe her ſelf, and her Son might expect. They alſo preſs'd the King with the Senſe of the Diſhonour that he muſt ſuſtain in ſubmitting to the hard Terms impos'd upon him: And to both, they did ſo magnify the Power and Zeal of the French King, that that unhappy Monarch came to be perſuaded, contrary to his ſolemn Promiſes of a Parliament; That it was

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

was better to fly to France, than to remain in his own Kingdom, and ſubmit, as they call'd it, to a Victorious Prince, and an offended Parliament. In this they ſucceeded ſo effectually, that his Majeſty reſolv'd to hear no more of Propoſals, but to abandon his Subjects, and throw himſelf into the the Arms of the French King. But before this, he took Care for the private conveying away his Royal Conſort, and the Prince of Wales; which latter had lately been ſent with great Secreſie to Portſmouth, but being refus'd Tranſportation by the Lord Dartmouth, was now brought back with the ſame Care and Caution. So that their Eſcape now became very difficult, and Father Orleans gives us this following Account of it.

The Popiſh Party prevail'd with him.

It was in the Night, between the 9th and 10th of December, that the Count de Lauzan, being then in the Court of England, concerted with the King the Flight of the Queen and the young Prince; and by one of the moſt happy Adventures of his Life, was ſucceſsful in his Undertaking. Riva an Italian belonging to her Majeſty, and Labadie, a French Man, Page of the Back-Stairs to the King, both Perſons of experienc'd Fidelity, were order'd to provide all Things neceſſary for their Paſſage, and to convey them from Whitehall to a Veſſel prepar'd at Graveſend. It was not without much Danger of being ſtop'd and diſcover'd, that a Queen and a Prince, ſcarce five Months old, went out of their Palace at a Time full of Suſpicion, and when the leaſt Cry of the Infant might have broke the beſt concerted Meaſures. However the Queen in Diſguiſe, accompany'd by the Marquiſs of Powis, the Marchioneſs his Wife, Governeſs to the Prince, the Counteſs Dalmon, and the Wet and Dry-Nurſes, Montecuculi and Turini, ſtole thro' a Privy-Stairs to the Water-ſide, croſs'd the Thames in a dark diſmal Night, ſeverely expos'd to the Wind, Rain, and Roughneſs of the River; and being got on the other ſide, waited near the Walls of a Church, inſulted by the ſtormy Weather, till the Coaches were got ready in the next Inn. The Curioſity of a Man, who at the ſame Time went out of the Inn, and was making towards the Queen with a Light, drove her Majeſty into a Fright; when Riva perceiving it, immediately follow'd and joſtled him ſo rudely, that both fell into the Dirt. This was a fortunate Diverſion; for the Man attributing all to an Accident, he and Riva begg'd Pardon, and fairly parted. The Queen and her Attendance, being with difficulty arriv'd at Graveſend, her Majeſty immediately went on Ship-board; and Labadie's Wife, who was acquainted with the Captain, amus'd him for a while, till the Queen, that paſs'd for an Italian Lady and a Traveller into her own Countrey with her Family, was got into the Cabin which had been prepar'd for her. Three Iriſh Captains embark'd at the ſame time, being appointed by the King to have an Eye upon the Commander of the Veſſel, in Caſe, upon ſome Suſpicion, he ſhou'd have refus'd to do his Duty. But this Precaution prov'd unneceſſary; for the Veſſel having put to Sea, had a very quick Paſſage, and ſafely landed at Calais; from whence her Majeſty went forwards, and met with a generous and Royal Welcome from the French King, who us'd all Means to alleviate her Misfortunes.

The Queen flys beyond Sea.

5. Immediately after the Queen's Departure, the King, to cover his Deſigns of following her, gave it out, 'That he wou'd return to the Head 'of his Forces, and fight the Prince of Orange;' which however was not very conſonant with ſending Part of the Artillery into the Tower. Nevertheleſs that ſame Evening, being Monday the 10th of December, the Life-Guards were order'd to be ready to attend him to Uxbridge. But inſtead of going to the Army, his Majeſty, tho' he knew upon what Terms he might be ſafe, undertook the greateſt Hazards, and took Water at Whitehall Privy-Stairs, between Two and Three in the Morning, accompany'd only by Sir Edward Hales, Mr. Sheldon and Labadie, who had juſt before taken Care of

of his Royal Conſort; and this was done without communicating his Deſign to any of his chief Popiſh Officers, and not ſo much as to the Lord Dover himſelf, tho' formerly his Favourite, with whom he had a long Converſation. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

This Departure was the Concluſion of all the Breaches of Faith in this Reign, particularly that of the Promiſe of a Free Parliament; and what he did at the ſame Time, appear'd to the World a voluntary, open and unforc'd Deſertion of the Government, at leaſt as much as was conſiſtent with a ſecret and incompatible Deſire to retain it. The firſt Thing was the Writing of this Letter to his General the Earl of Feverſham: 'My Lord, Things 'being come to that Extremity, that I have been forc'd to ſend away the 'Queen, and my Son the Prince of Wales, that they might not fall into 'the Enemies Hands, which they muſt have done, if they had ſtay'd; I am 'oblig'd to do the ſame Thing, in Hopes it will pleaſe God, of his infinite 'Mercy to this unhappy Nation, to touch their Hearts again with true 'Loyalty and Honour. If I cou'd have rely'd on all my Troops, I might 'not have been put to the Extremity I am now in; and wou'd at leaſt, have 'had one Blow for it: But tho' I know there are many valiant and brave 'Men among you, both Officers and Soldiers; yet you know, that both 'you, and ſeveral of the General Officers and Soldiers, and Men of the 'Army told Me, It was no ways adviſable for me to venture my ſelf at 'their Head, or think to fight the Prince of Orange with them. And 'now there remains only for Me to thank You, and all Thoſe, both Offi'cers and Soldiers, who have ſtuck to Me, and been truly Loyal: I hope 'you will ſtill retain the ſame Fidelity to Me. And tho' I do not expect 'you ſhou'd expoſe your ſelves, by reſiſting a Foreign Army, and a poy'ſon'd Nation; yet I hope your former Principles are ſo inrooted in you, 'that you will keep your ſelves free from Aſſociations, and ſuch pernicious 'Things. Time preſſeth, ſo that I can add no more JAMES REX. His Letter to the Earl of Feverſham.

The ſecond Thing the King did, was the ordering all thoſe Writs to be burnt that were not ſent out for the Calling of the Parliament, and entering a Caveat againſt making uſe of thoſe few that were already ſent out. The laſt Thing, when he left Whitehall, and took Water, he threw the Great Seal into the Thames, where it was ſhortly found by a Fiſher-man; which laſt was interpreted as a Reſolution to govern no more by Law, if he ſhou'd return, but by the Sword. Thus in a Moment was an Army in effect disbanded without Money, Parliament Writs deſtroy'd, and the Broad-Seal thrown away; ſo that the Nation became like Sheep without a Shepherd: And if ever there was a real Deſertion of a Kingdom; and ever a People were left at Liberty to take Care of themſelves, this was the Seaſon. All that the King did afterwards, was not to be compared to this, no otherwiſe than it was a Confirmation or Re-iteration of the ſame Thing. Parliament Writs burnt; and Broad-Seal thrown into the Thames.

IV. 1. From the 11th of December we are to date the great Turn in the Nation, which happen'd but Five Weeks after the Landing of the Prince of Orange, and which gave his Highneſs an open and clear Field to range in. Upon the Noiſe of the King's Departure, upon the 11th in the Morning, all the City were in Amazement, and immediately fill'd with Surprize, Wonder and Conjectures: Some were terrify'd with the Proſpect of Anarchy, that ſeem'd to threaten the City; but moſt caſt their Eyes towards the Prince of Orange, and with that Effect, that in a few Hours, there was an Appearance of Government, and a Regular Adminiſtration. The Duke of Northumberland went immediately to the Earl of Rocheſter, to acquaint him with his Deſign of going over to the Prince; but the Earl adviſ'd him to ſave himſelf that Trouble, and rather to aſſemble his Troop of Guards, and declare for his Highneſs, which accordingly he did. The The Care in the City.

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

Marquiſs of Miremont follow'd his Example, and turn'd all the Papiſts out of his Regiment of Horſe. And the other principal Officers of the Army about the Town met at White-Hall, and ſent an Expreſs to the Prince of Orange, to acquaint him with the King's going away, and to aſſure his Highneſs, 'That they wou'd aſſiſt the Lord Mayor to keep the City quiet 'till his Arrival there.

The Lords in Town meet at Guild-Hall.

But the main Step towards an Eſtabliſhment, was the unanimous Aſſembly of about thirty Lords Spiritual and Temporal, then in and about the Town, namely, the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York; the Biſhops of Wincheſter, St. Aſaph, Ely, Rocheſter and Peterborough; the Earls of Pembroke, Dorſet, Mulgrave, Thanet, Carliſle, Craven, Aleſbury, Burlington, Berkley and Rocheſter; Viſcounts Newport and Weymouth; and the Lords Wharton, North and Grey, Chandois, Mountague, Jermyn, Vaughan, Carbery, Colepeper, Crewe and Oſulſton. Theſe all ſolemnly met at Guild-Hall, and ſending for the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of the City, who readily attended, they made this memorable Declaration: 'We 'doubt not but the World believes that in this great and dangerous Con- 'junCture, we are heartily and zealouſly concern'd for the Proteſtant Reli- 'gion, the Laws of the Land, and the Liberties and Properties of the 'Subject. And we did reaſonably hope, that the King having iſſu'd out his 'Proclamation and Writs for a Free Parliament, we might have reſted 'ſecure under the Expectation of that Meeting: But his Majeſty having 'withdrawn himſelf, and, as we apprehend, in order to his Departure out 'of this Kingdom, by the pernicious Counſels of Perſons ill-affected to our 'Nation and Religion, we cannot, without being wanting to our Duty, be 'ſilent under theſe Calamities, wherein the Popiſh Counſels, which ſo long 'prevail'd, have miſerably involv'd theſe Realms. We do therefore unani- 'mouſly reſolve to apply our ſelves to his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, 'who with ſo great Kindneſs to theſe Kingdoms, ſuch vaſt Expence, and 'ſo much Hazard to his own Perſon, has undertaken, by endeavouring to 'procure a Free Parliament to reſcue us, with as little Effuſion, as poſ- 'ſible, of Chriſtian Blood, from the imminent Dangers of Slavery and 'Popery.

Their Declaration.

'And we do hereby declare, That we will with our utmoſt Endeavours, 'aſſiſt his Highneſs in the obtaining ſuch a Parliament with all ſpeed, 'wherein our Laws, our Liberties and Properties may be ſecured, and 'the Church of England in particular, with a due Liberty to Proteſtant 'Diſſenters; and in general, that the Proteſtant Religion and Intereſt over 'the whole World may be ſupported and encourag'd, to the Glory of God, 'the Happineſs of the Eſtabliſh'd Government in theſe Kingdoms, and the 'Advantage of all Princes and States in Chriſtendom, that may be herein 'concern'd. In the mean time we will endeavour to preſerve, as much as in 'us lies, the Peace and Security of theſe great and populous Cities of Lon- 'don and Weſtminſter, and the Parts adjacent, by taking care to diſarm 'all Papiſts, and ſecure all Jeſuits and Romiſh Prieſts, who are in or a- 'bout the ſame. And if there be any thing more to be perform'd by us, 'for promoting his Highneſs's generous Intentions for the Publick Good, we 'ſhall be ready to do it, as Occaſion ſhall require.

Which they ſent to the Prince.

This encouraging Declaration being ſubſcrib'd by all the above mention'd Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the Earl of Pembroke, Viſcount Weymouth, the Biſhop of Ely and the Lord Colepeper, were deſired by the reſt immediately to go and attend his Highneſs with it; and at the ſame time to acquaint him, among other things they had farther done at that Meeting, 'That having ſent for Colonel Skelton, then Lieutenant of the Tower, they 'had demanded the Keys of him, which he willingly reſigning, they had 'beſtow'd the Government of that Fortreſs upon the Lord Lucas, a Perſon

'of

'of unqueſtion'd Honour, and a ſincere Lover of his Countrey.' Which Choice was afterwards confirm'd by the Prince of Orange. 1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

2. As ſoon as the Lords had thus led the Way, the Lord Mayor, the Court of Aldermen, and Common-Council, immediately drew up this remarkable Addreſs to his Highneſs the Prince of Orange: 'We taking into 'Conſideration your Highneſs's fervent Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, 'manifeſted to the World in your many hazardous Enterprizes, wherein it 'hath pleas'd Almighty God to bleſs you with miraculous Succeſs, do ren- 'der our deepeſt Thanks to the Divine Majeſty for the ſame, and beg leave 'to preſent our moſt humble Thanks to your Highneſs, particularly for your 'appearing in Arms in this Kingdom, to carry on and perfect your glori- 'ous Deſigns to reſcue three Kingdoms from Slavery and Popery, and in a 'Free Parliament to eſtabliſh the Religion, and the Laws and Liberties 'of theſe Kingdoms upon a ſure and laſting Foundation. We have hither- 'to look'd for ſome Remedy for thoſe Oppreſſions and imminent Dangers, 'which we, together with our Proteſtant Fellow-Subjects, laboured under, 'from his Majeſty's Conceſſions and Concurrences with your Highneſs's juſt 'and pious Purpoſe expreſs'd in your Gracious Declaration. But herein 'finding our ſelves finally diſappointed by his Majeſty's Withdrawing him- 'ſelf, we preſume to make your Highneſs our Refuge; and do in the Name 'of this Capital City, implore your Highneſs's Protection, and moſt hum- 'bly beſeech your Highneſs to repair to this City, where your Highneſs 'will be receiv'd with univerſal Joy and Satisfaction.' This Addreſs, being ſoon approv'd and ſign'd, four Aldermen and eight Commoners were appointed to attend his Highneſs with it.

The Addreſs from the City of London.

This Example was immediately follow'd the ſame Day by another Addreſs from the Lieutenancy of the City of London, in theſe Terms; 'We 'can never ſufficiently expreſs the deep Senſe we have conceiv'd, and ſhall 'ever retain in our Hearts, that your Highneſs has expos'd your Perſon to 'ſo many Dangers by Sea and Land, for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant 'Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom, without which 'unparallel'd Undertaking, we muſt probably have ſuffer'd all the Miſeries 'that Popery and Slavery cou'd have brought upon us. We have been 'greatly concern'd, that before this time we had not any ſeaſonable Oppor- 'tunity to give your Highneſs and the World a real Teſtimony, that it has 'been our firm Reſolution, to venture all that is dear to us, to attain thoſe 'glorious Ends, which your Highneſs has propos'd for Reſtoring and Set- 'tling theſe diſtracted Nations. We therefore now unanimouſly preſent to 'your Highneſs our juſt and due Acknowledgments, for that happy Relief 'you have brought to us: And that we may not be wanting in this preſent 'Conjuncture, we have put our ſelves into ſuch a Poſture, that, by the 'Bleſſing of God, we may be capable to prevent all ill Deſigns, and to pre- 'ſerve this City in Peace and Safety, till your Highneſs's happy Arrival. 'We therefore humbly deſire, that your Highneſs will pleaſe to repair to 'this City with that convenient Speed you can, for perfecting the great 'Work which your Highneſs has ſo happily begun, to the general Joy and 'Satisfaction of us all.' This Addreſs was carry'd by Sir Robert Clayton, Sir William Ruſſel, Sir Baſil Firebraſs, and Charles Duncomb, Eſq; and upon this Occaſion Mr. Duncomb very generouſly offer'd his Purſe to his Highneſs, for which ſeaſonable Piece of Service, he was afterwards remember'd with diſtinguiſhing Favours.

Another from the Lieutenancy of London.

3. Tho' the Militia of London and Weſtminſter were immediately up in Arms, both to prevent dangerous Deſigns from Roman Catholicks, and to preſerve thoſe great Cities in Peace and Safety till the Arrival of the Prince of Orange; nevertheleſs both were alarm'd and terrify'd with the ſudden Eruptions of the Mob, that Scum of a Nation that naturally ſubſides in a Calm, and as readily mounts in a Storm. And as the Papiſts were the chief Occaſions of the preſent Diſtractions, ſo they now became the principal Sufferers. The new-erected Maſs-Houſes, both in the City and Suburbs, were outragiouſly pull'd down and deſtroy'd, and the Materials burnt with the moſt riotous Acclamations, while common Rogues mixing with the leſs deſigning Apprentices, took Opportunity to rifle and plunder many Houſes, particularly thoſe of the Spaniſh and Florentine Embaſſadors; in the firſt of which, the beſt Effects of numerous Roman Catholicks, and even the Holy Utenſils of the Royal Chapels were depoſited, as it were in an Aſylum. All that the Mob cou'd not carry away, or the Value of which they did not underſtand, was committed to the Flames; and among the reſt, a very fine Library, with ſeveral curious Manuſcripts. This Accident was the more ſurprizing, becauſe of all the Foreign Miniſters, Don Pedro de Ronquillo was moſt belov'd by the People, which caus'd ſeveral odd Conjectures about it, being afterwards largely recompens'd by the ſucceeding Parliament for the Loſſes he ſuſtain'd in this time of Confuſion. The French Embaſſador's Houſe and Chapel were accidentally preſerv'd by the Neighbourhood of ſome Noble-Men, who had caus'd their Houſes to be very well guarded; and the Reſident of Venice was luckily ſecured by a Detachment of Soldiers. But the King's Printing-Houſe, under Henry Hills the Maſter, ſuffer'd very great Damage; and all the Paper that was found in it, whether printed or not, was turn'd into one large Bone-Fire.

Chancellor Jeffreys's Commitment,

In the midſt of theſe Irruptions, which ſoon infected the other Parts of the Nation with ungovern'd Fury, the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, who was generally believ'd to have been gone with the King, having diſguis'd himſelf in a Sea-Man's Habit and Houſe at Wapping, in order to eſcape to Hambourgh, was diſcover'd, as he was looking out of a Window, by a Clerk in Chancery, that accidentally paſt that Way. Whereupon he was immediately apprehended, as the moſt obnoxious of all the Proteſtant Miniſters, and after a fair Deliverance from the enrag'd Mob, he was carry'd before Sir John Chapman the Lord-Mayor, in a ſtrange Diſguiſe, far different from his former Habit: And by reaſon of the Lord-Mayor's Illneſs, who for that reaſon declin'd meddling with him, he offer'd to go to the Tower, to be out of the Hands of the Rabble, who threatned the utmoſt Revenge and Retaliation, and particularly by Whips and Halters: But having a Guard of Train'd-Bands to conduct him, he got ſafe thither; and ſoon after was charg'd in Cuſtody by a Warrant of Commitment from the Lords at White-Hall, where he continu'd a few Months under great Affliction and Indiſpoſition, and then dy'd, before he had Opportunity to diſcover ſome Arcana Imperii, which by his own Offers the World expected from him. It is generally reported that he ſhortned his Days, and in a manner diſpatch'd himſelf by hard Drinking of the moſt ſpiritous Liquors; but I have been aſſur'd to the contrary by a very credible Perſon, who was often with him in his Confinement, who ſaid that the Stone was the only bodily Diſtemper that kill'd him; and farther added, that his Lordſhip very much complain'd of the repeated Advice of a Reverend Prelate, who incited him to go thoſe Lengths with him in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, and then by Innuendoes publickly charg'd it upon him. As to the Character of this remarkable Chancellor, that ſhall be given in the next Volume of this Hiſtory, if we meet with ſuitable Encouragement to venture on the next Reign.

And Death.

4. What added ſtill to the Diſtraction of the Times was the ſudden Diſbanding of ſuch great Numbers of the King's Forces: For the Earl of Feverſham, and the other general Officers, who had follow'd him to Uxbridge, to to attend the King's Coming, ſoon receiv'd his Majeſty's Letter formerly mention'd; and this he read aloud to the Troops, which drew Tears from moſt of them. Thereupon they held a Council of War, and concluded from that Letter, 'That ſince the King did not expect they ſhou'd reſiſt a Foreign 'Army, his Intention was, that the reſt of the Army ſhou'd be Disbanded;' And accordingly four thouſand Men the Earl had with him, were immediately diſmiſs'd. After which he ſent the following Letter to the Prince of Orange, ſubſcrib'd by himſelf, and by three General Officers: 'Sir, Ha- His Letter to the Prince. 'ving receiv'd this Morning a Letter from his Majeſty, with the unfortu- 'nate News of his Reſolution to go out of England, I thought my ſelf 'oblig'd, being at the Head of his Army, and having receiv'd his Orders 'to make no Oppoſition againſt any Body, to let your Highneſs know it, 'with the Advice of the Officers here, ſo ſoon as was poſſible, to hinder 'the Effuſion of Blood. I have order'd already to that Purpoſe all the 'Troops that are under my Command, which ſhall be the laſt Order they 'ſhall receive from Feverſham, Lanier, Fenwick, Oglethorp.' The Trumpeter the Earl of Feverſham had diſpatch'd with his Letter, return'd without an Anſwer, which was interpreted as if his Highneſs did not approve his Conduct in this critical Juncture; and indeed moſt of the Lords in London blam'd that General for Disbanding the Army in ſo haſty a Manner, without, at leaſt, the Advice of the Peers of the Realm, if he thought it too much to wait for his Highneſs's Directions.

1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

This Cenſure was aggravated, and almoſt confirm'd by what had happen'd the very next Day; a prodigious Pannick Fear that alarm'd and confounded the City and Countrey after an unheard Manner: It ſeems, ſome A general Conſternation. Countrey-Fellows arriving towards Midnight at Weſtminſter, caus'd a ſudden Tumult and Uproar, by Reporting, 'That the Iriſh were up, and in 'a deſperate Rage, were approaching London, firing of Houſes, and put- 'ting Man, Woman and Child to the Sword.' This ſtrange Report and Outcry ſo gather'd, as it went along, that in a few Moments, not only the Train'd-Bands and Diſciplin'd Troops appear'd in Arms, but every Body leaving their Beds in a hurry, plac'd Lights in their Windows, and with half their Cloaths on betook themſelves, the moſt Fearful to Flight, the moſt Reſolute to their Weapons. And what is more ſtrange and ſurprizing, is, that this falſe Alarm the ſame Night flew like Wild fire, and with the ſame Effects, to all the Chief Places in the Kingdom; and all that were able to bear Arms, vow'd the Defence of their Lives, Laws and Liberties, and ſtood reſolv'd to deſtroy all the Iriſh and Papiſts in England, in caſe any Injury were offer'd them. There were many Opinions concerning the Cauſe of this general Fright; ſome ſay it was occaſion'd by ſeven or eight Iriſh Soldiers, who having no Money, reſolv'd to keep themſelves from ſtarving, by forcibly entering into a Countrey Houſe; and that whilſt they were Cuffing with thoſe that wou'd have thruſt them out, a poor Cottage happen'd to take Fire, whereupon all the neighbouring Towns and Villages rang their Alarm Bells, which increas'd and echo'd in all Parts. Some Politicians aſſign'd another Cauſe of this univerſal Terror, and ſaid it was a deep Project and Stratagem laid by the Duke of Scomberg, both to feel the Pulſe of the Nation, and to inſpire them with Reſentment againſt the Popiſh Party, by letting them ſee to what Dangers they were reduc'd by bringing Iriſh Troops into the Kingdom. It ſeems moſt probable that it proceeded chiefly from the real Inſolence of the Iriſh, and the ſudden Disbanding the Army. However it was, that Night afterwards obtain'd the Name of the Iriſh-Night; and may ſerve to ſhew, that when a Nation is once well heated, every little Accident will throw it into a Flame.

In the mean time, the Prince of Orange, being advanc'd as far as Henly, with the greateſt Part of his Army, and finding the King's Troops, now without without a Head, and in want of Subſiſtence, to prevent many Diſorders, he iſſu'd out this ſhort Declaration, 'Whereas we are inform'd, That divers 'Regiments, Troops and Companies have been encourag'd to diſperſe themſelves in an unuſual and unwarrantable manner; whereby the Publick Peace 'is very much diſturb'd; we have thought fit hereby to require all Colonels and Commanders in Chief of ſuch Regiments, Troops and Companies, by Beat of Drum, or otherwiſe, to call together the ſeveral Officers 'and Soldiers belonging to their reſpective Regiments, Troops and Companies, in ſuch Places as they ſhall find moſt convenient for their Rendezvous, 'and there to keep them in good Order and Diſcipline. And we do likewiſe direct and require all ſuch Officers and Soldiers forthwith to repair to ſuch Places as ſhall be appointed for that Purpoſe, by the reſpective Colonels and Commanders in Chief, whereof ſpecial Notice is to be 'given unto us for our further Orders.' At the very ſame time the Prince ſent a Letter to the Earl of Danby, to deſire his Lordſhip to come to him, and order'd Mr. Blaithwait Secretary of War, to bring him an Account of the King's Forces. He alſo diſpatch'd the Lord Churchill to London, to re-aſſemble his Troop of Horſe-Guards, and directed the Duke of Grafton to go and take Poſſeſſion of Tilbury-Fort with his Regiment of Foot-Guards.

The Lords Orders.

Immediately after, the Peers and Privy-Council, upon the Iriſh Alarm, and in purſuance of the Prince's Directions, made this Order, 'We the Peers 'of the Realm, aſſembled with ſome of the Lords of the Privy-Council, do 'hereby require all Iriſh Officers and Soldiers to repair forthwith to their 'reſpective Bodies to which they do or did lately belong; and do hereby 'declare, that behaving themſelves peaceably, they ſhall have Subſiſtence 'paid them, till they ſhall be otherwiſe provided for or employ'd. And 'the ſaid Officers and Soldiers are to deliver up their Arms to ſome of the 'Officers of the Ordnance, who are to depoſite the ſame in their Stores 'in the Tower of London. And we do require and command all Juſtices 'of the Peace, Conſtables and other Officers, whom it may concern, That 'they apprehend and ſeize all ſuch Soldiers as ſhall not repair to their reſpective Bodies, and that they be dealt with as Vagabonds.' The King's private Journey.

5. All theſe Matters were tranſacted upon a Suppoſition that the King had actually left the Nation; but it ſoon appear'd to be otherwiſe. For ſo it happen'd that his Majeſty with his three Followers, having croſs'd the Thames at White-Hall, went by Land as far as a certain Place near Feverſham, where he embark'd in a ſmall Veſſel that was to carry him to a Frigate, commanded by Mackdonnel, a faithful and ſtout Iriſh Captain, who waited for his Majeſty at Margate. The Weather was ſtormy, and the Veſſel wanted Ballaſt; and while the Seamen were buſy in bringing it in, Sir Edward Hales, one of the Three, ſent his Footman to the Poſt-Office at Feverſham: A Gunner belonging to Dover Caſtle, whom Sir Edward had formerly caſhier'd, immediately knew the Footman by his Livery; and dogging him to the River-ſide, he ſaw him make Signs to ſome People on Board a Bark. Hereupon he got together the Fiſhermen, Seamen, and other Free-Booters of that Place, who at this time took upon themſelves to ſearch all Ships that went by, and to rob all Paſſengers whom they ſuſpected to be Prieſts, aſſuring them of a good Booty in that Bark where Sir Edward Hales muſt needs be. Encourag'd with this Proſpect, they immediately boarded the Veſſel, and meeting firſt with Sir Edward, their Joy was extraordinary, he being equally well known, and much hated in that Country; as for the King, who was in a plain Suit, and a Bob-Wig, they took him him for a Popiſh Prieſt, and Hales's Chaplain, for which Reaſon they put many groſs Indignities upon him; and ſearching him they found four Hundred Guineas, ſeveral valuable Seals, and other Jewels about him, all which they took from him. But ſeveral other People crouding into the Veſſel, there was among the reſt a Conſtable who knew the King's Face, and fell preſently at his Feet, and begging his Majeſty to forgive the Rudeneſs of the Mob, and commanding the Fellows to return what they had taken from him. But the King wou'd only receive his Jewels, and gave the Gold among them; and then his Majeſty told the Conſtable, He hop'd he wou'd uſe him well; and when he ſaw every one paying the Reſpect due to him, he earneſtly endeavour'd to be gone. But the People brought him by a ſort of Force to a publick Inn in the Town; from whence his Majeſty ſent for the Earl of Winchelſea, whom he made Lord Lieutenant of the County, and Governor of Dover Caſtle, who prevail'd with his Majeſty not to leave the Kingdom, but to return towards London.

1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

He is ſtopt and abus'd at Feverſham.

This ſtrange Adventure had various Effects upon the Prince of Orange, and the City of London: The former ſeems to have deſir'd that the King ſhou'd not have been ſtopt, nor brought back, and the latter appear'd fill'd with a joyful Surprize; moſt People there being glad of an Opportunity to convince the King, That there was never any ill Deſign againſt his Perſon. As for the Peers and Privy-Council, they were likewiſe variouſly affected by this News, more eſpecially by Reaſon of the Advance they had made to the Prince of Orange; however, after ſome Debates, they appointed four of their Members, namely, the Earls of Middleton, Ailesbury, Yarmouth and Feverſham, to wait upon his Majeſty, and to invite him to his Palace at White-Hall; to which, tho' at firſt he ſhew'd ſome Reluctance, yet at laſt he condeſcended. The Peers alſo diſpatch'd an Expreſs to the Prince of Orange to acquaint him that the King was ſtill in England; at which time his Highneſs came to Windſor, and lodg'd in the Prince of Denmark's Apartment, which was prepar'd and made ready for his Reception. As his Highneſs was much ſurpriz'd, ſo it is eaſy to believe that he was not very well pleas'd to meet with new Obſtructions, when his Affairs neceſſarily call'd him to London. Therefore after a long Conſultation with the Chief of the Nobility and Gentry about him, he diſpatch'd Monſieur Zuyleſtein to the King, to deſire him to continue at Rocheſter: But this Expreſs miſſing his Way, his Majeſty left that Place on Sunday Morning, the 16th of December, and about four in the Afternoon enter'd the City of London, as it were, in Triumph, and went to White-Hall, attended by ſeveral Noblemen, and a great Number of Guards, while Multitudes of People, that crouded to ſee him, welcom'd his Return with their loud Acclamations: And the Night concluded with the Ringing of Bells, Illuminations, Bonefires, and other ſuch like Demonſtrations of Joy and Satisfaction.

He is invited to London.

His triumphant Return.

V. 1. We are now to conſider King James as, in a Manner, re-inſtated on his Throne, and in new Poſſeſſion of his Royal Palace, which he had ſo inglorioufly deſerted. The firſt Thing he did, which was the laſt publick Act of his Regal Authority, was the iſſuing out the following Order of Council, with the Conjunction of eight Privy-Counſellors: 'His Ma-'jeſty being given to underſtand, That divers Outrages and Diſorders are 'committed in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, by Burning, Pulling down, 'and otherwiſe Defacing Houſes, and other Buildings, and Rifling and 'Plundering the ſame, to the great Terror of his Majeſty's Subjects, and 'manifeſt Breach of the Peace; his Majeſty in Council is pleas'd to direct 'and command all Lord-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Juſtices of the 'Peace, Mayors, Conſtables and all other Officers, whom it may concern, 'to

The King's laſt Publick Act.

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours for the preventing ſuch Outrages and Diſ-
'orders for the future, and for the ſuppreſſing all riotous and tumultuous
'Meetings and Aſſemblies whatſoever.' This Order was ſign'd by the Duke of Hamilton, the Earls of Craven, Berkley and Middleton, the Lords Preſton and Godolphin, the Maſter of the Rolls, and Mr. Titus. It was obſerv'd, that ſufficient Care had been taken for this by the Privy-Council before; and his ſhewing his Zeal for the Popiſh Party in his firſt Act after his Return, look'd as tho' he had come back only to ſerve them. And during the ſhort Time he ſtaid at White-Hall, the Place was crowded with Iriſh Men, Prieſts, Jeſuits and Roman Catholicks, after the former Manner; and one of the Prieſts ſent an imperious Meſſage to the Earl of Mulgrave, the Lord Chamberlain, to ſupply his Lodgings with new Furniture, for he meant to continue in them. And the King alſo immediately diſcharg'd Leiburn, a Popiſh Biſhop, out of Newgate; ſo that all Things were apparently returning into the old Chanel. Inſomuch that ſome that wiſh'd well to the King, ſaid, He was cunningly invited back to White-Hall, with a Deſign to ruine him more effectually, and extinguiſh the remaining Pity of his Proteſtant Subjects.

He ſends an Invitation to the Prince.

Still the King wou'd gladly have come to ſome Terms with the Prince of Orange, who had now the chief Power in his own Hands; therefore in his Journey to London his Majeſty diſpatch'd the Earl of Feverſham with a Letter to the Prince, kindly to invite him to the Palace at St. James's, 'with what Number of Guards and Troops his Highneſs ſhou'd think con'venient to bring along with him, that they might amicably and perſonal-
'ly confer together about the Means of Redreſſing the Publick Grievances.'

His Meſſenger is ſeiz'd.

The Earl having deliver'd his Meſſage to the Prince, he was not a little ſurpriz'd, when inſtead of an Anſwer, Monſieur Bentinck demanded his Sword, being order'd by his Highneſs to ſecure him upon the Account of his late precipitate Disbanding the Army; or, as it was ſurmiz'd, becauſe having a great Influence upon the King, he might have puſh'd his Majeſty upon ſome bold Attempt that might have broke thoſe Meaſures, which the Prince and his Adherents had concerted for the Security of the Nation. Tho' his Highneſs did not approve of the Invitation, yet he wholly referr'd the Conſideration of the King's Letter to all the Lords about him: Upon a Debate their Opinion was, 'That the Royal Palace of White-Hall being
'ſtill crowded with Iriſh Papiſts, Prieſts and Jeſuits, his Highneſs cou'd
'not with Eaſe and Safety remain at St. James's, where he muſt neceſſarily
'go the next Day, without his Majeſty, and his Popiſh Guards, were re-
'mov'd within a reaſonable Diſtance from London.' They were likewiſe provok'd by this Accident that happen'd two or three Days before: The Duke of Grafton marching through the Strand, at the Head of a Regiment, to take Tilbury-Fort out of the Hands of the Iriſh, an Iriſh Trooper came riding up to him, and drew a Piſtol againſt him; for which he was ſhot dead upon the Place: And they thought it was not improbable, but there were more of the ſame Temper. In the Debate, ſome of the Lords, afterwards of a contrary Intereſt, adviſ'd the ſending the King a Priſoner over to Holland, and the keeping him in the Caſtle of Breda, till the War both in England and Ireland was at an End. To which the Prince made this generous Anſwer, That tho' he cou'd appear againſt the King at the Head of an Army in this Quarrel; yet now that he had him in his Power, he cou'd not put him under any Reſtraint; and he knew the Princeſs cou'd never enjoy herſelf, if any ſuch thing were done: And rejected theſe Suggeſtions with Indignation, and with Averſion to thoſe who made them. However, ſeveral Places being propos'd for the Removal, in Concluſion Ham, a Houſe belonging to the Dutcheſs of Lauderdale, was fix'd upon; and, by the Lords Advice, his Highneſs ſubſcrib'd a Paper in theſe Words;

The Prince refuſes to ſeize the King.

Words; 'We desire You, the Lord Marquiss of Hallifax, the Earl of 1688.
'Shrewsbury, and the Lord Delamere, to tell the King, That it is thought 'convenient, for the great Quiet of the City, and the great Safety of his Jac. 4.
'Person, that he do remove to Ham, where he shall be attended by his 'Guards, who will be ready to preserve him from any Disturbances, W. Rel. 29
'H. P. de Orange.

But orders his Removal.

The King was very soon inform'd of the Confinement of the Earl of Feversham, his Messenger, which he look'd upon as against the Law of Nations; and therefore was the more fill'd with Perplexity and Irresolution. Yet the next Morning he sent the Earl of Mulgrave to complement the Prince of Orange, who by that Time was come as near as Sion House. His Highness's Guards being approach'd nearer, even to Kensington and Chelsea, were order'd to quarter there that Night; but upon the last Determination from the Prince in Council, they soon after receiv'd fresh Orders to march, and take possession of all the Posts about White-Hall and St. James's, either by Persuasions, or open Force. Count Solms, who commanded these Troops, being come for that purpose, about nine a Clock at Night his Majesty sent for him, and earnestly desired of him, If it cou'd be, to let him have his own Guard at White-Hall only for that Night; but the Count alledging his positive Orders to Relieve all the Posts, the King answer'd, Do your Office. At Ten, an Hour after, the Dutch Blew Guards enter'd into St. James's House; and towards Eleven, those who were order'd to White-Hall, mov'd thither through the Park. The Lord Craven, who was directed by the Prince to order the King's Guards to retire from their Posts upon the first Approach of his Highness's Troops, supposing this was not to be executed till the next Day, had given no Orders to that purpose; and the English seeming very unwilling to dislodge, the Dutch Guards march'd up to them with lighted Match, and in Order of Battel. This gave the Apprehension of a bloody Encounter; but at last the King's Guards were prevail'd upon to retire and march off. This Proceeding having been severely censur'd both by King James and his Friends, as undutiful and inhuman from a Nephew and a Son-in-law, we shall deliver the Sense of a curious Observer, which perhaps comes nearer the Truth. He tells us, That the Prince never shew'd his Clemency, or indeed his Tenderness for King James, more than upon this Occasion. The Prince was under an unavoidable Necessity of Entering London the next Day: The Troops that he commanded, and wou'd in all probability have taken Possession of White-Hall, were Foreigners, of a different Language and Temper, and such as might have offer'd Violence to the Person of that Monarch, notwithstanding their Orders to the contrary. But allowing that the Prince had detach'd for that Service the Scotch and English, which bore his Colours, still the Hazards of King James wou'd have been the greater: Several of those Officers had serv'd in Ireland under the King, and had been broke of their Commissions purely for being Protestants; and others had quitted England or Ireland to find a Liberty of their Religion abroad, which they found in so much Danger at home; in which Number were Major-General Mackay. Another Party were personally disgusted at the King, as Tolmash and Cutts, and many more of Quality and Distinction. Therefore to have commanded those to guard their old Master, against whom they had, or pretended to have so many Causes of Dissatisfaction, wou'd have been Madness in any Person who intended or design'd that Monarch shou'd live till cut off by the Course of Nature; which was the visible Design of the Prince of Orange with respect to his Uncle and Father-in-law. But to proceed,

The Dutch Guards take Possession of White-Hall.

Censures upon it.

The Dutch having thus got Possession of White-Hall, the three Lords, Hallifax, Shrewsbury and Delamere sent a Note to Secretary Middleton, to inform him, 'That there was a Message to be deliver'd to his Majesty

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

The King receives the Prince's Orders at Night.

'from the Prince, which was of so great Importance, that they, who were 'charg'd with it, desired they might be immediately admitted; and there-'fore desired to know where they might find his Lordship, that he might 'introduce them.' It was then about One in the Morning, when the poor Monarch, distress'd, and over-burthen'd with Cares, was gone to rest, when the Lords were introduc'd and admitted to his Bed-side. After a short Apology for breaking in upon his Majesty's Repose at so unseasonable an Hour, they deliver'd to him the Prince's Paper, which the King read, and said, He wou'd comply with it. Whereupon their Lordships humbly desired, 'That he wou'd remove so early in the Morning, as to be at Ham by Noon, 'to prevent Meeting with the Prince in his Way to London, where he 'was to come the same Day.' His Majesty likewise readily yielded to this, and movingly ask'd, Whether he might not appoint what Servants shou'd attend him? To which the Lords reply'd, That it was left to him to give Order in that as he pleas'd; and so took their Leave of his Majesty. The King, under new Difficulties and Irresolutions, as soon as they were gone as far as the Privy-Chamber, sent for them again, and told them, He had forgot to acquaint them with his Resolutions before the Message came, to send the Lord Godolphin next Morning to the Prince, to propose his going back to Rochester; he finding by the Message Monsieur Zuilestein was charg'd with, That the Prince had no Mind he shou'd be at London; and therefore he now desir'd he might rather return to Rochester, than go to any other Place. The Lord's promis'd him, That they wou'd immediately acquaint the Prince with his Majesty's Desire, not doubting of such an Answer, as wou'd be to his Majesty's Satisfaction; and so a second Time took their Leaves.

This Request was immediately communicated to the Prince, who reasonably imagining the King's Design of leaving the Kingdom, order'd Monsieur Bentinck to write a Letter, which came before eight a Clock next Morning, agreeing to his Majesty's Proposals of going to Rochester. His Majesty was desirous that some of his own Guards might attend him, and one of his own Coaches to convey him to Rochester, declaring, He cou'd not travel by Water in so cold a Season against Wind and Tide, without greatly endangering his Health. But however it was, the King took a formal Leave of the Lords, the Embassador of Spain, and other Persons of Note there present, in such an affecting Manner, that many of them melted into Tears, and then took a Barge, attended by the Earls of Ailesbury, Litchfield, Arran and Dumbarton, six of his Yeoman of the Guard, and about an hundred of the Dutch Guards, and arriv'd about nine a Clock at Night at Gravesend; where he met with some Troops of Horse of the same Countrey, which, the next Day guarded him by Land to Rochester, the Place he desired.

He retires to Rochester.

The Prince arrives at St. James's.

2. And now the Prince of Orange, having a clear Stage, took this favourable Opportunity to make his first Appearance in London; and about three in the Afternoon, the same Day that the King left White-Hall, his Highness, with a magnificent Equipage, and a noble and numerous Retinue, arriv'd at St. James's, where he receiv'd the Congratulations of all the Nobility, and other Persons of the highest Quality in the Town; not to mention the mighty Triumphs of the Multitude, who now turn'd all their Pity for King James into Joy for their Deliverer. Two Days after, the Aldermen and Common-Council of the City of London attended his Highness upon the same Account; and the Lord-Mayor being ill, Sir George Treby, their Recorder, made this memorable Speech, 'May it please your 'Highness, The Lord-Mayor being disabled by Sickness, your Highness is at-'tended by the Aldermen and Commons of the Capital City of this King-'dom,

The Popiſh Lords Langdale and Montgomery were ſet at Liberty; but the Earls of Peterborough and Salisbury were kept in Cuſtody, as well as a great Number of Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits. The Earl of Middleton waited upon the King at Rocheſter, to ſurrender to him the Seals of the Secretary's Office; and all the other Lords who had any Employments at Court, diſtinguiſh'd by exterior Badges, as the Staff, the Key, &c. voluntarily laid down thoſe Marks of their Offices. The Mob up.

On the 21ſt of December, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, to the Number of above Threeſcore, appear'd and aſſiſted the Prince at James's in a great Council. To whom his Highneſs made this ſhort Speech; 'My Lords, 'I have deſir'd you to meet here to adviſe the beſt Manner how to pur-'ſue the Ends of my Declaration in Calling a Free Parliament, for the 'Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, the Reſtoring the Rights and Li-'berties of the Kingdom, and ſettling the ſame, that they may not be in 'Danger of being again ſubverted.' Upon ſpeaking of which, his Highneſs withdrew. After the Reading the Prince's Declaration, the Lords voted The Prince attended by the Peers.

their particular Thanks for his Highneſs's coming over; and the better to conſider of the moſt effectual Means to obtain the Ends of his Declaration, and ſettle a Form of Government, they reſolv'd to aſſemble for the future in their ancient Houſe at Weſtminſter. For which purpoſe they nam'd Five of the moſt eminent Lawyers, viz. Sir John Maynard, Mr. Holt, Mr. Pollixfen, Mr. Bradford and Mr. Atkinſon, to aſſiſt them in their important Conſultations, and to explain to them the Laws and Conſtitutions of the Realm; in the Room of the Judges, who were moſt of them abſent from London. They alſo appointed Mr. Francis Gwin to ſign ſuch Orders as ſhou'd be from Time to Time by them made. It was farther propos'd, that the whole Aſſembly ſhou'd ſign the Aſſociation, formerly mention'd, which the Nobility and Gentry had already ſubſcrib'd at Exeter; to which Propoſal all agreed, except the Duke of Somerſet, the Earls of Pembroke and Nottingham, the Lord Wharton, and all the Biſhops, ſave that of London, who ſet his Hand to the Aſſociation. The main Objection of the Biſhops was upon the Account of the unchriſtian Word Revenge, which being afterwards chang'd for that of Puniſhment, they were better ſatisfy'd.

3. The King in the mean time, perceiving by theſe Proceedings, the uncomfortable Condition of his Affairs, and dreading the formidable Conſequences of a Free Parliament, betook himſelf to his former Reſolution of ſeeking the Protection of the French King. We are told by the Author of Great Britain's juſt Complaint, that the poor King offer'd firſt to throw himſelf upon the City of London, till the Meeting of a Parliament; and after that, into the Hands of the whole Body of the Biſhops, and all without Succeſs. But Biſhop Burnet informs us, That being now at Rocheſter, and under no Reſtraint from the Guards that attended him, all his Proteſtant Friends preſs'd him to ſtay, and to ſummon a Parliament; aſſuring him, 'That there was a great Turn in the Minds of the City, and of the Engliſh Army; and that Pity and Compaſſion for him then generally prevail'd;' which was in a great meaſure true. But ſtill he adher'd to his firſt Reſolution, and ſo on the 23d Day of December, between Two and Three a-Clock in the Morning, his Majeſty privately withdrew himſelf, without communicating his Deſign to any about him; no not to the Earl of Dumbarton, who lay in the King's Chamber, and did not wake till after his Majeſty was gone. This ill-adviſ'd Prince, taking with him only the Duke of Berwick, his natural Son, Mr. Sheldon and Labadie, went on Horſeback as far as a certain Place near the River, where Captain Mackdonnel waited to receive him in a ſmall Frigate; and having immediately put to Sea, with a favourable Wind, landed at Ambleteuſe in France; from whence he immediately repair'd to St. Germains.

The King finally leaves the Nation.

The Earl of Middleton, who was ſtill at Rocheſter when the King departed, found a Letter from his Majeſty to himſelf, deſiring him 'To gratify the 'Captains of the Prince's Troops, that were appointed to guard him, with 'an Hundred Guinea's a-piece, the Lieutenants and Enſigns with Fifty, 'and to reward ſome others that had attended him, in proportion; his Ma'jeſty, among all his diſtracting Troubles, not forgetting his wonted Gene'roſity to all that approach'd his Perſon. He alſo left behind him a Paper, containing His Reaſons for withdrawing himſelf from Rocheſter, which he wrote with his own Hand, and is as follows: 'The World cannot wonder 'at my withdrawing my ſelf now this ſecond Time. I might have expect'ed ſomewhat better Uſage after what I writ to the Prince of Orange by 'my Lord Feverſham, and the Inſtructions I gave him: But inſtead of an 'Anſwer, ſuch as I might have hop'd for, What was I to expect after the 'Uſage I receiv'd, by making the ſaid Earl a Priſoner, againſt the Practice 'and Law of Nations; The ſending his own Guards at Eleven at Night, 'to

'ſelf that in their Conſciences, whether He nor They can believe me in

'had I then to expect from One, who by all Arts, hath taken ſuch Pains
'to make me appear as Black as Hell to my own People, as well as to all

'my Countrey, and am as free to do it again, (and which I hope I ſhall
'yet do, as old as I am, to redeem it from the Slavery it is like to fall
'under) yet I think it not convenient to expoſe my ſelf to be ſo ſecured,
'as not to be at Liberty to effect it; and for that Reaſon do withdraw,

'Pretences of Religion and Property. I hope it will pleaſe God to touch
'their Hearts, out of his infinite Mercy, and to make them ſenſible of the 'ill Condition they are in, and bring them to ſuch a Temper, that a Legal
'Parliament may be call'd; and that, amongſt other Things which may be
'neceſſary to be done, they will agree to Liberty of Conſcience to all Prote-
'ſtant Diſſenters; and that thoſe of my own Perſwaſion, may be ſo far con-
'ſider'd, and have ſuch a Share of it, as they may live peaceably and quietly,
'as all Engliſh Men and Chriſtians ought to do, and not be oblig'd to tranſplant
'themſelves; which would be very grievous, eſpecially to ſuch as live in their 'own Countrey: And I appeal to all Men, who are conſidering Men, and 'have had Experience, Whether any Thing can make this Nation ſo Great
'and Flouriſhing, as Liberty of Conſcience? Some of our Neighbours dread
'it. I cou'd add much more, to confirm what I have ſaid, but now is not
'the proper Time.

This Paper, as it made a great Noiſe, was animadverted upon by Dr. Burnet, and others, who ſhew that the Facts inſiſted on as the Cauſes of his Departure, were aggravated or miſrepreſented. However, there was a general Obſervation, obvious to enough all; That tho' the King gave ſome Reaſons for his ſecond Deſertion, he gave none at all for his Firſt. For his Second going off, he might make ſome popular Pretences; but for the Firſt, he cou'd ſhew no greater Grounds for his Fears than what might ariſe from the Conſciouſneſs of his own Actions. In ſum, this Flight of King James was afterwards interpreted by a ſolemn Vote of Parliament, a voluntary and abſolute Abdication; whereby the People fell into their Original Right of filling up a Throne that was become Vacant, and the Prince of Orange left at Liberty to wear a Diadem, however ſtain'd, yet unſpotted by any Parricide.

The Vacancy of the Throne.

We ſhall conclude this Period, and likewiſe the Old Year, as we have in all the reſt, with the Deaths of conſiderable Men worthy of Remembrance; beginning with Two celebrated Loyaliſts, and firſt the moſt famous, and illuſtrious James Boteler, Duke of Ormond, a glorious Patriot, and a Perſon of

The Death of the Duke of Ormond.

of as great Worth, Generosity, Honour and Renown, as ever adorn'd the English and Irish Nation, whose Sufferings and Services with respect to both were beyond Expression. We have taken Notice of this great Man in many Places of this History; therefore we shall now only remember, That after all his great Services, and faithful Endeavours to preserve the Crown upon his Master's Head, he was uugratefully lay'd aside, and dy'd in private, but much lamented, on the 21st of July, aged Seventy Nine. The second was,

Sir Winston Churchill,

Sir Winston Churchill, Knight, eldest Clerk-Comptroller of the Green-Cloth, a Person of Parts and Letters, who had distinguish'd himself by his Loyalty and particular Services to the Crown; for which he became much in Favour with the late and the present King: But he is most of all to be remember'd for his being Father to the greatest Soldier and Hero that this, or perhaps any other Age has produc'd.

Bishop Ward.

The next to be mention'd, are Three eminent Divines; the first, Dr. Seth Ward, Bishop of Salisbury, a Person educated first in the University of Cambridge, and then in Oxford; in both which Places he display'd his Abilities, especially as to the Mathematicks and Astronomy, and afterwards became Fellow of the Royal Society, a great Virtuoso and Promoter of experimental Knowledge. He was particularly taken Notice of by King Charles the Second, who gave him the Deanery of Exeter, and successively the Bishopricks of Worcester and Salisbury; to the last of which he recover'd the Chancellorship of the Garter, which had been held by Lay-Hands for above a Hundred and Fifty Years. The Sweetness and Genteelness of his Behaviour, besides his Learning and Hospitality, gain'd him great Affection when living, and his charitable Benefactions to Colleges and Hospitals, no less Reputation when dead. The second was Dr. Ralph Cudworth, a Person first educated at Emanuel College in Cambridge, from whence he remov'd and became Master of Clare-Hall, and then Master of Christ College, and Hebrew Professor: In which last Station he continu'd several Years in considerable Fame; but yet he was by many thought more ornamental than useful to his College; but to the Publick he shew'd himself a Master of deep and uncommon Learning; and his Intellectual System manifests a Genius that is not easy to be match'd.

Dr. Cudworth.

Dr. Claggett.

The last was Dr. William Claggett, of Suffolk by Birth, and of Emanuel-College in Cambridge by Education; from whence he became Rector of St. Mary's at St. Edmund's-Bury, and then removing to London, he became Preacher to the honourable Society of Gray's-Inn, Lecturer of St. Michael's Basing shaw, and Chaplain to his Majesty. He was a sound Man, and of real Worth, one of very good natural Parts, an eminent Preacher, and distinguish'd for his happy controversial Writings.

Mr. Waller.

The next were two celebrated Poets, Mr. Edmund Waller and Mr. Thomas Flatman. The First was a Gentleman more than once remember'd in this History, and in many Respects as great as ever the Age cou'd shew. He had the Love and Acquaintance of all the best Poets and polite Writers in his Time, as Fletcher, Ben. Johnson, Suckling, Davenant, Milton, Cowley, Denham, Rochester, Oldham, Etheridge, Dryden, &c. and was himself the great Refiner of the English Tongue. For, besides the Richness of his Fancy, and the Beauty of his Thoughts, he shew'd the most delicate Ear in the World in the Harmony of his Numbers, which he made so smooth and flowing, that he first taught Foreigners to be sensible of the Sweetness of our Language. He liv'd to a great Age; and it is remarkable, there is near Seventy Years distance between his first and his last Poems, and yet the Purity of the Style is much the same. The other, Mr. Flatman, was a Gentleman educated in the University of Oxford, and afterwards of the Middle-Temple, where he became a Barrister, but more signally display'd his Parts and Abilities in the Two ingenious Faculties of Poetry and Painting. His Poems shew a great deal deal of Wit and Spirit, but too much ſully'd with the Looſeneſs of the Age; and his Pieces of Limning in Miniature, no leſs Skill and Exactneſs of Judgment. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

After all theſe, we ſhall mention a learned Foreigner who reſided and dy'd in England, Iſaac Voſſius, Son to the famous John Gerard Voſſius of Holland; a Perſon of vaſt Induſtry, and famous for critical Learning, either in Language or Hiſtory, and ſo famous, that he was taken notice of by the French King, who by Monſieur Colbert ſent him a Royal Gratuity. King Charles likewiſe took him into his Favour, and made him a Canon of Windſor, where he continu'd Fifteen Years after a cloſe retired manner, generally ſtudying in the Night Time, and upon his Death left behind him the beſt private Library, as it was then ſuppos'd, in the whole World. And Iſaac Voſſius.

CHAP. V.

The Vacancy of the Throne. From the final Departure of King James, to the filling the Throne by the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, under the Titles of King William and Queen Mary.

Containing the Space of Seven Weeks and Three Days.

Bohun. Complete Hiſtory. Boyer. Jones. &c.

I. 1. DUring this Period, upon which we are entering, there was an actual Inter-regnum in the Kingdom, a Thing altogether unknown to the Engliſh Nation, and eſtabliſh'd Conſtitution; yet, whatever were the Cauſes of it, it was no ways leſs Actual and Real: Which demonſtrates, that the beſt and wiſeſt Conſtitutions in Government can never, in their own Natures, be made abſolutely Unalterable. But tho' the King's Power was at an End in England, his Title was ſtill in Being, and ſo continu'd till it was formally and effectually determin'd by the remaining unextinguiſhable Powers of the Nation, and the ſolemn placing the Prince and Princeſs of Orange upon the Throne. We are farther to remember, that tho' there was a real Inter-regnum, yet it neither produc'd, nor was it ſucceeded by Anarchy, or total Ceſſion of Supreme Authority, which ſtill continu'd, and like a Spring confin'd by a greater Weight, as ſoon as it is remov'd diſcovers its Elaſtick Power. For from the Moment of the King's Departure, his Power ſeem'd all devolv'd; and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, who in the moſt ancient Times were the ſtanding Council of the Nation, eſpecially in all Emergencies, immediately felt themſelves inveſted with an original Right of applying to the neareſt Relations of the Crown, and of ſummoning the remaining Part of the Legiſlature, to ſettle and eſtabliſh the broken Repoſe of the Nation. Leſs they cou'd not do with Safety to the People, nor more, perhaps, with Juſtice to the Monarchy. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29 An actual Inter-regnum. The Power of the Lords.

In this Capacity, as ſoon as they heard of King James's Departure, their Lordſhips exerted themſelves and their Authority, and immediately aſſembled themſelves in their Houſe at Weſtminſter; and after a long Debate, relating lating chiefly to the Prerogatives of a King of England, they reſolv'd to begin with this following Addreſs to the Prince of Orange: 'We the Lords 'Spiritual and Temporal, aſſembled in this Conjuncture, do deſire your 'Highneſs to take upon you the Adminiſtration of Publick Affairs both Civil and Military, and the Diſpoſal of the Publick Revenue, for the Preſervation of our Religion, Rights, Laws, Liberties and Properties, and of 'the Peace of the Nation; and that your Highneſs will take into your 'particular Care the preſent Condition of Ireland, and endeavour by the 'moſt ſpeedy and effectual Means to prevent the Dangers threatning that 'Kingdom: All which we make our Requeſts to your Highneſs to undertake and exerciſe, till the Meeting of the intended Convention, the 22d Day 'of January next; in which, we doubt not, ſuch proper Methods will be 'taken, as will conduce to the Eſtabliſhment of theſe things upon ſuch ſure 'and legal Foundations, that they may not be in danger of being again 'ſubverted.' Dated at the Houſe of Lords, Weſtminſter, the 25th of December.

They apply to the Prince of Orange.

Having made this firſt Step, their Lordſhips proceeded to conſider of the moſt effectual Way for ſummoning the ſaid Convention, and the ſame Day drew up their Opinions, in this ſecond Addreſs to the Prince: 'We the 'Lords Spiritual and Temporal, aſſembled at Weſtminſter in this extraordi-'nary Conjuncture, do humbly deſire your Highneſs to cauſe Letters to be 'written, ſubſcrib'd by your ſelf, To the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, 'being Proteſtants; and to the ſeveral Counties, Univerſities, Cities, Bo-'roughs, and Cinque-Ports of England, Wales, and Town of Berwick 'upon Twede. The Letters for the Counties to be directed to the Coroners 'of the reſpective Counties, or any one of them; and in default of the Co-'roners, to the Clerk of the Peace of the reſpective Counties: And the 'Letters for the Univerſities, to be directed to every Vice-Chancellor: 'And the Letters to the ſeveral Cities, Boroughs and Cinque-Ports, to be 'directed to the Chief-Magiſtrates of each reſpective City, Borough and 'Cinque-Port; containing Directions for the Chuſing, in all ſuch Counties, 'Cities, Univerſities, Boroughs and Cinque-Ports, within ten Days after 'the Receipt of the reſpective Letters, ſuch a Number of Perſons to Re-'preſent them, as are of Right to be ſent to Parliament: Of which Ele-'ctions, and the Times and Places thereof, the reſpective Officers ſhall give 'Notice, within the Space of five Days in the leaſt. Notice of the intended 'Elections for the Counties, to be publiſh'd in the Churches, immediately 'after the Time of Divine Service, and in all the Market Towns within 'the ſaid reſpective Counties: And Notice of the intended Elections for the 'Cities, Univerſities, Boroughs and Cinque-Ports, to be publiſh'd within 'the ſaid reſpective Places. The ſaid Letters, and the Execution thereof, 'to be Return'd, by ſuch Officer and Officers who ſhall execute the ſame, to 'the Clerk of the Crown in the Court of Chancery; ſo as the Perſons ſo to 'be choſen, may Meet and Sit at Weſtminſter, on the 22d Day of Janua-'ry next.' Theſe two Addreſſes were ſubſcrib'd by about ninety Lords, that were then preſent in the Houſe.

The ſecond Addreſs to him.

In all Debates, the Marquiſs of Hallifax was made their Chair-Man: And having proceeded thus far, to ſhew their Authority, as well as ſettle the Peace of the City, they next made an 'Order for all Papiſts to depart the 'City of London, and ten Miles from the ſame, within five Days, and not 'to remove from their Habitations above five Miles; excepting ſuch as were 'actually in the Queen Dowager's Service, the Domeſticks of Foreign Mi-'niſters, Foreign Merchants and Factors, reſiding only upon the Account 'of Trade, and all Houſe-keepers in London and ten Miles from the ſame, 'who had been Traders for three Years laſt paſt: Provided they gave in 'their Names, and Places of Abode, in eight Days, to the Lord Mayor in 'Writing;

'mean time; and ſuch Officers as ſhou'd neglect, to be taken into Cuſtody.' Jac. 4.
Thus far the Lords proceeded and acted by themſelves, agreeable to their Reſ. 29 ancient Right and Authority.

The Proceedings of the Prince of Orange.

2. In the mean Time the Prince of Orange proceeded with all Vigour and Diligence. His Highneſs ſeem'd never to doubt a conſiderable Party among the Peers; therefore the regular Concurrence of the Commons of England appear'd the moſt important Point; and to aſſemble them after a legal Manner, was no ſmall Difficulty. There was no King in the Nation, nor any particular Style or Form of Government; the Writs were deſtroy'd, and the Great Seal thrown away and loſt. After a long Conſultation upon this weighty and knotty Affair a late Precedent was produc'd, which ſeem'd to agree with the preſent Exigency. About the latter End of the Year 1659, General Monk, with the Nobility and Gentry that labour'd for King Charles's Reſtoration, in oppoſition to the Rump Parliament, who pretended to continue Sitting, iſſu'd forth their Summons in the Names of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, for a Convention or Parliament, to meet on the 25th of April, 1660. And tho' this was done by Unqualify'd Perſons, without the formal Conſent of the People, yet after the King's Return, he was ſo well ſatisfy'd with their Proceedings, that it was Enacted by the King and the Three Eſtates of the Realm, 'That the Lords and Commons then Sit'ting were the Two Houſes of Parliament; notwithſtanding any Want of 'the King's Writs, or any other Defect whatſoever.' From whence his Highneſs's Council inferr'd, 'That if the Neceſſity of Affairs was a forci'ble Argument in 1659, it was certainly of a greater Force in the preſent
'Conjuncture:' Now becauſe the Commons of England have not the ſame Power to Aſſemble as the Peers, the Prince publiſh'd this following Order;

He Summons the Commons, &c.

'Whereas the Neceſſity of Affairs does require ſpeedy Advice; We do de-
'ſire all ſuch Perſons as have ſerv'd as Knights, Citizens or Burgeſſes in 'any of the Parliaments that were held during the Reign of the late King
'Charles the Second, to meet us at St. James's, upon Wedneſday the 26th 'of this Inſtant December, by ten of the Clock in the Morning. And we 'do likewiſe deſire, That the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen of the 'City of London wou'd be preſent at the ſame time; and that the Common 'Council wou'd appoint fifty of their Number to be there likewiſe. And
'hereof we deſire them not to fail.

Purſuant to this Summons, many Members of the Parliaments in King Charles's Reign, to the Number of about a hundred and ſixty, and the Aldermen and Deputies of the Common-Council of the City of London, aſſembled at St. James's, on Wedneſday the appointed Day; where the Prince made this following Speech to them: 'You, Gentlemen, that have been

His Speech to them.

'Members of the late Parliaments, I have deſired you to meet me here, to 'adviſe the beſt Manner how to purſue the Ends of my Declaration, in 'Calling a Free-Parliament, for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Reli- 'gion, and the Reſtoring the Rights and Liberties of the Kingdom, and
'ſettling the ſame, that they may not be in danger of being again ſubverted.
'And you, the Aldermen and Members of the Common-Council of the City 'of London, I deſire the ſame of you. And in Regard your Numbers are 'like to be great, you may, if you think fit, divide your ſelves, and ſit
'in ſeveral Places.' The Lord Mayor being abſent, upon the Account of his Indiſpoſition, the Prince gave the Copy of his Speech to Sir Thomas Allen, as being eldeſt Alderman, and ſtyl'd Father of the City, deſiring that he and the reſt wou'd take that Paper into immediate Conſideration.

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

They form themſelves into a Houſe.

Accordingly, by Agreement, they all repair'd to the Commons Houſe in Weſtminſter; where being ſeated, and having choſen Henry Powle, Eſq; for their Chair-Man, the firſt Queſtion they debated, was, What Authority they had to aſſemble? Upon which it was ſoon agreed, That the Requeſt of his Highneſs the Prince was a ſufficient Warrant. The next Queſtion of moment was, How his Highneſs cou'd take upon him the Adminiſtration of Affairs without a diſtinguiſhing Name or Title? Which Objection, being ſtarted by Sir Robert Southwell, was briskly anſwer'd by Serjeant Maynard, who ſaid, That the Aſſembly wou'd loſe a great deal of time, if they waited till Sir Robert cou'd conceive how that was poſſible. A Temporary Offer of the Government being made to his Highneſs, one propos'd that it ſhou'd be, not for a Month only, but for a whole Year; to whom it was anſwer'd, that the Convention ought only to conſider of that. Others mov'd that the Aſſociation, that had been ſign'd by the Lords, might likewiſe be ſubſcrib'd by this Aſſembly; but it was carry'd, that the ſaid Aſſociation ſhou'd be left upon the Table, and every one be at liberty to ſign it or not. After theſe previous Debates, they reſolv'd upon Heads for an Addreſs to be made to his Highneſs, and appointed Perſons to draw up and prepare the ſame; and in the Afternoon it was done accordingly, and read and approv'd in this Form:

Their Addreſs to the Prince.

'We who have ſerv'd as Members of the Parliaments during the Reign 'of the late King Charles the Second, together with the Court of Alder- 'men, and Members of the Common Council of the City of London, aſſem- 'bled at your Highneſs's Deſire, in this extraordinary Conjuncture, do, 'with an unanimous Conſent, tender to your Highneſs our humble and 'hearty Thanks, for your Coming into this Kingdom, and Expoſing your 'Perſon to ſo great Hazards, for the Preſervation of our Religion, Laws, 'and Liberties, and Reſcuing us from the Miſeries of Popery and Slavery: 'And deſire your Highneſs, (for the Purſuance of theſe Ends, and for the 'Preſervation of the Peace of the Nation) your Highneſs will take upon 'you the Adminiſtration of Publick Affairs, both Civil and Military, and 'the Diſpoſal of the Publick Revenues. We do alſo deſire, That your 'Highneſs will take into your particular Conſideration, the preſent Condi- 'tion of Ireland; and endeavour, by the moſt ſpeedy and effectual Means, 'to prevent the Dangers threatning that Kingdom. All which, we deſire 'your Highneſs to undertake and execute, until the Meeting of the intend- 'ed Convention, the 22d Day of January next.' Then, for the Chuſing of Members for the ſaid Convention, they propos'd the ſame which has been mention'd in the Lords Addreſs; and ſo concluded in theſe Words, 'This 'we humbly offer to your Highneſs, as our beſt Advice, in this Exigency 'of Affairs, for attaining the Ends of your Highneſs's Declaration; and as 'the beſt Means tending to ſuch an Eſtabliſhment, as that our Religion, 'Laws and Liberties, may not be in danger of being again ſubverted.'

His Highneſs's Anſwer to the Lords and their Addreſs.

His Highneſs having appointed to receive the Addreſs the next Morning, he was then attended by a Body of them; and the Addreſs was preſented and read by Mr. Powle to his Highneſs; who was pleas'd to declare, That it being a Matter of Weight, he wou'd conſider thereof, and give his Anſwer the next Day. Accordingly, on Friday Morning, December 28, his Highneſs firſt gave the following Anſwer at St. James's to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal: My Lords, I have conſider'd of your Advice; and, as far as I am able, I will endeavour to ſecure the Peace of the Nation, untill the Meeting of the Convention in January next; for the Election whereof I will forthwith iſſue Letters, according to your Deſire. I will alſo take care to apply the Publick Revenue to the moſt proper Uſes that the preſent Affairs require; and likewiſe endeavour to put Ireland into ſuch a Condition, as that the Proteſtant Religion and Engliſh Intereſt may be maintain'd tain'd in that Kingdom. And I further aſſure you, That as I came hither for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of theſe Kingdoms; ſo I ſhall always be ready to expoſe my ſelf to any Hazard, for the Defence of the ſame. And in the Afternoon, his Highneſs was pleas'd to return the very ſame Anſwer to the Commons. 1688. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

3. While King James continu'd at Rocheſter, the old French Ambaſſador, Monſieur Barillon, was extraordinary active and buſy in promoting Diviſions amongſt the Peers; wherefore the Prince of Orange was no ſooner inform'd of his Majeſty's ſecond Departure, but his Highneſs ſent an expreſs Order to that Miniſter to leave the Kingdom in four and twenty Hours. Barillon demanded a longer time, which being refus'd, he unwillingly parted from London, where he had many Years reſided, together with the Marquiſs Rangoni, Envoy of Modena, to whom the Prince had granted a particular Guard. Two Days after, the Prince having receiv'd an Account, that the Earl of Eſſex, and ſome other Engliſh Gentlemen had been ſecur'd at Paris, it was debated, whether his Highneſs ſhou'd ſend down a Meſſenger to arreſt the French Ambaſſador, by way of Repriſals; but the Propoſition was not thought adviſeable at this nice Juncture. The French Ambaſſador ſent away.

On the 30th of Deecember, being Sunday, his Highneſs the Prince ſolemnly receiv'd the Holy Sacrament in the Royal Chapel of St. James's from the Hands of the Biſhop of London, and heard the whole Service perform'd by Dr. Burnet, and an excellent Sermon preach'd by Dr. Lloyd Biſhop of St. Aſaph; which open profeſſing himſelf a Member of the Church of England, gain'd him the Praiſes and Affections of many wavering People. The next Day the Juſtices of the Peace of Middleſex waited upon his Highneſs with an Addreſs of Thanks, for his hazardous coming over to deliver them from Popery and Slavery. And on the ſame Day his Highneſs began with the firſt Act of his Adminiſtration of publick Affairs, and this was a Declaration for 'Authorizing all Sheriffs, Juſtices of the Peace, 'and other Officers and Miniſters, not being Papiſts, that were in ſuch 'Offices, on the firſt Day of December laſt, to act in their reſpective 'Places, till the Meeting of the intended Convention, or other Order to 'the contrary. The Prince declares for the Church of England.

On the ſame Monday Evening, the laſt in the Year, his Highneſs made a publick Viſit to the Queen Dowager; and among other Queſtions, in a pleaſant way, he ask'd her Majeſty, How ſhe paſs'd away the Time, and Whether ſhe play'd at Baſſet? Upon which the Queen took this Opportunity to ſpeak, at a diſtance, in favour of the confin'd Earl of Feverſham, and anſwer'd his Highneſs, That ſhe had not play'd that Game ſince the abſence of her Chamberlain, who us'd to keep the Bank. The Prince immediately took the Hint, and generouſly aſſur'd her Majeſty, That he wou'd not by any means interrupt her Majeſty's Diverſions; and the next Day he order'd the Earl to be ſet at Liberty. However his Highneſs's Complaiſance did not alter the Queen's Reſolution of retiring to her native Countrey, Portugal; for at that very time ſhe diſpatch'd an Expreſs to Liſbon to that Purpoſe; tho' as it happen'd afterwards, it did not take Effect. He viſits the Queen Dowager.

II. 1. As the Prince of Orange had ſhewn himſelf very active and vigilant with relation to the Affairs of England, ſo he manifeſted a ſuitable Regard to thoſe of Scotland and Ireland; with ſome Account of the firſt of which we ſhall begin the new Year. Now the Declaration that his Highneſs had caus'd to be diſpers'd in Scotland did not miſs of its deſign'd Effect, and particularly among the Presbyterian Party, who ſeem'd to have had as great an Influence in the Beginnings of the Revolution there, as 1688/9. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29 The Prince's Care of Scotland.

as the Church Party had in England. The Lord Chancellor, upon the News of King James's withdrawing, immediately reſign'd the Great Seal, and retir'd from Edinburgh: Upon which the Populace of that City, with ungovernable Fury, inſulted and rifled, not only the Roman Catholicks, but alſo the Epiſcopal Party, of whom their Heads the Biſhops had unhappily publiſh'd a ſort of Abhorrence of the Expedition of the Prince of Orange from Holland.

He aſſembles the Scotch Nobility at London.

His Highneſs being inform'd of theſe forward Motions, on the 7th of January he aſſembled all the Scotch Nobility and Gentry, as were then in and about London; who meeting at St. James's, he made this Speech to them: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, The only Reaſon that induc'd me to 'undergo ſo great an Undertaking, was, That I ſaw the Laws and Liber- 'ties of theſe Kingdoms overturn'd, and the Proteſtant Religion in immi- 'nent Danger; and ſeeing there are here ſo many Noblemen and Gentle- 'men, I have call'd you together, that I may have your Advice, what is 'to be done for the ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion, and reſtoring your 'Laws and Liberties, according to my Declaration.' As ſoon as his Highneſs was retir'd, theſe Lords and Gentlemen immediately repair'd to the Council-Chamber at White-Hall; and having choſen the Duke of Hamilton their Preſident, they conſulted together what Advice was moſt proper to be given to his Highneſs in this Conjuncture: And after ſome Hours Debates, they agreed upon the Particulars of it, which they order'd to be drawn up in Writing. The next Day this Draught was preſented to the Aſſembly, and order'd to be ingroſs'd, after they had made ſome Amendments to it, relating to the Calling a General Meeting of the States of Scotland. But as they were ready to break up, the Earl of Arran propoſed to them, That they ſhou'd move the Prince of Orange to deſire the King to return, and call a Free Parliament; which wou'd be the beſt way to ſecure their Religion and Properties, according to the known Laws of the Kingdom, and to heal all Breaches. This Propoſal ſeem'd to diſſatisfy the whole Aſſembly; and therefore, being met again the Day following, Sir Partrick Hume took particular Notice of it, and deſir'd to know If there were any that wou'd ſecond it: But none appearing to do it, he ſaid, That what the Earl had propos'd was evidently oppoſite and ungrateful to the Prince of Orange's Undertaking, his Declaration, and the good Intentions of preſerving the Proteſtant Religion, and of reſtoring their Laws and Liberties; and farther deſir'd, That the Aſſembly wou'd declare this to be their Opinion. The Lord Cardroſs ſeconded Sir Patrick's Motion, but the Duke of Hamilton wav'd it, alledging, That their Buſineſs was to prepare an Advice to be offer'd to the Prince; and the Advice being ready to go to the Vote, there was no need that the Aſſembly ſhou'd give their Senſe of the Earl's Propoſal, which never before, nor after Sir Patrick's Motion, any had pretended to own or ſecond, ſo that it was fallen, and out of Doors; and that the Vote of the Aſſembly upon the Advice, brought in by their Order, wou'd ſufficiently declare their Opinion. This being ſeconded by the Earl of Sutherland, the Lord Cardroſs and Sir Patrick did both acquieſce in it. In concluſion they unanimouſly Voted this following Addreſs to the Prince of Orange.

Their Addreſs to him, to take the Government, &c.

'We, the Lords and Gentlemen of the Kingdom of Scotland, aſſembled 'at your Highneſs's Deſire on this Extraordinary Conjuncture, do give 'your Highneſs our humble and hearty Thanks, for your pious and gene- 'rous Undertaking, for preſerving the Proteſtant Religion, and reſtoring 'the Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom. In order to the attaining of 'theſe Ends, our humble Advice and Deſire is, That your Highneſs take 'upon you the Adminiſtration of all Affairs both Civil and Military, the 'Diſpoſal of the Publick Revenues and Fortreſſes of the Kingdom of Scot- 'land,

'land, and the doing every Thing that is neceſſary for the Preſervation of the Peace of the Kingdom, until a General Meeting of the States of the Nation, which we humbly deſire your Highneſs to call, to be holden at Edinburgh the 14th Day of March next, by your Letter or Proclamation, to be publiſh'd at the Market-Croſs of Edinburgh, and other head Boroughs of the ſeveral Shires and Stewarties, as ſufficient Intimation to all concern'd, according to the Cuſtom of the Kingdom: And that the Publication of theſe your Letters or Proclamation be by the Sheriffs, or Stewart-Clerks, for the Free-Holders, who have the Value of Lands holden according to Law, for making Elections; and by the Town-Clerks of the ſeveral Boroughs, for the Meeting of the whole Burgeſſes of the reſpective Royal-Boroughs, to make their Elections, at leaſt fifteen Days before the Meeting of the Eſtates at Edinburgh; and the reſpective Clerks to make Intimation thereof, at the leaſt ten Days before the Meeting for Election: And that the whole Electors and Members of the ſaid Meeting at Edinburgh, qualify'd as above expreſs'd, be Proteſtants, without any other Exception or Limitation whatſoever; to deliberate and reſolve what is to be done for ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion, and reſtoring the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, according to your Highneſs's Declaration.

1688/9. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

This Addreſs was ſign'd by about thirty Lords and eighty Gentlemen, and preſented in their Preſence at St. James by their Preſident the Duke of Hamilton. His Highneſs took three Days time to conſider of an Anſwer; tho' he gave them his immediate Thanks for the Truſt and Confidence they had repos'd in him. So on the 14th he met the Scotch Lords and Gentlemen in the ſame Place again, and gave them the following Anſwer: My Lords and Gentlemen, In purſuance of your Advice, I will, until the Meeting of the Eſtates in March next, give ſuch Orders concerning the Affairs of Scotland, as are neceſſary for the calling of the ſaid Meeting for the Preſervation of the Peace, the applying of the Publick Revenue to the moſt preſſing Uſes, and putting the Fortreſſes into the Hands of Perſons, in whom the Nation can have a juſt Confidence: And I do further aſſure you, That you will always find me ready to concur with you in every Thing that may be found neceſſary for ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion, and reſtoring the Laws and Liberties of the Nation. The Earls of Crawford and Lothian being preſent in this laſt Meeting, but arriving in London after the former, deſir'd they might likewiſe ſign the ſaid Addreſs, which they accordingly did. So that now all Things appeared with a fair Proſpect to the Prince's Succeſſes in the Kingdom of Scotland.

The Prince's Anſwer.

2. The Prince of Orange was no leſs careful and ſolicitous about the Safety and Preſervation of Ireland, where the Proſpect was leſs pleaſing in a ſhort time, tho' there was an hopeful Appearance. The Care of that Kingdom was recommended to his Highneſs, not only by Engliſh Lords and Commons, but alſo by a particular Addreſs from the Iriſh Proteſtant Nobility and Gentry, aſſembled for that Purpoſe in the Duke of Ormond's Houſe, who at the ſame time preſented his Highneſs with the Draughts of the chief Ports and Fortreſſes of that Kingdom. The Prince was juſtly afraid that the Lord-Lieutenant Tyrconnel wou'd cloſely adhere to King James and his Intereſt, being ſupported by a numerous Army, and a powerful Popiſh Party, who had wretchedly depreſs'd the poor Proteſtants in all Parts. But upon a Report that he had actually propos'd in Council to make the Lords Granard and Monjoy, both Proteſtants, the firſt Lieutenant, and the other Major-General, and to reſtore the Arms taken from the

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

the Proteſtant Party, it was thought proper to ſummon him, by a Letter, 'To ſubmit to the preſent Adminiſtration in England, and thoſe Troops 'which the Prince of Orange deſign'd for the Security of Ireland; farther 'aſſuring him, That the Roman Catholicks there ſhou'd enjoy the ſame Li-'berty they had under the Reign of King Charles the Second.

Colonel Hamilton ſent thither.

Colonel Sarsfield, a Native of Ireland, was firſt reſolv'd upon to carry this important Letter; but he freely told his Highneſs, That he was ready to obey his Commands, and even to fight againſt the King of France; but as to his being any ways acceſſary to deprive his Lawful Sovereign of one of his Kingdoms, he wou'd never do it, unleſs he was forc'd to it. The Prince always lov'd or eſteem'd a brave Officer, and therefore his Anſwer was not ill receiv'd; and ſo the Matter was left to Colonel Hamilton, another Iriſhman, who willingly undertook the Meſſage: But being arriv'd at Dublin, inſtead of promoting the Prince's Intereſt, he acted in concert with the Earl of Tyrconnel, directly to oppoſe it. Some of the Lords who had plentiful Eſtates in Ireland, were apprehenſive of the ſad Conſequences of Tyrconnel's Preparations, and preſs'd his Highneſs to ſend ſpeedy Succours to the Proteſtants of the North of that Kingdom: But this Motion, we are told, was retarded by others, who having nothing to loſe, deſir'd nothing more than that Things ſhou'd come to an Extremity; as foreſeeing that Oppoſition againſt Conquerors is ever attended with Forfeitures, out of which Friends are to be rewarded. But to return to the Affairs of England.

The Prince regulates the Engliſh Forces.

3. The firſt Thing the Prince did, after his ordering of Sheriffs and other Officers to continue their Places, was to diſpatch Circular Letters for the Meeting of the Convention; 'and for the better preventing Diſorders 'that might happen in any Place of Election, he order'd all Regiments, 'Troops and Companies to march out of the Quarters where ſuch Electi-'ons ſhou'd be made, the ſeveral Garriſons only excepted.' In the next Place, his Highneſs bent his Thoughts upon modelling the Engliſh Army: And firſt he caus'd a Review to be made of all the Engliſh Forces, and then gave Directions to the Lord Ranelaugh their Pay-Maſter to pay them their Arrears, and to the Lord Churchill to make a Reform of Eight of the new rais'd Regiments, viz. Five of Horſe, and Three of Foot; which however extended no farther than their Officers, nor did it reach thoſe neither who had ſerv'd before, and were willing to be employ'd under his Highneſs. Beſides this Reform, the whole Troop of Life Guards, commanded by the Lord Dover, was disbanded, to make room, as was juſtly ſuppos'd, for the Dutch Life-Guards. The Regiment of Dumbarton was given to Duke Scomberg, which was a Diſappointment to Duke Hamilton, who expected it ſhou'd have been beſtow'd on his ſecond Son, the Earl of Selkirk, to make him amends for his Regiment that had been given before to Colonel Godfrey. That of Major-General Oglethorp, whom the Prince in vain endeavour'd to engage in his Service, was given to the Lord Churchill's Brother; and that of Skelton, to Colonel Fitz-Patrick. Colonel Tufton, who commanded Admiral Herbert's Regiment, ſurrender'd his Commiſſion, as likewiſe did Major-General Sackvil and Colonel Legg: And ſeveral other Officers follow'd this Example, upon Account of the new Oath that was exacted of them. Now becauſe the Prince was inform'd, that divers Soldiers contrary to his Intentions and the Laws of the Land, were Quarter'd in Private Houſes, his Highneſs iſſu'd out a Declaration, ordering that none of the Forces ſhou'd preſume to Quarter in any Private Houſe, without the voluntary Conſent of the Owner.

In the mean time the Prince began to be ſenſible of the Want of a neceſſary Subſiſtence for the preſent Exigencies; and upon the firſt Notice given by Letter from his Highneſs to the Court of Aldermen and Common-Council of the City of London, That there was a great Occaſion for an immediate Supply of Money, beyond what the preſent Condition of the Revenue cou'd furniſh, for the Charge of the Navy, paying off Part of the Army, and ſending a ſpeedy Relief for the Defence of the Proteſtant Intereſt in Ireland. And propoſing, That for the anſwering theſe great Ends, ſuch a ſum of Money ſhou'd be advanc'd by the City, by way of Loan, as they cou'd conveniently ſpare, which wou'd be ſecur'd and repaid with full Intereſt at the end of ſix Months; an unanimous Vote immediately paſs'd, That they wou'd ſupply his Highneſs with two hundred Thouſand Pounds; which was the Sum demanded, and which was rais'd in four Days time; one ſingle Man, Sir Samuel Daſhwood alone having ſubſcrib'd ſixty Thouſand Pounds towards it. 1688/9. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

Money lent him by the City.

Among the many that waited upon the Prince, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury had hitherto declin'd that Particular, tho' he had ſhewn himſelf as ready as any in joining with, and ſubſcribing the Lords Invitation at Guild-Hall. This was by many aſcrib'd to his Indiſpoſition of Body, but by others, who ſeem'd to judge more rightly of the Matter, to the ſame Reaſon which oblig'd the Biſhops not to ſign the Aſſociation. However, his Grace did ſoon after ſend a Complement to the Prince, and with ſeven or eight Biſhops more ſubſcrib'd the Aſſociation; having ſoften'd ſome Words in it, that ſeem'd to bear upon the Principles of Chriſtianity, as was formerly hinted, whereof one was that of Revenge, which they chang'd into that of Puniſhment.

The Archbiſhop, &c. ſigns the Aſſociation.

About the ſame Time divers of the Diſſenting Miniſters, in and about London, under the Denomination of Presbyterial and Congregational, to the Number of about ninety, attended his Highneſs at St. James's, introduc'd by the Earl of Devonſhire, the Lord Wharton and the Lord Wiltſhire; when their Senſe was repreſented by one of thoſe Miniſters to this Effect:

The Diſſenting Miniſters Addreſs to the Prince.

'That they profeſs'd their grateful Senſe of his Highneſs's hazardous and 'heroical Expedition, which the Favour of Heaven had made ſo ſurprizing-'ly proſperous. That they eſteem'd it a common Felicity, that the wor-'thy Patriots of the Nobility and Gentry, had unanimouſly concurr'd with 'his Highneſs's Deſign: By whoſe moſt prudent Advice, the Adminiſtrati-'on of Publick Affairs was devolv'd in this difficult Conjuncture, into 'Hands which the Nation and World knew to be apt for the greateſt Un-'dertakings, and ſo ſuitable to the preſent Exigencies. That they promis'd 'the utmoſt Endeavours, which in their Stations they were capable of af-'fording, for promoting the excellent and moſt deſirable Ends, for which 'his Highneſs had declared. That they added their continual fervent Prayers 'to the Almighty, for the Preſervation of his Highneſs's Perſon, and the 'Succeſs of his future Endeavours, for the Defence and Propagation of the 'Proteſtant Intereſt throughout the Chriſtian World. That they ſhou'd 'moſt willingly have choſen that Time for the Seaſon of paying this their 'Duty to his Highneſs, when the Lord Biſhop of London, and the Clergy 'of London attended his Highneſs for that purpoſe; which ſome of them 'did, and of which his Lordſhip was pleas'd condeſcendingly to take No-'tice to his Highneſs; had their Notice of that Application been ſo early, 'as to have made their more general Attendance poſſible to them at that 'Time. That therefore, tho' they did now appear in a diſtinct Company, 'they did it not upon a Diſtinct Account, but on that which is common to 'all Proteſtants. That tho' there were ſome of eminent Note, whom Age 'or preſent Infirmities hinder'd from coming with them, yet they concurr'd 'in the ſame grateful Senſe of their common Deliverance.

His

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

His Highneſs was pleas'd very favourably to receive their Application, and return'd them this Anſwer: My great End was the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and with the Almighty's Aſſiſtance and Permiſſion, ſo to defend and ſupport the ſame, as may give it Strength and Reputation throughout the World, ſufficient to preſerve it from the Inſults and Oppreſſions of its moſt implacable Enemies; and that more immediately in theſe Kingdoms of England, Scotland and Ireland: And I will uſe my utmoſt Endeavours, ſo to Settle and Cement all different Perſuaſions of Proteſtants, in ſuch a Bond of Love and Community, as may contribute to the laſting Security and Enjoyment of Spirituals and Temporals, to all ſincere Profeſſors of that Holy Religion.

His Anſwer.

Elections for the Convention.

4. All this Time the Elections of the Members for the Convention went on with the greateſt Freedom and Liberty that cou'd be imagin'd; every Man giving his Vote for whom he pleas'd, without the leaſt Sollicitations from the Prince, or any belonging to him; to which Calm, the Removal of the Soldiers, during the Times of Election, did not a little contribute. There had been Writs twice before this for a Parliament in a few Months, and almoſt every Place had before this fix'd their Members; ſo that the Difference was not conſiderable between the Members that were, and thoſe that wou'd have been choſen, if King James had ſuffer'd the firſt or ſecond Parliament he call'd, to have met: And this gives the trueſt Idea of the Temper of the Nation at this Seaſon, and what wou'd have been the Event, if either of thoſe Parliaments had ſat. Yet ſtill Diviſions and Difficulties were to be expected; and the Sitting of the Convention drawing near, and the major Part of the Members being come up to London, it was eaſy to foreſee that there wou'd be more than one Party in the Lower Houſe. It is true, the Generality, if not all of them, agreed in the 'Neceſſity of Re-eſtabliſhing the Fundamentals of the Government, and of 'bringing back the Engliſh Conſtitution to its perfect and pureſt Original, 'tho' hard to know or effect, as the beſt Means to ſecure the Nation a-'gainſt Popery, Slavery and Oppreſſion;' but yet they did not a little differ in the Means and Methods of Compaſſing theſe great Ends. And again, tho' all concurr'd to lodge the Government in the Hands of the Prince of Orange, yet ſtill the Opinions were various as to the Title they ſhou'd confer upon him; ſome being for making him Regent or Protector, with particular Limitations, and others King, according to the old Conſtitution. The firſt ſeem'd to be ſtrengthen'd by the numerous Party of the Republicans, who hop'd by that Means to make a great Step towards Introducing a Common-Wealth. Then as for thoſe who were for a King, they appear'd divided into two Parties; ſome maintaining that the Princeſs of Orange being the next Heir, ſhe ought therefore to be Crown'd, and the Prince to manage the Affairs as King only by his Wife's Title; and others, who appear'd a Majority, aſſerting that the Prince ought to be made King ſingly.

Diviſions about ſettling the Government.

Arguments for making the Prince of Orange King only.

This laſt was ſtrenuouſly urg'd and maintain'd, and the Arguments that were publiſh'd much applauded, in this Conjuncture. They alledg'd, 'That 'the Supreme Power Perſonal of England was in the King, Lords and 'Commons, the three Eſſential Parts of the Engliſh Conſtitution; That that 'Supreme Power was Diſſolv'd by the Failure of two Eſſential Parts of it, 'viz. of the King, by his Subjection to the Biſhop of Rome, his Uſurping an Arbitrary Power, and afterwards by his Perſonal Withdrawing himſelf; and of the Houſe of Commons, which cou'd not ſo be call'd according to the Conſtitution, the King being gone, and the Freedom of Election before deſtroy'd by the King's Encroachments: That the Supreme Power Real remain'd in the Community, who might act by their Ori-

'preme Power Perſonal; and had a full Right to take ſuch Meaſures for 'ſettling the Government as they ſhou'd think were ſure and effectual, for
'the laſting Security and Peace of the Nation; ſince it was the Communi'ty of England, which firſt gave Being to both King and Parliament, and 'to all Parts of the Conſtitution.' They farther urg'd, 'That the Acts
'done and executed by the Supreme Power Perſonal had ſo modell'd the 'Parts and Perſons of the Community, that the Original Conſtitution was 'the beſt, juſteſt and moſt deſireable: That the Royal Family afforded a
'Perſon that both Heaven and Earth pointed out for King: That there 'were Lords whoſe Nobility was not affected by the Diſſolution of the Go'vernment, and were the Subject Matter of a Houſe of Lords; and that 'there were Places, which by Cuſtom or Charter, had Right to chuſe Re-
'preſentatives of the Commons: That there were inextricable Difficulties
'in all other Methods; for there being no Demiſe of the King, neither 'Civil nor Natural, there was conſequently no Deſcent, and the Com'munity only had a Right to take Advantage of the King's Forfeiture or 'Deſertion: That whatever other Power might be imagin'd in the two
'Houſes, as Houſes of Parliament, it cou'd juſtify it ſelf to the Reaſon of 'any who underſtood the Bottom of the Engliſh Conſtitution: That by
'this Method all Popiſh Succeſſors might be excluded, and the Govern'ment ſecured, in Caſe all the Proteſtants of the Family dy'd without Iſ-
'ſue; and this by the very Conſtitution of England. That it wou'd be
'moſt adviſeable, not only for the Security and Welfare of the Nation,
'but for the Intereſt of their Royal Highneſſes, to limit the Crown as fol'lows; To the Prince of Orange during his Life, (yet with all poſſible 'Honour and Reſpect to the Princeſs) Remainder to the Princeſs of O- 'range, and the Heirs of her Body; Remainder to the Princeſs of Den-
'mark, and the Heirs of her Body; Remainder to the Heirs of the Body
'of the Prince of Orange; Remainder as an Act of Parliament ſhou'd
'appoint.

In which Method they believ'd they found theſe Conveniencies among o-thers, viz. 'That Husband and Wife being but one Perſon in Law, the 'Prince's Honour wou'd be her Royal Highneſs's; That it put the Kingly
'Power into the beſt Hand in the World; That it aſſerted the Power of 'the Community; That it wou'd be ſome Acknowledgment to the Prince
'for what he had done for the Nation: Concluding, That it was worthy Ob-
'ſervation, that before the Theocracy of the Jews ceas'd, the Manner of 'the Divine Deſignation of their Judges, was by God's giving the People
'ſome Deliverance by the Hand of the Perſon to whoſe Government they 'ought to ſubmit: That ſince that Theocracy ceas'd, there was no Inſtance
'of a Deſignation of any Perſon to any Government, more viſibly Divine
'and Miraculous than that which they now admired: That if the Voice of 'the People be the Voice of God, that Voice never ſpoke louder: That if 'a Nation of various Opinions, Intereſts and Factions, from a turbulent
'and fluctuating State, fell into a ſerene and quiet Calm, and Men's Minds 'were ſtrangely united on a ſudden, it ſhew'd from whence they were in'fluenc'd. In a Word, that if the Hand of God was to be ſeen in Human 'Affairs, and his Voice to be heard upon Earth, they cou'd not any where
'ſince the Ceaſing of Miracles, find out a clearer and more remarkable In-
'ſtance than is to be obſerv'd in the preſent Revolution.' Beſides the fore-mention'd Reaſons, they farther alledg'd, 'That the Placing the Prince of

1688. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'Orange ſingly on the Throne; wou'd be a Caution to ſucceeding Kings, 'of what fatal Conſequence a general Derogation may be, when they found 'by this Inſtance, the Exerciſe of the Kingly Office in Danger, not only 'with Reference to Themſelves, but likewiſe precarious to their Families. 'That the Princeſs of Orange wou'd ſhare in all the Glory of a Crown, 'without the Trouble of it, and wou'd be free from all Popiſh Reflections. 'That ſhe ſate in her Father's Throne while he liv'd; and that there was 'no Room for the Princeſs of Denmark to think her ſelf neglected, the 'Exchange being attended with many Advantages, by the Poſtponing of 'the Prince of Wales. That if the Prince of Orange were not King in his 'own Right, his Intereſt cou'd not be entirely that of the Nation; for tho' 'his Bravery was an Aſſurance of his Sincerity to us, yet if there remain'd 'any Probability of his returning to Holland, as upon the Death of his 'Queen, if She only were Sovereign, his Intereſt muſt be divided. That it was 'dangerous to the Government it ſelf, to veſt the Exerciſe of the Sovereignty 'in Both; for they might differ in Sentiments of Things: That it was repug-'nant to grant the Crown to Both, and to fix the Adminiſtration in One; 'ſince the Adminiſtration was an Incident inſeparable from the Sovereignty.' Laſtly, they alledg'd, 'That it ſupported this uſeful Maxim, That a neigh-'bouring Nation may take Arms, to reſcue a People oppreſs'd by Tyranny; 'and that Foreign Princes wou'd be apt to look to themſelves, when they 'heard, by our Nation's Example of Gratitude, That they are no longer 'Safe, than while Juſt to their Subjects.'

The Princeſs Anne complying.

This Project, in all Appearance, ſeem'd moſt likely to take; but it being in a great Meaſure derogatory to the Intereſt of her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs of Denmark, it was fear'd that She, who had a conſiderable Party in both Houſes, wou'd hardly conſent to it. But however this Obſtacle, it ſeems, was ſoon remov'd; and we are told that her Royal Highneſs preferr'd the Publick Good before Her private Intereſt, both out of the great Concern She ever had for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, the Laws and Liberties of England, and by the Mediation of the Lady Churchill, a Perſon diſtinguiſh'd by her prevailing Wit, and thoſe Perſonal Accompliſhments for which her Sex are generally admir'd. Beſides this Difficulty, they were apprehenſive of another Party, which, it was ſuppos'd, wou'd be headed by Sir Edward Seymour, a Man of great Sway, and which conſiſted of Thoſe who deſign'd and determin'd to 'Continue proviſionally 'the Adminiſtration of Publick Affairs Civil and Military, and the Diſpoſal 'of the Revenue in his Highneſs the Prince's Hands; and impower him to 'make War againſt France, a Point wherein all Parties now concurr'd and 'agreed; to ſee old Treaties executed, and in Caſe of Neceſſity, to make 'new Alliances.' Then as to the Lords, tho' they were generally for keeping out King James, yet there were a conſiderable Party amongſt them, who to ſave the Honour of the Church of England and the Rights and Relicks of Monarchy, were for ſending his Majeſty an Invitation to return into England; but ſtill upon ſuch hard Terms, and with ſuch Reſtrictions as, in all probability, he wou'd never condeſcend to: Of which Party were the Earls of Clarendon, Rocheſter and Nottingham, and moſt of the Biſhops. As for the Affair of the Titular Prince of Wales, the Generality were of Opinion, that it ought to be left undecided, and not ſo much as mention'd or remember'd.

Divers Projects.

The Princeſs of Orange ſent for.

While Mens Minds were agitated with Projects and Contrivances, and while it remain'd doubtful what Reſolutions the Convention wou'd take concerning the Settlement of the Government, the Prince of Orange thought it beſt to ſend over for his Royal Conſort; and gave particular Orders to Admiral Herbert to attend her in her Paſſage, with a Squadron of Dutch Men of War, and ſome Engliſh Yatches. Perhaps the Prince never acted more wiſely wiſely than in ſending for One who was moſt likely to bring Peace and Unanimity to the Nation; that admirable Lady that was infinitely belov'd and admir'd by the Engliſh; a Lady that reviv'd and gladen'd the Hearts of all that ſaw or convers'd with her. 1688/9. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

III. 1. At the appointed Time, the wiſh'd for 22d Day of January, the Grand Convention met, not only with the Expectations of the Britiſh Dominions, but of the neighbouring Nations and Kingdoms. Being divided into two Houſes, as uſually in Parliament, of whoſe Rules they were ſtrictly obſervant, they immediately proceeded to the Choice of their Speakers. In the Houſe of Peers the Marquiſs of Hallifax carry'd it againſt the Earl of Danby; and in the Lower-Houſe, Henry Powle Eſquire, was unanimouſly choſen; tho' it was thought that Sir Edward Seymour, who had ſo early join'd the Prince at Exeter, wou'd ſtand in Competition with him. The Commons likewiſe choſe Mr. Jodrell Clerk, and Mr. Gwilliam Clerk-Aſſiſtant, and likewiſe Mr. Topham Serjeant at Arms. The Chairs being fill'd, the following Letter from the Prince of Orange, was read in both Houſes, on the Occaſion of their Meeting. The Meeting of the Convention.

The Prince of Orange's Letter to both Houſes.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I have endeavour'd to the utmoſt of my Power 'to perform what was deſired from Me in order to the Publick Peace and 'Safety; and I do not know that any Thing hath been omitted which might 'tend to the Preſervation of them, ſince the Adminiſtration of Affairs was 'put into my Hands. It now lyeth upon you to lay the Foundation of a firm 'Security for your Religion, your Laws and your Liberties. I do not 'doubt, but that by ſuch a Full and Free Repreſentative of the Nation, as is 'now met, the Ends of my Declaration will be attained: And ſince it hath 'pleas'd God hitherto to bleſs my good Intentions with ſo great Succeſs, I 'truſt in him, that He will compleat his own Work, by ſending a Spirit of 'Peace and Union to influence your Counſels, that no Interruption may 'be given to a happy and laſting Settlement.

'The dangerous Condition of the Proteſtants in Ireland, requiring a 'large and ſpeedy Succour, and the preſent State of Things abroad, oblige 'me to tell you, that next to the Danger of unreaſonable Diviſions among 'our ſelves, nothing can be ſo fatal as too great a Delay in your Conſulta-'tions. The States, by whom I have been enabled to reſcue this Nation, 'may ſuddenly feel the ill Effects of it, both by being too long depriv'd of 'the Service of their Troops, which are now here, and of your early Aſſiſt-'ance againſt a powerful Enemy, who hath declared a War againſt them. 'And as England is by Treaty already engag'd to help them upon ſuch Exi-'gencies, ſo I am confident, that their chearful Concurrence to preſerve 'this Kingdom with ſo much Hazard to themſelves, will meet with all the 'Returns of Friendſhip and Aſſiſtance, which may be expected from you 'as Proteſtants and Engliſhmen, whenever their Condition will require it. 'Given at St. James's the 22d Day of January, 168$\frac{8}{9}$.

Proceedings of the Commons.

Upon the Reading of this Letter in the Houſe of Commons, the Speaker preſently repreſented to that Aſſembly, 'The dangerous State of the Na-'tion, and the fatal Conſequences of Anarchy; the deplorable Condition of 'the Proteſtants in Ireland, and how much England might be affected by 'the Loſs of that Kingdom; and more particularly the Growth of the exor-'bitant Power of France, and the vaſt Deſigns of that turbulent and aſpi-'ring Monarch, not only the Perſecutor of the Proteſtant Religion, but 'likewiſe the ſworn Enemy of England; exciting the Aſſembly to put the 'Nation into a Poſture, not only to ſecure themſelves againſt all his Attempts, 'but alſo to make ſuch a powerful Diverſion in the very Bowels of his Do-'minions, as that they might recover their firſt Conqueſt of France, and

're-unite the Provinces of Normandy and Aquitain, to the Imperial Crown 'of England, which, by an undiſputable Right, appertain to it.' This Speech was receiv'd with univerſal Applauſe, and was ſeconded by ſeveral Members; who, at the ſame Time, under a deep Senſe of their paſt Dangers, and preſent Deliverance, and excited by a Meſſage from the Lords, mov'd that a Day of Publick Thankſgiving to the Almighty, ſhou'd be appointed throughout the Kingdom, which was accordingly done, as will be farther remember'd. Then to his Highneſs they voted the following Addreſs, to which the Lords gave their unanimous Concurrence, and which was preſented to him that very Day in a full Body.

The Addreſs of both Houſes to the Prince.

'We the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons Aſſembled at Weſtminſter, being highly ſenſible of the great Deliverance of this Kingdom, 'from Popery and Arbitrary Power; and that our Preſervation is, next 'under God, owing to your Highneſs, do return our moſt humble Thanks 'and Acknowledgement to your Highneſs, as the glorious Inſtrument of 'ſo great a Bleſſing. We do farther acknowledge the great Care your 'Highneſs has been pleas'd to take, in the Adminiſtration of the Publick 'Affairs of the Kingdom, to this Time: And we do moſt humbly beſeech 'your Highneſs, that you will take upon you the Adminiſtration of Pub'lick Affairs, both Civil and Military, and the Diſpoſal of the Publick Re'venue, for the Preſervation of our Religion, Rights, Laws, Liberties, 'and Properties, and of the Peace of the Nation. And that your High'neſs will take into your particular Care the preſent State of Ireland, and 'endeavour, by the moſt ſpeedy and effectual Means to prevent the Dan'gers that threaten that Kingdom. All which we make our Requeſt to 'your Highneſs to undertake and execute, till farther Application ſhall be 'made by Us, which ſhall be expedited with all convenient Speed: And 'we ſhall alſo uſe our utmoſt Endeavours to give Diſpatch to the Matters 'recommended to us by your Highneſs's Letter.

The Prince of Orange took a Day's Time to return an Anſwer to this acceptable Addreſs; and ſo on the 23d of January he ſent this Anſwer to both Houſes; My Lords and Gentlemen, I am glad, that what I have done has pleas'd You; and ſince you deſire me to continue the Adminiſtration of Affairs, I am willing to accept it. I muſt recommend to you the Conſideration of Affairs abroad, which makes it fit for you to expedite your Buſineſs; not only for making a Settlement at Home, upon a good Foundation, but for the Safety of all Europe.

His Anſwer.

2. It was remarkable to ſee the Diſpatch and Unanimity between the two Houſes, and how both agreed with the general Senſe and Deſires of the Nation; ſo that the mighty Revolution went on without any Rubs or Obſtructions, till it came to the finiſhing Part, as will ſhortly be remember'd. The Senſe of the Lords, both Spiritual and Temporal, will farther appear from their Order for a Thankſgiving, the Perſons deſir'd to compoſe the Prayers, and the Expreſſions contain'd in them; all which are too remarkable to be forgotten. The Lords were no ſooner plac'd in their Seats, but they made this following Order. 'Die Martis, Jan. 22. Order'd by 'the Lords Spiritual and Temporal Aſſembled at Weſtminſter, That the 'Lord Biſhop of London, the Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, the Lord Biſhop of 'Norwich, the Lord Biſhop of Ely, the Lord Biſhop of Chicheſter, the 'Lord Biſhop of Glouceſter, the Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells, the 'Lord Biſhop of Peterborough, the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, the Lord Bi'ſhop of Briſtol, and the Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph [viz. Compton, Sprat, 'Lloyd, Turner, Lake, Frampton, Ken, White, Barlow, Trelawney and 'Lloyd] be, and are hereby deſired to draw up a Form of Prayer and Thankſ'giving to Almighty God, For having made his Highneſs the Prince of 'Orange,

As to the Prayers themſelves, which were very ſolemn, and in which the Biſhop of Rocheſter had a chief Hand, we are to remember theſe Expreſſions in the Firſt: 'We give Glory to thy Holy Name for the bleſſed Refor- The particular Prayers.
'mation of this Church, in the Days of our Forefathers, from the deteſtable
'Superſtitions and Corruptions of Popery, and for our Deliverance from the 'intolerable Yoke of the Romiſh Church. We praiſe Thee for that Light of 'the Goſpel, that Purity of Doctrine and Worſhip, Thou haſt ever ſince
'vouchſafed unto us; and for the many wonderful Preſervations, by which 'Thou haſt manifeſted thy Fatherly Care of us, and Preſence with us: More
'eſpecially at this Time, we magnify Thy Goodneſs for our late great and 'happy Deliverance, whereby we truſt Thou haſt eſtabliſh'd to us all Thy
'former Mercies, &c.' In the ſecond Prayer, we have theſe Expreſſions;
'We moſt humbly preſent our ſelves this Day at the Throne of thy Grace,
'to bleſs and adore the unſpeakable Wiſdom and Goodneſs of Thy late gra'cious Providence towards us. We acknowledge it was thy infinite Mercy
'alone that rais'd this Church and Nation from their low Eſtate, and caus'd
'Light to ſpring out of Darkneſs unto us. It was becauſe Thy Compaſſions
'fail not, that our Holy Reform'd Religion was not overwhelm'd with Po-
'piſh Superſtition and Idolatry, that our Laws and Liberties are reſcu'd from
'the Bands of Violence and Oppreſſion.——Bleſſed be Thy Name who has
'rais'd up for us a mighty Deliverer, by whom thou haſt wrought this 'great Salvation, without the Effuſion of Blood, &c.' In the fourth Prayer we are to take notice of theſe Expreſſions; 'Accept, we beſeech
'Thee, the Thankſgivings and Praiſes of thy Servants for our Deliverance
'from thoſe great and apparent Dangers, wherewith we were compaſſed.
'It is of thy Mercy, O Lord, that we were not utterly conſumed; that 'our Religion was not deſtroy'd, nor our Liberties ſubverted; but that we
'ſtill freely profeſs Thy ſacred Truth, and join in thy moſt Holy Worſhip,
'and poſſeſs the Rights and Inheritances of our Fathers. Go on to perfect,
'O gracious God, the Work that Thou haſt begun amongſt us. Bleſs and
'proſper the Hands by which Thou haſt convey'd this Mercy to us, &c.

Over and above theſe Prayers, Six Days after the firſt Order, the Lords made a Second, 'whereby it was recommended to the Lords the Biſhops,
'to whom was referr'd the drawing up the Prayers for a Day of Thankſ-
'giving to Almighty God, For having made his Highneſs the Prince of 'Orange the glorious Inſtrument, &c. That they draw up a particular Prayer One for the Prince alone.
'for his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, inſerted in that Form.' This was publiſh'd by it ſelf, with this Title; A Prayer for his Highneſs the Prince of Orange; to be us'd immediately after the Prayer for the Royal Family; and is as follows: 'Almighty God, who in Times of Trouble and Danger,
'doſt raiſe up Deliverers of Thy People, and filleſt their Hearts with Zeal
'for Thy Service; we beſeech Thee to bleſs his Highneſs the Prince of O- 'range, whom Thou haſt ſent to be the Defender of our Laws and Reli'gion: Protect his Perſon, ſtrengthen his Hands, let Thy holy Fear ever'more rule in his Heart, that having Thee only before his Eyes, he may
'in all Things ſeek Thy Honour and Glory, and ſtudy to unite this divided
'Nation, and eſtabliſh it upon the ſure Foundations of Mercy and Truth,
'Righteouſneſs and Peace. This we beg for Jeſus Chriſt his ſake, our 'only Lord and Saviour.

3. In the mean Time the unfortunate King James, foreſeeing what Advantages the Nation was like to take of his withdrawing himſelf out of his Kingdom,

1688/9. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

King James's Letter to the Privy-Council.

Kingdom, thought it proper to write a moving Letter from St. Germains, directed to the Lords and others of his Privy-Council, in which he declar'd, 'That he had taken away not only all juſt Cauſes, but even Pretenſions of Diſcontent, and redreſs'd all thoſe Things that were ſet forth as the Cauſes of the Invaſion: That the Prince of Orange ſeeing all the Ends of his Declaration anſwer'd, the People beginning to be undeceiv'd, and returning apace to their Duty; and well foreſeeing, That if a Free Parliament ſhou'd meet at the Time appointed, ſuch a Settlement in all Probability, wou'd be made both in Church and State, as wou'd totally defeat his ambitious Deſigns, reſolv'd by all Means poſſible to prevent the Meeting of the Parliament: That to do this the moſt effectual Way, the Prince thought fit to lay a Reſtraint upon his Royal Perſon; for as it were abſurd to call that a Free Parliament, where there is any Force in either of the Houſes, ſo much leſs can that Parliament be ſaid to act Freely, where the Sovereign, by whoſe Authority they meet and ſit, and from whoſe Royal Aſſent all their Acts receive their Life and Sanction, is under actual Confinement. That the Senſe of the Indignities he had ſuffer'd, both in his own, and in the Perſon of the Earl of Feverſham, and the juſt Apprehenſions of farther Attempts, by them who had already endeavour'd to murther his Reputation by infamous Calumnies (as if he had been capable of ſuppoſing a Prince of Wales) together with a ſerious Reflection on a Saying of his Royal Father, That there is little Diſtance between the Priſons and the Graves of Princes (which afterwards prov'd but too true in his Caſe) cou'd not but perſuade him to make uſe of that Right which the Law of Nature gives to the meaneſt of his Subjects, of freeing himſelf from that unjuſt Confinement: That this he did, not more for the Security of his own Perſon, that thereby he might be in a better Capacity of tranſacting and providing for every Thing that might contribute to the Peace and Settlement of his Kingdoms: That as no Change of Fortune ſhall make him condeſcend to any Thing unbecoming his Royal Station, ſo neither the Provocation or Ingratitude of his own Subjects, nor any other Conſideration, ſhall ever prevail with him, to make the leaſt Step contrary to the true Intereſt of the Engliſh Nation, which he ever did, and ever muſt look upon as his own. That he requir'd them of the Privy-Council, to make theſe his Intentions known to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Lord-Mayor and Commons of the City of London, and to all his Subjects in General, and to aſſure them, That he deſir'd nothing more than to return and hold a Free Parliament; wherein he might have the beſt Opportunity of undeceiving his People, and ſhewing the Sincerity of thoſe Proteſtations he had often made of Preſerving the Liberties and Properties of his Subjects, and the Proteſtant Religion, more eſpecially the Church of England, as by Law Eſtabliſh'd: That in the mean Time they ſhou'd ſend him their Advice, what was fit to be done by him towards his Returning, and the accompliſhing of theſe good Ends; and that he required them to endeavour to ſuppreſs all Tumults and Diſorders, that the Nation might receive the leaſt Prejudice from the preſent Diſtractions that was poſſible.

His ſecond Letter to the Lords and Commons.

This Letter was no ſooner ſent, but it was publickly Printed and diſperſed in London; but it being counterſign'd by the Earl of Melfort, a profeſs'd Papiſt, and ſuppos'd to be dictated by the Counſels of France, his renew'd Promiſes made but ſmall Impreſſion upon thoſe who ever retain'd an Affection for him. There being no avow'd Anſwer made to it, while the Convention was ſitting, King James wrote another Letter, directed To the Lords and Commons; in which, with great Concern, he told them, 'That he thought himſelf oblig'd in Conſcience to do all he cou'd to open 'his Peoples Eyes, that they might ſee the true Intereſt of the Nation in 'this

'this important Conjuncture: That finding he cou'd no longer ſtay with 1688.
'Safety, nor act with Freedom, he had left the Reaſons of his withdraw-
'ing from Rocheſter, under his own Hand: That underſtanding that that Jac. 4.
'Letter [here repeated at length] was not taken to be his, but was ma-
'liciouſly ſuppreſs'd by the Prince of Orange, he wrote to ſeveral of his Ref. 29
'Privy-Council, and directed Copies thereof to divers of them, the Peers
'of the Realm, believing none durſt intercept or open any of his Letters:
'That of all theſe he had no Account, nor did he wonder that all Arts
'were us'd to hinder them from knowing his Sentiments: That he was re-
'ſolv'd nothing ſhou'd be omitted on his Part, that cou'd contribute to'wards the Redreſs of all former Errors, or preſent Diſorders, or add to the 'ſecuring of the Proteſtant Religion, or the Property of the Subject; in'tending to refer the whole to a Parliament legally call'd, freely elected,
'and held without conſtraint: And that none might deſpair of his Mercy,
'he declared on the WORD OF A KING, that his Pardon ſhou'd be extended
'even to thoſe that betray'd him, (ſome few excepted) Reſolving in that 'Parliament, by an Act of Oblivion, to cover all Faults.

The Word of a King was now ſo unhappily reduc'd to ſo low an Ebb, Both diſre- mons, and directed to their Speaker, the Houſe underſtanding that it came from King James, they did not think fit to take any notice of it, and ſo rejected it unopen'd. A Copy of the ſame Letter being likewiſe ſent to the Houſe of Lords, directed to the Marquiſs of Hallifax, their Speaker, ſome of the Aſſembly mov'd to have it open'd and read, but others warmly oppos'd it; and at length it was reſolv'd, That the Lord Preſton ſhou'd be ſent for. His Lordſhip accordingly appear'd, and own'd that the Letter was brought to him by a Scotch Man; upon which he was order'd to attend the Houſe with the Bearer on the 4th of February: But his Lordſhip was never call'd that Day, nor any farther Notice was taken of the Letters, which, by the particular Friends of King James, was thought a great Hardſhip.

4. All this while the Houſe of Lords kept Sitting every Day; but the The Proceed- Commons had deferr'd their Sitting again till the 28th of January, on pur- ings of the poſe to give time to the reſt of their Members to come up to Town. On Houſe of which Day, the Houſe being full, they proceeded to the great Conſideration Commons.
of the State and Condition of the Nation; whereupon they reſolv'd themſeves into a Committee of the whole Houſe, and Mr. Hambden was put into the Chair. The firſt that ſtood up was Mr. Dolben, Son to the late Archbiſhop of York, who made a long and free Speech, tending to prove, 'That the Throne of England was now become Vacant; King James the 'Second, both by his Violation of the Laws and Conſtitution, and his vo-'luntary Deſerting his Kingdoms, having forfeited his Right, and Abdica-'ted the Government.' A Member of the oppoſite Party made a ſharp Reply to that unexpected Aſſertion, That the Throne was Vacant. Whereupon Sir Richard Temple briskly ask'd him, If the Throne were not Vacant, what Buſineſs had they in that Place, and what Need there was of Calling a Convention? Sir Richard made a very remarkable Speech to back Mr. Dolben's Poſition, which occaſion'd a famous Debate of four or five Hours: Which being ended, the Houſe made the following complicated Vote, perhaps the moſt memorable in all the Engliſh Records:

'Reſolved, That King James the Second, having endeavour'd to ſubvert Their Grand
'the Conſtitution of the Kingdom, by breaking the Original Contract be- Vote of the
'tween King and People; and by the Advice of Jeſuits, and other wicked Vacancy of
'Perſons, having violated the Fundamental Laws, and withdrawn himſelf the Throne.

1688/9. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'out of the Kingdom, hath Abdicated the Government, and that the Throne 'is thereby become Vacant.' The Party of those who were for inviting King James to return upon Limitations, or not for making the Prince of Orange King, did not find themselves strong enough to cause the House to Divide: However, the Chief of them, such as Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Robert Sawyer, Mr. Finch, Sir Christopher Musgrave, Sir William Cook, the Lord Fanshaw, the Lord Cornbury, &c. did vigorously oppose the Passing of this Vote. Among the rest Mr. Finch made a long and eloquent Speech, 'Extolling the Courage, Conduct and Magnanimity of the Prince of Orange, 'who was to be compared to those ancient Heroes, that were contented 'with the Glory of Freeing Nations, and Destroying Tyrants, without any 'particular Design upon their Crowns.' But notwithstanding all that these Gentlemen cou'd alledge, the fore-mention'd Vote was sent up to the Lords for their Concurrence.

Other Votes.

Having got over this grand Vote, they found others more easy; and the next Day they 'Resolv'd, That it hath been found by Experience, to be 'inconsistent with this Protestant Kingdom to be govern'd by a Popish 'Prince;' which Resolution was likewise sent up to the Lords for their Concurrence. At the same time they presented an Address to the Prince of Orange, For the immediate Stopping of all Ships that were going to France. Two Days after they Voted, 'That the Thanks of the House be given to 'the Clergy of the Church of England, who had preach'd and written against 'Popery, and had refus'd to read in the Churches the King's Declaration 'for Toleration, in opposition to the pretended Dispensing Power, claim'd 'in the late Reign of King James the Second, and had oppos'd the illegal 'Ecclesiastical Commission.' They farther Voted, on the same Day, 'That 'the Thanks of the House be given to the Officers, Soldiers and Mariners 'of the Army and Fleet, for having testify'd their ready Adherence to the 'Protestant Religion, and being Instrumental in Delivering this Kingdom 'from Popery and Slavery; and to all such, who had appear'd in Arms to 'that Purpose.' These two last Votes pass'd nemine Contradicente, and without the least Opposition.

The Revolution at some Stand.

IV. 1. The mighty Revolution had mov'd forward after a wonderful Manner, from its first Appearance, to the present Time, with scarce any Degree of Opposition or Obstruction. It has been observ'd, That the whole Machine, to the Glory of the Artificers, was so exquisitely contriv'd, and the Parts so duly adjusted, that when it was set together and put in Motion, it went on with little exterior Assistance, in that Order and Regularity, that many of those who were mov'd by it, knew not they were leaving their old Government, till they were quietly lodg'd under a new one; so that the Workmanship seem'd more Divine than Human. But now, for a while, it appear'd to have been at a Stand; tho' it was plainly got upon such Ground, that, notwithstanding any Impediments laid in its Way, it wou'd soon be carry'd forward by its own Weight. The Essential Parts, the Relief and Deliverance of the Nation, were compleated without any imaginable Difficulty; but the Finishing Parts, the new Settlement and Government, met with some Obstruction. As to the former, which was so desirable and signal, there seem'd an universal Agreement, but the latter caus'd Variety of Opinions. This last appear'd most plainly in the House of Lords; where many of that August Body, who had entertain'd large and generous Notions of the Church and Monarchy of England, soon found themselves under no common Difficulties.

The Lords divided.

It was upon the 29th of January when the Lords began to consider the Grand Vote of the House of Commons, concerning King James, which they did with all imaginable Circumspection; several of them not well knowing how to proceed, much leſs how to recede: And being reſolv'd into a Committee of the whole Houſe, of which the Earl of Danby was Chair-Man, the firſt Motion that was made, was, 'Not to agree with the Commons, 'That the Throne was Vacant, but only firſt to ſuppoſe it, for the preſent, 'leaving it to be farther examin'd afterwards, in order to cut ſhort ſeveral 'other Queſtions, by determining this firſt, Whether the Throne being Va- 'cant, it ought to be fill'd up by a Regent or a King?' This Queſtion was debated with great Learning, much Skill, and no little Warmth: Among the Orators, the Earl of Nottingham brought many Arguments from the Engliſh Hiſtory to ſupport his Opinion for a Regency with the Regal Power, leaving the Title and Dignity on King James; adding a freſh Inſtance from Portugal, where Don Pedro had only the Title of Regent conferr'd upon him, while his Depos'd Brother was alive. This Speech is ſaid to have had ſo great an Influence upon the Houſe, that it wou'd have been follow'd by the Majority, had it not been ſtrenuouſly oppos'd by the Marquiſs of Halli-fax and the Earl of Danby, who by their great Skill laid open the inex-tricable Difficulties attending that Propoſal. So that the Queſtion being put to the Vote, fifty one were for a King, and forty nine only for a Re-gent, namely, the Dukes of Somerſet, Ormond, Southampton, Grafton, Beaufort and Northumberland; the Earls of Kent, Pembroke, Claren-don, Rocheſter, Craven, Weſtmorland, Scarſdale, Cheſterfield, Lichfield, Yarmouth and Lindſey; Viſcount Weymouth, the Lords Coventry, Brook, Leigh, Ferrars, Maynard, Chandois, Jermin, Arundel of Treviſe, Dart-mouth, Godolphin, Griffin and five more; the Archbiſhop of York, the Bi-ſhops of Norwich, Wincheſter, Ely, St. Aſaph, Bath and Wells, Peterbo-rough, Chicheſter, Rocheſter, St. Davids, Oxford, Glocester and Lincoln. The Earls of Huntington and Mulgrave did not appear in the Houſe; and the Lord Churchill likewiſe kept at home upon ſome Indiſpoſition. The Arch-biſhop of Canterbury was alſo abſent; and indeed the Odiouſneſs of a De-poſing Power, as an Art and Act of Popery, had made ſo great an Impreſ-ſion upon the Minds of the Clergy, that no Biſhops came in to the Opinion of filling up the Throne, except the Biſhops of London and Briſtol. How-ever, the Party for a King was ſoon after ſtrengthen'd by four Dukes that came over to them, viz. the Dukes of Ormond, Southampton, Grafton and Northumberland.

1688/9. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

A Regency rejected.

On the next Day, Jan. 30, the Lords proceeded farther upon the Grand Vote of the other Houſe, and put this Queſtion, Whether or no there was an Original Contract between King and People? Which Queſtion occa-ſion'd many warm Diſputes; not a few maintaining, that Kings held their Crowns by Divine Right; which others vehemently deny'd, aſſerting, That all Power originally belong'd to the Community, and to the King on-ly by mutual Compact. Thereupon the Houſe being divided, fifty three were for the laſt Poſition, and forty ſix only for Negative; by which it ap-pear'd, that the Party that were for a Regency began to loſe Ground. The next Queſtion was, Whether King James had broke that Original Con-tract? But this being ſo manifeſt, it was ſoon carry'd in the Affirmative. On the next Day, their Lordſhips took into Conſideration the Word Abdicated; and concluded that Deſerted was more proper. They next examin'd the Word Vacant, and put this Queſtion, Whether King James having broke that Original Contract between Him and his People, and deſerted the Go-vernment, the Throne was thereby Vacant? This Queſtion was debated with more Heat and Contention than any of the former, and upon a Diviſi-on, one Party, who maintain'd it as a Maxim of our Law, That the King never dies, and therefore, that the Throne can never be Vacant, carry'd the Negative of the Queſtion by eleven Voices. From this ſome Peers pre-ſently ſently inferr'd, that the Crown was devolv'd upon the next Heir; and mov'd that the Prince and Princeſs of Orange ſhou'd be declared King and Queen, which was alſo carry'd in the Negative by five Voices. The next Day their Lordſhips agreed to communicate their Reſolutions to the Houſe of Commons; but before they roſe, the Marqueſſes of Halliſax and Wincheſter, the Earls of Danby and Devonſhire, the Lord Delamere and others, to the Number of forty, enter'd their Proteſtations againſt the Vote of the Day before, namely, That the Throne was not Vacant.

A Petition to to the Lords.

2. While theſe Matters were warmly debated in the Convention and the Town, and all Men ſtill in ſuſpence which way they wou'd be determin'd, on the firſt Day of February, ſome zealous Perſons ſet on foot the following Petition, and endeavour'd to get it ſubſcrib'd by the Multitude indifferently, going to all publick Places to ſolicite Mens Hands: To the Lords Spiritual and Temporal aſſembled in the Grand Convention, the humble Petition of great Numbers of Citizens, and other Inhabitants of the Cities of London and Weſtminſter. 'Whereas we are in a deep Senſe 'of the Danger of Delays, and perplext Debates about ſettling the Govern-'ment, at this time Vacant, by Reaſon whereof, the neceſſary Ends of 'Government cannot be duly adminiſter'd: We humbly deſire that his 'moſt Illuſtrious Highneſs the Prince of Orange, and his Royal Conſort 'the Princeſs, may be ſpeedily ſettled on the Throne, by whoſe Courage, 'Conduct and Reputation, this Nation and the Proteſtant Religion may 'be defended from our Enemies at home and abroad; and that Ireland, 'now in a bleeding and deplorable Condition, may be reſcu'd from its Mi-'ſeries, and theſe Kingdoms ſettled on a laſting Foundation in Peace and 'Liberty.' Whereupon his Highneſs the Prince being inform'd of the ill Conſequences and ſcandal of this way of Proceeding, caus'd the following Order to be made and publiſh'd, to ſuppreſs it: By the Lord Mayor, &c.

Diſcourag'd by the Prince.

'Whereas his Highneſs the Prince of Orange has been pleas'd to ſignify to 'me this Day. That divers Perſons (pretending themſelves to be Citizens 'of London) in a tumultuous and diſorderly Manner have lately diſturb'd 'the preſent Convention of the Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter, upon 'Pretence of Petitioning. It being Regular and Uſual for the Citizens of 'this City, that are under the Apprehenſion of any Grievance, to make 'their Application to my ſelf, and the Court of Aldermen: Therefore, 'with the Advice of my Brethren, the Aldermen of this City, theſe are to 'require you, That you command within your Ward, that they forbear 'any ſuch tumultuous Diſturbance, or Aſſembly; as they will anſwer the 'contrary at their utmoſt Peril.

However, the Lords proceeded in their own Way; but to ſhew their Diſinclinations to King James, on the 2d of February, 'It was order'd by 'the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, aſſembled at Weſtminſter, that the 'Day of Thankſgiving on the 6th of February inſtant, on which Day the 'late King James the Second came to the Throne, ſhall not be obſerv'd in 'this Kingdom.' On the ſame Day their Lordſhips ſent a Meſſage to the Commons by Sir Miles Cook and Mr. Methwin, two Maſters of Chancery, to acquaint them, 'That they had conſider'd of their Vote of the 28th of 'January laſt, to which they concurr'd, with theſe two Amendments; 'firſt, inſtead of the Word Abdicated, they wou'd have Deſerted be put 'in; and next, theſe Words, And that the Throne is thereby Vacant, to 'be left out.

Amendments to the Commons Vote.

The Commons having conſider'd of theſe Amendments, it was carry'd by a great Majority, That a Committee ſhou'd be appointed to draw up Reaſons, why that Houſe cou'd not concur with their Lordſhips, which were as follows. 'That to the firſt Amendment, the Commons did not a'gree

'gree, becauſe the Word Deſerted did not fully expreſs the Concluſion ne- 1688 9.
'ceſſarily inferr'd from the Premiſes, which their Lordſhips had agreed to, Jac. 4.
'namely, That King James the Second had endeavour'd to ſubvert the Ref. 29
'Conſtitution of the Kingdom, by breaking the Original Contract between
'King and People, and had violated the Fundamental Laws, and with- 'drawn himſelf out of the Kingdom: That the Word Deſerted reſpected
'only the Withdrawing; but the Word Abdicated reſpected the Whole;
'for which Purpoſe the Commons made Choice of it. That the Commons
'cou'd not agree to the ſecond Amendment, to leave out the Words, And 'that the Throne is thereby Vacant; Firſt, Becauſe they conceiv'd, That
'as they might well infer from ſo much of their own Vote as their Lord-
'ſhips had agreed unto, That King James the Second had Abdicated the 'Government, and that the Throne was thereby Vacant, ſo that if the 'Commons ſhou'd admit their Lordſhips Amendment, that He had only
'Deſerted the Government, yet even thence it wou'd follow, That the 'Throne is Vacant, as to King James the Second; Deſerting the Govern- 'ment, being in true Conſtruction, Deſerting the Throne. Secondly, That
'the Commons conceiv'd they needed not to prove to their Lordſhips,
'That, as to any other Perſon, the Throne was alſo Vacant; their Lord-
'ſhips, as the Commons conceiv'd, having already admitted it, by their 'Addreſſing the Prince of Orange, to take upon him the Adminiſtration
'of Publick Affairs, &c. and by appointing Days of Publick Thankſgi-
'ving to be obſerv'd throughout the whole Kingdom; all which the Com'mons conceiv'd to imply, that it was their Lordſhips Opinion, That the 'Throne was Vacant, and to ſignify ſo much to the People of England.
'And Thirdly, That it is from thoſe who are upon the Throne of Eng- 'land (when there are any ſuch) from whom the People of England
'ought to receive Protection, and to whom, for that Cauſe, they owe the 'Allegiance of Subjects; but there being none now from whom they ex'pected Regal Protection, and to whom, for that Cauſe, they us'd the Al'legiance of Subjects, the Commons conceiv'd, The Throne was Vacant.'
Whereupon it was reſolv'd that the Earl of Wiltſhire ſhou'd deſire a Con- ference with the Lords, upon the ſubject Matter of the Amendments; which their Lordſhips having readily conſented to, the Commons appointed the ſame Committee that had prepar'd the foregoing Reaſons, to be the Managers of the ſaid Conference.

The latter Reaſons againſt them.

The next Day Mr. Hambden reported from the Conference with the Lords, That the Earl of Nottingham had ſpoke to this effect; 'That the 'Lords had deſir'd this Conference, that they might be as happily united 'to the Commons in Opinion, as they were inſeparable in their Intereſt; 'and that they were at that time uneaſy, that they cou'd not concur with 'the Commons in every thing, becauſe it was of ſo great a Concern to the 'Nation, and from ſo great and wiſe a Body. That the Lords did inſiſt 'upon the firſt Amendment, becauſe they did not find that the Word Ab-'dicated, was a Word known to the Common Law of England; and be-'cauſe in the moſt common Acceptation of the Civil Law, Abdicated was 'a voluntary expreſs Act of Renunciation, which was not in this Caſe, and 'did not follow from the Premiſes, That King James the Second by ha-'ving withdrawn himſelf, after having endeavour'd to ſubvert the Con-'ſtitution of the Government, by breaking the Original Contract between
'King and People, might be more properly ſaid to have Abdicated than 'Deſerted. That the Lords alſo inſiſted on the ſecond Amendment; for
'although their Lordſhips had agreed, That the King had Deſerted the 'Government, and therefore had made Application to the Prince of Orange
'to take upon him the Adminiſtration of the Government; yet there cou'd

The Lords Reply;

1688-9. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'be no other Inference drawn from hence, but only, the Exercise of the 'Government of King James the Second was ceas'd: So as the Lords were 'willing to secure the Nation against the Return of the said King into his 'Kingdom; but not that here was such an Abdication by Him, or such a 'Vacancy in the Throne, as that the Crown was therefore become Elective: 'Which they cou'd not agree to: 1. Because, by the Constitution of the 'Government, the Monarchy is Hereditary, and not Elective. 2. Because 'no Act of the King can Bar or Destroy the Right of his Heirs to the 'Crown; and therefore, in Answer to the third Reason alledg'd by the 'House of Commons, if the Throne be Vacant of King James the Se-'cond, Allegiance was due to such Person as the Right of Succession did 'belong to.

Which occasions

From this Reasoning it plainly appear'd, That the Dissent of the Lords from the Commons, did not arise from any Affection or Favour, either to the Person or Government of King James, but rather from a tender Regard to the Protestant Successors, and the respectful and legal Notions of Hereditary Monarchy. However, when Mr. Hambden made his Report of this late Conference, the Question was put, Whether the Commons shou'd concur with the Lords? As to the first Amendment about the Word Abdicated, it was carry'd in the negative with great Unanimity; but the second, leaving out the Vacancy of the Throne; occasion'd a long and warm Debate; till, upon the Division of the House, those for Disagreeing with the Lords were found to be two hundred and eighty two against one hundred and fifty one; the Majority one hundred and thirty one. Hereupon Mr. Dolben was order'd to desire a Free Conference with the Lords upon the Subject Matter of the last Conference; to which the Lords very readily agreed. Accordingly the Commons appointed twenty four Persons to manage upon this extraordinary Occasion, namely, Sir Robert Howard, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Paul Foley, Serjeant Maynard, Serjeant Holt, Lord Falkland, Sir George Treby, Mr. Sommers, Mr. Garraway, Mr. Boscowen, Sir Thomas Littleton, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Hambden, Sir Henry Capel, Sir Thomas Lee, Mr. Sacheverell, Major Wildman, Colonel Birch, Mr. Ayres, Sir Richard Temple, Sir Henry Goodrick, Mr. Waller and Sir John Gaye; all Men of known Parts and Abilities, and distinguish'd for their Knowledge, either of Parliaments or the Laws of the Land. The Lords appointed for their chief Managers, the Earls of Nottingham, Clarendon, Rochester, Pembroke, with the Bishop of Ely and some others.

The famous Debate between the Lords and Commons.

3. And now we are arriv'd at the most memorable Conference and Debate that had been known for many Ages, which was carry'd on with the utmost Quiet, Decency and Attention. The Managers of both Houses being met in the Painted Chamber, and Mr. Blaney in a private Place to take down all that was said, Mr. Hambden open'd the Conference, by saying,

Mr. Hambden.

'That the Commons had desir'd it, that they might make it appear, that 'they had sufficient Reason to maintain their own Vote: That it was a 'Matter of the greatest Concernment to the Kingdom, and the Protestant 'Interest, that there be a good Issue of the Business then in Debate between 'both Houses. That the present Difference was only about a few Words; 'but that the Commons thought their Words so significant, and so proper 'to the Case to which they were apply'd, that so weighty a Matter, as 'that now in Debate, they were by no Means to be parted with: That 'the Word Abdicated was of a larger Signification than the Word De-'serted, but not too large to be apply'd to all the Recitals in the Begin-'ning of the Commons Vote; and that it ought not to be restrain'd to a 'voluntary express Resignation, only in Word or Writing; there being Overt 'Acts that wou'd be significant enough to amount to it. That if the Com-

'mon

'mon Law of England be not acquainted with the Word, it was from the 'Modeſty of our Law, that is not willing to ſuppoſe there ſhou'd be any un- 'fortunate Occaſion to make uſe of it. That as to the ſeveral Amendments, 'the Commons conceiv'd, That the Throne is Vacant, was no new Phraſe, 'neither did they think it chargeable with the Conſequences that their 'Lordſhips drew from it, That it wou'd make the Crown of England be- 'come Elective. That if the Throne had been full, the Lords wou'd have 'aſſign'd that as a Reaſon of the Diſagreement, by telling the Commons who 'fill'd it. That it wou'd be known by ſome Publick Royal Act, which 'might notify to the People in whom the Kingly Government reſided; 'neither of which had been done, and yet their Lordſhips would not al- 'low the Throne to be Vacant. 1688/9. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

The next that ſpoke was Mr. Sommers, who with great Skill and Acute- neſs, maintain'd, 'That if it was an Objection againſt the Word Abdicated, 'for not having a known Senſe in the Common Law of England, there 'was the ſame Objection againſt the Word Deſerted, ſince there cou'd be 'no Authority, or Book of Law produc'd, wherein any determin'd Senſe 'was given to the Word Deſerted; ſo that their Lordſhips firſt Reaſon had 'the ſame Force againſt their own Amendment, as it had againſt the Term 'us'd by the Commons. He urg'd, that the Words were both Latin, and 'us'd in the beſt Authors, and both of a known Signification, tho' their 'Meaning be not the ſame. That the Word Abdicate did naturally and 'properly ſignify, entirely to Renounce, Throw off, Diſown, Relinquiſh 'any Thing or Perſon, and ſo as to have no farther to do with it; and 'that, whether it be done by expreſs Words or Writing, (which was the 'Senſe the Lords had put upon it, and which was properly call'd, Reſig- 'nation or Ceſſion) or, by doing ſuch Acts as are Inconſiſtent with the 'Holding or Retaining of the Thing; which the Commons took to be the 'preſent Caſe, and therefore made Choice of the Word Abdicate, as that 'which they thought did, above all others, moſt properly expreſs that 'Meaning.' That in this latter Senſe it was taken by others, and that it was the true Signification of the Word, he ſhew'd by ſeveral Authorities, as Grotius, Calvin, Briſonius, Budæus and Baleius. As to the Word Deſerted, he alledg'd, 'That it had not only a very doubtful Signification, 'but in the common Acceptance, both of the Civil and Canon-Law, it did 'ſignify only a bare Withdrawing, a temporary Quitting of a Thing, and 'Neglect only, which leaves the Party at Liberty of Returning to it a- 'gain; and made it appear out of Spigelius and Bartolus, That that is 'call'd Deſertion, which is Temporary and Relievable, and that Dereli- 'ction, where there is no Power or Right to Return. Farther he ſaid, 'That the Word Deſert is us'd in the Civil Law for Soldiers leaving their 'Colours; and that in the Canon-Law, to Deſert a Benefice, ſignify'd no 'more than to be Non-Reſident; that in both Caſes the Party had not on- 'ly a Right of Returning, but was bound to return again: Which, as the 'Commons did not take to be the preſent Caſe, ſo they cou'd not think 'that their Lordſhips did, becauſe it was expreſſly ſaid in one of their Rea- 'ſons, given in Defence of the laſt Amendment, That the Lords had been, 'and were willing to ſecure the Nation againſt the Return of King James; 'which their Lordſhips cou'd not, in Juſtice do, if they did look upon it 'as no more than a negligent Withdrawing, which leaves a Liberty to 'the Party to return. That for theſe Reaſons the Commons cou'd not a- 'gree to their firſt Amendment, becauſe the Word Deſerted did not, in a- 'ny Sort, come up to the Senſe of the Thing, neither did it reach their 'Lordſhips Meaning, as it was expreſs'd in their Reaſons: Whereas the 'Word Abdicated did expreſs properly what was to be inferr'd from that

'Part

1688/9. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'Part of the Vote to which their Lordships had agreed, That King James 'the Second, by going about to Subvert the Conſtitution, &c. had thereby 'Renounc'd to be a King, according to the Conſtitution, by Avowing to 'govern by a Deſpotick Power, unknown to the Conſtitution, and inconſi-'ſtent with it. That he had Renounc'd to be a King according to Law, 'ſuch a King as he Swore to be at his Coronation, ſuch a King to whom 'the Allegiance of an Engliſh Man is due, and had ſet up another Kind of 'Dominion, which was to all Intents an Abdication, or Abandoning his 'Legal Title, as fully as if it had been done by expreſs Words.

Serjeant Holt. What Mr. Sommers alledg'd was back'd by Serjeant Holt, who added, 'That the Lords Objection, That the Word Abdicated was not known to 'the Common Law of England, cou'd be of no Force, ſince there were ve-'ry few Words in the Engliſh Tongue of equal Antiquity with the Com-'mon Law. And that the Language was ſo much alter'd in the ſeveral Suc-'ceſſions of Time, and the Intermixture of other Nations, that if they 'ſhou'd be oblig'd to make uſe only of Words then known and in Uſe, 'what they ſhou'd deliver in ſuch a Dialect wou'd be very difficult to be un-'derſtood. As for the Lords ſecond Reaſon for their firſt Amendment, 'namely, That in the moſt common Acceptation of the Civil Law, Abdi-'cation is a voluntary expreſs Act of Renunciation; he own'd that to be 'the general Acceptation of the Word, and that he thought the Commons 'did ſo uſe the Word in this Caſe, becauſe it had that Signification; but 'that he did not know whether the Lords meant a Voluntary Expreſs 'Act, or formal Deed of Renunciation: That if they did ſo, he con-'feſs'd he knew of none in this Caſe, but that both in the Common 'Law of England, and in the Civil Law, and in common Underſtan-'ding, there are expreſs Acts of Renunciation, that are not by Deed; lay-'ing this down as a Maxim, That the Government and Magiſtracy is un-'der a Truſt; and that any acting contrary to that Truſt, is Renouncing 'of the Truſt, tho' it be not a Renouncing by a Formal Deed: For it is a 'plain Declaration by Act and Deed, tho' not in Writing, that He, who 'has the Truſt, acting contrary, is a Diſclaimer of the Truſt, eſpecially 'if the Actings be ſuch as are inconſiſtent with, and ſubverſive of this 'Truſt.

The Earl of Nottingham. The firſt that ſpoke on the Lords Side was the Earl of Nottingham, who alledg'd, 'That the main Reaſon of the Change of the Word Abdicate, 'was upon the Account of the Conſequences drawn in the Concluſion of 'the Vote of the Commons, That the Throne is thereby Vacant; by which 'Expreſſion the Commons ſeem'd to mean that the Throne was ſo Vacant 'as to null the Succeſſion in the Hereditary Line, and ſo all the Heirs to 'be cut off, which the Lords ſaid wou'd make the Crown Elective; and 'therefore it was fit to ſettle firſt what the Conſequence of the Throne be-'ing Vacant meant.' To which Serjeant Maynard immediately reply'd, Serjeant Maynard. 'That when there is a preſent Defect of one to exerciſe the Adminiſtrati-'on of the Government, the Declaring a Vacancy, and Proviſion of a Sup-'ply for it, cou'd never make a Crown Elective: That the Commons ap-'prehended there was ſuch a Defect, and by Conſequence, a preſent Neceſ-'ſity for Supply of the Government; that the Conſtitution, notwithſtand-'ing the Vacancy, was the ſame; that the Laws, that were the Foundati-'ons and Rules of that Conſtitution, were the ſame; but if there was, in 'any particular Inſtance, a Breach of that Conſtitution, that wou'd be an 'Abdication, and an Abdication wou'd infer a Vacancy; not that the Com-'mons did ſay, That the Crown of England is always and perpetually E-'lective; but only that it was neceſſary that there be a Supply when there 'is a Defect; and that the doing of that wou'd be no Alteration of the 'Monarchy from a Succeſſive one to an Elective.

The

The Biſhop of Ely.

The next that ſpoke for the Lords was the Biſhop of Ely, who objected againſt Mr. Sommers quoting Grotius for the Word Abdicate, and ask'd, 'Whether that great Author, in treating on this Subject, did not interpoſe 'this Caution, If there be a yielding to the Times; if there be a going 'away with a purpoſe of ſeeking to recover what is, for the preſent, left 'or forſaken; in plain Engliſh, If there were any thing of Force, or juſt 'Fear in the Caſe, that did void the Notion of Abdication:' Upon which Serjeant Maynard return'd, 'That was not any Part of the Caſe declared 'by the Commons in the Vote; that when the whole Kingdom and the 'Proteſtant Religion, our Laws and Liberties had been in Danger of being 'ſubverted, an Enquiry muſt be made into the Authors and Inſtruments of 'this Attempt; and that if he, who had the Adminiſtration intruſted to him, 'was found the Author and Actor in it, what cou'd that be, but a Renun-'ciation of his Truſt, and conſequently his Place thereby Vacant? That 'Abdication was an Engliſh Word, and according to the Lords, the true 'Signification of it is a Renunciation; That they were not to go to learn 'Engliſh from Foreign Authors, being able without their Aid to tell the 'Meaning of their own Tongue; That, however, for their Lordſhips Satis-'faction, the Commons had ſhew'd its Meaning in Foreign Authors; and 'that it was more than a Deſerting the Government, or Leaving it with 'a Purpoſe of Returning.

To this the Biſhop reply'd, 'That for this very Reaſon the Lords wou'd 'have a Word made uſe of which ſignify'd only the Ceaſure of the Exer-'ciſe of a Right; that if there were ſuch a Defect, as had been ſpoken of, 'it muſt certainly be ſupply'd: That the Lords had by another Vote de-'clared, That it was inconſiſtent with the Laws, Liberties and Religion 'of England, to have a Papiſt rule over that Kingdom, which he took to 'be only the Actual Adminiſtration of the Government: That Grotius di-'ſtinguiſh'd between a Right, and the Exerciſe of that Right; and that 'as there was a Natural Incapacity for the Exerciſe, as Sickneſs, Lunacy, 'Infancy, &c. ſo there was a Moral Incapacity, which he conceiv'd to be 'a full irremoveable Perſuaſion to a falſe Religion, contrary to the Doctrine 'of Chriſtianity; that then there muſt be a Proviſion made for ſup-'plying this Defect, and an Intermediate Government taken Care for: Be-'cauſe become neceſſary for the Support of the Government, if he to whom 'the Right of Succeſſion does belong, makes the Exerciſe of his Govern-'ment Impracticable, and the Subjects Obedience to him, conſiſtently with 'the Conſtitution of their Religion, Impoſſible; but that, he took it, did 'not alter that Right, nor was an Abdication of that Right: That, no 'doubt, Abdication was an Engliſh Word, and well known by Men con-'verſant in Books; but that in Cicero, it ſignify'd ſometimes the Renoun-'cing of an Actual Exerciſe of a Right, and ſometimes the Renouncing 'of the very Right; ſo that its Signification, as the Lords alledg'd, was 'dubious, and therefore the Peers hop'd the Commons wou'd think fit not 'to uſe ſuch Words in a Caſe of this Nature and Conſequence. That great 'Inconveniencies wou'd follow upon the Uſe of that Word, if it meant a 'Renouncing abſolutely of the Right: That among the Civilians there is an 'Abdication, that may forfeit the Power of the King only, and there may 'be One that may forfeit that and the Crown too: That thoſe Abdicati-'ons that are of Power only, are Incapacities, whether Natural or Invo-'luntary, as Defects of Senſe, Age or Body, or the like; or Moral and 'Voluntary, as Contrariety in Religion: That there was lately an Inſtance 'of the firſt in Portugal, which was a Forfeiture only of the Power, and 'not of the Name and Honour of a King; for tho' the Adminiſtration was 'put into the younger Brother's Hands, the Patents and other Publick Inſtru-

'ments

1688/9. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'ments run in the eldeſt Brother's Name. That he did not here conſider, 'whether the King was gone out of the Kingdom, or ſtaid in it; but only 'whether he was fit for the Adminiſtration, which muſt be provided for, 'were he here, or gone away. That the higheſt Inſtance of an Abdication 'is, when a Prince is not only unable to Execute his Power, but acts quite 'contrary to it; which wou'd not be anſwer'd by ſo bare a Word of the 'Commons, as Endeavour. That if the laſt Inſtance of an Abdication of 'both Power and Right, took place in a Succeeding Monarchy, the Con'ſequence wou'd be, That there was a Forfeiture of the whole Right; 'and then that Hereditary Succeſſion was cut off, which he believ'd was 'not intended by the Commons. That by the Original Compact men'tion'd in the Vote, muſt be meant the Compact made when the Go'vernment was firſt Inſtituted, and the Conditions that each Part of the 'Government ſhou'd obſerve on their part, of which this was the Funda'mental, That King, Lords and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, ſhou'd 'have the Power of Making new Laws, and Altering of old ones: And 'that being one Law which ſettles the Succeſſion, it was as much Part of the 'Original Compact as any: That then, if ſuch a Caſe happen'd, as an Ab'dication in a Succeſſive Kingdom, the Compact being made to the King, 'his Heirs and Succeſſors, the Diſpoſition of the Crown wou'd not fall to 'the Lords and Commons till all the Heirs did Abdicate too. He ac'knowledg'd there had been ſeven Interruptions in the Lineal Succeſ'ſion of the Crown of England, from William the Conqueror to Henry the 'Eighth, wherein the right Heir had been put by; but that it did not fol'low, That every Breach of the Original Contract gave them Power to 'diſpoſe of the Lineal Succeſſion; eſpecially ſince the Statutes of Queen 'Elizabeth and King James the Firſt, that have eſtabliſh'd the Oath of 'Allegiance to the King, his Heirs and Succeſſors; and which ought to 'be obſerv'd till alter'd by the Legiſlative Power; which he thought, 'ſingly or jointly, the Lords and Commons did not pretend to without the 'Royal Aſſent. And that theſe Laws being made ſince the Laſt Interrup'tion, they were not to go by any Precedent that was made before the ma'king thoſe Laws; ſo that, all that he conceiv'd ought to be meant by the 'Vote was, But a ſetting aſide the Perſon that broke the Contract; and, 'in a Succeſſive Kingdom, an Abdication can only be a Forfeiture, as to 'the Perſon Himſelf. That he hop'd both Lords and Commons did agree 'in this, Not to break the Line of Succeſſion, ſo as to make the Crown 'Elective; and that, if that be Declared, That this Abdication of King 'James the Second reach'd no farther than Himſelf, and that it was to 'continue in the Right Line of Succeſſion, they wou'd be all of one 'Mind.

The Earl of Clarendon.

The third who ſpoke for the Lords was the Earl of Clarendon, who pur'ſu'd the ſame Argument, and ſaid, 'That the Breaking the Original Con'tract was a Language that had not been long us'd in that Place, nor 'known in any of the Law-Books, or Publick Records: That he did not 'deny what Mr. Sommers had ſaid, That the King was bounded by Law, 'and bound to perform the Laws made, or to be made; but that he wou'd 'take notice, that his Obligation thereunto did not proceed from his Co'ronation Oath, for our Law ſaid, He is as much King before he is crown'd, 'as he is afterwards, and there is a Natural Allegiance due to him from 'the Subjects, immediately upon the Deſcent of the Crown upon him: 'That no Act of the King's alone can bar or deſtroy the Right of his Heir to 'the Crown, which is Hereditary, and not Elective. That if the Matter 'went no farther than King James the Second in his own Perſon, how 'came the Vacancy and Supply to be devolv'd upon the People? For if he 'only be ſet aſide, then it was apparent that the Crown was to go to the

'Perſon

Perſon that had the next Right of Succeſſion, and conſequently that there 1688-9. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29
'was no Vacancy.' Here the Earl of Nottingham urg'd, That the Lords
'having declared, That they were willing to ſecure the Nation againſt
'the Return of King James, it ſeem'd they were agreed in that Matter;
'and that if that were the only Point, they ſhou'd find Words proper
'ſoon enough to expreſs their Meaning by; but that he found neither
'Abdication nor Deſertion wou'd be allow'd, on the one ſide or on the 'other, to ſignify this Meaning, therefore they ought to think of ſome o'ther that wou'd; and firſt of all to ſettle that Point firſt, Whether the 'Throne was Vacant?

Next, Sir George Treby argu'd ſtrenuouſly for the Commons, alledging, Sir George Treby.
'That the preſent Debate was to begin where the Difference between the 'two Houſes did begin, and that was at the Word Abdicated: That an O- 'riginal Contract was a Phraſe and Thing us'd by the learned Mr. Hooker
'in his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Policy; but that he had yet a greater Autho'rity to influence this Matter, and that was their Lordſhips own, who had 'agreed to all the Vote but this Word Abdicated, and the Vacancy of the 'Throne. That it was very much beyond what the Vote before them led 'to, To talk of the Right of thoſe in Succeſſion; for that went farther than
'the laſt Part of the Vote, and that it was ſtill to lead them yet farther, to
'ſay any Thing about the making the Crown Elective. He next endea-
'vour'd to prove that King James had actually Abdicated his Kingſhip, al-
'ledging out of Grotius, That if there be any Word or Action that does
'ſufficiently manifeſt the Mind and Will, to part with one's Office, that 'will amount to an Abdication or Renouncing. Now, argu'd he, had King
'James the Second come here into the Aſſembly of Lords and Commons,
'and expreſs'd himſelf in Writing or Words to this purpoſe: I was born an
'Heir to the Crown of England, which is a Government limited by Laws,
'made in full Parliament, by King, Nobles and Commonalty; and upon
'the Death of my laſt Predeceſſor, I am in Poſſeſſion of the Throne; and
'now I find, I cannot Make Laws without the Conſent of the Lords and
'Commons in Parliament; I cannot ſuſpend Laws that have been ſo made
'without the Conſent of my People: This indeed is the Title of Kingſhip
'I hold by Original Contract, and the Fundamental Conſtitutions of the 'Government, and my Succeſſion to, and Poſſeſſion of the Crown; in theſe
'Terms is Part of that Contract: This Part of the Contract I am weary
'of; I do renounce it, I will not be oblig'd to obſerve it; nay, I will
'not execute the Laws that have been made, nor ſuffer others to be made,
'as my People ſhall deſire, for their Security in Religion, Liberty and
'Property, which are the two main Points of the Kingly Office in this 'Nation. I ſay, ſuppoſe he had ſo expreſs'd himſelf, doubtleſs this had 'been a plain Renouncing that Legal Regular Title which came to him
'by Deſcent: If then, continu'd Sir George, by particular Acts, ſuch as
'are enumerated in the Vote, he has declared as much or more than theſe
'Words can amount to, then he had thereby declar'd his Will to Re-
'nounce the Government. And therefore upon the whole, he inſiſted up'on the Word Abdicated, which did ſo well correſpond to the Fact of 'the Caſe, and ſo well expreſs'd the true Meaning of the Commons in their 'Vote.

The Earl of Nottingham acknowledg'd, 'That a King of England might Earl of Not-
'Renounce his Kingdom, and that he might do it by Implicit Acts con- tingham, &c.
'trary to the Kingly Office; for a King to ſay he wou'd not govern accor'ding to Law, and for a King to act wholly contrary to Law, and do that 'which wou'd ſubvert the Conſtitution, was, he thought, the ſame Thing;
'but then he thought alſo, that there was a Difference between ſaying ſo,

1688/9. Jac. 5. Ref. 29

'and doing ſomething inconſiſtent with what the Laws require; for every 'Deviation from the Law is a kind of a Breach of the Fundamental Laws; 'for he knew no Laws, as Laws, but what were Fundamental Conſtitutions: 'But if every Violation of the Law, by the Prince's Connivance or Com-'mand, were ſuch a Breach of the Fundamental Laws, as wou'd infer an 'Abdication, that then it were in vain to call any of his Miniſters to Ac-'count for any ſuch Action; That then the Action is the King's, and not 'Theirs, and then adieu to the Maxim of a King's not doing wrong. That 'he took the Diſtinction he had made to be ſo plain, that nothing cou'd be 'more; and that it had been thought ſo eſſentially neceſſary to have it clear 'and manifeſt, that thoſe two great Inſtances of Edward the Second, and 'Richard the Third, were expreſs ſolemn Renunciations, and thoſe con-'firm'd in Parliament by the Lords and Commons, by the Acts of Depo-'ſing them: And therefore he cou'd not infer from the Facts enumerated 'in the Vote, that this ſhou'd be an Abdication for Himſelf and his Heirs.' Hereupon Sir George Treby deſir'd to clear himſelf from the Imputation of 'ſuch an abſurd Conceit, That every Violation of the Law, or Deviation 'from it, ſhou'd be reckon'd an Abdication of the Government, and al-ledg'd, 'That when the King breaks the Laws in ſome particular Inſtances, 'it may be ſufficient to take an Account of it from thoſe evil Miniſters that 'were inſtrumental in it; and that in Ordinary Caſes of Breaking the Law, the 'Nation may have Remedy in the Ordinary Courſes and Courts of Juſtice: 'But that the King having broken not a particular Law, but all the Funda-'mentals, thoſe were no Ordinary Violations of the Law, and therefore in 'Extraordinary Caſes Extraordinary Remedies were to be recurr'd unto. 'Where, added he, ſhall a Man come to have Redreſs in ſuch a Caſe as this, 'when the Malefactor comes to be a Party unto whom all Applications 'for Relief and Redreſs from Injuries ſhou'd be made, and ſo he himſelf 'ſhall be Judge of his own Breaches of Law? It is becauſe the King hath 'thus violated the Conſtitution, by which the Law ſtands, as the Rule both 'of the King's Government and the Peoples Obedience, that we ſay, He 'hath Abdicated and Renounc'd the Government; for all other particular 'Breaches of the Law, the Subjects may have Remedy in the Ordinary 'Courts of Juſtice, or the Extraordinary Courts of Parliamentary Proceed-'ings: But where ſuch an Attempt as this, is made on the Eſſence of the 'Conſtitution, it is not We that have brought our ſelves into the State of 'Nature, but Thoſe who have reduc'd our Legal well Eſtabliſh'd Frame of 'Government into a State of Confuſion.

The Debate continu'd.

Mr. Sacheverell.

4. The firſt Part of the Debate being ended, and the Lords offering nothing farther upon their firſt Amendment, Mr. Sacheverell proceeded to the Second, and declar'd, 'That by uſing thoſe Words Abdication and 'Vacancy, the Commons never meant to make the Kingdom Elective, 'nor cou'd it be deducted from their Words: That admitting the Lords 'Amendments, That King James had only Deſerted the Government, even 'then it wou'd follow, That the Throne was Vacant as to King James: 'That if King James had only left the Exerciſe of his Power, as the Lords 'maintain'd, then he continu'd in the Office, and was King ſtill; That then 'all the Acts of the Convention were wholly not juſtifiable; That the 'Lords were in no Place or Station to relieve themſelves or the Nation 'in this Exigence, unleſs they wou'd think of ſetting up another Regency 'by their own Authority: That then by the Steps that the Lords and 'Commons had taken, they had drawn the Nation into a Snare, and left 'all in ſuch an Intricacy, as they had no Power, by Law, to deliver them 'out of; nor cou'd they anſwer for what they had done, unleſs the King 'ſhou'd die, and that wou'd leave the Succeſſion uncertain.

Mr.

Mr. Pollexfen next inſiſted upon the ſame Argument, and maintain'd, 'That the Lords ſaying in their Vote, That the Government was Deſerted, cou'd not mean only the Exerciſe of it, but a Vacancy: The King's Power, and the Exerciſe of that Power, was, in Conſtruction of Law, one and the ſame, and ſo join'd, that they cou'd not be ſever'd; and therefore the ſuppos'd Diſtinction was only Notional, and altogether diſagreeing to the Laws of England. That it was utterly Unlawful, and as great a Crime to take away from the King the Exerciſe of the Government, as to take from him the Government; it might do well for their Lordſhips to conſider, whether they were not guilty of the ſame Crime, which they wou'd decline by their Amendment. That the Commons therefore cou'd not admit, That there ſhou'd be a taking away the Exerciſe of the Government from the King, any more than the taking away the Government, which, the Commons ſaid, he had himſelf given away by Abdication; and that if King James was King ſtill, they cou'd not by any means agree to the keeping him out of the Kingdom. That to have a Regency upon King James without his own Conſent, or till his Return, while the Right was ſtill in him, wou'd be a ſtrange and impracticable Thing, and introductive of a Common-Wealth, inſtead of the ancient Government, by a limited Monarchy; and that the Concluſion, That ſuch a Vacancy in the Throne, wou'd make the Crown Elective, had no Premiſſes either from their Actions, their Sayings, their Votes, or any Thing elſe in that Caſe.' The Earl of Clarendon interpos'd, and ſaid, 'He wou'd not declare his Opinion about the Vacancy as to King James, but deſired to know the Meaning of the Commons, how far the Vacancy was to extend.' Which gave Occaſion to Mr. Pollexfen to ask the Lords, 'Whether their Lordſhips did agree, That the Throne was Vacant as to King James the Second? That if ſo, or if they ſhou'd ſay it was Full of any Body elſe, and wou'd name Whom it was Full of, it wou'd then be Time for the Commons to give an Anſwer.' To which the ſame Earl reply'd, 'That admitting for Diſcourſe ſake, That the Throne was Vacant as to King James the Second, it muſt then be ſupply'd by thoſe that ſhou'd have come if he were dead; this Government being by all our Laws, an Hereditary Monarchy, which is to go in Succeſſion by Inheritance in the Royal Line. That if the Commons ſaid this Government was Vacant, that wou'd be to put all thoſe by that ſhou'd take by Succeſſion, which wou'd make the Kingdom Elective for that Time: That the Lords ſaid there was no Vacancy, but ſince the Commons ſaid, The Throne was Vacant, he might very well ask, Who had the Right of filling up that Vacancy?' Mr. Serjeant Maynard anſwer'd, 'That was not the Queſtion before them, tho' it wou'd come properly in Debate, when they were agreed upon the Vacancy: That he granted the Engliſh Monarchy to be Hereditary; but tho' it ſhou'd in an Ordinary Way deſcend to the Heir, yet as their Caſe was, they had a Maxim in Law as certain as any other, which ſtopt the Courſe; for ſaid he, no Man can pretend to be King James's Heir while he is living. Nemo eſt Hæres Viventis.' The Earl of Pembroke reply'd, 'That to that Point the Lord Clarendon had given an Anſwer, That it ſhou'd go to the next Heir in the Line, that was to take it if the King were dead. And that as they ſhou'd be underſtood, they ſhou'd make it a Caſe of Demiſe of the King's, as the Law calls it; That is, That the King was Dead in Law, by his Abdication or Deſertion. That to anſwer the Queſtion of the Commons, Who the Throne was full of? it was ſufficient to know, That there were Heirs who were to take by Lineal Succeſſion, tho' they did not, nor cou'd not, poſitively name the particular Perſon.

1688. Jac. 5. Ref. 29. Mr. Pollexfen, &c.

1688/9. Jac. 5. Ref. 29

Hereupon the Earl of Nottingham argu'd, 'That if the Lords shou'd grant 'a Vacancy as to the King himself, yet they might justly do those Acts men- 'tion'd in the Commons Reasons; for if barely the Exercise of the Go- 'vernment were Deserted, there must be a Supply of that Exercise in some 'Persons taking the Administration; and as none so fit, because of the 'Prince's Relation to the Crown, and his Presence here, to address unto a- 'bout it, so none so proper to make that Address as the Lords; since in 'the Absence of the King, they were the King and Kingdom's Great Coun- 'cil, and might have done by themselves, without the Commons; but be- 'ing met in a full Representative Body, they join'd with them. They 'were told, That the next Heir in Succession cou'd not take, because no 'one cou'd be Heir to one alive; yet still he thought the Answer given by 'the Lords a very good one, That tho' the King was not dead Naturally, 'yet if, as they infer'd, he was so Civilly, the next of Course ought to 'come in by Hereditary Succession; for he knew not any Distinction be- 'tween Successors in the Case of a Natural Death, and those in Case of 'a Civil one: That he wou'd know, if the next Heir shou'd be set aside, 'and another put in, Whether that King of England shou'd be King to him 'and his Heirs, and so being once upon the Throne, the ancient Lineal 'Succession be alter'd, which indeed wou'd sufficiently make the Kingdom 'Elective, by taking it from the right Heir: That if it was not so, then 'he ask'd, Whether such King as shou'd be put in, shou'd be King only du- 'ring King James's Life? That, he suppos'd, was not the Meaning of the 'Commons; but, at least, he must be made a King during his own Life; 'That then, if there was a Distinction made as to the Succession, between 'a Natural and a Civil Death, if King James shou'd die during the Life of 'the new King, what wou'd become of Hereditary Monarchy? Where must 'the Successor come in, when the next Heir to King James might not be 'the present Heir to the present Successor? That therefore they must re- 'duce all to this Point, Whether this wou'd not make the Kingdom Ele- 'ctive? That if they made it once Elective, it was enough to make it 'ever so; for he wou'd be bold to say, They cou'd not make a stronger Tye 'to observe that kind of Succession, than what lay upon them to preserve 'it in this Case. He added, That if the Throne was Vacant, he wou'd 'know, Whether they were oblig'd to fill it? That if they were, they 'must fill it either by the old Laws, or by the Humour of those that were 'to chuse. That if they fill'd it by the old Laws, they declared it was an 'Hereditary Kingdom, and they were to take the next Successor, to whom 'the Succession wou'd belong, and there wou'd be no need of standing upon 'a Vacancy: That if they were to fill it according to the Humour of the 'Times, that diverted the Course of Inheritance; and that he cou'd not 'see by what Authority they cou'd do that, or change the ancient Consti- 'tution, without committing the same Fault they had laid upon the King. 'But, said he, if you please to suppose the Throne Vacant as to King James, 'that is, That he has no Right, then let us go on to the next Step.

Earl of Nottingham.

But Mr. Sacheverell reply'd, 'That all their Business was to maintain, 'That the Throne was Vacant.' And Mr. Sommers added, 'That the 'Lords alledg'd as a Reason against the Word Abdicate, That it was not a 'Word known in our Law, but that the Word Vacant cou'd not have that 'Objection made to it, since it was in our Records, and even apply'd in a 'parallel Case to this in the first of Henry the Fourth.' To which the Earl of Rochester answer'd, 'That as that was the only Precedent for the Word 'Vacant, yet it was attended with this very Consequence, that it wou'd 'make the Monarchy Elective; for it being there declared, That the Royal 'Seat was Vacant, immediately did follow an Election of Henry the Fourth, 'who was not next in the Royal Line.' The same Argument was pursu'd 'by Earls of Rochester and Clarendon.

'by the Earl of Clarendon, who ſaid, That it was plain in the Caſe of Ri- 1688.
'chard the Second, who had abſolutely Reſign'd, Renounc'd or Abdicated 1 Jac. 5.
'in Writing under his own Hand; that after that, the Parliament being then Ref. 29
'Sitting, they did not think it ſufficient to go upon, becauſe that Writing
'might be the Effect of Fear, and not voluntary: That thereupon they 'proceeded to a formal Depoſition upon Articles; and then came in the 'Claim of Henry the Fourth: That this was undoubtedly an Election;
'tho' he was really the next Heir, the Earl of March not appearing, Henry
'claim'd it as his undubitable Right, being the next Heir that appeared:
'That all the Kings that were thus taken in or elected, (for the Election 'was not of God's Approbation) any one Year ſcarce paſs'd in any of their 'Reigns, without being diſturb'd in the Poſſeſſion: That Henry the Fourth
'did not care to owe the Crown to the Election, but claim'd it as his Right;
'that it was a plauſible Pretence, and kept him and his Son upon the Throne;
'but in the time of his Grandſon Henry the Sixth, there was an utter Over'throw of his Title and Poſſeſſion too: For in the firſt of Henry the Fourth,
'all the Proceedings againſt Richard the Second, as well as all the reſt of
'the Acts during the Uſurpation, (as that Record rightly calls it) were An-
'null'd, Repeal'd, Revok'd and Revers'd, and all imaginable Words us'd to 'ſet thoſe Proceedings aſide, as Illegal, Unjuſt and Unrighteous: That
'that Act deduc'd the Pedegree of the Royal Line from Henry the Third
'to Richard the Second, who dy'd without Iſſue; and then Henry the 'Fourth, ſays the Act, Uſurp'd; but that the Earl of March, upon the 'Death of Richard the Second, and conſequently Edward the Fourth,
'from him was undoubted King by Conſcience, by Nature, by Cuſtom,
'and by Law.

Hereupon Sir Robert Howard exerted himſelf, and reply'd, 'He wou'd Sir Robert
'not ſay that the Record of Henry the Fourth, was not a Precedent of Ele- Howard.
'ction; for the Parliament did not much mind his Claim, knowing that he
'claim'd by Deſcent, where there was a Perſon that had a Title before him:
'That the Commons did not doubt, but that Power which brought in a'nother Line then, upon the Vacancy of the Throne by the Leaſion of Ri- 'chard the Second, was ſtill, according to the Conſtitution, reſiding in the 'Lords and Commons, and was legally ſufficient to ſupply the preſent Va-
'cancy: That he wou'd ask the Queſtion of any Lord there, Whether had
'there been an Heir certainly known, to whom the Crown had quietly de-
'ſcended in the Line of Succeſſion, and this Heir certainly known, their Lord-
'ſhips wou'd have Aſſembled without his Calling, or wou'd have either Admi-
'niſtred the Government themſelves, or adviſ'd the Prince of Orange to have 'taken it upon Himſelf? That he doubted they had been all guilty of High-
'Treaſon, by the Laws of England, if a known Succeſſor of the Throne were
'in Poſſeſſion of the Throne, as he muſt be if the Throne were not Vacant:
'That from hence their Lordſhips ſaw, that the Difficulty in this Matter a-
'roſe from this, That they wou'd agree the Throne to be Vacant, when they 'knew of none that poſſeſs'd it; That ſome ſuch thing had been pretended to
'as an Heir Male, of which there were different Opinions, and in the mean 'time they were without a Government. Muſt we ſtay, added he, till the 'Truth of the Matter be found out? What ſhall be done to preſerve our 'Conſtitution, while we are without a ſafe and legal Authority, to act un'der the ſame, according to our Conſtitution, and in a little time it will,
'perhaps, through the Diſtraction of our Conſtitution, be utterly irremedia-
'ble. He confeſs'd it wou'd be a difficult thing to go upon the Examina'tion who was Heir, or elſe their Lordſhips wou'd have explain'd them-
'ſelves before. But, continued he, it not being clear, muſt we always remain
'thus? Uſe what Words you will, Fill up, or Nominate, or Elect, it is the 'thing

1688/9. Jac. 5. Ref. 29

'thing that we are to take care of, and 'tis high time it were done. There 'is no such Consequence to be drawn from this Vote, as an Intention or 'Likelihood of altering the Course of the Government, so as to make it 'Elective; the Throne has all along descended in an Hereditary Succession, the main Constitution has been preserv'd. The Precedent of Henry 'the Fourth is not like that of Elections in other Countries; and I am sorry there shou'd be any Occasion for what is necessary to be done now; 'but when such Difficulties are upon the Nation, that we cannot extricate 'our selves out of, as to the Lineal Successor, your Lordships, I hope, will 'give us leave to remember, Salus Populi est Suprema Lex. And if neither you nor we can do any thing in this Case, we, who are met under 'the Notion of a Convention of the States, have then met to no Purpose; 'for after we have Voted our selves to be without Government (which 'looks as if something were really intended as a Settlement) all presently 'sinks, and we are as much in the Dark as we were before. Your Lordships say, you will ne'er make a Precedent of Election, or take upon you 'to alter the Succession. With your Lordship's Favour, the Settlement of 'the Constitution is the main thing we are to look after. If you provide 'for the Supply of the Defect there, that Point of the Succession will, 'without all Question, in the same Method, and at the same time, be surely provided for. But, my Lords, have not you your selves limited the 'very Succession, and cut off some that might have a Lineal Right? Have 'you not concurr'd with us in our Vote, That it is inconsistent with our 'Religion and Laws to have a Papist to reign over us? Must we not 'then come to an Election, if the next Heir be a Papist? Nay, suppose 'there were no Protestant Heir at all to be found, wou'd not your Lordships then break the Line? If your Lordships then in such a Case, must 'break through the Succession, I think the Nation has Reason to expect 'you shou'd take care to supply the present Defect, where the Succession is 'uncertain; or what can we do farther, but even part in Confusion, and 'so leave the Nation to extricate it self as well as it can out of this Distraction. But then at whose Doors that will lie, I must leave to your Lordships own Thoughts.

We are told that this Speech made a great Impression, and little was said on the Lords side in opposition to it: But because their Lordships had made use of the Record of the first of Edward the Fourth, to assert the Lineal Succession, Sir George Treby undertook to explain it, and said,

Sir George Treby.

'That it was very well known that Edward the Fourth came in Disaffirmance of the Title of the House of Lancaster: That as those Times went, 'whenever there was any Turn in Government, as there were several, there 'were new and contrary Declarations about the Title to the Crown, made 'constantly in Parliament; and what one Parliament settled, another undid: But then, that this Advantage the Commons had on their Side; that as 'they had this first Precedent for them, so they had the last, viz. The Parliament Roll of the first of Henry the Seventh, where the Record is set 'right again: That the Act for Deposing Richard the Second was indeed 'Repeal'd by the first of Edward the Fourth, and thereupon it proceeds to 'Attaint Henry the Sixth; but then came in Henry the Seventh, in the 'first Year of whose Reign there was an Act made, that set aside all the 'Acts and Attainders made against his Line, and consequently it Repeal'd 'the first of Edward the Fourth, which had Repeal'd the first of Henry 'the Fourth: That Henry the Seventh was of the Line of Lancaster, and 'tho' he had the Heiress of the House of York in his Bosom, yet after he 'came to the Throne, he wou'd not endure to have his Crown reckon'd 'Matrimonial, or suffer the Style to go in the Names of Henry and Elizabeth, as he must have done if he had stuck to the Title by the Right

'Line of Succeſſion. That therefore his Act for Reſtoring the Record 1688. 'of the firſt of Henry the Fourth again, was as good an Authority as it was 'before, and ſomewhat better; for it had the laſt Act on its ſide, which Jac. 5. 'was yet Unrepeal'd.' Here the Earl of Pembroke reply'd, That Henry Reſ. 29 'the Seventh had a good Right and Title by Marriage to the Crown, in re 'Uxoris; but that his own Title, as deſcended from Henry the Fourth, Earl of Pem- 'was an Uſurpation; and therefore he wou'd not ſuffer any one to preſcribe broke. 'which was beſt, as long as it was acknowledg'd he had one good.' Sir George Treby return'd, 'That if Henry the Seventh's Title by Deſcent was 'an Uſurpation, it was hard to determine what Title he did govern by, ſince 'tho' his Wife was the Lineal Heir, yet ſhe had no Part, or ſo much as a 'Name in the Adminiſtration: But, added he, if we ſhou'd allow none 'for Acts of Parliament, but thoſe that were made in the Reigns of Hereditary Kings, and in the Right Line, I doubt we ſhou'd want the greateſt 'Part of thoſe Laws that compoſe the Volume of Statute Books, and the 'Records by which we enjoy a great Part of our Inheritances and Poſſeſſi- 'ons.' Sir Richard Temple alledg'd, 'That if Laws made about the Suc- Sir Richard 'ceſſion* be ſo obliging, what then ſhou'd they ſay to the Succeſſion of Queen Temple. 'Elizabeth, who had an Act of Parliament both againſt her and her Siſter.' The Earl of Pembroke reply'd, 'That to ſhew what Opinion ſhe her ſelf, 'and the wiſe Men of her Time, had in that Point, there was an Act made 'in her Reign, and yet in being, which declar'd it to be a Premunire to af- 'firm, the Parliament cannot ſettle the Succeſſion of the Crown, or alter 'it. That Entails of the Crown had been in Parliament, both Ancient 'and Modern; yet the Authority of another ſubſequent Act had prevail'd a- 'gainſt ſuch an Entail, ſo that they ſhou'd be done in Parliament.' Sir Richard return'd, 'He thought they were in as full a Capacity to take care 'of the Government as any of their Predeceſſors; and that if they did as 'their Predeceſſors had done before them, that ought not to be call'd Chang- 'ing of the Monarchy from an Hereditary to an Elective.

Here the Earl of Nottingham once more interpos'd, and ſaid, 'He cou'd Earl of Not- 'not imagine how a Kingdom cou'd be Hereditary, and that the King who tingham. 'had Children in being, at the time of his forſaking the Government, cou'd 'have the Throne Vacant both of him and his Children. That the Courſe 'of Inheritance, as to the Crown of England, was by Law a great deal bet- 'ter provided for, than that of any other Inheritance. That no Attainder 'of the Heir of the Crown cou'd bar the Succeſſion to the Crown, as it did 'the Deſcent to any common Perſon; and that the very Deſcent by Order 'of Birth wou'd take away any ſuch Defect. That this was the Opinion 'of the great Lawyers of England, in the Caſe of Henry the Seventh; and 'therefore he cou'd not apprehend how any Act of the Father cou'd bar 'the Right of the Child; ſince even the Act of the Son, which might endan- 'ger an Attainder in him, cou'd not do it; ſo careful was the Law of the 'Royal Line of Succeſſion, which was declared by ſeveral Acts of Parlia- 'ment, and very fully and particularly by the twenty fifth of Henry the 'Seventh. That he deſired to know, Whether the Lords and Commons had 'Power by themſelves to make a binding Act or Law? And whether, ac- 'cording to the Legal Conſtitution, every King of England by being ſeated 'on the Throne, and poſſeſs'd of the Crown, was not thereby King, to him 'and his Heirs? And that without an Act of Parliament he knew not what 'Determination they cou'd make of his Eſtate: That it was urg'd indeed, 'That the Lords had in effect already agreed to the Vacancy, by Voting, 'That it was Inconſiſtent with our Religion and Laws to have a Popiſh 'Prince to Rule over us. But that a Vote of either Houſe, or both Houſes 'together, cou'd not alter the Law in that or any other Point; yet becauſe

'he

1688/9. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

'he was very desirous that that Vote should have its Effect, he wish'd that 'every Thing of that Nature might be done in the ancient usual Method 'by Act of Parliament. That since they were happily deliver'd from the 'Fears of Popery and Arbitrary Power, God forbid they should assume 'any such Power to themselves; for what Advantage shou'd they then 'give to those who wou'd quarrel with their Settlement for the Illegality 'of it? Wou'd not this, which they endeavour'd to crush, break forth in-'to a Viper? That in all the Breaches that were made upon the Line of 'Succession, such was the Force of the Laws, that the Usurpers wou'd not 'take the Crown upon them, unless they had some plain Pretence of an 'Hereditary Title to it. That what he wou'd have avoided by all Means, 'was the mischievous Consequences that he fear'd wou'd ensue upon the 'Vacancy of the Throne, namely, the utter Overthrow of the whole Con-'stitution; for if the Lords and Commons only remain'd as Parts of the 'Government, and if the Head be taken away, and the Throne Vacant, 'by what Laws or Constitutions was it that they retain'd Lords and Com-'mons? That they were knit together in their Common Head; and that 'if one Part of the Government was Dissolv'd, he saw not any Reason but 'that all must be Dissolv'd. He confess'd, that any Government was bet-'ter than none; but he earnestly desired they might enjoy their Ancient 'Constitution.

The Debate clos'd by Mr. Foley and Mr. Ayres.

The whole Debate was clos'd by two short Speeches made by Mr. Paul Foley, and Mr. Ayres: The former said, 'He hop'd there was no Danger 'of shaking off our Fundamentals in this Case; that they were pursuing 'those Methods which agreed with our Laws and Constitution; for tho' 'the Monarchy of this Nation be Hereditary in the Ordinary course of 'Succession, yet there might fall out a Case wherein that cou'd not be 'comply'd with, and a plain Vacancy might ensue. For, said he, put the 'Case the whole Regal Line shou'd fail, shou'd we in that Case have 'no Government at all? And who then shall we have but Lords and 'Commons? And I think that comes nearest to the Case in Question, 'where the Successor, is not known; for if he had been, we shou'd have 'heard of him before now. And what is the Reason that it shou'd then 'in the former Case devolve to the Lords and Commons, but that there 'is no King? And they being the Representative Body of the Kingdom; 'are the only remaining apparent Parts of the Government, and are on-'ly to supply the Defect by providing a Successor?' The other, Mr. Ayres, subjoin'd, 'That they were led out of the Way, hunting after the Conse-'quences of a Vote not yet settled or agreed unto; That they had made a 'right and apt Conclusion from the Premisses, otherwise all the Vote was 'but Historical: We declare, adds he, That the late King James has broke 'the Original Contract, has violated the Fundamental Laws, and has 'withdrawn himself out of the Kingdom, that he has Abdicated the Go-'vernment. What Occasion was there for such a Declaration as this, if 'nothing were concluded from it? That were only to give the Kingdom 'a compendious History of those Miseries they have too well learn'd by 'feeling them. Therefore there was a Necessity to make some Conclu-'sion; and none so natural as this; that we are left without a King, That 'the Throne is thereby Vacant; which it may be as to the Possession, and 'yet the Right of Succession no ways prejudic'd. But, my Lords, we are 'come here, by the Commands of the House of Commons, to debate the 'Reasons of their Vote, and your Amendments, not to dispute what will 'be the Consequences, which is not at present our Province.' And thus concluded the most memorable Conference and Debate, that perhaps was ever held between the Lords and Commons of England; by which it plain-ly appears, That the Opinion was almost universal, that King James had

Abdicated

Abdicated or Forfeited his own Perſonal Right; but the main Difficulty aroſe from the Regard to his Heirs, and probably from the Prince of Wales himſelf, about whoſe Title both Lords and Commons ſeem'd reſolv'd not to have the leaſt Argument. 1688/9. Jac. 4. Ref. 29

5. Upon the Concluſion of this famous Debate, as ſoon as the Managers for the Lords had made a Report in that Houſe, there aroſe a new Debate there, long and warm, Whether or no they ſhou'd inſiſt upon their Amendments, or agree with the grand Vote of the Commons. But by this time, ſeveral of the chief Members, who were before for a Regency, were come over to the Party that ſtood up for a King; which was alſo increaſed by the late arrival of ſome Lords; inſomuch that the two Queſtions about the Words Abdicated and Vacant, were carry'd in the Affirmative. So that that Vote now became the Baſis and Foundation on which the wonderful Revolution was to ſtand ſure and firm to future Ages. Which main Step being got over, and the Throne thus declar'd Vacant, by the Lords as well as Commons, it was not hard to gueſs how it wou'd be filled; ſo that the moſt neceſſary Thing to be done next, was to make ſome future Proviſions againſt Arbitrary Power. Upon which, when the Convention were entering and deliberating, we are told by the Author of Great Britain's juſt Complaint, That the Prince of Orange ſent the Lord Wharton to ſeveral of the Lords, and Mr. Cooling to Sir Edward Seymour, Mr. Hambden and other Commoners to let them know, That if they inſiſted ſo much on Limitations, he wou'd return home, and leave them to the Mercy of King James; which terrible Menace, at that time, is thought to have ſhortned their famous Declaration of Rights: A Story which we know not how to contradict or confirm; only, that it does not well agree with what his Highneſs did a few Days before with relation to the Diſcouragement of the London Petition, before mention'd.

The Lords agree with the Commons.

However this Matter was, the Houſe of Peers, after they had paſs'd the Commons grand Vote, appear'd more forward than the other: In which Houſe the Earl of Danby made a fine Speech, not only to prove the Vacancy of the Throne, but the Neceſſity of Supplying it by the Prince of Orange; wherein he was ſtrenuouſly ſupported by the Marquiſs of Halifax, who taking Advantage of this favourable Opportunity, immediately put the Queſtion, Whether their Highneſſes, the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, ſhou'd be declar'd King and Queen? This mighty Vote was at once carry'd by twenty Voices, ſixty five againſt forty five, and paſs'd in theſe Words; 'Reſolved, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, aſſembled 'at Weſtminſter, That the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, ſhall be declar'd 'King and Queen of England, and of all the Dominions thereunto belong-'ing.' The next Day, being the 7th of February, their Lordſhips explained this great Reſolution by farther Voting, 'That the Prince and Princeſs 'of Orange ſhou'd be King and Queen of England, &c. for their natural 'Lives, and Life of the longer Liver of them; and that the ſole and full 'Regal Power be in the Prince only, in the Name of both. And that 'after their Deceaſes, the Crown ſhou'd belong to the Heirs of the Body of 'the Princeſs; and for Default of ſuch Iſſue, to the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, and the Heirs of her Body; and for Default of ſuch Iſſue, to the 'Heirs of the Body of the ſaid Prince of Orange; and for Default of ſuch 'Iſſue, to the Perſon that ſhou'd be nam'd, and in ſuch a manner as ſhou'd 'be limited by Act of Parliament; and for Default of ſuch Limitation and 'Regulation, to the lawful Heirs of the ſaid Prince of Orange.

They Vote the Prince and Princeſs of Orange King and Queen.

1688/9. Jac. 4. Reſ. 29

The Commons agree with them.

All theſe being ſent down to the Commons, and their Concurrence deſired, after a ſhort Debate they were agreed to with ſome Amendments: Their Lordſhips alſo communicated to the Commons the particular Oaths, which they thought fit to be taken inſtead of thoſe of Allegiance and Supremacy. Theſe were readily approv'd of by the Commons; but were proteſted againſt in the Upper-Houſe, by eleven Spiritual, and twelve Temporal Lords; whoſe Number, within two or three Days, encreas'd to thirty ſeven; and who not only declar'd againſt the Oaths, but alſo againſt the Abdication and Vacancy of the Throne. All which while a Committee of the Houſe of Commons, and Mr. Sommers at the Head of them, were buſy in drawing up a Declaration of Rights containing the Facts and Reaſons of King James's Forfeiture of the Crown; aſſerting the undoubted Rights and Liberties of the Subject; ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown, and appointing the new Oaths; which Declaration being ſent up to the Lords on the 11th Inſtant, was, after ſome Debates and a Conference, agreed unto the next Day.

The Arrival of the Princeſs of Orange.

6. During theſe ſeveral Tranſactions in the Convention, her Royal Highneſs at the Hague was haſtening her Journey to England; and on the 10th Inſtant left Holland all in Tears, and under the deepeſt Sorrow, for the Loſs of a Princeſs, ſo excellent, and ſo univerſally belov'd. Having a ſhort Voyage, ſhe arriv'd on the 12th at Graveſend, from whence ſhe went immediately to White-Hall amidſt the lofty Shouts and Acclamations of huzzaing Throngs and Multitudes, who doubly rejoic'd for her ſafe Arrival, and for her being declar'd Queen. This was indeed a joyful Day to the People, whoſe Tranſports were ſo real and unaffected, as were above the Power of being counterfeited. And the very next Day ſhe was welcom'd by the Repreſentatives of the Nation, beſides their Hearts and Affections, with no leſs Preſent and Offer than the three Crowns of England, France and Ireland; which was perform'd in this moſt ſolemn manner: Upon the 13th of February, the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, being plac'd on two large Seats under a Canopy of State in the Banquetting-Houſe, both Houſes of the Convention waited upon their Highneſſes in a full Body, and caus'd the Clerk of the Crown to read with a loud Voice the following Declaration of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons aſſembled at Weſtminſter; the moſt memorable and ſignificant that had been known for ſeveral Ages:

The two Houſes DECLARATION of RIGHTS.

'Whereas the late King James the Second, by the Aſſiſtance of divers 'Evil Counſellors, Judges and Miniſters employ'd by him, did endeavour 'to Subvert and Extirpate the Proteſtant Religion, and the Laws and 'Liberties of this Kingdom; by Aſſuming and Exerciſing a Power of Di'penſing with, and Suſpending of Laws, and the Execution of Laws, 'without conſent of Parliament: By Committing and Proſecuting divers 'worthy Prelates, for humbly Petitioning to be excus'd from Concurring 'to the ſaid aſſumed Power: By Iſſuing and cauſing to be Executed, a 'Commiſſion under the Great-Seal, for erecting a Court call'd, The Court 'of Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes: By Levying Money for and 'to the Uſe of the Crown, by Pretence of Prerogative, for other Time, 'and in other Manner, than the ſame was granted by Parliament: By 'Raiſing and Keeping a Standing-Army within this Kingdom in time of 'Peace, without Conſent of Parliament; and Quartering Soldiers contra'ry to Law: By cauſing divers good Subjects, being Proteſtants, to be 'Diſarm'd at the ſame time, when Papiſts were both Arm'd and Imployed 'contrary to Law: By violating the Freedom of Election of Members to 'ſerve in Parliament: By Proſecutions in the Court of King's-Bench for

And that for Redreſs of all Grievances, and for the Amending, Strengthening and Preſerving of the Laws, Parliaments ought to be held frequently. And they do Claim, Demand and Inſiſt upon all and ſingular the Premiſſes, as their undoubted Rights and Liberties; and no Declarations, Judgments, Doings or Proceedings, to the Prejudice of the People in any of the ſaid Premiſſes, ought in any wiſe to be drawn hereafter into Conſequence or Example. 'Having therefore an entire Confidence, that his ſaid Highneſs the Prince of Orange will perfect the Deliverance ſo far advanc'd by Him, and will ſtill preſerve them from the Violation of their Rights, which they have here aſſerted, and from all other Attempts upon their Religion, Rights and Liberties; the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, Aſſembled at Weſtminſter, do Reſolve, "That William and Mary, Prince and Princeſs of "Orange, be, and be Declared KING and QUEEN of England, France and "Ireland, and the Dominions thereunto belonging, to hold the Crown "and Royal Dignity of the ſaid Kingdoms and Dominions, to Them the "ſaid Prince and Princeſs during their Lives, and the Life of the Survivor "of them; and that the Sole and Full Exerciſe of the Regal Power be "only in, and executed by, the ſaid Prince of Orange, in the Names of "the ſaid Prince and Princeſs during their joint Lives; and after their De-"ceaſe, the ſaid Crown and Royal Dignity of the ſaid Kingdoms and Do-"minions to be to the Heirs of the Body of the ſaid Princeſs; and for "Default of ſuch Iſſue, to the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, and the Heirs "of her Body; and for Default of ſuch Iſſue, to the Heirs of the Body "of the ſaid Prince of Orange.'

By which the Prince and Princeſs are made King and Queen.

'And the ſaid Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, do Pray the 'ſaid Prince and Princeſs of Orange to accept the ſame accordingly. And 'that the Oaths hereafter mention'd be taken by all Perſons of whom the 'Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy might be required by Law, inſtead 'of them; and that the ſaid Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy be Abro-'gated: I A. The Oaths.

After the publick Reading of this Declaration, the Marquiſs of Halifax, Speaker of the Houſe of Lords, made a ſolemn Tender of the Crown to their Highneſſes, in the Name of both Houſes, the Repreſentative of the Nation; whereupon the Prince of Orange return'd the following Anſwer: My Lords and Gentlemen, This is certainly the greateſt Proof of the Truſt you have in Us, that can be given, which is the Thing which makes us value it the more; and We thankfully accept what you have offer'd. And as I had no other Intention in coming hither, than to preſerve your Religion, Laws and Liberties; ſo you may may be ſure, that I ſhall endeavour to ſupport them, and ſhall be willing to concur in any Thing that ſhall be for the Good of the Kingdom, and to do all that is in my Power to Advance the Welfare and Glory of the Nation. 1688/9. Jac. 5. Ref. 29

The Acclamations of the People in the Banquetting-Houſe, upon the Concluſion of this Auguſt Ceremony; were immediately reſounded by the Multitude without; and the ſame Day the Prince and Princeſs being ſolemnly Proclaim'd King and Queen of England, France and Ireland, at the uſual Places, by the Names of WILLIAM and MARY; the whole City and Suburbs were fill'd with ſuch Torrents of Joy as totally drown'd all the little Diſcontents and Murmurings that began to appear upon this Mighty Change. The Occaſion being ſo remarkable and extraordinary, it will be neceſſary to inſert the Proclamation it ſelf, which runs thus: 'Whereas it 'hath pleaſed Almighty God in his great Mercy to this Kingdom, to vouch-'ſafe us a Miraculous Deliverance from Popery and Arbitrary Power; 'and that our Preſervation is due, next under God, to the Reſolution and 'Conduct of his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, whom God hath choſen 'to be the Glorious Inſtrument of ſuch an ineſtimable Happineſs to us and 'our Poſterity: And being highly ſenſible, and fully perſuaded of the great 'and eminent Virtue of her Highneſs the Princeſs of Orange, whoſe Zeal 'for the Proteſtant Religion, will, no doubt, bring a Bleſſing along with 'her upon this Nation: And whereas the Lords and Commons now Aſſem-'bled at Weſtminſter, have made a Declaration, and preſented the ſame 'to the ſaid Prince and Princeſs of Orange, and therein deſired them to 'accept the Crown, who have accepted the Same accordingly: We there-'fore the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, together with the 'Lord-Mayor and Citizens of London, and Others of the Commons of 'this Realm, do with full Conſent Publiſh and Proclaim, according to the 'ſaid Declaration, WILLIAM and MARY, Prince and Princeſs of O-'range, to be KING and QUEEN of England, France and Ireland, with all 'the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging; Who are according-'ly ſo to be Own'd, Deem'd and Taken, by all the People of the afore-'ſaid Realms and Dominions, who are from henceforth bound to Acknow-'ledge and Pay unto them all Faith and true Allegiance; beſeeching God, 'by whom Kings Reign, to bleſs King WILLIAM and Queen MARY, 'with long and happy Years to Reign over us.

William and Mary Proclaim'd King and Queen.

Thus was finiſh'd and compleated the Stupendious Revolution; a Revolution the moſt Bloodleſs in the Beginning and Progreſs, and the moſt Effectual in the Concluſion and Conſequences, that ever befel this powerful Nation; and which, if well conſider'd in all its Circumſtances, is ſcarce to be parallell'd in all the Hiſtories of other Countries. And here, as we take our Leave of King James and his Government, we might naturally give his Character at large; but that may poſſibly come afterwards, if there be a ſuitable Encouragement for a Continuance. Many Things have been already ſaid, and enough as to the moſt inexcuſable Part of it, which brought Ruin to his Affairs, and Diſhonour to his Memory. But if an Hiſtorian was to be govern'd only by the Rules of Generoſity and Gratitude, we ought to let him fall gently indeed, when we remember his two incomparable Daughters, two great Queens, who, with all the Errors Charg'd upon them, prov'd ſuch Bleſſings to the Nation, and ſo much the Bulwarks of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of Europe, as may well atone for innumerable Failures in their unfortunate Father.
